Blessed Ones.—Matt. 5: 1-12.

Blessed are the poor in spirit,
For theirs the kingdom is;
Rich promises they now inherit
Of never ending bliss.

Blessed are the mourning saints,
Comforted they shall be;
Soon will end their sad complaints,
From sorrow they'll be free.

Blessed forever are the meek,
The earth they shall inherit;
The glory of the Lord they seek,
And manifest his spirit.

Blessed are they that hunger now,
And thirst for righteousness;
The Lord will grace on them bestow,
And fill them with his peace.

Blessed are the merciful,
They mercy shall obtain;
The Lord will spare such gentle ones
When he shall come to reign.

Blessed are the pure in heart,
For they their God shall see;
From love and truth they ne'er depart,
In Christ they're always free.

Blessed are they who strive for peace,
God's children they shall be;
When earthly wars and tumults cease,
Sweet harmony they'll see.

Blessed are they who suffer wrong
For sake of righteousness;
They stand for Jesus bold and strong,
His name they dare confess.

Rejoice and be exceeding glad,
For great is your reward;
Thus hated all the prophets were,
Because they feared the Lord.

Report of the Ninth Annual Advent Conference of Maine.

Wednesday evening, 7 o'clock, Sept. 17th, the brethren assembled in the Second Advent Hall in Portland, according to previous appointment. Spent the evening in social worship, enjoying a precious season in the Lord. Were blessed in the beginning of our effort. Two young ladies asked the prayers of the Lord's people, and gave evidence that they intended to find the Savior of sinners.

Thursday, A. M., 10 1-2 o'clock. The meeting was opened by prayer, offered by Bro. E. Burnham. The Secretary then stated that the President—Eld. O. R. Fassett—would not be present, and another should be chosen. Eld. S. K. Partridge was chosen President. Eld. I. C. Wellcome asked to be discharged from serving longer as Secretary, as he had served seven years. But he was re-elected Secretary. Eld. Wm. M. Ingham then preached a discourse from Col. 3: 1-3, and was followed by remarks from several others. Adjourned to 2 o'clock, P. M.

P. M., 2 o'clock, met, and conferred upon the various items of business to come before the conference. The Chairman appointed three brethren to arrange the business of the meetings, viz., Elds. T Smith, R. R. York, I. Wight. Decided to devote Friday morning to business. 3 o'clock, preaching by Eld. J. V. Himes, from Isa. 26: 1-3. It was a PEACE sermon, and one of the best we ever heard; peace in Christ, to all who fully believe and obey him. Truly the flock was fed with good things. It was "the sincere milk of the word," and God made it a blessing to many hearts. How cheering, in these times of rebellion, anger, war and blood, to meet with a company of faithful christians, whose very countenances bespeak that the peace of God rules their hearts, and that the Prince of peace is their guide. This is good company. Evening, 7 o'clock, met for prayer and conference, and enjoyed a precious season in Christ. 7 1-2 o'clock, preaching by Eld. F. H. Berick, from Rev. 2: 25-27.

Friday, A. M., 7 1-2 o'clock, prayer by Eld. J. V. Himes. Meeting called to order by the President. A call was then made for the reading of the record of the business of last years' conference. Read by the Secretary. The committee then called the case of Eld. Jesse Partridge, and asked the reading of the REPORT of the council which sat on his case last year. The Secretary read the report, in which it was shown that four of the charges against him had been sustained by the council. It was moved to adopt the council's report. It was adopted.

Voted, to inquire whether Eld. Partridge had made the confessions required by the council to the satisfaction of the parties, and of the council. The evidence was presented of what had been done, showing that his efforts were not satisfactory to either party, nor to the council. The merits and demerits of this afflicting case were then discussed to some length, preparatory for final action upon it. It was also much embarrassed by "foreign intervention," not called for nor needed, which forcibly illustrated the truth of 1 Cor. 15: 23. It being now noon, the case was adjourned to 4 o'clock, P. M.

At 2 P. M., met to hear the reports from the churches, and various fields of labor in Maine. These reports were, for the most part, very encouraging, showing an increase of faith and love in the truth, a more general looking for the soon coming of Christ, and of desire to hear on the subject. Sinners have been converted in various places, and christians enlightened. The quarterly conference had been especially blessed of the Lord to the spread of truth and the conversion of sinners. Preachers have multiplied. Six have been ordained within the year. One Bro. N. Smith, had fallen in death, much lamented, but fell with all the armor on, and in the work of the Lord.

3 o'clock, P. M. Preaching by Eld. J. V. Himes from Dan. 12: 12, 13, on the Gentile times. 4 o'clock, P. M. Entered upon business again. The case of Eld. Partridge was still before us. Bro. Himes had rendered special service in aiding the conference in seeking the proper basis of settlement of this difficulty. His example aught to stimulate some others to purity and peace in the work of christian discipline. At this point Eld. Partridge made the following

CONFESSION.

Dear Brethren:—As I have been required to make a confession to the brethren of the Poland church, and also to the Maine conference, permit me to say—

First. As to the Poland church, I freely confess (1) That I did not take gospel steps to effect a reconciliation with the church. (2) That I did do wrong in making the remark that the Poland affair was a family affair. (3) That I did not do as I agreed with Bro. Fassett, all of which I sincerely regret, and ask your forgiveness. I would say that I accept of the report of the council as to their decision on the charges preferred against me. I doubt not that in times of excitement I have said things which I ought not to have said—things which I was provoked to utter because of false reports. All that I have uttered that is wrong, I sincerely regret. And if in any thing I fail to see as my brethren do, I would say, that if at any subsequent time I see otherwise, I trust I shall be ready and willing to make it all right.

And finally, I desire to be restored to christian fellowship, so that I may co-operate again with my brethren.

Signed, JESSE PARTRIDGE.

Voted to accept this confession. Eld. I. C. Wellcome then offered the following:—

Resolved, That in view of this confession, the conference feel satisfied that Bro. Partridge desires to return and engage anew to labor in union with us. We receive his confession, and give him our sympathy again, and will help him by every means in our power to carry out his purpose. Adopted.

Resolved, That it shall be an offence for any one to bring this matter up again, either in public or private, to revive the difficulty. Adopted. Voted to adjourn business until 8 o'clock to-morrow.

Evening, 7 o'clock. Met for prayer and conference, and enjoyed a good season in the Lord. There were many marked manifestations of deep seriousness and interest in the work of God. A strong desire seemed to pervade the meeting for more freedom of spirit and personal union with Christ and to his cause. 7 3-4 o'clock, preaching by Eld. F. H. Berick, from Rev. 7: 1-4. A part of the sermon was very inexplicable.

Saturday, A. M., 8 o'clock, met. Prayer by Eld. S. K. Partridge. The Report of the Mission was then called for, when the Secretary gave the following REPORT:—

Your committee beg leave to say that the mission effort the past year has been a decided success. Much good has been accomplished by the spread of truth in new fields, the conversion of sinners, the increase of light and faith on the part of christians, and the strengthening of the brethren generally. The Lord has blessed the effort, and our expectations are more than realized in the means to carry on the work. The auditing of the Treasurer's accounts give the following results:—

|---|---|
| Paid the balance due treasury on last year's account, | $2.17 |
| Paid Eld. O. R. Fassett, for eleven months preaching, | 321.00 |
| Traveling, horse, and Secretary's expenses, | 78.31 |
| For books and tracts bought, | 42.61 |
| Total, | $444.09 |
| For one horse and interest on note, | 75.90 |
| One sleigh, | 10.00 |
| One harness and halter, | 10.27 |
| Two sleigh robes, | 5.00 |
| Total amount paid out, | $545.26 |
| Receipts for the mission collected, $484.55 | |
| Received for books and tracts sold, 18.12 | |
| | $502.67 |
| Due the Treasury now, | $42.59 |

There are some subscriptions yet unpaid, which we hope to collect, to meet this deficiency, and square the past year's work, and thus own the team.

PROPERTY ON HAND.

|---|---|
| One horse, sleigh and equipage, worth, | $92.00 |
| Books and tracts, at cost, | 20.12 |
| | $112.12 |

Respectfully submitted.
I. C. WELLCOME, Treasurer.

The Report was accepted, and moved to be adopted, when inquiry was made as to who or what class had borne the chief expense of the mission. The Treasurer at that moment could not give the information accurately, but stated that the ministers of Maine, though poor and obliged to earn the most of their own support, had paid much more, according to their number, than any other class, though some had done nobly.

|---|---|
| The books show that five minister paid, | $55.00 |
| Four other ministers, | 15.00 |
| Making, | $70.00 |

This shows that nine of the ministers paid more than one sixth collected.

| | |
|---|---|
| One brother in Mass. paid, | $52.00 |
| Friends in Bristol, R. I., | 10.00 |
| | $62.00 |

I record these items to provoke others to emulation, hoping to yet see a general interest awakened in the home mission and tract enterprise. The Lord is soon coming, and we must do what we can quickly. The Mission Report was adopted.

It was then moved to choose a new Board of Directors, which was done. The same members were re-elected. Bro. Geo. Humphrey declined to serve, and resigned. Bro. Silas Timberlake was chosen to fill the vacancy. The Mission Board is as follows: I. C. Wellcome, R. Herley, Silas Timberlake, Isaac Wight, E. M. Haggett. I. C. Wellcome was chosen Treasurer.

Voted to employ one, or more, missionaries the coming year. A pleasant interchange of thought was then had, with remarks on the importance of missionary work, and the best means to sustain it. A committee was appointed to wait on the congregation and receive subscriptions, when about ninety dollars was subscribed towards the coming year.

The Missionary Board then came in, and reported that they had engaged Eld. R. R. York, of Yarmouth, as missionary for the coming year, and Eld. Thomas Smith, of Bangor, as a second, for three months, on conditions that he be continued longer if the treasury will allow. Adjourned.

P. M., 2 o'clock. Met and enjoyed a social meeting one hour, which was a very refreshing season. The brethren and sisters had a mind to work, and to testify of the grace of God, and of their joyous hope of soon seeing Jesus coming in his glory to establish his everlasting kingdom. At 3 o'clock, preaching by Eld. S. K. Partridge from John 14: 6, and followed by several others who had found "the way, the truth, and the life," and loved to talk of it, and to recommend it to others.

At 4 o'clock the meeting service was changed for a formal adjournment of its business sessions, when the following was presented:—

Resolved, That we, as a people, are more and more confirmed, from year to year, in the faith that we are witnessing the closing scenes of the gospel dispensation, and that we shall soon see our Lord Jesus Christ coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, to redeem his people and establish his kingdom. And we wish it fully understood, that while we sympathize with the sinful, suffering citizens of this world in this their time of national "distress and perplexity," and will extend to them all the aid we can in a christian manner, we intend to be loyal to "the Captain of our salvation," and thus sustain the character of Christ's "peculiar people" and "not be reckoned among the nations." (See Num. 23: 9.) Adopted.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt thanks to the brethren, sisters and friends of Portland, for their kindness and hospitality in cheerfully receiving and providing for us in their place of worship, and at their homes, during this conference. Adopted.

Voted, That the Secretary's report of this conference be forwarded to the "World's Crisis" and the "Advent Herald," for publication. Voted to adjourn to meet at the call of the President and Secretary, in 1863, if time continue.

Evening, 7 o'clock. Met for social worship, expecting preaching at 7 1-2 o'clock, but it was soon manifest that the Lord would have the people preach. The meeting began in the power of the Spirit. God's blessing seemed to rest with special effect on the people while they prayed, sung, testified and exhorted. Some who had felt bound in Spirit became free, and rejoiced in the Lord. Some perishing sinners felt their need of Christ, and four came forward for prayers, when we united in prayer with them for their pardon and salvation. We trust the Lord answered prayer in their case, and gave them the gospel hope of eternal life. Two of them spoke of their interest and determinations.

Sunday A. M., 8 o'clock. Met for a social meeting and enjoyed another precious season in the Lord until 9 o'clock, when the Sunday School of the Second Advent church in Portland assembled, and with many others listened to a Sunday School address from Bro. Himes, which was said to be very appropriate and of deep interest. I was not able to attend and hear it, which I much regretted. The school then proceeded with their lessons. It is said to be a good school.

At 10 1-2 Eld. Himes preached from Rev. 11, on the "two witnesses," showing that they were slain in A. D. 1793, and that they were measured by the period of 1260 years, which he argued terminated in 1793, and that the remaining 75 years of the 1335 marks the time of the end"; and, as a conclusion, that these days will end in 1867 or 8, and Daniel, with all the faithful, will then stand in their lot. I think this is so. Let us be faithful. P. M., 3 o'clock. Eld. Himes preached from Rev. 15th and 16th chapters, especially treating on the vials,—an interesting discourse to the careful students of prophecy. I hope he will put it in print, that all who wish may read it.

Evening, 7 o'clock. Met to enjoy the privilege of partaking the Lord's Supper. The hall was filled, a long table was spread, introductory remarks were made, which were very impressive; scriptures were read, hymns sung, and the usual service at the Lord's table observed, interspersed with remarks and quotations of scripture, with rejoicings of the saints in the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus personally (as he is), to sit with us at his Father's table. About two hundred believers sat down to partake of the supper. To me, and to many others, it was the most solemnly interesting and joyous communion season we ever enjoyed. The audience who witnessed it seemed also deeply impressed. Before we parted, an invitation was extended to any who wished to enlist in the Lord's army to rise up. Four did so. Three of them were new cases. We joined in prayer for their pardon and salvation. One other, who had just been converted, arose to signify that she wished at a proper time to be baptized.

This interview lasted two hours, and was worth enough to repay the toils of the whole conference. There were some features of the meetings which detracted from its interest, so that it came short of being as good as some previous conferences; but there were other features still more interesting than ever before, and it may prove to be the most profitable of any one we have yet held.

There are items of business connected with the cause of God, which somebody must "observe and do," however unpleasant the task, while others take no interest in them, and withdraw from bearing the burdens, but feel quite content to share the blessings arising from the faithfulness and toil of others, in christian discipline and management.

The ministers present were Elders Thos. Smith, R. R. York, Wm. H. Mitchell, B. S. Emery, Isaac Wight, I. Jordan, J. A. Libby, E. M. Haggett, D. M. Hanscomb, Jesse Partridge, H. D. Reed, S. K. Partridge, I. C. Wellcome, of Maine.

Elds. J. V. Himes, F. H. Berick, E. Burnham, of Mass., Eld. Wm. M. Ingham, of N. S., and Wm. H. Mitchell, were voted in members of the conference at this session.

I. C. WELLCOME, Secretary.

Yarmouth, Me., Sept. 25th, 1862.

Our Hope.

The christian's hope! an anchor sure,
That's cast within the vail;
A hope that's ever bright and pure,
A hope that ne'er will fail.

A hope that when life's sorrows end,
And we lie down to rest,
That God will soon his angels send,
To gather all the blest;

That soon shall Gabriel's trumpet sound
The mandate through the land,—
From east, from west, from north, from south,
Appears a heavenly band.

In robes of pure and spotless white,
See each fair saint arrayed,
In glittering robes of shining light,
And crowns that never fade.

O! what a glorious sight 'twill be
When yonder dead arise,
In Jesus' loving arms caught up
To meet him in the skies;

When Jesus' saints, who long have lain
Entombed in earth and sea,
Shall join with us the blessed song
Of immortality.

O! then why should our spirits fail,
And why our hope grow dim?
O! why should torturing doubts arise
To mar our faith in Him?

The morn is near! the watchman cries!
Awake, ye slumbering ones!
Ye waiting, watching, little flock,
Rejoice! your Master comes!

A Dialogue.

N.—Good evening, sister E.; glad to see you this evening; how do you do?

E.—I am quite well, I thank you, and am very glad to see you too; for you are always so cheerful, and care so little about what takes place around you, it seems to me you must be perfectly happy. I should like to know the mystery of it.

N.—O, there is no mystery about it. I have only learned from the Bible to have a contented mind; and you know that we believe there is no mystery in the word of God.

E.—Yes, but there is so much war, and fighting, and everything going on, that I have no time to think of anything else.

N.—Have you any one in the war, or likely to go?

E.—No; but then it is getting our country in such a condition, I am afraid we shall all come to want.

N.—You should have a contented mind; then all will be right.

E.—Yes, I know that the Bible says something about it; but I cannot help it; for I have got a few hundred dollars in the bank; and had I known how hard the times would have been, I would have saved more.

N.—Suppose the banks fail, what will you do then?

E.—I don't know. I heard a man say the other day that he thought the banks would all fail before the war ended; now how any one can have a contented mind, I should like to know.

N.—You know what Paul said to Timothy; I Tim. 6: 6-9,—"But godliness with contentment is great gain; for we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content."

E.—Well, I don't think it any hurt to have money in the bank against the time of need: for most everybody does; and those too who are expecting the Lord every day.

N.—You are an Adventist, I believe.

E.—I used to be; but I never thought it any harm to put money in the bank, if you had any to spare.

N.—But Christ says, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth," but lay them up in heaven; "for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Now if your treasure was in heaven, your heart would be content; for you know that bank will never fail.

E.—Suppose the rebels should take Washington, what should we do?

N.—Why, trust in God, and be content. He has promised to take care of us, if we are his; and his promises are yea and amen.

E.—Yes, I know; but—

N.—"But," why there is no "but" about it. What is the Capitol of the United States, which, comparatively speaking, is like "Jonah's gourd," that came up in a night, and perished in a night; when compared with the capital of old father Abraham's land? Think of its President, who is to be President not only four years, but for ever. Then there is to be no more war, no more fighting, and no more death. Why only think of it! This is what makes a contented mind.

E.—Well, I must confess I am a backslider in these precious truths; for I have not thought of them seriously for a long time before; and, really, this evening's talk has done me much good; and I do hope you will come in again.

N.—I am glad if it has. It has done me good too; and when I come again we will have another talk on the same subject. Now don't let this world's troubles carry you away so again.

E.—No, I will not. Good night.

N.—Good night. A. DIXON.

Correspondence.

From Maria T. Albert.

BRO. GRANT:—A kind friend in Mass., who frequently sends us the Crisis, has forwarded the No. of Aug. 13, in which we notice the proposed "petition" to the President of the nation. We are glad to see it. It may be the Lord will in this way deliver those who have been crying to him. I have thought of and prayed much for the "children of the kingdom" in this country who I knew could not, conscientiously, engage in the battles of these last days. Such is our position; and we have felt troubled at the prospect of drafting in this county, which it is thought will soon take place; but we have looked to the Lord, and hope in his mercy.

We are here alone in the midst of sectarians, darkness and bigotry. O! I wish that eastern ministers of the gospel of the kingdom could have such a vision of this region of country as was granted Paul of Macedonia. I believe some one would then feel pressed in spirit to come this way. We need one of the Lord's watchmen to lift up his voice like a trumpet,—to cry aloud and spare not, but show the people their transgressions and the things coming on the earth. The war spirit prevails in the churches, and ministers urge on their people to the work of slaughter; and in some instances, leaving their flocks, they have gone to the battle-field.

There is a field here in which to scatter tracts, good plain ones on the coming and kingdom of Jesus, etc. We need German tracts. There are many intelligent German families through all this part of the State, who cannot read English. I have delayed to ask for any, hoping to be able to send for some; but the times grow worse, and money is scarce where it once was plenty. Yet I love to see something doing to enlighten this people. But a faithful preacher is most needed, for books and tracts can reach but a small portion of the people, especially in these times of confusion and excitement, when little is read but political papers.

Dear Brn. and Srs.,—friends, remember us. We are with you subject to trials and disappointments in these uncertain times, and without the comforting fellowship of those of like faith and hope; but pray that we be kept from evil, and overcome the world, and be gathered with the elect when our King shall come to Zion.

Falmouth, Pa.

From Bro. Israel Damman.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I will just say the Lord is good to Israel. The Lord is at work in a number of places where I have been holding meetings, also in other places that I hear from. Last night, in a prayer meeting in our own village, quite a number made a start. Some found peace. The work is going well. I go to Newport to-night, where the Lord is at work, and to-morrow evening, to Exeter, and on Wednesday, expect to baptize some happy converts. Bless the good Lord for his condescension. O what love! What manifestations of love!

"Salvation, O the joyful sound!
'Tis pleasure to our ears;
A sovereign balm for every wound,
A cordial for our fears."

Pray for us that we may know how to behave ourselves in the house of God, and know the work of God, and how to work for God. Amen.

Corrinna, Me.

From Bro. J. G. Hook.

BRO. GRANT:—The church in this city are still holding fast whereunto they have attained, and are growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. We have meetings six evenings in the week; most of which are very interesting. On Wednesday evening, the meeting is held at Bro. Zina Ford's house, at East Concord, where several good brethren and sisters abide. One prominent Methodist, and others of the same society, attend, and seem to be much interested in our "blessed hope." It is refreshing to see and hear the young converts in our prayer and conference meetings. They stand up nobly for Jesus.

It was announced by a brother in one of our meetings a few evenings since, that Bro. Grant had been arrested, and sent to prison for preaching the gospel of peace. The announcement produced a great sensation. The tears flowed profusely from the eyes of those young disciples you buried in baptism the past summer, and from many of the old pilgrims too. One lad exclaimed, "The prison can't hold Bro. Grant if God wants him to be free."

Well, Bro. Grant, we are glad you are free, as yet; and pray God you may ever enjoy the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free, and never be entangled with any yoke of bondage. Praise God for gospel liberty.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Why I gave up Smoking.

By EBENEZER DAVIES, Minister of the Caledonian Road Chapel, London, formerly a missionary in New Amsterdam, Berbice.

I was a smoker, and the son of a smoker. I began to smoke when I began to preach—that is, when about twenty years of age. Most of the preachers of my acquaintance did the same. I thought it preacherly to imitate them. I smoked during the time I was at college: that was contrary to the rule of the institution; but the President was a smoker too. In after years, however, when we were having a friendly chat over our pipes, he positively and solemnly assured me that, if he had found me out, he would have expelled me from the College instanter! When about to sail as a missionary to a distant land, I recollect having the honor and felicity of having, in a little room, not three miles from Paternoster Row, in London, a pipe with a Veteran in the service, whose praise was, and is, in all the churches. "A fine thing," said he, with a little Scotch accent, "is a pipe of tobacco in a hot climate. Let me recommend you, my young brother, to take with you a good stock of pipes and tobacco." You need not ask me whether I did so. In the course of time, however, when laboring as a missionary, I felt compelled, for the sake of example, to become a teetotaller, and to throw myself heart and soul into the total abstinence movement; but, still adhering to the beloved pipe.

In a parcel of Ipswich Temperance Tracts, kindly sent me by R. D. Alexander, Esq., was one headed, "Dost thou smoke, Billy?" I read it and it made me feel uncomfortable. Some copies of it had got into circulation among my people before I was aware. A fine black young man came to me one day, and after bowing and scraping and bidding me good morning, "will massa please gie me one leetle tract?"

"Yes, Quamina, and welcome; which will you have?"

"Dat tract called 'Dosse you smoke, William'" (He thought it would be too vulgar, in my presence, to say "Bill;" politeness led him to say "William.") I gave him the tract; but I felt I would rather he had asked for any other than that, and my uneasiness was increased. The tract was evidently exciting some attention. It was condemning, amongst the people, their master's habit.

One night, soon after Quamina's visit, having knocked out the ashes of my last pipe, before retiring to rest, a colloquy took place between my conscience and myself, of which the following is a faithful report:

Conscience. You have given up all intoxicating drinks, and you have done well. Why not give up that smoking too?

Myself. I cannot. It is a pleasant habit, to which I have been addicted for fifteen years.

Conscience. Does it do you any real good?

Myself. I must confess that it does not.

Conscience. Is it not in a variety of ways positively injurious to you?

Myself. It is; both my judgment and my experience are against it.

Conscience. Do you not, at temperance meetings feel that many of the arguments you urge against alcoholic drinks tell with almost equal power against the use of tobacco?

Myself. I cannot deny that I do.

Conscience. How much have you spent on tobacco during the fifteen years that you have been a smoker?

Myself. Oh, not much; I never smoke cigars, except when some ship captain makes me a present of a few: they are otherwise too expensive; the pipe is much more economical.

Conscience. But how much has the pipe cost you since you became a preacher? Try to form an estimate.

Myself. (After a long pause.) The amount, I find, is larger than I thought it was; I cannot, however, exactly say how much it is.

Conscience. But I insist upon knowing. Honestly, now, can it have been less, on an average, than two pounds a year, or thirty pounds in the fifteen years?

Myself. I believe that will be somewhere about it.

Conscience. And how much during the same period did you contribute directly toward the spread of the gospel?

Myself. I really cannot tell; for I try not to let my left hand know what my right hand doeth.

Conscience. Come, come; none of that cant and nonsense. I insist upon knowing. Call to mind your contributions, and give me some approximate idea.

Myself. (After another long pause.) I believe about ten pounds.

Conscience (in a thundering voice,) What! only one-third of what you have spent upon tobacco?

Myself. Only one third!

Conscience. And yet you are a minister of the gospel?

Myself. Yes, I am.

Conscience. A missionary sent out to this distant land?

Myself. Yes.

Conscience. Supposed, of course, to be a very good man.

Myself. Yes.

Conscience. And your business as a missionary is to try to make these black and colored people around you good?

Myself. Yes.

Conscience. You tell tell them that their money is not their own; and you urge them to deny themselves, and to make sacrifices, in order that they may be able to contribute towards the support and spread of the institutions of christianity?

Myself. I do.

Conscience. You urge even the children not to spend their pocket money in oranges, mangoes, sugar-canes, and sapodillas, with other fruits and sweets, but to give it to send the gospel and to plant its institutions where they are not yet known?

Myself. I do.

Conscience. A pretty fellow, then you are! During the time you have had the honor of being a minister of the gospel, you confess that you have yourself spent three times as much of God's money on that worthless weed, or rather that injurious poison, tobacco, as you have given for the spread of that glorious gospel, which you call "Heaven's best boon to man!" And yet you have the face to call upon others to deny themselves for that purpose! Shame, shame upon you!

Myself. I am ashamed and confounded. I scarcely ever felt more despicable in my own eyes than I do at this moment. From this night forth I vow that I will never spend another penny in tobacco.

Conscience. Good, good; stick to that, and you will be more worthy of your position and office.

So ended the colloquy. Having asked God to forgive me the great sin of which I had been guilty, and grant me grace and strength to carry out the resolve I had just made, I went to bed.

The next day was the commencement of a great conflict. At the usual times for taking the pipe, the craving for it was very strong. I managed to resist it however by putting to myself a few simple questions, such as, "What is the matter with you? Why are you restless and unhappy? "Have you a headache?" "No." "A toothache?" "No." "Have you pain in any part of your body?" "No." "Are you cold?" "No." "Hot?" "No." "Are you hungry?" "No." "Thirsty?" "No." Then why, in the name of all that is rational, are you are not contented, and even thankful to God for the exemption from pain which you enjoy?"

In this manner I [illegible]ured myself against the unnatural craving. Every time I resisted the appetite, I felt that I had achieved a victory; that I was rising higher in the scale of being; that my moral strength was augmented; that I was getting more into harmony with God's laws and my own conscience; and that my example, in regard to the youths of my congregation, was becoming more worthy of me as a christian missionary and pastor. Ere long the craving ceased; the appetite died away; I was emancipated! And now I would not be again enslaved for all the world calls good or great. Most devoutly do I thank God for my deliverance both from alcoholic drinks and from tobacco. Against them both I am determined to battle till I die. Amen—G.

Poisons.

From a Latin word, meaning "drink," as poisons are generally taken in that way; and are either "corrosive," such as destroy or kill the texture of the part; or "constitutional," affecting the system, through the nerves and blood-vessels. Mineral and acid poisons, as lead, copper, and arsenic, oxalic-acid, aqua-fortis, and the like, kill the living parts on the instant of touching, and death speedily results, from inflammation, swelling, and mortification.

Alcohol, opium, prussic-acid, strychnine, and the like, are constitutional, and affect the system through the nerves and blood-vessels. There are, besides the gases, over sixty solid substances in nature, which destroy life in a day, an hour, a minute. An "antidote" is that which instantly renders a poison innocuous by removal or chemical combination. For corrosive poisons such as mineral and acid, indicated certainly by the patient carrying the hand to the throat, swallow instantly sweet oil, train-oil, or any other simple oil or grease first at hand. This soothes, protects, and vomits; or take magnesia, soap, or saleratus, in water.

As to the constitutional poisons, instant removal is imperative; and the very best thing in all nature, as well as most generally at hand, is a heaping teaspoonful each of common salt and ground mustard, stirred quickly in a glass of cool or warm water, and swallowed on the spot. This usually causes instantaneous vomiting. As soon as this ceases, as there may be some of the poison left in the stomach, swallow the white of an egg or two; and to make assurance doubly sure, drink most freely of very strong coffee. The egg is best for corrosive poisons; the coffee, for the constitutional. A quart of very strong cold coffee should be put away in a bottle in every family, for such uses; especially as it is the antidote for a larger number of poisons than any other substance in nature.

Invocation.

Father in heaven! high and holy One!
Who, gazing from thy bright and dazzling throne,
Dost view each world, and guide each whirling sphere
In their eternal march and long career;
Though viewing them, dost every action scan
That's wrought on earth below by mortal man;
O Thou before whose throne bright seraphs bow,
And raise their songs in swelling chorus now;
Thou who dost merit praise from every heart,
O that Thou wouldst to me thy love impart,
And teach thine erring child the way of life,
The way to live, to act, 'mid earth's wild strife;
O that Thou wouldst o'ershadow me with love,
With cheering light of life from thee above;
That should dark woes my treasured hopes destroy,
Thou still may'st be my counsellor and joy.
O Father! teach me how to follow right,
That thine own will may be my sweet delight.
The good of all to seek while here I stay—
To soothe with words of hope the mourner's way;
And bind with healing balm the heart that bleeds,
That I may thus win life with holy deeds,
That when this stormy voyage shall be o'er,
My home shall be on Salem's shining shore.
Now grant, O Lord, that this my portion be,—
On earth to praise, in heaven to reign with thee!

The World to Come.—Heb. 2 : 5.

NUMBER TWO.

'The world of fancy and the Spirit land—Man's nature, and the penalty of sin—man in death.

I shall now endeavor to show from revelation,

First, that this "world to come" is not the idealist's world of fancy, existing only in imagination, to which the spirits of dead people go in order to "range the elysian fields."

Secondly, that it is not another world than the one we now inhabit, but this same world renewed under the personal reign of Christ.

Thirdly, that this earth renewed is presented in the Bible as the christian's hope of reward.

Fourthly, that none but the righteous by faith of Jesus Christ will be permitted to inhabit it. And Fifthly, that the possession of this hope leads to godliness, or holiness of life, by a strict conformity to the word of God, thereby doing his will.

Lastly, in conclusion, point out the necessity of Christ's second coming.

Our first proposition, that the world to come is not an imaginary one to which dead people's spirits go, etc., being a negative affirmation, needs no direct argument in proof of it, for by sustaining our remaining affirmative propositions, this one follows as a sequence. Nevertheless we shall undertake to establish the hypothesis by adducing some passages of Scripture, to prove that when people are dead they are asleep, in an unconscious state, and from this deduce the fact that they are not "happy in glory" or miserable in hell.

1. Solomon says (Eccl. 12 : 6), whenever "the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern; then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it" (neuter gender). Again he says (chap. 9 : 5), "The living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward."

But I shall perhaps at the outset be met with the following hackneyed argument in the mind of some of my hearers,—"No; their bodies do not know anything—they are dead; but the spirit that was in the body, it was the man—the living, thinking, acting intelligence, the conscious, responsible creature, and that is not dead, but has returned to God, and is either happy in heaven, paradise, glory, hades, some place, or miserable in hell, tartarus, hades, purgatory, or some other place—I cannot exactly fix the locality—but no doubt receiving its just deserts for the deeds it performed while tabernacled in the body." Then the body never knew anything? "No; it was only matter, and matter cannot think"! Then the body was only an agent or instrument to perform the will of the spirit? "That was all"! And the spirit you say was the living man? "Yes"! Very well, then, let us see a little about that. Solomon says, "the living know"! The dust-man-body, you say, does not know. Let it be so then,—that it is the spirit that lives and knows. What is it then that dies? Why! why! not the body, surely, for that was but matter! then it must be the spirit; for Solomon does not say the living know their bodies shall die, but they, the living, shall die; then, when dead, they "know not anything."

Again, the living when dead, have "no more a reward"; but by your logic, the body being only matter could never have received a reward, for matter can no more receive a reward than it can think. But "no more receive" is equivalent to a declaration that it has sometime received, if so be that it is the body, as you say, that is dead. So again, if it was the spirit which was rewarded in the body while living, it is the Spirit which can now no more receive, because, by your logic and theology, it is now dead and knows not anything; if so be that it was the living. But happiness conferred or misery endured for "deeds done," is a reward for good or evil. And Paul says in 2 Cor. 5 : 10, that every one is to "receive the things done in his body," not out of it. What paradoxes! What dilemmas! for when the spirit is out of the man (whether styled spirit-man or dust-man), then the MAN is dead.

But one thought more on this point before we leave it. You claim that brain cannot think because it is matter, and mind is not a property of matter, and mind alone can think. Pray tell me, have you ever yet proved that mind itself is not material? "O yes! mind is spirit, and that is not matter." Ah! that is the very thing to be demonstrated. I implore you, do not beg the entire question. Establish your hypothesis and then we will accept your thesis. Now we do not claim that dead brain has any property or power to think, neither do we claim that matter can, because simply alive, think; for mind is no more a property of life than of matter, otherwise every living thing would think just in proportion to its vitality; but we do claim that wherever there is life there is spirit. Mind, then, is not an ever-present essential quality of spirit, any more than of matter, for we witness manifest spirit without mind, as well as matter without mind.

Is it therefore a sound philosophical and correct logical deduction, that because we see some forms of matter destitute of mind property, to conclude that all modifications of it are necessarily equally destitute. Profound philosophy! Comprehensive logic! Divine theology! that throws the will power of the Creator entirely out of the question and seeks for a cause where it does not exist. Why, the power of production itself, in the whole material universe, is not a property of matter inert; there is no power in matter itself to produce a grain of corn, yet all the endless varieties of fruits and grains are material productions, brought about, not by any essential mode of matter, but by an acquired or conferred quality dependent upon the will of the Creator, through the agency of his Spirit, for the law governing each particular specific organization. These varieties all draw their nourishment from the same repository, are subject to the same law, exist by the same power, and produce by the same spirit; for there is but one spirit or life in the whole universe of God, and one great primary mind governing all. We say there is but one life in the universe, and not one particle more or less life in existence now than there was prior to the creation, though there are endless varieties and modifications of that life in its different manifestations and individualizations; and the bestowment of a portion of that life upon any particular organization or class, constitutes its individuality; as, my life, your life, vegetable life. And all the different phenomena in life, animal or vegetable, are but results, not of different kinds of life, but of different organizations, designed expressly by the will of the Creator to produce these various phenomena from the same life; and there is no other rational way to account for the illimitable varieties of organic structure. Hence it is not the spirit, soul, or life abstractly that enjoys and suffers, but the created creature, every fibre and particle of which is made alive by the quickening power of God's Spirit, and has sensation only by a nervous system, and perceives, reflects, combines, plans and executes through one of the five senses, or of the particular organ designed for its special purpose.

There are then "diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit."—1 Cor. 12 : 4. Now Paul, in Rom. 8 : 7, speaks of the "carnal (flesh) mind"; and in 8 : 27, of the "mind of the Spirit." Then there is such a thing as flesh producing mind, and there is such a thing as Spirit producing the same thing; but the apostle plainly tells you that the spirit-mind is not the natural or animal one, but the mind given us by the Holy Ghost after we believe; consequently unregenerate wicked men have not got it.

Now you hold that God first made a form (a body of dust); then he created a spirit-man, endowed it with intelligence, and put that spirit-man into the dust-body. Pray tell for what? If the spirit-man is so much more efficient and powerful without the body than with it, why put it in a prison and attach a clog to it, when innocent and free from sin, and then let it out of prison, and take off the clog, just so soon as it becomes guilty and sinful? It seems to me that wisdom and prudence would dictate that then was the very time it should have been more closely confined, and if need be even put to death. But what do you gain by going one remove from the dust-created form? "Gain spirit." Gain spirit! Was not the spirit-man still to be created? "Why, yes." What then was gained? It still was nothing but a created thing, and one creation was no more enduring than another, except by the will of its Creator; and if it was a creation it still had to be endowed with mind; for mind inheres in God only; and if mind was bestowed upon the created thing by its Creator, still more am I impelled to ask what was gained by the one remove? Why not bestow the gift of mind,—power to think and reason, upon the first creation—dust-man?

Christ said (Matt. 9 : 5), "Whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say (to the palsied), Arise, and walk?" And so it seems in this case as consistent to say to the dust-man, Arise, and live; think, act, talk, walk, and be a moral intelligence after my own image; as to go any number of removes from that position to gain the same end. You certainly did not gain immortality, simply by creating it spirit, except God also imparted that quality to the creation; for Paul says (2 Tim. 6 : 16) God "only hath immortality." And in Eph. 4 : 24 and Col. 3 : 10, he says that the image of God in which man was created was the knowledge of righteousness and true holiness. But this man lost by transgression, and if that image was his foundation for immortality and incorruption, what became of the superstructure when it was knocked from under him? for no sooner had he lost that image than he was driven forth from the garden, in the midst of which stood the tree of life, lest he should put forth his hand, and take, and eat of it, and live forever.

But you will not allow yourself to believe that God, by the power of his will, did make the dust-man to think through the simple superaddition of life, because your Platonic philosophy will not let you; whereas we do believe it, simply because God's word says so. And once you admit that it is his word, and you cannot gainsay it, for even our existence here is not dependent on any inherent principle of the body; but the prolongation of our animal life (so of all) is dependent upon the nourishment received and the air we breathe; and without that "true bread" that "came down from heaven," how are you to keep that soul of yours, already dead in trespasses and sins, from dying out altogether?

Olena, O. G. W. STETSON.

Absent from the Body—present with the Lord.

EXTRACT OF A DIALOGUE BETWEEN AN "ORTHODOX" MINISTER AND A BIBLE READER.

Minister. "I will next present 2 Cor. 5 : 1–8, for your consideration, which, in connection with Phil. 1 : 21, will very plainly prove my position correct. In order to save time, I will give the passage with my understanding of it in brackets.

'For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle [which is our body] were dissolved, [i. e. resolved back to dust], we have a building of God [the new Jerusalem], an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this [tabernacle or body] we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house [i. e., desiring to die and go to the new Jerusalem] which is from heaven: if so be that being [thus] clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle [or body] do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon [with our house which is in heaven] that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we [our immortal spirits] are at home in the body, we [our spirits] are absent from the Lord: (for we walk by faith not by sight:) we are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord. Wherefore we labor, that, whether present [with the body] or absent [from it] we may be accepted of him.'

Now note two or three points: 1. When the spirit is said to be 'at home in the body,' the man is represented by Paul to be 'absent from the Lord.' 2. When it is spoken of as being 'absent from the body,' it is said to be 'present with the Lord.' 3. It is certain that Paul here teaches the separate conscious existence of the spirit, from the fact that he uses the personal pronouns in contradistinction to the body: as for instance, verse 6, 'whilst we [i. e. our spirits] are at home in the body, we [our spirits] are absent from the Lord.' Again. 'We are . . . willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present [in spirit] with the Lord.' That this is a true and logical deduction from the apostle's language, I have not a doubt."

Bible Reader. "The fact that the term soul or spirit is not employed by Paul in this connection, is good proof to my mind that your 'logical deduction' from his language is unwarranted.

"But I will commence with your first assertion, which is that the 'earthly house of this tabernacle' is our body, which is to be dissolved. You here err at the start, as I will now show you. Note the fact that 'the earthly house' stands in contrast with the 'house not made with hands,' which you very correctly say is the new Jerusalem, the holy city for which Abraham looked. Heb. 11 : 10. Now as our bodies are never contrasted with the new Jerusalem, nor with the world to come, and as this world is frequently contrasted with the future world, it is certain that this earthly house or tabernacle is not our body, but is this world, which is our temporary dwelling place, and which, according to Peter (2 Ep. 3 : 7.) is to be dissolved by fire at the last day. Peter also says (verses 11–13), 'Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto [or literally—earnestly desiring] the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.'

"Here the present and future worlds are contrasted; and the mind is directed, not to 'dissolution' of the body, but to the dissolution of the heavens and earth, and to the resurrection at the last day. Mark the language: 'Seeing then that all these things ['the heavens and earth that now are'] shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be . . . looking for [what? heaven at death? no, but looking for] and earnestly desiring the coming of the day of God.' But why desire so earnestly to have this day come, if the spirit goes to heaven at death, where it must be perfectly happy? Paul tells us why he and the early christians desired it; it was on the ground of no resurrection, no future life. Hear him, (2 Cor. 4 : 14),—'Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you.' 'For if the dead rise not . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are PERISHED.'—1 Cor. 15 : 16, 18.

"But again. The language employed in verse 4, shows that the common view which you have given is incorrect. The apostle says; 'For we that are in this tabernacle [you say body] do groan, being burdened. [Well, what do you desire, Paul?] Not for that we would be unclothed,' [your exposition makes him say,—not that we would be disembodied, or would have our spirits separated from our bodies, with which they are clothed; thereby contradicting what you say Paul desired, which was to be unclothed, or that his spirit should be absent, or separated from the body in order to be present with the Lord.] 'Not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon [with our house which is from heaven], that mortality might be swallowed up of life.' The question now arises, when is mortality swallowed up of life? What do you say?"

M. "It is at death, as that is the time when we are clothed upon with our house [the holy city] which is in heaven."

B. R. "Which is in heaven? which is 'FROM heaven,' it reads: and this expression 'from heaven' is fatal to your exposition; for it shows that we are not clothed upon with this house, or holy city, until it comes down FROM heaven, 'prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.'—Rev. 21 : 2.

"But your answer does not agree with the fact that Paul did not desire to be unclothed, i. e., according to your own exposition—did not desise to die, or be 'absent from the body and to be present with the Lord';—then what did he desire, if it was not to die? Let Paul answer,—'Not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.' That the apostle had no reference to death in this language, or in the following language,—'If our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved'—being absent from the body and present with the Lord—is evident from the following connection:—'We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body and present with the Lord. Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him.' 'When? 'For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, [not at death, but 'when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, (and) shall sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations']; 'that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.'

"But I now wish to ask you—what is it that is 'swallowed up of life?'"

M. "It is the spirit which, at death, enters into life and is swallowed up of it."

B. R. "Your theory requires such an answer, and contradicts the apostle, who says, 'that MORTALITY [not *im*mortality] might be swallowed up of life.' It is furthermore absurd to suppose that an immortal spirit, or immortality can put on immortality!

"But to return. When is mortality swallowed up of life? Or, which is the same thing—when does mortality put on immortality? If it is not at death, as we have seen, it must be at the resurrection. Hence we find Paul announcing this truth in most positive terms in 1 Cor. 15 : 52–54; and I presume he does not contradict himself in 2 Cor. 5. His language is, 'For the trumpet shall sound, and the DEAD shall be raised incorruptible, and WE shall be changed. For this corruptible must put incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this MORTAL shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, (Isa. 25 : 8), death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?' Thus it is absolutely certain (permitting Paul to explain himself) that it is at the resurrection, when the last trump shall sound, that 'mortality (will) be swallowed up of life,' and that the christian will 'be absent [or 'delivered from the bondage of corruption,' or] 'from the [mortal] body, ['into the glorious liberty of the children of God'] and . . . present with the Lord,' [in the *im*mortal body.] If you have any further remarks on this chapter, in reply, I will hear them."

M. "I wish to revert to your denial that the 'earthly house of this tabernacle' is the body. You think it is this world: in this you are doubtless mistaken, though it may be true, as you say that the body is never contrasted with the future world; but it is also true, I think, that the body is called in the Bible a tabernacle, which is the temporary dwelling of the Spirit."

B. R. "This will be for you to prove. And let me here say that there is not a single instance in the Bible, as I firmly believe, where the body is called a tabernacle."

M. "My first proof is drawn from the fact that what Paul calls the tabernacle, in the first verse, he calls the body in ver. 6, 'Whilst we are at home in the body [or tabernacle] we are absent from the Lord.' To understand it otherwise is unnatural."

B. R. "It may seem unnatural to you; but to so understand it, involves the apostle in a contradiction, as I have already shown. And when you assert that what Paul calls the tabernacle in the first verse, he calls the body in ver. 6, you state what is not true; for skeinos, meaning a tent or tabernacle, is the Greek word used in the first verse, and somati, the word for body, is employed in ver. 6. Thus your first proof falls to the ground. What is your next?"

M. "My next, and the only proof that is necessary to present on this point, is 2 Pet. 1 : 13, 14. The apostle says, 'Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up, by putting you in remembrance, knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. Moreover, I will endeavor that ye may be able, after my decease, to have these things always in remembrance.' No argument on this passage is needed, for it is manifest at a glance that Peter speaks of his spirit (the 'I') being in his tabernacle, and of his putting it off, which he calls his exodus (or decease), which means his going out, or departing from his body."

B. R. "Spirit or soul is neither found or implied in this passage; it is, as usual, nothing but assumption. If the pronoun 'I' refers to Peter's spirit, as you say, what then does the pronoun 'my' refer to, in the expression, 'my decease'?"

M. "It refers to the body, of course."

B. R. "Why do you think so?"

M. "Because the body can die, and the soul can not."

B. R. "You forget that on your hypothesis, I proved that the body has no life in itself, the soul being the life thereof, and that it (the soul) was only separated from the body, and consequently that MAN, as such, did not die at all. Have I not also proved that a personal pronoun is never applied to a part of man, but always to the whole man? You must then see if your assumption—that the pronoun 'I,' in 2 Pet. 1 : 13, refers to his spirit—FAILS, the passage does not prove that tabernacle is the body. For PETER was evidently in 'this tabernacle'; and if Peter's spirit is not PETER, your position is not sustained.

"Then let us once more test this matter, and see what the personality of man really is; and whether it is or is not a movable personality. For you take the unwarrantable, and, as I believe, unscriptural liberty of moving it from man, as such, to the spirit of man; and then, in order to sustain your theory, you move it to 'his dead body,' thus making it the real man, which at the same time contradicts your view—that the spirit is the true man."

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER TWO.

II.—JUDGMENT DAY.

The finger of inspiration is continually pointing to the judgment; yet modern theology ignores or subverts this grand feature of the divine arrangement, by representing human beings as continually emigrating, either to a home of felicity, or a home of misery, as their perpetual recompense. And when the shocking absurdity of sending men, at hap-hazard, to heaven and hell, before being judged, is portrayed in its true light, the claim is set up that the judgment is now in session. But Christ puts a veto on this assumption, in saying, "The same shall judge him in the LAST DAY."—John 12 : 48.

Thus the judgment does not take place till the "last day"; and as judgment consists, firstly, in passing a sentence, and secondly, in executing the sentence; and as a sentence cannot be executed before being passed, it follows that there is no reward for saint or sinner prior to the "last day." Reward is the execution, or realization, of the sentence passed; or in other words, it is the result of the judgment, either for or against men: therefore, this theory of present reward for saints in realms of glory, or for sinners either in scorching fire or black oblivion, is subversive of the divine plan.

Let the judgment come "in the last day," then let the sentence be passed and executed upon mortals. Until that day, let men repose in the prison of death, where God will "reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment, to be punished"; and where saints "sleep in Jesus," though in the "land of the enemy." Let the judgment come first, and reward follow as the result, and the absurdity of conjecturing that saints are now basking in an ocean of shekinah glory, would become obsolete; and the inconsistency of fancying that the wicked are now reaping their recompense, either in a boiling lake of fire, or simply in an irrevocable death slumber, would hasten its way to the dark shades of obscurity!

The judgment makes the resurrection necessary, and the resurrection makes the coming of Christ necessary; while, if there were no future judgment, there would be no need of a resurrection; and if there were no need of a future resurrection, there would be no need of the coming of Christ.

These truths are so linked together that you cannot misplace one without disarranging the others. Let them occupy their places, if it unjoints human theology.

Sketches by the Wayside.—No. 3.

Let us review the picture again, for there are points yet unnoticed which we shall do well to closely examine. We have traced the church through her path of bloodshed and humiliation; trodden down by the iron hoof of that great and terrible beast seen in the visions of Daniel, for more than a thousand years—we have beheld her as she emerged from the wilderness leaning on the arm of her Beloved—we have traced her exaltation and union with earthly kingdoms—we have read the sad description of her departure from primitive purity and faith—her unwillingness to hear sound doctrine—her inclination to give heed to fables—her love of pleasure—her denial of primitive power, and adherence to the form merely of godliness.

When earthly aggrandizements, and worldly emoluments are hers, when wealth abounds, then, alas, she becomes exalted and idolized; the magnificent dwelling and gorgeous temple her hands have reared; she prides herself in her rich attire and splendid equipage, and lives in luxury and ease, a lover of pleasure more than a lover of God. Ungodly ministers are eating and drinking with the drunken, and while saying in their hearts "my Lord delayeth his coming," they smite the faithful watchman, who, standing on the watchtower, marks the tokens of his return, and cries aloud "Behold he cometh!" Matt. 24 : 48–50. "Peace and safety," "a good time coming," says the slumbering sentinel, as he unconsciously stands amid the "perils," while the dark storm clouds are gathering thick and fast above his head.—1 Thess. 5 : 3. Lamps untrimmed are going out; "hearts over-charged with surfeiting . . . and cares of this life," are taken in the snare from which none escape but those who take heed, watch and pray.—Luke 21 : 34–36.

But why thus "unawares" does the day of the Lord come and the Master return? Are there no presages of the approaching storm of wrath? No tokens by which to know when the Lord is at hand? Why, oh, why, if the rise and fall of earthly dynasties were deemed of sufficient importance to pass before the telescopic glass—if the striking events connected with the close of the scenes of earth were worthy of a glance, and the terrors of the last day were so definitely traced before the exploring vision, why were there no foreboding signs, no precursory beacons of warning by which the inhabitants of earth might be apprised of impending wrath, and seek to escape their appalling doom? How can God be full of love and mercy toward man if he send Jesus Christ in flaming fire, taking vengeance on those who know him not, and obey not the gospel of his Son, without giving them first a warning?

We read that the coming of the Son of God will be like the flood upon the antediluvian world, and the baptism of fire upon the cities of the plain. The inhabitants were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, knowing not until the flood came, and the fire descended, and took them all away. And why were they in such ignorance of impending wrath? It was not because they were unwarned, but because they believed not the words of warning uttered by a righteous Noah and Lot.

Upon the faithful servants, who give meat in due season, who from the storehouse of God's word dispense that portion of truth which is adapted to the necessities of the household at the close of the gospel dispensation, the Master comes not unaware. Unto those who have taken heed to the "sure word of prophecy," the day of the Lord cometh not as a thief, for such are children of the light, and of the day.

The midnight cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him!" arousing the slumbering virgins, finds not the wise unprepared, for their lamps are burning and their vessels filled with oil. Matt. 25.

The watching porter is ready to open to the returned nobleman. The watching church, who have learned the parable of the fig-tree, as bidden by the Master, know by its budding leaves that summer is at hand; i. e., they have seen the given tokens, and by them are assured that the kingdom of God is nigh, even at the door. Luke 21 : 25–31.

After the close of the great tribulation, and the church emerges from her wilderness state, there are seen signs in the sun, and the moon, and in the stars; the sun is darkened—the moon also—the stars fall to the earth like the untimely fruit of the fig-tree when it is shaken by a mighty wind—there are "fearful sights and great signs . . . from heaven"—"blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke." Luke 21 : 25; Mark 13 : 24; Joel 2 : 30. Rev. 6 : 12. "Signs in the earth beneath"—"a great earthquake"—"sea and the waves roaring" —"distress of nations, with perplexity," "men's hearts failing them for fear, looking after those things which are coming on the earth." "Unclean spirits," the spirits of demons working miracles, go forth to the kings of the earth, and to the whole world to gather them to the great battle of Armageddon.—Rev. 16 : 13–16.

The sign of the Son of man is lastly seen; then the nations begin to wail, for they know their doom is come. The great white throne appears in sight, the Lord descends with all his mighty angels—they gather the elect from the four winds of heaven to meet their beloved King—the tares are cast into a furnace of fire—the earth is purified from everything that defileth—Eden blooms again—Paradise is restored—the "first dominion," the kingdom "prepared from the foundation of the world," is given to the blessed of the Father, and they shall inherit it forever and ever. Messiah's banner waves on every hill-top, glory sits enthroned on every mountain, and illuminates every valley! The whole earth is full of the glory of the Lord!

The millennial day has dawned! The year of the redeemed has come! Were trumpets announced the approach? Sun, moon and stars proclaimed its coming? A formal church, a careless servant, a faithless watchman, a foolish virgin, a daring scoffer, a slumbering world bespoke it near? It was ushered in amid [illegible] vengeance; pealing thunder, fierce lightnings, great hailstones, flaming fire, the trumpet's fearful blast, earth shaking, heavens departing, the white throne appearing, the dead awaking, hearts quaking, and groans of agony, tears of anguish hopeless prayer and despairing shrieks! Ah! who shall be able to stand in the day of his wrath?

And are these the pictures drawn, the descriptions given, by those who were permitted to gaze into the future, and behold its startling events and scenes of thrilling interest? They are even so. We have not departed from the original, but sketched therefrom these sombre shades and gloomy shadows, succeeded by the glories of the millennial age, the dawning of the "perfect day." Fancy's pencil has not drawn the outlines, imagination has not filled the picture; but the hand of the Eternal One has traced them with the pen of Inspiration in the volume of Truth, and the events and scenes themselves have now nearly filled them all up.

In view of these facts, we would ask, How do they harmonize with the brilliant views, the resplendent landscape, the glowing sunshine presented by the graphic pastor whose language we have recorded at the commencement of our sketch?

Truth is what we need, whether it be given in sunshine or shade. M. D. W.

Courage.

Yes, courage, friends! True bravery is especially essential to Christ's soldiers now that the times have become so eminently "perilous." It must be granted that the enemies of God's church are many and mighty; yet the argument which Caleb and Joshua used to raise in their own hearts, as well as that of the church, stands, and is of as much force to-day as at the time it was spoken,—"The Lord is with us; fear them not." Is this not a good reason why we should possess undaunted courage?

If ever a chieftain delighted in seeing his army feel, "We are well able to go up," etc., it seems to me it is the Commander-in-Chief of God's host! And what more effectually advantageth the enemy, than to know we are discouraged! How it dishonors our Leader, when he has spared no pains to prepare for us an impervious armor, and an impregnable fortress, and himself leads the front against the foe.

How did the great Antigonus feel dishonored when he overheard his soldiers reckoning the great number of their enemies, in such a manner as to dishearten each other? Stepping suddenly in among them, he indignantly inquired, "And how many do you reckon me for?"

Friends, how many do we reckon the Lord for? Is he not more than a match for all his enemies? Then do we not commit great injustice against him and his ever blessed cause when we betray any emotions of discouragement? Upon examination of his Word, I think we shall find it thus. Then let us take heed to the oft-repeated injunction of inspiration, to "be of good courage."

What was it that so aroused the ire of Jehovah against the church in the wilderness as to make him swear in his wrath they should not enter the promised land, but that they should fall in the wilderness? Let us reflect seriously upon this question, because the improvement of the answer may involve momentous consequences. And when we begin to reckon the number of our enemies, how many and mighty they are, forgetting that God hath said, "I am He that is with you to go before you," etc., thus greatly weakening our own confidence by looking on the wrong side of the question; let us turn and read what the consequences were to the church who pursued such a course, recollecting meantime this church typified the one existing at the end of the world: "For when they went up into the valley of Eshcol, and saw the land, they discouraged the heart of the children of Israel, that they should not go into the land which the Lord had given them. And the Lord's anger was kindled the same time, and he sware, saying, Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, shall see the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob; because they have not wholly followed me: save Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenezite, and Joshua the son of Nun: for they have wholly followed the Lord." One point they all conceded at first, that "the land was good"; but ten against two maintained that the obstacles to obtaining it were insurmountable! There were the Canaanites, Hittites, Amalekites, Amorites, Jebusites, and they were of such gigantic stature that Israel could never cope with them. You see they looked at outward circumstances, and did not appreciate the strength of their Leader—a sin which we see is very offensive to him. Perhaps they had forgotten, if they ever read God's promise to Abram, that his seed should take and possess the land of these very nations.—Gen. 15: 18–21. An effectual way of strengthening our courage, is to become acquainted with God, so as to realize who and what he is, then read his promises. But the ten prevailed against the two and discouraged the great mass from obeying God, and thus brought down the malediction of Heaven upon themselves; but their children, it would seem, profited by their example, and knew they ought to have "courage" when God had spoken, and they fought valiantly, having confidence in God, and thus obtained the land promised. Josh. 23: 14,—"And, behold, this day I am going the way of all the earth: and ye know in all your hearts and in all your souls, that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you; all are come to pass unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof." Josh. 21: 43–45,—"And the Lord gave unto Israel all the land which he sware unto their fathers: and they possessed it, and dwelt therein. And the Lord gave them rest round about, according to all that he sware unto their fathers: and there stood not a man of all their enemies before them; the Lord delivered all their enemies into their hand. There failed not aught of any good thing which the Lord had spoken unto the house of Israel; all came to pass." Neh. 9: 7, 8,—"Thou art the Lord the God, who didst choose Abram, and broughtest him forth out of Ur of the Chaldees, and gavest him the name of Abraham; and foundest his heart faithful before thee, and madest a covenant with him to give the land of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Jebusites, and the Girgashites, to give it, I say, to his seed, and hast performed thy words; for thou art righteous." This was Abram's literal seed, and now if we are Christ's we are Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise (Gal. 3: 29) that he should possess the territory "under the whole heavens." Now it seems to me quite as heinous a crime to weaken our courage by looking at the lions in the way, instead of understanding and appreciating the strength and ability of our Leader, as it was for Abram's literal seed; yea, and more so, from the value of the inheritance; the latter being better in its kind, that is, free from the curse, and to be eternal in its duration! Then, friends, let us continue to sing—

"We'll never be disheartened any more."

God has provided all the facilities necessary for the upbuilding of his church; then condescends to make the stimulating inquiry, "What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it?" Indeed, I can name no deficiency, but conclude with the Apostle that "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things."

But do we not encounter some pretty trying circumstances every now and then? True; and who ever authoritatively said we should not? Our Master did not, neither did his apostles, but assured us affirmatively. But some who profess the same faith do not live it, but have become dishonest and hypocritical. This is very grievous to Christ and his disciples; but have we not been told that these things would occur? Did not Christ and all his apostles encounter false brethren? What if Paul had "given up ship" and sought an honorable position in society, and made up his mind to have no more to do with the sect "every where spoken against"? Why, he would have been lost with those false brethren. It was the TRUTH OF GOD that he stood for, and labored so earnestly to maintain, and he loved it too well to give it up because some held it in unrighteousness.

Brn. and Srs., when we left the world, did we not let ourselves to Jesus Christ, promising to obey his word? Now if we should feel like saying (as an apology for not obeying him), such an one has done so and so, let us inquire, What hath Jesus done, that I should refuse him the use of my one talent? O! what hath Jesus done that I should give the enemy cause to triumph over my discouragement?

Answers to Inquiries.

F. BURR: I do not know of any work on "The Seven Churches of Asia," such as you desire. The "Seven Churches of Asia" do not seem to me to be symbolic of different ages of the church, though we find resemblances in all ages. The "seven lamps" are symbols of "seven churches." Rev. 1: 20. Are the "churches" then symbols of something else? The angel explains the lamps to be churches—must we explain the explanation? Are the "lamps" a symbol of another symbol? Then may not that be a symbol of still another symbol? When we have an inspired explanation of a symbol, is it best to seek for an uninspired explanation of that?

1 Cor. 7: 14. "For the unbelieving husband is sanctified," etc. In Ezra's time, (Ez. 2: 10) the repenting Jews were bidden to put away their idolatrous wives as unholy. Doubtless some of the Corinthians consulted Paul as to their duty in the matter. He directs them not to separate from unbelieving partners. The word sanctify often signifies to set apart to a special use; and the word en, rendered by, is said to be sometimes used as a sign of the dative case, with the sense of to. (1 Cor. 9: 15.) Hence, McKnight renders this place,—"The infidel husband is sanctified to the wife," etc. That is, the husband or wife contracted no moral defilement by continuing in the bonds of marriage with the unbelieving partner; for the unbeliever, while true to the conjugal obligation, was sanctified by or to the wife, or set apart from all other associations, being of one flesh with the believer. For, if this were not so, and if having an ungodly husband was in itself a sin, then the innocent children of such parents would be unholy too; but as the union is not sinful, the fruits of it have no such stain. If the unbeliever depart, let them go. A believer is then free, or "not in bondage"; but unless they depart, the tie still holds firm; and the believer should continue in the married relation, and be faithful to God, and so perhaps the unbeliever may yet be saved. Possibly thou shalt save thy husband, or thy wife. But let the unmarried remember that though when once married religion should not break the tie, yet christians should marry "ONLY IN THE LORD."—1 Cor. 7: 39. They that forget this, peril their souls, dishonor God, and often take upon them one of the bitterest crosses which ever mortal bore. H. L. HASTINGS.

Drawing Near.

What is? "The end of all things." To our mind, no truth is more apparent in unfulfilled prophecy, than that Jesus is soon coming to set up his kingdom of peace. The long, dreary night of gloom and sorrow is nearly closed. The tender ties of affection, that have been sundered by death's relentless hand, will soon be healed—healed for ever. Praise the Lord. The poor oppressed christian will soon be a joint heir with Christ to an incorruptible inheritance. Let the glad day arrive speedily. O Lord, come and reign. We long to see thy glorious face, and sing thy praises with the church triumphant.

Dear reader, are you ready? Do you long for the arrival of the glad day? Or, do you tremble as you see evidence of its approach? You must admit, if you are in the bride,—the church—you will earnestly desire the coming of the Bridegroom. If you love his appearing, you love to hear the evidence that he is soon coming; and when you see any reason to conclude that he may delay a year longer than you had expected, it produces sorrow, as when you hear any bad news. We think it absurd to suppose that a true bride has any other feeling. We ask again, is it yours? If not, give your heart to Jesus at once. There is no time for delay; no room now for mirth or trifling. It is time to be in earnest, if we wish to be "ready" for "the marriage supper of the Lamb." We must be there. Come, dear reader, say farewell to this vain and wicked world, and never again seek its applause. Be alike dead to its frowns or its favors, its censure or praise. Let us be alive in CHRIST, and stand ready to give him a most hearty welcome at his appearing.

"Die Twice."

"Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which ALL that are in the graves shall HEAR his voice, and shall COME FORTH, they that have done good, unto the RESURRECTION of life; and they that have done evil unto the RESURRECTION of damnation."—John 5: 28, 29. "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the SECOND DEATH."—Rev. 2: 11. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the SECOND DEATH hath no power."—Rev. 20: 6. "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death."—Rev. 21: 8.

We clipped the following from the Harbinger:—

"RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED.—The has become a subject of much interest of late, and much has been written and said upon it. But I have seen nothing yet that touches the point. The question is—'Will the wicked be raised?' My answer is—no; and I demand a single text of Holy Writ that says they will; and until such a text is found, I cannot believe it. . . . This die twice is an abominable doctrine. If the unjust die twice, the wicked must three or four times, and the very wicked must die, die, die, and finally die the orthodox death that never dies. To die twice is, therefore, the offspring of eternal torture. It is putting away the bull and worshiping the calf.

Yours in hope, BEREAN."

What can be Done?

What can be done?—About what? Read the following from the Harbinger and then answer:—

"There is a preacher living one hundred miles off. We want his labors. He is sent for to preach the word. His family must be supported, which requires one dollar per day. He says to his family, I must go; off he starts, spends five dollars in traveling there and back; spends ten days, preaches day and night, sinners are converted, the people of God are rejoiced, the preacher feels that he is engaged in a glorious enterprise. At the close of the meeting, the brethren make a collection; they are all poor; all they can do is to raise six dollars. They are sorry that they are not able to do more; but so it is. The preacher returns home, pays his expenses out of the six dollars, and has just one dollar left. He says to his family, this will never do; I have sunk nine dollars in the last ten days. I shall be compelled to go to some other business to support my family."

Shall the faithful watchman be compelled to leave the field in the last days for want of means to sustain his family? Is it right? Has the church done her duty? Never were the labors of the minister needed more than now; especially those who can tell the people of the approaching kingdom of Christ. Will the brethren let them be driven from the vineyard for want of the necessaries of life? It may be said, "Let them trust the Lord." Why not practice the same, and help the preacher, and look to the Lord to replenish your store, as well as to make him do all the trusting. May there not be a want of trust on your part, as well as on his? The Lord may have trusted to you the means to pay the preacher; and now, when the Lord calls for a portion of it to sustain his servant, whom he sends out to proclaim the everlasting gospel, you are not willing to give it back to the Lord and trust him to fill up your basket again. You are earning from one to three dollars per day, perhaps, and living at ease comparatively, while the poor watchman is wearily working his way to your door, through the melting heat, or the cold storm, for many miles, and hardly finds a welcome on his arrival, and not enough to buy a loaf of bread for his hungry family, when he departs from your home of plenty. Remember, "with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Said Jesus, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." The hour is at hand when some will hear him say, "DEPART." Let each reader inquire, am I doing my duty? Shall I hear Jesus say, "well done?"

Progress of the War.

The great American war progresses slowly. After an immense expenditure of money, ammunition, and men, the results seem as doubtful as they did more than one year ago. Men speculate as to what will be the results of certain movements of the army, but the wisest statesmen have shown their utter inability to read future events. Where they looked for complete success, there comes an utter failure. Thus weeks and months pass away, till the army is now near the time when it must again prepare for winter quarters. A dark! dark! cloud still hangs over our nation, and the whole world. The pure religion of Jesus is hardly known in these days. Its defenders have turned to other work. The present has eclipsed the future, and an infidel night is fast setting in upon the inhabitants of our planet.

Theatres and Churches.

Says one of the leading New York Dailies, of Sept. 24, '62, when speaking of the popular feeling manifested when the enemy suffers a terrible loss on the battle field:—

"The theatres, quite as much as the churches, are places of public thanksgiving and praise, besides affording equally excellent opportunities for the ladies to display the latest fashions in dress and the last new thing in bonnets. A victory, and the theatres are crowded. A defeat, and the theatres are empty."

So the world goes—"worse and worse." "O, my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?" "None of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." Dan. 11: 8, 10. "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn."—2 Pet. 1: 19. "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; "for men shall be . . . proud, . . . fierce, . . . lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."—1 Tim. 3: 15. Is there any evidence that we are in "the last days?" If not, how will people act when they become "proud" and "fierce?" When many of the professed church of Christ become "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God?" Will that be the millenium?

Foreign Intervention.

It has been our conviction from the commencement of the war, that peace will not return before foreign power will interfere with the affairs of this government. Our expectation is that the contending armies will continue to reduce each other in about the same ratio as they have done thus far, until they are so weakened as to become an easy prey to the power of Napoleon III.; when by a professed act of kindness, he will interfere to stop such bloody work, and will be considered a noble deliverer, receiving the applause of nations; when, at the same time, we pass under his power, and the United States, with "stars and stripes," and "the constitution" will be among the things that were. We say this, or something similar, is what we expect. We will not at this time give our reasons. We shall all know hereafter.

Capt. C. N. Goulding, Gen. Pope's chief Quartermaster, was taken prisoner by the rebels, and has just returned from Richmond. He had several interviews with Gen. S. Jackson. It is said:

"Capt. Goulding found the belief to be universal that the French would intervene actively, not only acknowledging the independence of the Southern Confederacy, but they have taken, or will take measures to establish it by armed intervention."

Effects of War.

There is perhaps nothing that will ruin the morals of an individual, or nation, so rapidly as war, and still some professedly good men claim it is right for christians to fight! We confess our astonishment at such a position. We have not so learned Christ. All admit it would not be right to fight for our religion; if not for that, is it reasonable to suppose we may for something of less value, and less sacred? Consistency is still a jewel.

The following from the Winsted Herald gives the experience of a clergyman from that place. And if the chaplains, who go out with the army on purpose to sustain the religious element in it are not able to resist the tide of wickedness, what may we expect from the soldiers! The Herald says:—

"The Rev. Mr. Eddy's experience as Army Chaplain is somewhat disheartening, and he comes to the conclusion that such clergymen as can do any good at home, may about as well remain and do it. Our regiments are so officered that the men get no religious example from them. Too often the officers arrange the exercises of the day, even the Sabbath, so as to preclude religious service. Among the men, the thoughtless and incorrigible so far predominate, and the general jumbling of all classes and characters is such, that those who may be seriously inclined, get no opportunity for that introspective reflection which is necessary to regeneration. The chaplain is constantly subjected to such an ordeal, either of neglect or of positive insult, that he loses heart, and ceases effort, or, as is too often the case, becomes himself demoralized, and thus injures the cause his precept and example should promote."

Book Notices.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT, by H. L. Hastings.

This volume embraces, in one, the author's best works on the doom of the ungodly, viz:—his "Pauline Theology," "Retribution" "Destiny of the Wicked," and John Milton's tract on "The State of the Dead." Well printed, neatly bound, and full of Bible truth, it is, in form and matter, an excellent book for the library or centre table.

THE MODEL CHURCH, and REASONS FOR MY HOPE, (bound together,) by H. L. Hastings.

We are pleased to see these interesting and valuable works put together in an elegant and durable form. The one exhibits, in striking contrast, primitive and modern christianity; and the other unfolds the Scriptural argument for The Gospel Hope. They are well and ably written, with characteristic vigor and pungency; and the volume, in its present form, deserves a largely increased circulation.

Price, 75 cts. For sale at this office.

We cannot come Down.

The best way to fight error is to preach the truth. The worst way is to descend into the line of bickerings and strifes and contemptible personalities. Some men, if they cannot answer your arguments, will assail your character; and if they can call you a fool, a heretic, a liar, a knave, or a hypocrite, or if they can succeed in proving you dishonest, they think they will gain their object. Of some such persons John Milton wrote:—

"As for those terrible names of sectaries and schismatics which ye have got together, we know your manner of fight; when the quiver of your arguments, which is ever thin and weakly stored, after the first burst is quite empty, your course is to betake you to your other quiver of slander, wherein lies your best archery. And when you could not move by sophistical arguings, you think to confute by scandalous misnamings, thereby exciting the blinder sort of people to mislike and deride sound doctrine and good christianity under two or three vile and hateful terms."

This "manner of fight," has always been a favorite one with the advocates of error. "Men use the best arguments they have," said the anti-slavery lecturer, when the mob flung dead cats in at the window.

Now there is design in all such efforts to divert men's minds from the true issues, the great facts of inspiration, and set them quarrelling about which man knows the most, or is the best, or the greatest. When God's servants are foolish enough to quit his work for this jangling, Satan may well chuckle. He knows that God's cause will lose, and his will gain. The true way for christians is, to keep about their Master's business, and let him take care of their reputation. There are some men who will believe the idle gossip of evil speakers;—let them believe it. The majority of sensible people regard acts more than words. When one man was told that another was slandering him, he replied, "I will live so that no one will believe it."

No man of self-respect can stop to bandy epithets with a blackguard, or false accusations with a slanderer. Where insult begins, there investigation ends. Said one able writer in reply to an opponent who had abused him: "To your abuse, I say nothing; to your arguments, take what follows." A man who was once cornered in an argument at the table, dashed a glass of wine in his antagonist's face, who coolly wiping it off remarked, "This is digression; now we will proceed with the argument."

To all the abuse of opponents, the true christian may well say, "I am about a great work and I cannot come down." And christian men rarely engage in a more profitless work than that of defending their own reputations. Some men have defended themselves and their work till there was hardly any thing left to defend.

Let us do our work and leave our names till the judgment for vindication. O to be accepted of God in that day! If God approves, let all the world deride. His favor is life—let us seek it and live. Let us watch and pray, and confess our many sins, and so prepare for that judgment where all must stand and all receive their doom. Will God approve us then? is the great question. May we "find mercy in that day" through Christ!

Oct. 5th, 1862. H. L. HASTINGS.

Sequence and Consequence.

The nature of truth is to produce itself; it cannot produce anything else. So likewise of untruth: a multitude of lies never yet engendered one truth. We do not gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles. Two propositions, founded on facts, will reveal other facts as natural consequences; but if one or both propositions are not true, no true consequences can be deducted from them. Like produces like, in nature, reason, and revelation. Let us have a few examples of each of these modes of reasoning.

1st proposition. Man is mortal. God has promised eternal life only to the righteous. Consequence. All the wicked will perish.

2nd proposition. Man is immortal. There is a time coming when all creatures shall bless and glorify God. Consequence. All men will be saved.

3rd proposition. The soul of man cannot die. When departed from the body, it enjoys a higher life. Consequence. It will communicate its knowledge to those yet in the body.

1st consequence. All the wicked will perish, be destroyed, be burned up as chaff. God puts his seal to this as a truth. "All the wicked will he (God) destroy!" Reasoning backward from effect to cause—"a good rule will work both ways"—we conclude that the premises are right. Man is mortal, and only the righteous have eternal life.

2nd consequence. All men will finally be saved. The word of God plainly declares this is not true. "Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Where is the error? It must be in one or both propositions. One is from God's word, and must be true. But that man is immortal, is a mere assumption, and is contrary to reason and revelation.

3rd consequence. The dead communicate with the living. If this is true, the premises are true likewise; and this is the reason why heathen, Papists, and Protestants have all fallen into this delusion. Let us try their propositions by God's word, and we shall break up the whole system of Spiritualism; but so long as these premises are held as true, they have us fast; and all our churches, who hold the doctrine of immortality, are drifting into this whirlpool of the Devil.

1. The soul of man cannot die. Is this true? God says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Let God be true, and every man that contradicts him a liar. Down goes that proposition, like Dagon in his temple. But we will give him another fall, so that he will not have another leg to stand on.

2. When separated from the body, the soul enjoys a higher life. Is this true? God says, "The dead know not any thing;" "in that very day his thoughts perish." There, Dagon lies prostrate, his head, hands and feet are all broken off by the sword of the Spirit, the word of God. It has come to this, we must either give up immortality, Spiritualism, and all the spawn of the Old Serpent; or we must give up the Bible. "Choose on this day whom ye will serve." J. PARRY.

For the Crisis.

From Western New York.

BRO. GRANT:—I write to let you and the readers of the Crisis know how the cause of truth stands in Ontario and Livingston Co.'s of New York. And let me say that I am truly glad that Bro. Grant is still in the editorial chair, and the brethren in this vicinity who take the Crisis feel the same in this matter.

My field of labor is an extensive one, as large as I can possibly fill, and yet beyond me in every direction lie open doors for God's servants to enter and labor. Our meetings in Honeoye are interesting, and usually well attended. The brethren here, although few in number, have usually done one half towards my support, and are ever ready to sympathize with me and aid me by their means.

In Dansville is a living church of the first class, such as does one good to be among. They have no regular preaching, yet hold meetings twice every Sunday, and also on Thursday evenings. I can only preach to them occasionally on week-day evenings, my Sunday appointments being necessarily elsewhere. And thank the Lord, it's possible for them to live without preaching. Some churches are like leaky ships (leaky because rotten), and preaching is the pump that keeps them from sinking. But with a good sound ship that can float without help, the labor can be turned to filling the hold with all sorts of provisions and merchandise from God's store-house of truth, such as will cheer the hearts and increase the number of the crew.

In Conesus the brethren are few, I am told, compared with former days, but that few are "living epistles, known and read of all men." They have no regular meetings, and I had almost said they need not have any, for wherever and whenever they meet, the word of God and the kingdom of God is their theme and their rejoicing. In Nunda, the brethren in a circuit of eight miles have assembled the past summer once in two weeks, and worshiped the Lord in spirit and in truth. As they have had no regular preaching, this fact shows that they are trying to live for the kingdom.

In Springwater there are a few believers scattered among the hills, who keep pilgrims' homes, where it makes one's body and spirit refreshed to call. In Bristol, five miles from Honeoye, I was invited to preach last spring, and the result is, a whole church, and some beside are coming into the truth. The spirit of inquiry is abroad in many other places where I have labored, and I hope good may result.

I have been thus particular because some have taken it upon them to misrepresent the state of things in Western N. Y. What we lack is men to preach the word. But the brethren are doing well, and if time continues the churches here will turn out some of God's manufacture from amongst them who will be able ministers of the New Testament. But time is short, and we need the help now. Who will come to Western New York and find a home? Let him write to me and address as below. But we want no hobby-riders, but men of faith and deep piety founded on the truth. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few."

I have been under the doctor's care for a throat disease contracted while on a preaching tour last week. Brethren, pray for me, that my health may be equal to the work before me. F. BURR.

Correspondence.

From A. G. Morgan.

BRO. GRANT:—When speaking of the signs which were to precede his coming, the Savior says: "When ye see all these things, know that it (the kingdom of God) is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Were not these signs given to the church, and did we as a people see all these things or understand their import till 1842 or 43? If not, then why not take that period for a starting point for this generation? Allowing thirty years for a generation, it will bring us down to 1872 or 73; which seems to be in harmony with the other prophetic periods terminating in 1868. "This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled"; and then, as if to make it more sure, he adds; "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

I expected in 1843 to have seen the King in his beauty long ere this, but while the "Bridegroom tarried" we have all slumbered and slept." I have had many cares, passed through manifold temptations, and at times been almost disheartened; but my faith has lived through all my trials, and I can truly say—

"Thus far the Lord hath led me on."

I have been greatly comforted and strengthened by going to the Wilbraham campmeeting, a privilege I have not enjoyed before in many years. It was to me "a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, . . . well refined." "As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country," especially when that news is the coming of our dearest friend.

My husband too has been awakened from his long slumbers, and is striving to have his lamp trimmed and burning, that he may be ready to meet the Bridegroom and share the glories of the coming kingdom. We need all the light we can get in these perilous times, when the nations are angry, and God's indignation is resting on us with so much severity.

I feel truly thankful to God that I know and love and that he has raised up teachers who proclaim his truth fearless of a frowning world. It is comforting to know, that he "that liveth and was dead" is "alive forevermore," and is coming to establish a kingdom that "cannot be moved," and give unto his saints eternal life. "Blessed are they who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb."—Yours looking for the kingdom.

"The joyful sound,"

Chicopee Falls, Ms.

From Bro. J. M. Wyman.

BRO. GRANT:—Six long years I have spent on the wild prairies of Illinois, since I left Roxbury, and never for once have I enjoyed the privilege of meeting with brethren in Christ, where I could feel welcome among them. I have sometimes met with the sects, but they have no fellowship with me, and I have none for them, as sectarians; but where I see anything that appears like the spirit of the Lord, I love it and fellowship it. I profess to be a christian, nothing more nor less, and as such to fellowship christians wherever I find them.

I believe the Scriptures teach that Jesus Christ will come again to earth, not in humility as he did before, but in glory; and that when he comes the dead saints will live again, and the living saints who now are mortal will become immortal, and be freed from sickness and pain, and all the consequences of sin. I think the time must be comparatively near when he will come. I love and long for his appearing. I love many of the people who love his appearing, but see no reason for not loving some others who have not the light on this point that I think I have, who show that they love the same Jesus, and hold communion with him and his Father. I can see no good reason for those who believe in Christ's near coming making that a test question, any more than I can for the other sects making any of their creeds a test of fellowship or membership; and those who do, if there are any such, I cannot but class them with the sects.

I have enjoyed very many good seasons with the people called Adventists. If I know my own heart, some of them are as dear to me as my life. I hope to dwell with them on the new earth, and should be glad if my lot could be cast with them in this; but I do not know as I love them much more for believing that Christ's coming is near, but because they show the evidence that they have the spirit of Christ. When I sometimes see a number of the Crisis, and read accounts of the meetings among the saints, O! how "I long to be there." I feel that those people are my people, and their God is my God. We are children of one family, even though in some things they or I may be in error.

I have met with some "light afflictions" since I have lived in Illinois, such as being expelled from meeting on account of my views, while at the same time the leaders in the deed said they believed and never doubted I was a christian, but they did not want such doctrines advocated among them. They acknowledged their inability to show Scripture proof against them. Also in temporal things, I have suffered losses and sickness.

I received a package of Books from Bro. H. L. H. two or three years ago, and have circulated them considerably, by loaning them around; and about one half the church that expelled me from their meetings now think as I do on most of the points wherein we differed; but they still cling to the old sectarian church (Congregational); so I do not feel much at home amongst them. Eld. Geo. Needham has joined them, but preaches some truth to them, notwithstanding he is one of their members. Your brother in Christ.

Onargo, Ill., Sept. 5th.

From B. P. Manning.

Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—I feel to praise the good Lord for the blessings that he is still bestowing upon his dear children in these last days of trial. Notwithstanding all my suffering, I never have seen any time, since I started for the kingdom, that we all have need of so much wisdom that cometh from God, as at the present time; also grace, and faith, and the Holy Spirit, to keep us on the track of truth. O that God would give more eyesight to his little church, that they might understand the working of the unclean spirits gone out into all the world to gather all the nations o the earth together to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. It is coming soon. Who will be able to stand?

It is eternal life that we all want. Now is the time to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. The tares are ripening for destruction, while the wheat is ripening for life.

Brethren, let us awake to the work of God. Time is very short. What is done must be done quickly. Souls are sinking down to perdition all around us. O that God would send forth laborers into the vineyard who would be willing to preach the whole gospel of the Son of God! Let us have the truth in all its parts; then the church will get meat in due season. I like E. Burnham's letter in the Crisis of Sept. 16th. It is to the point. Truth, dear brethren and sisters, is what will save us if received.

How good the Lord is to his children at this time. We are near the port of rest. Hold on a little longer, and all will be well. Amen.

Goffstown, N. H.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister H. V. Temple, West Bowdin, Me., writes:—"The Crisis speaks forth the plain truths of the Bible the best of any paper that I know of, and tells us where we are in this world's history. The letters of the brethren and sisters are so cheering to me, that I cannot tell how I should get along without them, as I am alone in this place; but I am delighted with the weekly visits of the paper. I can say with all my heart to the saints, lift up your heads and rejoice, for our dear Lord will soon come to take his faithful children home to reign with him forever. By the grace of God, I will meet you there.

I do thank God with all my heart, that he has got so many children in this evil time that will not fight with the carnal weapons. Go on, brother, fight for Jesus, and you will be sure to win the day; for our Captain has never been conquered. He is sure to be victorious, and shortly give his soldiers the kingdom."

Sr. E. Pilcher, Waukon, Iowa, writes:—"Bro. Grant, I feel impelled by a sense of gratitude to write to you, and let you know how much we appreciate your kindness in sending us the Crisis. It has been a great blessing to us, in bringing us back to our first love. Bro. Deyo said we should receive it from him six weeks, but it was not discontinued at the expiration of that time, and I know not who to thank for it but you. We thought before this we should have the money to send, but my husband is unable to work more than half of the time, and when he does it is in a great deal of pain. But we do not want the paper for nothing; we will try to send you some money as soon as we can. You can judge what a comfort such a paper is to us, when I tell you that it has not been in my power to hear a gospel sermon in six years. But though isolated from God's children, we prize the hope of immortality and feel that we have not much longer to wait. May God bless you in your efforts to cheer and comfort his waiting flock."

Bro. Wm. Hoar, Clinton, Wis., writes:—"The welcome visitor, the World's Crisis, we prize very much, and should feel very lonely without it, as it is all the preaching we get here but the 'Orthodox'; and that does not cheer or instruct very much. There is no one here of like precious faith that I can speak with on our hope, and I feel very lonely sometimes. I have not heard any one preach the word since a year ago last June; and then I went eighty miles to Amboy conference. I do thank my God that he ever led me to believe the truth and embrace it.

I do not vote, and with God's help, I will not fight. I have no war spirit. I do intend to stand up for our glorious Captain, and contend boldly for the faith once delivered to the saints.

I think if some good able soldier would come here and preach, that, with God's help, they could do a great deal of good. If any of our brethren should come through Clinton, we would be glad to use them as well as we could."

Mrs. H. M. Butters writes:—"I would sooner pay five dollars a year, than go without the Crisis. We cannot do without it. It is about all the preaching we have, and we are almost alone, with but three or four that love the truth near us, and they not within eight miles. We are very glad indeed to find you are to be our editor another year. We should hardly know how to spare you. May God in his mercy give you health and grace to feed the flock until the coming of the Shepherd, is the prayer of your unworthy sister in Christ."

Bro. Albert Wright, Oxford, Mass., writes:—"The Crisis we must have, for it is all the preaching we get here of the right kind. We hear so much of war and the scenes of the battle field, it is good once a week to hear from some of the little army that are fighting, not with carnal weapons, but contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. Let us be faithful, and soon the battle will be over, and we shall receive a crown of life."

Obituary Notices.

At Corinna, Me., on the morning of the 29th of July, 1862, aged twenty-four years and two days, Missouri, wife of Mr. Gipson C. Patten, and daughter of Benjamin and Naomi Moore, passed quietly into the shadow of death, and closed her eyes in that sweet sleep,

"From which none ever wake to weep."

In this afflictive dispensation the young husband has been robbed of his brightest prospect of earthly happiness, and idolizing parents of an only child. But they have laid her away in hope, for although she clung to life to the last, and looked upon death as indeed the king of terrors, yet she was enabled to say with Him whose divine nature shrank when the cup of suffering was presented,—"Not my will, but Thine be done!" They sought every means in their power to repel the unwelcome messenger, but fatal consumption has done its work, and the sunny brightness of the happy household circle has at once become obscured, leaving only the sad trace of that real sorrow, from which a broken heart refuses to be divorced. But above the fury of the storm they seem to hear a well known voice saying, "It is I—be not afraid!" and hope takes hold of the immutable promise—"Thy children shall come again from the land of the enemy."

The funeral was attended by Bro. J. Hemenway, who faithfully administered the all-healing balm, yielding strong consolation to such as have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope secured in the living word.

Hark! what is that note so mournful and slow,
That sends on the wind the tidings of woe?
It sounds like the knell of a spirit that's fled,
It tells us, alas! that a loved one is dead.

Yes, gone to the grave is she whom we loved,
And lifeless the form that so gracefully moved;
The clods of the valley encompass her bed,
A marble reminds us Missouri is dead.

Lydia Dammam.

Died, at the battle of South Mountain, Sept. 14th, Selden L. Whitney, aged nineteen years.

The subject of this notice was killed instantly, the ball penetrating his brain between the eyes. He sleeps until all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man and come forth. O war! thou insatiable monster! thou art upon us with all thy dread realities, tearing our loved ones from us, making our firesides desolate, and sending a chill of horror to our hearts as we hear of thy cruel and bloody deeds. But thy race is almost run; thy time is short. Work whilst thou canst. Stir up the nations, wake the mighty men, gather together Armageddon's host; soon the Prince of peace will come, and then unto thee an everlasting farewell; and let all the Lord's children say, Amen. "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Silas P. Whitney.

Cohoes, N.Y.

Sister Ann Frances Burt died of consumption, in Providence, R. I., Aug. 19th, 1862.

Sister Frances was for years a member of our little "Band," and

"Her loss we deeply feel;"

but we believe that "them that sleep in Jesus" shall "hear his voice, and come forth" "unto the resurrection of life." It was my privilege on the funeral occasion to speak to a large circle of relations and friends, showing them how comforting and solid was our sister's hope. She left a husband, who, I believe, appreciates and shares her hope.

This is the fifth of our sisters that have fallen asleep within eight years.

The Garibaldi sympathy meeting of the lower orders in Hyde Park resulted in rioting, owing to shouts in favor of the Pope, but nothing serious.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says it was reported in political circles that the British government is no longer so entirely averse to a recognition of the South as it hitherto has been. It is understood there is a probability of the question shortly becoming the subject of deliberation in ministerial councils.

An address to President Lincoln, in favor of a truce preliminary to negotiations, has been signed at Brussels, by eminent men of almost every European nation, assembled at Social Science Convention.

It was asserted at Paris that the Confederate government has no intention of recalling Mason and Slidell.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Oct. 9. The Antietam correspondent of the Times has the following, which bears some weight from the fact of the writer having been with the army since the commencement of the rebellion, and being one of the most intelligent correspondents in the service.

There is nothing the soldiers desire so much as to have the war brought to a close. With them time is everything. They are tired of the business and want to go home. This is as true of the rebel soldiers as of our own, and with a certain class, not I hope by any means the best or largest, every hour's delay makes them more and more indifferent as to how the fighting ends so that it ends.

Remove the restraint which holds the army together, and half of them would go home to see their parents to-morrow. The other half would vote to send commissioners to Richmond or to welcome propositions from the rebels for winding up the struggle rather than drag through another campaign in the swamps of the Chickahominy, or in any part of Virginia; but give them the word forward, and with the needful leaders and reinforcements they will not stop until they have chased the rebels into the Gulf.

There is nothing the soldiers so much dread as this eternal delay and the prospect of an indefinite prolongation of the war. Let us whip or get whipped, and have an end to the war, is the language of every man I meet and talk with on the subject. The officers who are worth a copper would say the same thing if they dared speak their minds. I mention these things not willingly, but for the purpose of showing the temper of the army and the absolute necessity of keeping their energies employed and their minds easy.

President Lincoln's emancipation proclamation has inspired the most lively terror throughout the South. The rebels quake with apprehension. They believe the negroes are organized in secret associations, and are only waiting an opportunity to rise in insurrection. They have heard already of the proclamation, and are becoming very restive under the yoke. The women and children of the rural districts are moving to the cities for safety, and consternation seems to be universal.

A private circular has been issued by the rebel government to the proprietors of newspapers, forbidding the publication of the proclamation.

A Washington letter in the N. Y. Commercial says that those likely to be well-informed respecting the President's mission to the army, declare that its main object was to secure a concert of action in a concentrated and general movement of all the land and naval forces of the United States, and to effect this most desirable result, he deemed it necessary to personally see what reason caused the present inaction of the army of the Potomac, and as commander-in-chief, to change its programme if deemed advisable. The following incident is related as having marked the President's visit:

"After leaving Gen. Richardson's headquarters, the Presidential party proceeded to a barn, which was used as a temporary hospital for the rebel wounded. On entering, the sad scenes that follow battle met the eye. Mr. Lincoln, after looking atound, remarked to the Confederate wounded, that if they had no objection he would be pleased to take them by the hand. The solemn obligations, said he, which we owe to our country and posterity compel the prosecution of this war; and it follows that many on both sides must become victims, and although they are our enemies through uncontrollable circumstances, he bore them no malice, and could take them by the hand with as much sympathy and good feeling as if they were brothers. After a short silence, those of the Confederates who could walk, came forward, and each of them silently shook hands with the President. Mr. Lincoln and Gen. McClellan went to the bedsides of those who were unable to rise and cheered them, saying that every care should be bestowed upon them to ameliorate their sufferings. It was a touching scene, and there was not a dry eye among the wounded."

Perryville, Ky., Oct. 9. Bragg's army attacked two divisions of Gen. McCook's corps d'armee near this place yesterday. The fighting was desperate. Gen. James S. Jackson, ex-Congressman of Kentucky, commanding a division, was killed. Gen. Sewell of Virginia, commanding a brigade, formerly of Sewell's Battery, was seriously wounded. On two occasions the fighting was hand to hand.

The Confederates were greatly superior to the Federals in numbers.

Gen. Terrell was mortally wounded; also Col. Webster of the 9th Ohio regiment.

The Union loss is estimated at 2000 killed and wounded. The rebel loss heavier.

Gen. McCook has been reinforced and the battle was renewed this morning.

Oct. 10. Early yesterday morning General Buell attacked Bragg's forces at Chaplin Creek, in the vicinity of Perryville. A short but terrific fight ensued, when the rebels broke and retreated southward. Our forces in close pursuit.

Oct. 12. A great battle was fought yesterday between Harrodsburg and Danville.

The Federal army took 160 wagons and 1000 prisoners. The rebels are retreating to Camp Dick Robinson.

Harrisburg, P., Oct. 10. Gov. Curtin has just received the following dispatch from Col. McClure at Chambersburg:

"Mercersburg was occupied by Stewart's rebel cavalry to-day, and they are now advancing on Chambersburg. They took horses and all other property they wanted at Mercersburg, offering rebel scrip for it. The force is estimated at 3000. The advance force of cavalry 1000."

Washington, Oct. 13. It is understood that a dispatch from Gen. Boyle, dated at Louisville, was received, saying it was generally believed that the rebel generals Bragg and Cheatham were both killed in the battle near Bardstown; that our loss in killed, wounded and missing was between 1500 and 2000, while that of the enemy was much larger.

A Harper's Ferry letter asserts that orders have been received for one of the largest and most important movements of the war. Gen. Couch has assumed command of Gen. Sumner's corps. Gen. Devens commands Couch's division.

The Herald's Washington dispatch says the government came into possession of a letter from Beauregard to Bragg containing a full criticism of the campaign and a careful survey of rebel resources and prospects, with an explanation of their programme.

It clearly indicates that the rebel armies are much larger than the Federal authorities hitherto believed.

Chambersburg, Pa. A dispatch has just been received that the rebels are at Cashtown, Adams County, in considerable force. They have been driven back from the Potomac, and are trying to escape.

Official information has been received by the Government that the savage Sioux war in the Northwest is ended. With a force of only five hundred men we have subdued this fearful outbreak. Fifteen hundred of the Indians have fallen into our hands, and many of the leading chiefs will be summarily executed.

A Proclamation.

Whereas, It has become necessary to call into service, not only volunteers, but also portions of the militia of the States, by draft, in order to suppress the insurrection existing in the United States; and disloyal persons are not adequately restrained by the ordinary processes of the law from giving aid and comfort in various ways to the insurrection;

Now, therefore, be it ordered,

First—That during the existing insurrection, and as a necessary measure for suppressing the same, all rebels and insurgents, their aiders and abettors, within the United States, and all persons discouraging volunteer enlistments, resisting militia drafts, or guilty of any disloyal practice, affording aid and comfort to the rebels against the authority of the United States, shall be subject to martial law, and liable to trial and punishment by courts martial or military commissions.

Second—That the writ of habeas corpus is suspended in respect to all persons arrested, or who are now, or hereafter, during the rebellion, shall be imprisoned in any fort, camp, arsenal, military prison or other place of confinement, by any military authority or by the sentence of any court martial or military commission.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this twenty-fourth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-seventh.

By the President: Abraham Lincoln.
Wm. H. Seward, Secretary of State.

The Wisconsin Conference

Will be held at Sumpter, Sauk Co., Wis., six miles from Sauk city, and nine miles from Baraboo, in the "Pockett," beginning on Wednesday evening, Dec. 3d, and holding over Lord's day following. Eld. J. V. Himes of Boston will be present to aid in preaching. Let us have a rally, and let all come at the beginning. Friends in the surrounding townships are requested to bring a few blankets, as so many may come from a great distance that our beds may possibly be more than filled. Let no excuse keep a single preacher in Wisconsin at home. Let friends come from other States also. The Lord is certainly at hand. We must arouse!

It is expected that Bro. Himes will do the most of the preaching. Churches who have a standing with the conference will send their delegates, and churches who wish to unite, will do the same. Isolated brethren, who wish the sympathy and aid of preachers in the conference may send an epistle to W. Sheldon, Merrimack, Wis. I intend to have an assortment of our best books at the meeting; and Bro. Himes will have a quantity of the "Voice" bound, the Lyre, and other valuable productions. Come with praying hearts. Elders Barnes, Turner, Sheare, Gibson, and others will please exert themselves to secure a general attendance.

The Christian's Hope.

To live a faithful christian here,
Let this be my endeavor,
That with the Lord I may appear,
And reign with him forever.
He that is faithful unto death,
A crown of life secureth;
Yea, he shall breathe immortal breath,
That to the end endureth.

With christian patience then I'll run
The race that's set before me,
That I may hear Christ say, "Well done!
Enter into my glory."
The faith I never will give up
Unto the saints delivered;
Nay, from the Father's blessed hope
I never will be severed.

For blessed is this hope to me,
'Tis all my consolation;
The hope that Jesus I shall see
When he brings the salvation;
Salvation to the scattered ones,
Who fully are persuaded
That Christ will come and take the throne
Of royal father David.

And then salvation he will bring
To Israel, and restore them;
And, as their mighty, conquering King,
Beat down their foes before them.
Then to Mount Zion they'll return,
With shouting and with gladness;
And never more be called to mourn
In exile and in sadness.

O! what a glorious, joyous day,
In the "regeneration,"
When war and strife shall pass away,
And Christ rule every nation.
For then o'er all the earth and sea
Christ's reign shall be extended,
Till in one glorious jubilee
All voices shall be blended—

In praise to Him who takes the throne,
Unto the great Peace-Giver;
Who ends creation's dying groan,
And does God's sons deliver.
To Him who does abolish death,
And make new earth and heaven,
By saints with their immortal breath
Shall endless praise be given.

Reasons why I cannot be a 'War Man.'

REASON 1.

It came to pass, on a certain occasion, that our Lord commanded his twelve chosen apostles to take with them their swords; and said he, "He that hath no sword let him sell his garment and buy one." In reply the apostles said, "Lord, behold, here are two swords." Jesus answered, "it is enough." I ask, "enough" for what? Surely not "enough" for twelve men to fight with! The "enough" therefore must refer to some other purpose. The sequel shows us what? Immediately the murderous band, led by Judas, came to take Jesus. Peter drew one of the two swords and began the work of the "warrior." He only, however, succeeded in wounding one man and him but slightly. Now comes the place of that "enough." And Jesus said unto the "warrior" Peter, "put up again thy sword into its place, for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." The whole truth is now fully before us. Jesus would have the apostles, on that occasion, take their swords that they might attempt to use them; and he would have the apostles attempt then to use them that he might the more impressively condemn the use of them forever. That word "put up thy sword" lies on me. I shall obey it.

REASON 2.

Jesus declares, "My kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." Now, I belong to the kingdom of Jesus, and therefore my duty is plain.

REASON 3.

God commands, "Thou shalt not kill." He does not say, "thou shalt not kill only in the time of war!" There are no limits to the law in this department. It is simply "Thou shalt not," and I will not.

REASON 4.

"The Son of man" came not "to destroy men's lives, but to save them." I am commanded to be like him, and therefore I must not destroy men's lives.

REASON 5.

"God is not the author of confusion, but of peace." Therefore God is not directly the author of war, for war is the worst kind of confusion. I must therefore not engage in that of which God is not the author.

REASON 6.

The Bible teaches us, that "wars and fightings" come of our "lusts," instead of from heaven. I must not "obey" the power of lust in any form.

REASON 7.

The Bible commands me to "put away" "all bitterness and wrath, and anger." It seems to be a very unfavorable opportunity to put away wrath and anger in the act of killing our fellow beings!

REASON 8.

The Bible teaches me to "love" my "enemies"—to "do good" to "all men"—to "be kind"—to "be gentle" and "meek." The warrior does not seem to me to be in a condition to build up such a character.

REASON 9.

It looks to me inconsistent to pray, "O God, bless my enemies," and then say "Amen" with a stab of the bayonet or the deadly report of the rifle!

REASON 10.

A last important reason, with me, is, I have not any fight in me. When God converted me he converted it all out of me. I hate all kinds of angry contention; and how can a man do that which he abhors to do?

But what would you do in case you were drafted? I would keep the "faith of Jesus," and remain at peace. "But you would be imprisoned then." Well, I would have the more time to pray and worship God. "But under military rule you would be shot." Well, I cannot be killed but once. Duty is mine, consequences are God's. At all events, I cannot, I MUST NOT, I WILL NOT fight.

Brief Journal.—No. 4.

At the Wilbraham campmeeting, I met many preachers with whom I had been acquainted previous to my location in the West, but the most of them had so changed that I was almost puzzled to know them. Age had whitened the once jet black locks of some; and others, who were once accustomed to indulge in the foolish practice of scraping their faces, twice or thrice per week with a sharp razor, had consented to wear the badge of nature, among whom were D. T. Taylor, J. V. Himes and Miles Grant.

The next Sunday after the campmeeting I preached in Boston. Staid one night at Bro. H. L. Hastings' house, and took a survey of his mammoth library. Also staid one night with Bro. G. T. Adams, our Society's secretary; and one night with Bro. Miles Grant, our editor. There is not quite as much "fun" in being an editor as some seem to suppose; there is certainly more work than play about it; and then if all the trash that is sent to the office does not appear in print, somebody is complaining. To benefit the cause of Christ, the Crisis must make certain great truths prominent, holding all other questions as of secondary importance; and these tributary themes should never be allowed to subvert the great mission of our paper. Bro. Grant aims to make the paper one that shall "feed the flock" with that which will nourish them.

The week following, I preached at different places in Mass. and Ct., on the free list; that is, without remuneration.

On Sunday, Sept. 21st, and Sunday Sept. 28th, I preached in Concord, N. H., where Bro. Grant has labored successfully. Found the brethren enjoying spiritual health,—keeping up four or five regular weekly prayer meetings. Between these two Sundays I went up to Claremont, N. H., to visit Bro. and Sr. Putnam, —old acquaintances of the true stamp. Preached once in the vicinity. Bro. Sutherland was present. He is laboring for the Master, in N. H., with success. God bless him. I knew him years ago, when his labor was not in vain in the Lord. Bro. Putnam had not lost his memory—like some men—but remembered that I was laboring for God; that I was on a long journey which required money to defray expenses; that he was one of the Lord's steward's; that inasmuch as he aided one of Christ's little ones, it was virtually doing it to Christ; so he took out his purse and gave me,—how much do you guess? Does some one guess ten cents? Ah! it was not less than ten dollars; and it did not come grudgingly either. Since I first became acquainted with Bro. Putnam, he has given me over $200.00 in cash. While in the west he has sent me more than all other eastern friends combined. He is not a man of millions either, but of religion that can feel and love "not in word but in deed."

Maine Advent Mission.

BRO. GRANT:—Having accepted the invitation of the board of directors of the Maine Advent Missionary Society to labor as a missionary in this State the coming year, I take this method to say a word to all friends of the mission.

Beloved brethren and sisters:—In entering upon the work before me, I feel that my position is somewhat trying, for the following reasons: First, it is a great and arduous work, and should be entered upon with some suitable sense of its responsibilities and labors. Second, it is a position that should be filled by one abounding in every christian grace, and well instructed in all things pertaining to the gospel of the kingdom. Third, if I fail to walk worthy of so high a calling, I shall dishonor the Lord and injure the best of all causes. Fourth, to spend the most of my time away from my home, and away from those in this place with whom and for whom I have so cheerfully labored, is no small cross to bear.

Yet I engage in the work with the following encouragements: First, it is a good work. To go forth in this last time to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom and try to save souls, is blessed business. Second, I know I shall have the prayers, sympathies, and other necessary aid of all and are waiting for the King of glory. Third, I trust the Lord will be with me, and that will be the best of all. Fourth, I hope to do some good to the perishing, and cheer up the little flock.

I expect to enter upon the work immediately, and if health permit, and the Lord direct, shall keep at the specific work of missionary labor. I shall endeavor to spend the most of the time in new places, for the glad tidings are too good to be kept out of "high ways and hedges." The "supper" call must be heard therein, and Father's house must be filled.

Any and all calls to "come over and help us," will be heeded and attended to as far as possible. I shall be glad to have the personal aid of any brethren and sisters, in any new places in their vicinities, where there are open doors for labor. Address me, or Bro. I. C. Wellcome. Yours in the "blessed hope."

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. P. Woodward.

BRO. GRANT:—After our pleasant grove meeting in Plainville, I spent a few days in New York. Found some of my old friends there who are yet wandering in the fogs of doubt and unbelief, and chasing one illusion after another, till in some cases they have begun to feel that they are "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Some have entered upon a new line of thought, and have promised to follow it out candidly and earnestly. One friend gave me a fact which was quite unexpected. He says there is now existing in that city a society of men, who claim that they will soon be able by the discovery and application of the laws and principles of Nature to make themselves, in their present physical condition, IMMORTAL. This "natural process" of dying is to be entirely superceded, and men will not be obliged to reach out into the dark and grasp at every straw to keep them from sinking in despair when death's waves roll over them; they will not need the clairvoyant eye to describe the shadowy forms of their departed friends; but they shall eat of the Tree of Life, and live forever. Some members of this Society have been Spiritualists, and it would seem that they wanted something a little more tangible. So this theory is started, and just enough Bible is quoted to make it sound well,—such passages as, "He that believeth on me, shall never die,"—and straightway there is another "new thing" for men to "investigate."

I may speak further of this when I obtain particulars. If this idea be accepted as true, then the theory of the naturalness of death must forever fall. The Tree of Life, which they claim to have found, cannot restore those who have died for want of it. And so I told my friend that however bright the prospect such a thought presented for future generations, the past was all darkness. And moreover, I did not feel quite sure that all men were fit to live forever. "But they will have only the very best in the secret." "And how will they decide who are the best?" "O, the leader will settle that matter." What the significance of this movement is, I do not quite see. It seems, however, to show that some of our friends, who trust in the immortality of man without the aid of Christ, are being terribly shaken in their belief from some cause. At any rate, since imitation is so often a wile of the Devil to neutralize the truth, may not this be a false light to turn men aside from CHRIST as the Resurrection and the Life, and wreck them on the reefs of everlasting death?

By the way, I looked around the city for the tracts which are bound up in "Fables of Infidelity," and ascertained that none are kept there. Why would it not be a good idea to keep them at the Crisis office? They cost less in this form than when bound, and sometimes one or two of them will meet an individual want just as well as the whole series.

Spent a day at the Conference in Westerly. It was truly a blessed day. In the evening we listened to Bro. J. D. Brown on the Signs of the Times, especially as developed in Spiritualism. Some facts were given in reference to present and probable future developments of that system, which are not known everywhere. May God open the eyes of the honestly deceived, and show them where they stand. Yours in Christ, E. P. WOODWARD.

From Sr. L. James.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I feel it duty to write a few lines, thinking you might like to hear from me and the little village of Meredith. There are but four families here that are looking for the return of the Messiah to the earth. By the help of God, they are endeavoring to be faithful.

But more particularly would I speak of the goodness of God to me. You probably recollect the time, on the 9th of March 1860, when I was healed in answer to prayer. O how could I have wandered from the Lord; but so it was, through much opposition. I stood firm for more than one year, but at last I fell. My long-cherished hope was set at nought by one who ought to have thought of better things; and instead of standing out boldly and defining the truth, I yielded to temptation. It was a sad day for me. I still loved the people of God, and loved to meet with them, and talk over the promises of God, which are true and faithful. Little do you know the trials through which I have passed.

We moved here the 20th of April. I began soon to fail, by disobeying the Lord, in overdoing, as well as in other things. Bro. Hastings probably remembers when he was here I was so feeble I could not walk to meeting. But still I did not think that I ever should be brought so low as I was Aug. 13th, 1862. Never, no never, shall I forget that night. It seemed that the cold hand of death was about to be laid on me. O solemn thought! At 7 o'clock in the evening, I was taken in great distress. My disease was consumption. My cough had been very bad all summer; but for five weeks I was very sick, so that the Dr. forbade any one from coming into the room. For two days previous to Wednesday night, my cough had stopped. Never in all my sickness have I suffered what I did in those two days. Wednesday evening, to all appearance, I was dying. The Dr. was there. He told the family that he saw no chance for me. He said I might live until morning, if I should revive, but the chance was small. He said there was no medicine that would do me any good.

As I lay there, with no one in the room but my husband, I thought, Can this be death? I thought of my friends that I had left; and thought, Can it be possible that I have come up here to die among strangers? As I was thinking of this, I felt a strange feeling, different from any I ever felt before. I felt it must be death. I thought I would speak to my husband and get him to call the family, but I found I could not speak; and on opening my eyes, I found I could not see or move. I had been cold and numb for some time. You can imagine how I felt. At that time, there was a singular feeling in my head, as though every thing was going from me, and I lost myself. I do not know how long I lay in that condition before there came a noise, that sounded like thunder, which awoke me. O how earnestly I prayed to the Lord to spare my life to glorify his cause, as well as for the sake of those around me. I had, with others, been praying for some time to know the will of the Lord in my case; but I did not think it would be made known in the manner it was. When I first awoke from that state, I could not speak a word, but after earnest prayer I could speak. I was going to tell them how I felt, and before I could say I was numb, my distress was all gone. Never can pen express my feelings. It seemed that the angel of the Lord was present in the room; and I shall always believe he was. I felt him hovering over my bed, telling me I should recover, and from that time I was comfortable.

I sent my husband for Bro. James G. Smith. He was not at home, but would be on Friday. I was comfortable until he came, which was Friday afternoon, at five o'clock. In less than an hour, I was on my feet praising God with my heart, though I could hardly speak. I then walked the distance of one mile and called to see the Dr. He knew not what to think. He said there was great power in prayer.

My dear Brn. and Srs., be faithful, for the Lord is near, even at the door. O blessed thought! and though you may be called to pass through trials severe, never give up. Stand firm to your post. I feel different from what I did before. I never felt such a strong determination to go through. My Brn. and Srs., if you are called to suffer, let me suffer with you. My prayer is that you may all be faithful to the end. Pray that my faith fail not till Jesus comes.

Meredith Village, N. H., Aug. 30, '62.

From N. B. Waldron.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I wish you knew how much I prize your valuable paper, being deprived of the blessed privilege of meeting with those of like precious faith, or enjoying the society of God's dear children. My heart is still made to rejoice while I read the communications and letters of encouragement from the dear children scattered abroad, and I long for the time to come when we shall no more be separated, but can enjoy the society of God, angels, our blessed Redeemer, and the good of all ages. Blessed thought! let it inspire us to watchfulness and prayer, and a holy consecration of all to God, that having done what we could, we may at last hear the King say, Come, I will give thee a crown of life.

Light Advancing.

BRO. GRANT:—The following correspondence I clip from the Christian Mirror, a Congregational paper, published in this State. As several have requested me to forward it to you for publication in the Crisis, I comply with their request.

Yours affectionately, R. R. YORK.

New Gloucester, March 4, '62.

To Editor of "Mirror":—Dear Sir:—Will you please insert in the next issue of your paper the following vote and correspondence. J. A. ROSS.

Agreeably to a vote of the Cumberland Ministerial Association, the following correspondence is sent to the "Christian Mirror" and "Maine Evangelist" for publication. J. A. ROSS, Scribe.

Rev. H. G. Storrer:—Dear Sir:—We, Congregational ministers in Cumberland County, within whose bounds you are reported, both in the State and National registers, as one of the "Ministers without pastoral charge," feel it due, alike to ourselves and to you, and to the cause of our Redeemer, to address to you this note.

It is currently reported that you have adopted, and in rather a private way expressed, views at variance with those of the church universal, and as we conceive, with the plainest teachings of Scripture, respecting the supposed annihilation of the wicked.

We have not learned that you have openly taught this doctrine; in which case the churches would have taken the alarm. But our painful impression is, that you have availed yourself of your position as an accredited and acceptable minister of our denomination, to instil into the minds of some, especially the younger members of some of our churches, opinions radically subversive of the faith to which they adhere, and fitted to dispel from the mind those "terrors of the Lord" by which, as well as by his "goodness," the apostles sought to "persuade men to repentance" and piety.

We could not under these circumstances do less than to ask you if these things are so; or whether numbers in this and other states, who have referred to you as the direct or indirect cause of their departure from the faith once delivered to the saints, have misunderstood your views and teachings.

Signed in behalf and by order of the Association. J. A. ROSS, Scribe.

OAK HILL, Feb. 18, 1862.

My Dear Brother:—Your note of January 9th, containing a communication from the Cumberland Ministerial Association, was duly received; and would have received an earlier acknowledgement, but for the following reason. I had a fixed impression that the next meeting of the Association would occur about the first of April next; when I hoped to appear personally before the Association, if that liberty could be allowed to me, or, otherwise, to make a written reply to their note of inquiry. You may judge of my surprise and regret, then, when a friend wrote me yesterday that his pastor had recently read a certain sermon "before the Cumberland Association," and when, on turning to the Mirror of Feb. 4th, I found that the meeting had actually occurred on "the second Tuesday of February."

Of course it is too late to furnish the Association with any information concerning a case on which, without doubt, they have already acted; and whatever that action may have been, I shall be the last man to question the christian charity and purity of motive and intention that lead to it. But, as you will readily believe, it is painful enough to be counted by any who love our Lord Jesus Christ a dangerous "heretic," without being regarded also as a downright "barbarian."

Since, then, your Association would have a right to deem me wholly barbarous, had I willfully failed to reply to their communication; you will please assure them, at their next meeting, that it was my firm intention and expectation at the earliest opportunity to answer their note, (either by word of mouth or by letter, as they might appoint) and that this would certainly have been done on the 2d Tuesday of February but for the reason already stated.

You will please assure them also concerning an article of my religious faith that—"to those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for honor, glory and immortality," I believe that "God will render eternal life," and to them only; fully expecting that "the second death" will be for the wicked at the day of the final judgment—the eternal end of their conscious existence; and that when they have experienced everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, in and by the fires of Gehenna, then will God bring to pass that glorious "restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began."

In this faith and hope (which I found solely in the WORD OF GOD, and on what I conceive to be its plain teachings) I submit myself humbly and sadly to my fathers and brethren in the church, and joyfully to the judgment of that glorious Master before whom we shall so shortly stand.

Till then, yours, fraternally,

H. G. STORRER.

Indian Story.

DEAR CHILDREN:—It says in the Bible, better is "he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city."—Prov. 16: 32. I want to illustrate to you this portion of God's truth by a story:

About the year 1776, a circumstance occurred which ought to be written on adamant. In the wars of New England with the aborigines, the Mohegan tribe of Indians early became friends of the English. Their favorite grounds were on the banks of the river (now the Thames) between New London and Norwich. The government of this tribe was hereditary in the family of the celebrated chief Uncas. During the time of my father's mercantile prosperity, he had employed several Indians of this tribe in hunting animals, whose skins were valuable for their furs.

Among these hunters there was one named Zachary, of the royal race, an excellent hunter, but as drunken and worthless an Indian as ever lived. When he had somewhat passed the age of fifty, several members of the royal family, who stood between Zachary and the throne, died, and he found himself with only one life between himself and the empire. At this moment his better genius resumed its sway, and he reflected seriously, "How can such a drunken wretch as I aspire to be a chief of this honorable race? What will my people say? And how will the shades of my ancestors look down, indignant, upon such a base successor. Can I indeed succeed to the great Uncas? I will drink no more." He solemnly resolved never to taste any drink again but water, and he kept his resolution.

I had heard this story, and did not entirely believe it; for young as I was, I already partook of the prevailing contempt for Indians. In the beginning of May the annual election of the principal officers of the (then) colony, was held at Hartford. My father attended officially, and it was customary for the chief of the Mohegans also to attend. Zachary had succeeded to the rule of his tribe. My father's house was situated about midway on the road between Mohegan and Hartford; and the old chief was in the habit of coming a few days before the election, and dining with his brother Governor. One day the mischievous thought struck me to try the old man's temperance. The family were seated at dinner, and there was excellent home-brewed beer on the table. I addressed the old chief:

"Zachary, this beer is excellent; will you taste it?"

The old man dropped his knife and fork, leaned forward with a stern intensity of expression; his black eye, sparkling with indignation, was fixed on me.

"John, said he, "you do not know what you are doing. You are serving the devil, boy! Do you not know that I am an Indian? I tell you I am, and if I should but taste your beer, I could not stop until I got to rum, and again become the contemptible drunken wretch your father remembers me to have been. John, while you live, never again tempt a man to break a good resolution."

Socrates never uttered a more valuable precept. Demosthenes could not have given it in more solemn tones of eloquence. I was thunderstruck. My parents were deeply affected; they looked at each other, at me, and at the venerable Indian, with deep feelings of awe and respect. They afterwards frequently reminded me of the scene, and charged me never to forget it. Zachary lived to pass the age of eighty, and sacredly kept his resolution. He lies interred in the royal burial-place of his tribe, near the beautiful fall of the Yantic, the western branch of the Thames in Norwich, on land now owned by my friend, Calvin Goddard, Esq. I visited the grave of the old chief lately, and repeated to myself his inestimable lesson.—Col. Trumbull's Autobiography.

Imitate, my dear children, the noble example of Zachary, by being true to your good resolutions. It is a great thing to conquer one's own self. But I would have you do better than did this Indian chief. Prompted by an ambitious motive—that he might be worthy to rule his tribe—he reformed his bad habits. But the dear Savior wants you and I to be good, not for the sake of the honor we may obtain now, but that we may be fitted to reign with him in glory by and bye. And do not try to overcome your wicked propensities in your own strength, as Zachary seems to have done, because you may not be strong enough, but ask Jesus to help you, and then you will be successful in your endeavors to do right.

Your affectionate friend,
ELIZABETH A. ANNABLE.

THE SPIRIT OF LIBERTY.—A boy was once offering some caged birds for sale in a market town, when a sailor came up and inquired the price of them.

"Sixpence apiece," replied the boy.

"I did not ask how much apiece, but how much for the lot."

The boy, after some calculation, answered, "Six shillings and sixpence."

The sailor instantly handed him the money, and opening the cage door, permitted the birds to escape. The boy in astonishment cried out—

"What are you doing? you will lose your birds."

"Very well," said the sailor, "I have been shut up three years as a prisoner of war, and I am resolved never to see any thing confined in prison that I can make free."—Stories for Children.

VIRTUE.—You may tell me that the fresh bud on the tree is lovely, that the blossom on the thorn is lovely, and that the flowers of the field are lovely—and so they are; but neither bud, blossom, nor flower, is half so lovely as a youthful heart devoted to virtue and to God.

Suggested

BY LINES IN THE CRISIS OF MARCH 5TH, 1862.

You tell us in your song about your "growing old,"
And suffering more and more from ills and aches and cold;
You tell us of the locks of thinning, whitening hair,
And eyes that "need the specs," bedimmed by time and care.

Alas! you're growing old—henceforth your heart and tongue,
That have so many years the songs of Zion sung,
Shall ne'er so oft again unite to sing them o'er
Before you sleep in death, or "Time shall be no more."

Your happy, social ties by death are severed fast—
Thus o'er the dreary earth an added shade is cast;
And still your life is spared—you love to labor still
To do the Master's work, and suffer all his will.

So shall your joy be full when from "the great white throne,"
In that decisive day the Judge shall say "well done!
For thou hast faithful been—thou hast my name confessed,
And in my vineyard toiled—thrice welcome to my rest."

Then shall you enter in, and at the marriage feast,
That Jesus hath prepared, shall be a welcome guest;
There, robed in spotless white, sit near the Bridegroom's side,
'Mong the triumphant church that shall compose the Bride.

With body glorified you shall no more grow old,
But with immortal eyes you shall God's face behold;
With tireless feet shall walk 'mid all the blessed throng,
And there unwearied sing the everlasting song.

The World to Come.—Heb. 2: 5.

NUMBER TWO.—Concluded.

The world of fancy and the Spirit land—Man's nature, and the penalty of sin—man in death.

One of the following propositions must be true: either, first, all the souls that should ever exist in conjunction with human bodies, were created in the beginning; or, second, they are created for the occasion of birth; or, third, they are derived direct from God; or, fourthly, they are propagated by the laws of procreation from parent to child.

To assume the first, would be to turn Mormon and adopt their theology, which teaches that "these little spirits are waiting to enter infant bodies, that they may be developed,"—substantiate their logic for polygamy, and afford a good argument for the admission of Utah with her "twin-relic" into the Union. To assert the second, would be to deny "the record," which affirms that God finished his work in six days and rested therefrom on the seventh. To confess to the third, would be to resuscitate the now discarded theory of the old Indian philosophers, which destroys any future individuality of our existence by a re-absorption of the "divine essence at death into the Divine Being," as the drop of water loses its identity and individuality when cast again into the ocean.

The christian believer then being unwilling to adopt either of these three views, has but one alternative left, the reproduction of the soul by generation. This is admitted. Now can you raise the stream higher than the fountain without some outside, independent power? Why no, surely, you say. Very well. Christ says, "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh"—is corruptible, is mortal. Now you admit that the soul is generated from parent to child. Yes. Then it is born of the flesh, consequently mortal. Now where is the boasted immortality of the soul independent of Jesus Christ? Life! life! and immortality in Christ—mortality and death out him. Then get into Christ.

But let us leave the logic and pursue the Scripture argument a little further, for it is the Bible must settle this question, after all, since logic and philosophy cannot. The prophet David, speaking of men, says in Ps. 104: 29,—"Thou takest away their breath; they die, and (they) return to their dust." Where is the breath which was taken away? Solomon answers, "returned unto God who gave it; for the word ruah, rendered breath in the one place, is the same ruah rendered spirit in the other place; and this agrees perfectly with what Moses says of man in his creation (Gen. 2: 7).—"The Lord God formed man of the dust (no "of" in the Hebrew) of the ground"—hence God said to Adam truly, "Dust thou art,"—and breathed into his nostrils the (ruah) breath of life; and man became a living soul"; or, in plain English, man became alive. So in Gen. 7: 22,—"All in whose nostrils was the (ruah) breath of (margin) the spirit of life, died."

To any reflecting mind it is evident that God can take away from this dust-man no more than he put into him in order to constitute him a living soul, or alive. But it is not affirmed that God gave him a soul, a life, or a spirit, in the abstract; he only gave him the breath of life; or, as in Gen. 7: 22, "the breath of the spirit of life." But who or what is the spirit of life? God is that spirit. So then there was given to him the breath of God, and a soul or a life was the concrete or result. Now Job says (34: 14), "If he (God) set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his (God's) spirit and his (God's) breath; all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto his dust."

We have now ascertained that God gave to man, after his perfect and complete formation, only the breath of life; and by consequence that is all requisite to take from him in order to restore him to the condition he was in before it (breath) was given him. What was he before? He was dead, inanimate, wanting life. But dead what? Dead man—that is what God called him then. He was a dead soul, dead person, dead creature.*

So as God's word says, when he takes this away the man dies, the spirit (ruah—breath) returning to God who gave it, and the only remaining constituent, dust-man, to his—not it's—dust, mother earth, where Isaiah says (26: 19) "dead men dwell"; where Daniel (12: 2) says "they are asleep"; of whom Paul, in 1 Thess. 4: 14, affirms the same; where David in Ps. 115: 17 says "they praise not the Lord"; of whom Solomon says (Eccl. 9: 6) "their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished"; where Job (3: 17) emphatically declares "the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary be at rest"; of whom he affirms (14: 12) that "till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep"; of whom Christ testified, in John 3: 13, that "no man hath ascended up to heaven, but . . . the Son of man which is in heaven";—in John 5: 28, that they "are in the graves," and it is there that they "shall hear his voice."

In John 8: 21, Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye . . . shall die in your sins: whither I go, ye cannot come." In 13: 33, he said to the disciples, "As I said unto the Jews, 'whither I go ye cannot come,' so now I say unto you." Where did he go? 16: 5,—"I go my way to him that sent me." This was just before his crucifixion and death. Now see 20: 17, where he says to Mary, just after his resurrection, "Touch me not (or, as Clarke has it, better, I think, Cling not to me), for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God."

Objections. But did he not say, "I go to prepare a place for you," in John 14: 2? Yes, and he said he would "come again." But then there is the "thief on the cross," Moses in the mount, Stephen's case, Paul's eternal house, his third heaven, out of the body or in the body, his desire to depart, the rich man and Lazarus, etc. What of all these? Well, my good friends, be patient a little: in due time we will attend to all these cases, and try to place them, in their proper order, where they belong. In the meantime it seems there is at least good reason to doubt the correctness of Spiritology.

In the consideration of this subject, we would do well to bear in mind, what men seem ever to be forgetting and what David ever kept in view, and that is, "The hole of the pit whence (we) are digged." Our sins should ever be in remembrance. We are transgressors, sold under sin, the penalty or wages of which is death. We will not now stop to examine the nature or kind of death, only premising that death is the entire and absolute absence of life, whether spiritual, animal, vegetable, temporal or eternal;—that without Christ we should have eternally remained in death;—then we may become a little more reconciled to his time when he shall open our prison doors and bring us out from under its dominion, remembering, too, that we are so much the gainers as he shortens the time of imprisonment in death from eternity.

Keep these things in view, and we may no longer grumble and be filled with discontent, that we do not enter heaven and glory at once so soon as we die. Nay, we may well be filled with gratitude, be glad and rejoice, that God in his infinite love and compassion devised a plan of salvation whereby we may be brought out from sin and death at all.

Absent from the Body—present with the Lord.

EXTRACT OF A DIALOGUE BETWEEN AN "ORTHODOX" MINISTER AND A BIBLE READER.

(Concluded.)

B. R. "To illustrate the subject of personality,—suppose I give my son an apple, and say to him—you must eat it. He, however, cuts it open and gives half of it to another boy, and eats the other half himself. I afterwards ask him—my son, did you eat the apple I gave you? He replies—I did, father. Now I ask, would that be the truth?"

M. "It would not."

B. R. "Why not?"

M. "Because he ate only a part of the apple."

B. R. "Very well. Your christian friend dies, and his soul (a part of him) you say has gone to heaven; but his body (the other part) is in the grave. Now, would it be proper and true for you to say, my friend has gone to heaven? I pause for a reply. I know it is a close question, but I would like an answer. It is just as plain and easy to answer as the apple question."

M. "I do not think it a parallel case."

B. R. "You are very candid, sir! But why hesitate to answer it, if it is not a parallel case? No, sir. The cases are perfectly parallel, and the principle involved precisely the same. If it is true that my son did not eat the apple, because he gave half of it away, it is also true that your friend is not in heaven, when, according to your own theory, a part of him, and all that we know of him, is in the grave. But let us look at this case a little further. You not only say your friend has gone to heaven, but sometimes, in speaking of him, you say he lies in the silent grave, where he will sleep until the voice of the archangel, at the last day, shall awaken him to life and happiness.

"Again, you say he is alive and in heaven. At another time—he is dead and in his grave. Now is it true that your friend is in two places at the same time—that when he is dead and in his grave, he is also alive and in heaven? If it is not true, then the great mass of the christian world believe wrong and talk wrong. And if it is true, then the Bible is at fault (for it reveals no such doctrine); and a man has two personalities instead of one; and is consequently two persons, and not one person; and can be in two places at the same time! Is this true? It is, if the common theory be correct. But that it is not true, and consequently that this serpentine theory is an egregious error, I will now positively prove from the Bible. Peter says, in his memorable discourse on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2: 29),—'Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both DEAD and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day.'

"Now if it can be proven from the Bible that David is not dead, but alive and in heaven, I will renounce my present views on this subject, and switch back on the heathen track again. But so far from any one being able to produce one passage in print, I will now positively prove that David has not gone to heaven; and if he did not go there, it necessarily follows that none go there at death. Now for the proof. Acts 2: 34,—'For David is NOT ascended into the heavens, but he [David] saith himself, the Lord [Jehovah] saith unto my Lord [the Messiah], Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool.' Peter is proving to the Jews, in this sermon, that Jesus was the true Messiah and Son of the living God; and that it was necessary for Christ thus to die and be raised from the dead. In doing so, he quotes the following language of David (vs. 26, 27),—'Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also, my flesh shall rest in hope: because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (hades), neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.' Now to prove to the Jews that this language did not refer to David, but did refer to Christ, whom, he says, is at the right hand of God exalted, having been raised from the dead,—he says in the language already quoted, "For David is not ascended into the heavens; . . . he is both DEAD and buried, and his sepulchre is with us to this day,'—he is not in heaven, and does not therefore sit at the right hand of God; but Christ has ascended into the heavens, and does sit at the right hand of the Father. 'Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly (says Peter), that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ.' And let all the people know assuredly that Peter has here positively declared that DAVID is dead and buried, and that he has NOT ascended to heaven! the opinion of theologians to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Now, sir, from the illustration given, the argument adduced, and the inspired words of Peter, with nothing in the Bible to contradict them, you must see that it is absolutely necessary to locate the personality of man somewhere, and there let it remain. Where then will you locate it? If in the spirit, then the spirit of man is the man, the person that thinks, reasons, loves, hates, sins, dies! For the scripture saith, 'Man dieth and wasteth away; he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.' Pray tell me, then, where is his immortality? Job says, 'Shall mortal man be more just than God?' I conclude then that if the spirit is the real man, it is not immortal.

"But, sir, the personality of man is not in his spirit, but in the man, as an organized being, made up of different parts, who, when he dies, is dead and not alive; and when he is in hades, is not in heaven nor hell. So when man dies he must be unconscious; and to this agree the words of Solomon,—'The DEAD know not anything; . . . there is no knowledge in sheol whither thou goest.' Then, sir, in the light of this argument, I conclude that the pronoun 'I' in the phrase—'as long as I am in this tabernacle'—does not stand for the spirit of Peter, as you affirm; and consequently the term 'tabernacle' does not refer to Peter's body."

M. "Says Peter, 'I must put off this my tabernacle.' Notwithstanding your lengthy argument to prove the pronoun 'I' does not refer to the spirit, it must be obvious to every candid mind that it does so refer, from the fact there is something aside from Peter's body that is to 'put off' his tabernacle, and that something is called 'I,' which must be his spirit, for it would be absolutely absurd to suppose, as would be the case on your hypothesis, that Peter meant—'I must put off this my world.'"

B. R. "You do make it appear at first glance rather untenable, but on looking again, my position not only looks plausible, but truthful. You must remember that this world, as well as the holy city, is called a 'tabernacle,' with which we are represented by the apostle as being 'clothed';—'not that we would be unclothed,' says he; that is, without any habitation; but clothed upon [with our house which is from heaven].' Thus you see it was proper and significant for Peter to say, 'I must put off [an allusion to being clothed and laying such clothing aside] this my tabernacle [or temporary dwelling place, with which I am invested], even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed.' Peter here refers to the following language of Christ (Jno. 21: 18, 19),—'When thou wast young, thou girdest thyself and walkest whither thou wouldst: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands and another shall gird thee and carry thee whither thou wouldst not. This he said signifying by what death he should glorify God.' Now what is meant by the pronouns thou and thee in this address of Christ to Peter? If they stand for the material, organized man—Peter, who according to Christ was to suffer death by martyrdom, then the pronouns my and me in Peter's language in regard to himself and the same event, must mean precisely the same thing; for to say that these pronouns are not employed in the same sense, is to make Christ and Peter contradict each other. Then what did Christ mean by these pronouns? Without doubt he meant PETER and not Peter's spirit; unless a spirit can gird itself, and walk, and stretch forth its hands and be girded, and be carried, and put to death! This settles the question.

"But to return to the word 'tabernacle.' Dr. Webster gives the following definitions:—'A tent, from taberna, a shop or shed. 2d. A temporary habitation. 3d. Among the Jews, a movable building, so contrived as to be taken to pieces,' etc. The Greek word employed in 2 Pet. 1: 14, and 2 Cor. 5: 1, is skeenee, and means a tent, a tabernacle, i. e., any temporary dwelling, a booth, an habitation, abode, dwelling, etc. The term tabernacle, as used in the Jewish law, is never, in any sense, employed as a type of the human body; but was a type of the New Jerusalem, or the holy of holies, into which Christ has entered once for all. The Jewish priest went into the first tabernacle made with hands, accomplishing the service of God. 'But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people. . . . But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect TABERNACLE, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building . . . is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, [the new Jerusalem] now to appear in the presence of God for us.' Heb. 9. Now 'this tabernacle' or world in which we temporarily dwell, and with which we are represented as being clothed, is, as I have before said, contrasted with the tabernacle 'not made with hands,' which is to come 'from heaven' as a 'bride adorned for her husband'; and when it comes, John says there will be a great voice out of heaven saying, behold the TABERNACLE of God is with men." Paul also says (Heb. 11: 9.) "By faith he (Abraham) sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in TABERNACLES [not human bodies] with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise. For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.'

Once more. You found an argument on the word exodos, rendered decease, which means an exit, passage out of any place, a going out, decease, death. Assuming that tabernacle is the body, your idea is that Peter's spirit goes out, or departs from his body; and that therefore exodos does not here mean decease or death, as translated. Now admit all this in regard to exodos, and it is just as significant and true that Peter has made his exit—has gone out, or departed from this world, as that he has gone out of his body! But grant, for the sake of the argument, that tabernacle in 2 Peter 1: 14, refers to Peter's body, and what do you gain? It does not therefore follow that it means the body in 2 Cor. 5: 1; for I have shown conclusively, by arguments that cannot be answered, that it refers to this world as our temporary dwelling place."

M. "I gain this by such an admission: that the pronoun 'I,' in the phrase 'I must put off this my tabernacle,' must refer to something distinct from the body, as it is a manifest absurdity to suppose that Peter's body could put off itself. Then the question is, what was it that put off the body if it is not Peter's spirit?"

B. R. "I remark first, that the pronoun 'I,' about which you have had so much to say, is not in the Greek text, neither is it implied; so that Peter does not say 'I must put off,' etc. McKnight's translation is true to the original,—'knowing that the putting away of my tabernacle is soon to happen, even as,' etc. Prof. Whiting translates the 13th verse as follows: 'And I think it right, as long as I am in this TENT, to rouse you up by putting you in remembrance.' (Thus showing that I am correct in my view that 'this tabernacle' or TENT refers to our temporary dwelling place—this world.)

"You think it is the 'I,' or Peter's spirit that put off the tabernacle; this is absurd; for it is not to be supposed that PETER or his spirit murdered his own body! But on this hypothesis this is true. You ask, 'what was it that put off the body, if it was not Peter's spirit?' I answer, Peter's murderers did it (if body is meant) and not Peter himself! So then your last objection is fully answered.

"I now wish to present 2 Cor. 5: 1–11 in paraphrase, that its harmony with itself and with other Scriptures may be clearly seen. The apostle says:—

'For we [the people of God] know that if our earthly house [this world] which is a tent [or temporary dwelling place, McKnight's trs.] were dissolved, [by fire, as it will be according to 2 Pet. 3: 7, 10,] we have a building of God, [new Jerusalem] an house not made with hands (Heb. 11: 10,) eternal [and now] in the heavens. For in this [world] we groan [Rom. 8: 18–23] earnestly desiring [Phil. 1: 23] to be clothed upon [or invested] with an house [not the immortal body, as some say, for that don't come down, but the holy city] which is [to come down] from heaven. [Rev. 21: 2.] If so be that being clothed [or having a good hope of being invested 'with our house which is from heaven'] we shall not be found naked [or destitute of that glorious habitation.] For we that are in this tabernacle [or world] do groan being burdened [with mortal cares and perplexities:] not for that we would be unclothed, [or destitute of a dwelling place,] but [would greatly prefer to be] clothed upon [or invested with our house which is from heaven] that mortality [not immortal but mortal creatures] might be swallowed up of life, [or put on immortality, which will take place, not at death, but 'at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (who are alive, 1 Cor. 15: 51,) shall be changed [in the twinkling of an eye.) For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.] Now he that hath wrought [or prepared] us for the self same thing [i. e. to be swallowed up of life, or put on immortality at the resurrection] is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest [or pledge] of the spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we [as organized beings, possessing a body, spirit, mind, etc,] are at home in [or connected with] the [mortal] body, we [being thus mortal and corruptible] are [on this account] absent from the Lord: (for we walk by faith, not by sight:) We are confident, I say, and willing [or choose] rather to be absent from the body [which is mortal,] and to be present with the Lord [in the body that is immortal.] Wherefore we labor, that whether [we continue to be] present [i. e. connected with mortality] or absent [from it] we may be accepted of [or acceptable to] him. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ [at the last day] that every one may receive the things done in his [mortal] body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.'"

The Testing Place.

This is our testing place—ah! yes, I know—
Here thornless, fadeless roses do not grow;
Then, knowing this, if I still persevere,
And dare to press them close, and call them dear,—

Shall I complain if in my bleeding heart
A wound is felt, caused by their poison dart?
Or, if they charm awhile, then turn to dust,
Shall I complain, and think 'tis all unjust?

No! if I seek for joy where worldlings do,
I must receive their bitter portion too.
My soul, look up! thy Savior speaks to thee,—
He says, "why cleave to earth? cling close to me."

Ah! blessed Savior, well I know thy voice,
How often has it made my heart rejoice;
I do look up to thee—thou art my all—
O Jesus! never suffer me to fall.

Earth calls me sometimes, yet without thy love,
A weary, cheerless way my life would prove.
Oh! help me all these trial-tests to stand,
And bring me finally to thy right hand.

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER THREE.

III.—REIGN OF THE SAINTS.

It is said that the saints shall "reign"; hence some have inferred that they are to rule, or govern; and seeing the absurdity of having a state of servitude among the immortals, they have concluded that the immortals are to rule or govern a race of surviving mortals in the future age. But this is taking a deep plunge into inconsistency. This theory carries its own antidote upon its very surface, and unless blinded by an insane zeal, all can see it.

1st. Allowing each immortal but one mortal (to begin with—the lowest number possible), to reign over, and there would not be mortals enough, at Christ's coming, to give them one subject apiece, to say nothing about the great slaughter of the ungodly at that time. It is claimed that there are now nine hundred millions of human beings on earth. It is estimated that unaccountable children (such as will be saved) die at the rate of twenty thousand per day, making seven billions, three hundred thousand millions, in the space of a thousand years; saying nothing about the millions in years before, and leaving unmentioned the adult saints of the past six thousand years, we have here a number far exceeding the whole number of mortals on earth. To reign over one subject only, would be small business; and to have two immortals reigning over one mortal, would be still smaller business. Counting all of the finally saved, at a moderate estimation, and allowing all of the mortals found alive at the Advent (except those who are to be changed to immortality) as subjects for the saved immortals to rule or govern, and there would be as many as seven rulers to one subject!!!

2nd. Then allow these subjects to multiply, according to the claim (deaths being a rare occurrence), and the first thousand years would more than twice fill the world. At the ordinary rates, the first generation of nine hundred millions would produce two hundred and twenty-five billions in one thousand years; the second a little less, etc.

3rd. If to "reign" implies a ruling of mortal subjects, who are to propagate their species, then this work is not confined to the one thousand years, for in the new earth state it is said, "They shall reign forever and ever." Will there be mortals after the one thousand years are ended, for the immortals to rule or govern, even "forever and ever"? Then how many worlds would it take to hold their offspring?

4th. "Reign" does not always mean to rule or govern, but often signifies to "prevail": "Death reigned [prevailed] from Adam to Moses." The saints will eternally prevail or triumph over sin and death. Death once reigned over them: they now "reign" over death: they are victors.

IV.—SACRIFICES IN THE FUTURE AGE.

It is claimed that these mortals, over whom the immortals bare rule, are to offer sacrifices. What a flock of lambs and rams it would require for the first quota, allowing one for each of the nine hundred millions. And then this first quota is but a priming to the future demand. How the blood flows, and how the smoke rises! And how much it makes the Kingdom look like a great slaughter-house on fire! A kingdom of butcher-knives, blood and smoke!!! Again, after the few first offerings, before the beasts could multiply, they would all be sacrificed, and a miracle be required to furnish offerings. "Sin offerings" and "trespass offerings" indicate the existence of sin. It is bad enough to dwell in a kingdom of sin now, without trying it again.

V.—IMMORTAL "PRIESTS."

It is claimed by some, that as the office of a priest is to offer sacrifices, and as the saints are to be "priests," they will also offer sacrifices. Then butcher-knives will be in great demand! But where will the beasts come from for the first offering for that "great multitude"?

Christ is presented as the great antitypical sacrifice. To continue the type after the arrival of the antitype, is to virtually deny Christ! The "spiritual sacrifice" is the only sacrifice recognized this side of Christ.

The Second Death.

If the natural death of a wicked man is all the punishment he receives, how can he be hurt with the second death? How can it be said that they shall die the second death, if they never are raised to life from the first death? Where, in all the Bible, do we find a passage that says the first, or natural death, of any person, is the day of judgment? Does Christ come with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, at the natural death of every wicked person, and sit in judgment in order to punish him? Is it not a positive fact, that the whole Bible refers us to the day of judgment as the time and place of punishment? Look at 2 Pet. 2: 9, and John 5: 29. Does it not plainly read in these two passages of Scripture that they came forth "to the resurrection of damnation," and are to be punished at the day of judgment? Does not our dear Savior tell us in Matt. 12: 36, "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment"? Can the wicked give an account of their sins at the day of judgment if they are dead, and are not to rise from the dead? How is it that the words of Christ inform us that he will judge the wicked at the last day, if they are not to be raised to life, to be at the judgment seat of Christ? (John 12: 48.) How could the unwise virgins, or the wicked say, "Lord, Lord, open unto us," in that day, if the wicked are not brought to life, so as to be there to make the request or plea? Matt. 25: 11.

Now, dear reader, let us look at Matt. 7: 22, 23, where our Savior plainly declares that many will say to me, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy [illegible] but he will say to them depart. In [illegible] 25, we are informed by our Lord that before him shall be gathered all nations. We would kindly ask if the wicked dead will be exempt from being there? The living wicked will have to die in the flames of fire and brimstone, in dreadful agony, when thousands of them are not the hundredth part so guilty as old Nero, and those cruel wretches of the papal power that put to a cruel death thousands of innocent women and children. If those wicked ones do not come forth to life at the resurrection, then they will escape all this punishment of fire and brimstone, which they deserve ten times more than many who will be alive when Christ comes in flaming fire to punish the wicked.

Once more. Can there be wailing and gnashing of teeth with those wicked dead who never rise from the dead to be punished? Again, can any one deny the fact that thousands of good christians suffer ten times more in their natural death than many wicked persons do? David says they have no bands in their death. But when David entered the sanctuary, he was permitted to see their dreadful end. Can we suppose for one moment it was only natural death?

What is the instrument of punishment to be employed upon the wicked at the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men? Fire and brimstone.

Now, dear reader, to sum up the whole story, we must come to the following conclusions:—

1st. That no one will have his final punishment until the day of final judgment.

2nd. That punishment will be with fire and brimstone, which will finally destroy them; and is the second death to all the wicked that rise from the dead.

3d. That we have just as strong proof of the resurrection of the wicked to condemnation, to be destroyed with fire and brimstone, as we have of the resurrection of the saints to eternal life.

I would say to my dear brethren and sisters, in a spirit of love and kindness, let us be very careful not to deny Christ's own words, that will judge us at the last day, lest he also deny us before his Father and holy angels.

☞ Sir Humphrey Davy remarks: "I envy no quality of the mind and intellect in others, be it genius, wit, or fancy; but if I could choose what would be most useful to me, I should prefer a firm religious belief to any other blessing; for it makes life a discipline of goodness, awakens new life even in death, and calls up the most beautiful visions of the palms and amaranths in the gardens of the blest, where the sensualist views only gloom, decay, annihilation and despair."

The Christian's Hope.

To live a faithful christian here,
Let this be my endeavor,
That with the Lord I may appear,
And reign with him forever.
He that is faithful unto death,
A crown of life secureth;
Yes, he shall breathe immortal breath,
That to the end endureth.

With christian patience then I'll run
The race that's set before me,
That I may hear Christ say, "Well done!"
"Enter into my glory."
The faith I never will give up
Unto the saints delivered;
Nay, from the Father's blessed hope
I never will be severed.

For blessed is this hope to me,
'Tis all my consolation;
The hope that Jesus I shall see
When he brings the salvation;
Salvation to the scattered ones,
Who fully are persuaded
That Christ will come and take the throne
Of royal father David.

And then salvation he will bring
To Israel, and restore them;
And, as their mighty, conquering King,
Beat down their foes before them.
Then to Mount Zion they'll return,
With shouting and with gladness;
And never more be called to mourn
In exile and in sadness.

O! what a glorious, joyous day,
In the "regeneration,"
When war and strife shall pass away,
And Christ rule every nation.
For then o'er all the earth and sea
Christ's reign shall be extended,
Till in one glorious jubilee
All voices shall be blended—

In praise to Him who takes the throne,
Unto the great Peace-Giver;
Who ends creation's dying groan,
And does God's sons deliver.
To Him who does abolish death,
And make new earth and heaven,
By saints with their immortal breath
Shall endless praise be given.

Reasons why I cannot be a 'War Man.'

Reason 1.

It came to pass, on a certain occasion, that our Lord commanded his twelve chosen apostles to take with them their swords; and said he, "He that hath no sword let him sell his garment and buy one." In reply the apostles said, "Lord, behold, here are two swords." Jesus answered, "it is enough." I ask, "enough" for what? Surely not "enough" for twelve men to fight with! The "enough" therefore must refer to some other purpose. The sequel shows us what? Immediately the murderous band, led by Judas, came to take Jesus. Peter drew one of the two swords and began the work of the "warrior." He only, however, succeeded in wounding one man and him but slightly. Now comes the place of that "enough." And Jesus said unto the "warrior" Peter, "put up again thy sword into its place, for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." The whole truth is now fully before us. Jesus would have the apostles, on that occasion, take their swords that they might attempt to use them; and he would have the apostles attempt then to use them that he might the more impressively condemn the use of them forever. That word "put up thy sword" lies on me. I shall obey it.

Reason 2.

Jesus declares, "My kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." Now, I belong to the kingdom of Jesus, and therefore my duty is plain.

Reason 3.

God commands, "Thou shalt not kill." He does not say, "thou shalt not kill only in the time of war!" There are no limits to the law in this department. It is simply "Thou shalt not," and I will not.

Reason 4.

"The Son of man" came not "to destroy men's lives, but to save them." I am commanded to be like him, and therefore I must not destroy men's lives.

Reason 5.

"God is not the author of confusion, but of peace." Therefore God is not directly the author of war, for war is the worst kind of confusion. I must therefore not engage in that of which God is not the author.

Reason 6.

The Bible teaches us, that "wars and fightings" come of our "lusts," instead of from heaven. I must not "obey" the power of lust in any form.

Reason 7.

The Bible commands me to "put away" "all bitterness and wrath, and anger." It seems to be a very unfavorable opportunity to put away wrath and anger in the act of killing our fellow beings!

Reason 8.

The Bible teaches me to "love" my "enemies"—to "do good" to "all men"—to "be kind"—to "be gentle" and "meek." The warrior does not seem to me to be in a condition to build up such a character.

Reason 9.

It looks to me inconsistent to pray, "O God, bless my enemies," and then say "Amen" with a stab of the bayonet or the deadly report of the rifle!!!

Reason 10.

A last important reason, with me, is, I have not any fight in me. When God converted me he converted it all out of me. I hate all kinds of angry contention; and how can a man do that which he abhors to do?

"But what would you do in case you were drafted?" I would keep the "faith of Jesus," and remain at peace. "But you would be imprisoned then." Well, I would have the more time to pray and worship God. "But under military rule you would be shot." Well, I cannot be killed but once. Duty is mine, consequences are God's. At all events, I cannot, I must not, I WILL NOT fight.

Brief Journal.—No. 4.

At the Wilbraham campmeeting, I met many preachers with whom I had been acquainted previous to my location in the West, but the most of them had so changed that I was almost puzzled to know them. Age had whitened the once jet black locks of some; and others, who were once accustomed to indulge in the foolish practice of scraping their faces, twice or thrice per week with a sharp razor, had consented to wear the badge of nature, among whom were D. T. Taylor, J. V. Himes and Miles Grant.

The next Sunday after the campmeeting I preached in Boston. Staid one night at Bro. H. L. Hastings' house, and took a survey of his mammoth library. Also staid one night with Bro. G. T. Adams, our Society's secretary; and one night with Bro. Miles Grant, our editor. There is not quite as much "fun" in being an editor as some seem to suppose; there is certainly more work than play about it; and then if all the trash that is sent to the office does not appear in print, somebody is complaining. To benefit the cause of Christ, the Crisis must make certain great truths prominent, holding all other questions as of secondary importance; and these tributary themes should never be allowed to subvert the great mission of our paper. Bro. Grant aims to make the paper one that shall "feed the flock" with that which will nourish them.

The week following, I preached at different places in Mass. and Ct., on the free list; that is, without remuneration.

On Sunday, Sept. 21st, and Sunday Sept. 28th, I preached in Concord, N. H., where Bro. Grant has labored successfully. Found the brethren enjoying spiritual health,—keeping up four or five regular weekly prayer meetings. Between these two Sundays I went up to Claremont, N. H., to visit Bro. and Sr. Putnam,—old acquaintances of the true stamp. Preached once in the vicinity. Bro. Sutherland was present. He is laboring for the Master, in N. H., with success. God bless him. I knew him years ago, when his labor was not in vain in the Lord. Bro. Putnam had not lost his memory—like some men—but remembered that I was laboring for God; that I was on a long journey which required money to defray expenses; that he was one of the Lord's steward's; that inasmuch as he aided one of Christ's little ones, it was virtually doing it to Christ; so he took out his purse and gave me,—how much do you guess? Does some one guess ten cents? Ah! it was not less than ten dollars; and it did not come grudgingly either. Since I first became acquainted with Bro. Putnam, he has given me over $200.00 in cash. While in the west he has sent me more than all other eastern friends combined. He is not a man of millions either, but of religion that can feel and love "not in word but in deed."

Maine Advent Mission.

Bro. Grant:—Having accepted the invitation of the board of directors of the Maine Advent Missionary Society to labor as a missionary in this State the coming year, I take this method to say a word to all friends of the mission.

Beloved brethren and sisters:—In entering upon the work before me, I feel that my position is somewhat trying, for the following reasons: First, it is a great and arduous work, and should be entered upon with some suitable sense of its responsibilities and labors. Second, it is a position that should be filled by one abounding in every christian grace, and well instructed in all things pertaining to the gospel of the kingdom. Third, if I fail to walk worthy of so high a calling, I shall dishonor the Lord and injure the best of all causes. Fourth, to spend the most of my time away from my home, and away from those in this place with whom and for whom I have so cheerfully labored, is no small cross to bear.

Yet I engage in the work with the following encouragements: First, it is a good work. To go forth in this last time to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom and try to save souls, is blessed business. Second, I know I shall have the prayers, sympathies, and other necessary aid of all and are waiting for the King of glory. Third, I trust the Lord will be with me, and that will be the best of all. Fourth, I hope to do some good to the perishing, and cheer up the little flock.

I expect to enter upon the work immediately, and if health permit, and the Lord direct, shall keep at the specific work of missionary labor. I shall endeavor to spend the most of the time in new places, for the glad tidings are too good to be kept out of "high ways and hedges." The "supper" call must be heard therein, and Father's house must be filled.

Any and all calls to "come over and help us," will be heeded and attended to as far as possible. I shall be glad to have the personal aid of any brethren and sisters, in any new places in their vicinities, where there are open doors for labor. Address me, or Bro. I. C. Wellcome. Yours in the "blessed hope."

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. P. Woodward.

Bro. Grant:—After our pleasant grove meeting in Plainville, I spent a few days in New York. Found some of my old friends there who are yet wandering in the fogs of doubt and unbelief, and chasing one illusion after another, till in some cases they have begun to feel that they are "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Some have entered upon a new line of thought, and have promised to follow it out candidly and earnestly. One friend gave me a fact which was quite unexpected. He says there is now existing in that city a society of men, who claim that they will soon be able by the discovery and application of the laws and principles of Nature to make themselves, in their present physical condition, IMMORTAL. This "natural process" of dying is to be entirely superceded, and men will not be obliged to reach out into the dark and grasp at every straw to keep them from sinking in despair when death's waves roll over them; they will not need the clairvoyant eye to describe the shadowy forms of their departed friends; but they shall eat of the Tree of Life, and live forever. Some members of this Society have been Spiritualists, and it would seem that they wanted something a little more tangible. So this theory is started, and just enough Bible is quoted to make it sound well,—such passages as, "He that believeth on me, shall never die,"—and straightway there is another "new thing" for men to "investigate."

I may speak further of this when I obtain particulars. If this idea be accepted as true, then the theory of the naturalness of death must forever fall. The Tree of Life, which they claim to have found, cannot restore those who have died for want of it. And so I told my friend that however bright the prospect such a thought presented for future generations, the past was all darkness. And moreover, I did not feel quite sure that all men were fit to live forever. "But they will have only the very best in the secret." "And how will they decide who are the best?" "O, the leader will settle that matter." What the significance of this movement is, I do not quite see. It seems, however, to show that some of our friends, who trust in the immortality of man without the aid of Christ, are being terribly shaken in their belief from some cause. At any rate, since imitation is so often a wile of the Devil to neutralize the truth, may not this be a false light to turn men aside from Christ as the Resurrection and the Life, and wreck them on the reefs of everlasting death?

By the way, I looked around the city for the tracts which are bound up in "Fables of Infidelity," and ascertained that none are kept there. Why would it not be a good idea to keep them at the Crisis office? They cost less in this form than when bound, and sometimes one or two of them will meet an individual want just as well as the whole series.

Spent a day at the Conference in Westerly. It was truly a blessed day. In the evening we listened to Bro. J. D. Brown on the Signs of the Times, especially as developed in Spiritualism. Some facts were given in reference to present and probable future developments of that system, which are not known everywhere. May God open the eyes of the honestly deceived, and show them where they stand.

Yours in Christ, E. P. Woodward.

From Sr. L. James.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—I feel it duty to write a few lines, thinking you might like to hear from me and the little village of Meredith. There are but four families here that are looking for the return of the Messiah to the earth. By the help of God, they are endeavoring to be faithful.

But more particularly would I speak of the goodness of God to me. You probably recollect the time, on the 9th of March 1860, when I was healed in answer to prayer. O how could I have wandered from the Lord; but so it was, through much opposition, I stood firm for more than one year, but at last I fell. My long-cherished hope was set at nought by one who ought to have thought of better things; and instead of standing out boldly and defining the truth, I yielded to temptation. It was a sad day for me. I still loved the people of God, and loved to meet with them, and talk over the promises of God, which are true and faithful. Little do you know the trials through which I have passed.

We moved here the 20th of April. I began soon to fail, by disobeying the Lord, in overdoing, as well as in other things. Bro. Hastings probably remembers when he was here I was so feeble I could not walk to meeting. But still I did not think that I ever should be brought so low as I was Aug. 13th, 1862. Never, no never, shall I forget that night. It seemed that the cold hand of death was about to be laid on me. O solemn thought! At 7 o'clock in the evening, I was taken in great distress. My disease was consumption. My cough had been very bad all summer; but for five weeks I was very sick, so that the Dr. forbade any one from coming into the room. For two days previous to Wednesday night, my cough had stopped. Never in all my sickness have I suffered what I did in those two days. Wednesday evening, to all appearance, I was dying. The Dr. was there. He told the family that he saw no chance for me. He said I might live until morning, if I should revive, but the chance was small. He said there was no medicine that would do me any good.

As I lay there, with no one in the room but my husband, I thought, Can this be death? I thought of my friends that I had left; and thought, Can it be possible that I have come up here to die among strangers? As I was thinking of this, I felt a strange feeling, different from any I ever felt before. I felt it must be death. I thought I would speak to my husband and get him to call the family, but I found I could not speak; and on opening my eyes, I found I could not see or move. I had been cold and numb for some time. You can imagine how I felt. At that time, there was a singular feeling in my head, as though every thing was going from me, and I lost myself. I do not know how long I lay in that condition before there came a noise, that sounded like thunder, which awoke me. O how earnestly I prayed to the Lord to spare my life to glorify his cause, as well as for the sake of those around me. I had, with others, been praying for some time to know the will of the Lord in my case; but I did not think it would be made known in the manner it was. When I first awoke from that state, I could not speak a word, but after earnest prayer I could speak. I was going to tell them how I felt, and before I could say I was numb, my distress was all gone. Never can pen express my feelings. It seemed that the angel of the Lord was present in the room; and I shall always believe he was. I felt him hovering over my bed, telling me I should recover, and from that time I was comfortable.

I sent my husband for Bro. James G. Smith. He was not at home, but would be on Friday. I was comfortable until he came, which was Friday afternoon, at five o'clock. In less than an hour, I was on my feet praising God with my heart, though I could hardly speak. I then walked the distance of one mile and called to see the Dr. He knew not what to think. He said there was great power in prayer.

My dear Brn. and Srs., be faithful, for the Lord is near, even at the door. O blessed thought! and though you may be called to pass through trials severe, never give up. Stand firm to your post. I feel different from what I did before. I never felt such a strong determination to go through. My Brn. and Srs., if you are called to suffer, let me suffer with you. My prayer is that you may all be faithful to the end. Pray that my faith fail not till Jesus comes.

From N. B. Waldron.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I wish you knew how much I prize your valuable paper, being deprived of the blessed privilege of meeting with those of like precious faith, or enjoying the society of God's dear children. My heart is still made to rejoice while I read the communications and letters of encouragement from the dear children scattered abroad, and I long for the time to come when we shall no more be separated, but can enjoy the society of God, angels, our blessed Redeemer, and the good of all ages. Blessed thought! let it inspire us to watchfulness and prayer, and a holy consecration of all to God, that having done what we could, we may at last hear the King say, Come, I will give thee a crown of life.

For the Crisis.

Light Advancing.

Bro. Grant:—The following correspondence I clip from the Christian Mirror, a Congregational paper, published in this State. As several have requested me to forward it to you for publication in the Crisis, I comply with their request.

New Gloucester, March 4, '62.

To Editor of "Mirror":—Dear Sir:—Will you please insert in the next issue of your paper the following vote and correspondence. J. A. Ross.

Agreeably to a vote of the Cumberland Ministerial Association, the following correspondence is sent to the "Christian Mirror" and "Maine Evangelist" for publication. J. A. Ross, Scribe.

Rev. H. G. Storer:—Dear Sir:—We, Congregational ministers in Cumberland County, within whose bounds you are reported, both in the State and National registers, as one of the "Ministers without pastoral charge," feel it due, alike to ourselves and to you, and to the cause of our Redeemer, to address to you this note.

It is currently reported that you have adopted, and in rather a private way expressed, views at variance with those of the church universal, and as we conceive, with the plainest teachings of Scripture, respecting the supposed annihilation of the wicked.

We have not learned that you have openly taught this doctrine; in which case the churches would have taken the alarm. But our painful impression is, that you have availed yourself of your position as an accredited and acceptable minister of our denomination, to instil into the minds of some, especially the younger members of some of our churches, opinions radically subversive of the faith to which they adhere, and fitted to dispel from the mind those "terrors of the Lord" by which, as well as by his "goodness," the apostles sought to "persuade men to repentance" and piety.

We could not under these circumstances do less than to ask you if these things are so; or whether numbers in this and other states, who have referred to you as the direct or indirect cause of their departure from the faith once delivered to the saints, have misunderstood your views and teachings.

Oak Hill, Feb. 18, 1862.

My Dear Brother:—Your note of January 9th, containing a communication from the Cumberland Ministerial Association, was duly received; and would have received an earlier acknowledgement, but for the following reason. I had a fixed impression that the next meeting of the Association would occur about the first of April next; when I hoped to appear personally before the Association, if that liberty could be allowed to me, or, otherwise, to make a written reply to their note of inquiry. You may judge of my surprise and regret, then, when a friend wrote me yesterday that his pastor had recently read a certain sermon "before the Cumberland Association," and when, on turning to the Mirror of Feb. 4th, I found that the meeting had actually occurred on "the second Tuesday of February."

Of course it is too late to furnish the Association with any information concerning a case on which, without doubt, they have already acted; and whatever that action may have been, I shall be the last man to question the christian charity and purity of motive and intention that lead to it. But, as you will readily believe, it is painful enough to be counted by any who love our Lord Jesus Christ a dangerous "heretic," without being regarded also as a downright "barbarian."

Since, then, your Association would have a right to deem me wholly barbarous, had I willfully failed to reply to their communication; you will please assure them, at their next meeting, that it was my firm intention and expectation at the earliest opportunity to answer their note, (either by word of mouth or by letter, as they might appoint) and that this would certainly have been done on the 2d Tuesday of February but for the reason already stated.

You will please assure them also concerning an article of my religious faith that—"to those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for honor, glory and immortality," I believe that "God will render eternal life," and to them only; fully expecting that "the second death" will be for the wicked at the day of the final judgment—the eternal end of their conscious existence; and that when they have experienced everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, in and by the fires of Gehenna, then will God bring to pass that glorious "restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began."

In this faith and hope (which I found solely in the Word of God, and on what I conceive to be its plain teachings) I submit myself humbly and sadly to my fathers and brethren in the church, and joyfully to the judgment of that glorious Master before whom we shall so shortly stand.

Till then, yours, fraternally,

H. G. Storer.

Indian Story.

Dear Children:—It says in the Bible, better is "he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city."—Prov. 16: 32. I want to illustrate to you this portion of God's truth by a story:

About the year 1776, a circumstance occurred which ought to be written on adamant. In the wars of New England with the aborigines, the Mohegan tribe of Indians early became friends of the English. Their favorite grounds were on the banks of the river (now the Thames) between New London and Norwich. The government of this tribe was hereditary in the family of the celebrated chief Uncas. During the time of my father's mercantile prosperity, he had employed several Indians of this tribe in hunting animals, whose skins were valuable for their furs.

Among these hunters there was one named Zachary, of the royal race, an excellent hunter, but as drunken and worthless an Indian as ever lived. When he had somewhat passed the age of fifty, several members of the royal family, who stood between Zachary and the throne, died, and he found himself with only one life between himself and the empire. At this moment his better genius resumed its sway, and he reflected seriously, "How can such a drunken wretch as I aspire to be a chief of this honorable race? What will my people say? And how will the shades of my ancestors look down, indignant, upon such a base successor. Can I indeed succeed to the great Uncas? I will drink no more." He solemnly resolved never to taste any drink again but water, and he kept his resolution.

I had heard this story, and did not entirely believe it; for young as I was, I already partook of the prevailing contempt for Indians. In the beginning of May the annual election of the principal officers of the (then) colony, was held at Hartford. My father attended officially, and it was customary for the chief of the Mohegans also to attend. Zachary had succeeded to the rule of his tribe. My father's house was situated about midway on the road between Mohegan and Hartford; and the old chief was in the habit of coming a few days before the election, and dining with his brother Governor. One day the mischievous thought struck me to try the old man's temperance. The family were seated at dinner, and there was excellent home-brewed beer on the table. I addressed the old chief:

"Zachary, this beer is excellent; will you taste it?"

The old man dropped his knife and fork, leaned forward with a stern intensity of expression; his black eye, sparkling with indignation, was fixed on me.

"John, said he, "you do not know what you are doing. You are serving the devil, boy! Do you not know that I am an Indian? I tell you I am, and if I should but taste your beer, I could not stop until I got to rum, and again become the contemptible drunken wretch your father remembers me to have been. John, while you live, never again tempt a man to break a good resolution."

Socrates never uttered a more valuable precept. Demosthenes could not have given it in more solemn tones of eloquence. I was thunderstruck. My parents were deeply affected; they looked at each other, at me, and at the venerable Indian, with deep feelings of awe and respect. They afterwards frequently reminded me of the scene, and charged me never to forget it. Zachary lived to pass the age of eighty, and sacredly kept his resolution. He lies interred in the royal burial-place of his tribe, near the beautiful fall of the Yantic, the western branch of the Thames in Norwich, on land now owned by my friend, Calvin Goddard, Esq. I visited the grave of the old chief lately, and repeated to myself his inestimable lesson.—Col. Trumbull's Autobiography.

Imitate, my dear children, the noble example of Zachary, by being true to your good resolutions. It is a great thing to conquer one's own self. But I would have you do better than did this Indian chief. Prompted by an ambitious motive—that he might be worthy to rule his tribe—he reformed his bad habits. But the dear Savior wants you and I to be good, not for the sake of the honor we may obtain now, but that we may be fitted to reign with him in glory by and bye. And do not try to overcome your wicked propensities in your own strength, as Zachary seems to have done, because you may not be strong enough, but ask Jesus to help you, and then you will be successful in your endeavors to do right.

Your affectionate friend,

Elizabeth A. Annable.

I constantly emanate from the Lord and cheer the abode of the good.

Whilst enemies despise me, friends encourage my presence.

And now, dear children, in order that you may learn to delight in me, I propose to tell you what I am made of when merely seen by the natural eye.

My first is not seen in heaven, yet it is double on the confines of hell.

My third is indispensable to virtue; and my fourth stands first in the garden of Eden.

Yet my whole is known most singularly to be always in gloves.

The Spirit of Liberty.—A boy was once offering some caged birds for sale in a market town, when a sailor came up and inquired the price of them.

"Sixpence apiece," replied the boy.

"I did not ask how much apiece, but how much for the lot."

The boy, after some calculation, answered, "Six shillings and sixpence."

The sailor instantly handed him the money, and opening the cage door, permitted the birds to escape. The boy in astonishment cried out—

"What are you doing? you will lose your birds."

"Very well," said the sailor, "I have been shut up three years as a prisoner of war, and I am resolved never to see any thing confined in prison that I can make free."—Stories for Children.

Virtue.—You may tell me that the fresh bud on the tree is lovely, that the blossom on the thorn is lovely, and that the flowers of the field are lovely—and so they are; but neither bud, blossom, nor flower, is half so lovely as a youthful heart devoted to virtue and to God.

Suggested

By Lines in the Crisis of March 5th, 1862.

You tell us in your song about your "growing old,"
And suffering more and more from ills and aches and cold;
You tell us of the locks of thinning, whitening hair,
And eyes that "need the specs," bedimmed by time and care.

Alas! you're growing old—henceforth your heart and tongue,
That have so many years the songs of Zion sung,
Shall ne'er so oft again unite to sing them o'er
Before you sleep in death, or "Time shall be no more."

Your happy, social ties by death are severed fast—
Thus o'er the dreary earth an added shade is cast;
And still your life is spared—you love to labor still
To do the Master's work, and suffer all his will.

So shall your joy be full when from "the great white throne,"
In that decisive day the Judge shall say "well done!
For thou hast faithful been—thou hast my name confessed,
And in my vineyard toiled—thrice welcome to my rest."

Then shall you enter in, and at the marriage feast,
That Jesus hath prepared, shall be a welcome guest;
There, robed in spotless white, sit near the Bride-groom's side,
'Mong the triumphant church that shall compose the Bride.

With body glorified you shall no more grow old,
But with immortal eyes you shall God's face behold;
With tireless feet shall walk 'mid all the blessed throng,
And there unwearied sing the everlasting song.

The World to Come.—Heb. 2: 5.

Number Two.—Concluded.

The world of fancy and the Spirit land—Man's nature, and the penalty of sin—man in death.

One of the following propositions must be true: either, first, all the souls that should ever exist in conjunction with human bodies, were created in the beginning; or, second, they are created for the occasion of birth; or, third, they are derived direct from God; or, fourthly, they are propagated by the laws of procreation from parent to child.

To assume the first, would be to turn Mormon and adopt their theology, which teaches that "these little spirits are waiting to enter infant bodies, that they may be developed,"—substantiate their logic for polygamy, and afford a good argument for the admission of Utah with her "twin-relic" into the Union. To assert the second, would be to deny "the record," which affirms that God finished his work in six days and rested therefrom on the seventh. To confess to the third, would be to resuscitate the now discarded theory of the old Indian philosophers, which destroys any future individuality of our existence by a re-absorption of the "divine essence at death into the Divine Being," as the drop of water loses its identity and individuality when cast again into the ocean.

The christian believer then being unwilling to adopt either of these three views, has but one alternative left, the reproduction of the soul by generation. This is admitted. Now can you raise the stream higher than the fountain without some outside, independent power? Why no, surely, you say. Very well. Christ says, "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh"—is corruptible, is mortal. Now you admit that the soul is generated from parent to child. Yes. Then it is born of the flesh, consequently mortal. Now where is the boasted immortality of the soul independent of Jesus Christ? Life! life! and immortality in Christ—mortality and death out him. Then get into Christ.

But let us leave the logic and pursue the Scripture argument a little farther, for it is the Bible must settle this question, after all, since logic and philosophy cannot. The prophet David, speaking of men, says in Ps. 104: 29,—"Thou takest away their breath; they die, and (they) return to their dust." Where is the breath which was taken away? Solomon answers, "returned unto God who gave it; for the word ruah, rendered breath in the one place, is the same ruah rendered spirit in the other place; and this agrees perfectly with what Moses says of man in his creation (Gen. 2: 7).—"The Lord God formed man of the dust (no "of" in the Hebrew) of the ground" —hence God said to Adam truly, "Dust thou art,"—and breathed into his nostrils the (ruah) breath of life; and man became a living soul"; or, in plain English, man became alive. So in Gen. 7: 22,—"All in whose nostrils was the (ruah) breath of (margin) the spirit of life, died."

To any reflecting mind it is evident that God can take away from this dust-man no more than he put into him in order to constitute him a living soul, or alive. But it is not affirmed that God gave him a soul, a life, or a spirit, in the abstract; he only gave him the breath of life; or, as in Gen. 7: 22, "the breath of the spirit of life." But who or what is the spirit of life? God is that spirit. So then there was given to him the breath of God, and a soul or a life was the concrete or result. Now Job says (34: 14), "If he (God) set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his (God's) spirit and his (God's) breath; all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto his dust."

We have now ascertained that God gave to man, after his perfect and complete formation, only the breath of life; and by consequence that is all requisite to take from him in order to restore him to the condition he was in before it (breath) was given him. What was he before? He was dead, inanimate, wanting life. But dead what? Dead man—that is what God called him then. He was a dead soul, dead person, dead creature.*

So as God's word says, when he takes this away the man dies, the spirit (ruah—breath) returning to God who gave it, and the only remaining constituent, dust-man, to his—not it's—dust, mother earth, where Isaiah says (26: 19) "dead men dwell"; where Daniel (12: 2) says "they are asleep"; of whom Paul, in 1 Thess. 4: 14, affirms the same; where David in Ps. 115: 17 says "they praise not the Lord"; of whom Solomon says (Eccl. 9: 6) "their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished"; where Job (3: 17) emphatically declares "the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary be at rest"; of whom he affirms (14: 12) that "till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep"; of whom Christ testified, in John 3: 13, that "no man hath ascended up to heaven, but . . . the Son of man which is in heaven";—in John 5: 28, that they "are in the graves," and it is there that they "shall hear his voice."

In John 8: 21, Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye . . . shall die in your sins: whither I go, ye cannot come." In 13: 33, he said to the disciples, "As I said unto the Jews, 'whither I go ye cannot come,' so now I say unto you." Where did he go? 16: 5,—"I go my way to him that sent me." This was just before his crucifixion and death. Now see 20: 17, where he says to Mary, just after his resurrection, "Touch me not (or, as Clarke has it, better, I think, Cling not to me), for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God."

Objections. But did he not say, "I go to prepare a place for you," in John 14: 2? Yes, and he said he would "come again." But then there is the "thief on the cross," Moses in the mount, Stephen's case, Paul's eternal house, his third heaven, out of the body or in the body, his desire to depart, the rich man and Lazarus, etc. What of all these? Well, my good friends, be patient a little: in due time we will attend to all these cases, and try to place them, in their proper order, where they belong. In the meantime it seems there is at least good reason to doubt the correctness of Spiritology.

In the consideration of this subject, we would do well to bear in mind, what men seem ever to be forgetting and what David ever kept in view, and that is, "The hole of the pit whence (we) are digged." Our sins should ever be in remembrance. We are transgressors, sold under sin, the penalty or wages of which is death. We will not now stop to examine the nature or kind of death, only premising that death is the entire and absolute absence of life, whether spiritual, animal, vegetable, temporal or eternal;—that without Christ we should have eternally remained in death;—then we may become a little more reconciled to his time when he shall open our prison doors and bring us out from under its dominion, remembering, too, that we are so much the gainers as he shortens the time of imprisonment in death from eternity.

Keep these things in view, and we may no longer grumble and be filled with discontent, that we do not enter heaven and glory at once so soon as we die. Nay, we may well be filled with gratitude, be glad and rejoice, that God in his infinite love and compassion devised a plan of salvation whereby we may be brought out from sin and death at all.

Absent from the Body—present with the Lord.

Extract of a Dialogue between an "Orthodox" Minister and a Bible Reader.

(Concluded.)

B. R. "To illustrate the subject of personality,—suppose I give my son an apple, and say to him—you must eat it. He, however, cuts it open and gives half of it to another boy, and eats the other half himself. I afterwards ask him—my son, did you eat the apple I gave you? He replies—I did, father. Now I ask, would that be the truth?"

M. "It would not."

B. R. "Why not?"

M. "Because he ate only a part of the apple."

B. R. "Very well. Your christian friend dies, and his soul (a part of him) you say has gone to heaven; but his body (the other part) is in the grave. Now, would it be proper and true for you to say, my friend has gone to heaven? I pause for a reply. I know it is a close question, but I would like an answer. It is just as plain and easy to answer as the apple question."

M. "I do not think it a parallel case."

B. R. "You are very candid, sir! But why hesitate to answer it, if it is not a parallel case? No, sir. The cases are perfectly parallel, and the principle involved precisely the same. If it is true that my son did not eat the apple, because he gave half of it away, it is also true that your friend is not in heaven, when, according to your own theory, a part of him, and all that we know of him, is in the grave. But let us look at this case a little further. You not only say your friend has gone to heaven, but sometimes, in speaking of him, you say he lies in the silent grave, where he will sleep until the voice of the archangel, at the last day, shall awaken him to life and happiness.

"Again, you say he is alive and in heaven. At another time—he is dead and in his grave. Now is it true that your friend is in two places at the same time—that when he is dead and in his grave, he is also alive and in heaven? If it is not true, then the great mass of the christian world believe wrong and talk wrong. And if it is true, then the Bible is at fault (for it reveals no such doctrine); and a man has two personalities instead of one; and is consequently two persons, and not one person; and can be in two places at the same time! Is this true? It is, if the common theory be correct. But that it is not true, and consequently that this serpentine theory is an egregious error, I will now positively prove from the Bible. Peter says, in his memorable discourse on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2: 29),—'Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day.'

"Now if it can be proven from the Bible that David is not dead, but alive and in heaven, I will renounce my present views on this subject, and switch back on the heathen track again. But so far from any one being able to produce one passage in print, I will now positively prove that David has not gone to heaven; and if he did not go there, it necessarily follows that none go there at death. Now for the proof. Acts 2: 34,—'For David is not ascended into the heavens, but he [David] saith himself, the Lord [Jehovah] saith unto my Lord [the Messiah], Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool.' Peter is proving to the Jews, in this sermon, that Jesus was the true Messiah and Son of the living God; and that it was necessary for Christ thus to die and be raised from the dead. In doing so, he quotes the following language of David (vs. 26, 27),—'Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also, my flesh shall rest in hope: because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (hades), neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.' Now to prove to the Jews that this language did not refer to David, but did refer to Christ, whom, he says, is at the right hand of God exalted, having been raised from the dead,—he says in the language already quoted, "For David is not ascended into the heavens; . . . he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us to this day,'—he is not in heaven, and does not therefore sit at the right hand of God; but Christ has ascended into the heavens, and does sit at the right hand of the Father. 'Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly (says Peter), that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ.' And let all the people know assuredly that Peter has here positively declared that David is dead and buried, and that he has not ascended to heaven! the opinion of theologians to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Now, sir, from the illustration given, the argument adduced, and the inspired words of Peter, with nothing in the Bible to contradict them, you must see that it is absolutely necessary to locate the personality of man somewhere, and there let it remain. Where then will you locate it? If in the spirit, then the spirit of man is the man, the person that thinks, reasons, loves, hates, sins, dies! For the scripture saith, 'Man dieth and wasteth away; he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.' Pray tell me, then, where is his immortality? Job says, 'Shall mortal man be more just than God?' I conclude then that if the spirit is the real man, it is not immortal.

"But, sir, the personality of man is not in his spirit, but in the man, as an organized being, made up of different parts, who, when he dies, is dead and not alive; and when he is in hades, is not in heaven nor hell. So when man dies he must be unconscious; and to this agree the words of Solomon,—'The dead know not anything; . . . there is no knowledge in sheol whither thou goest.' Then, sir, in the light of this argument, I conclude that the pronoun 'I' in the phrase—'as long as I am in this tabernacle'—does not stand for the spirit of Peter, as you affirm; and consequently the term 'tabernacle' does not refer to Peter's body."

M. "Says Peter, 'I must put off this my tabernacle.' Notwithstanding your lengthy argument to prove the pronoun 'I' does not refer to the spirit, it must be obvious to every candid mind that it does so refer, from the fact there is something aside from Peter's body that is to 'put off' his tabernacle, and that something is called 'I,' which must be his spirit, for it would be absolutely absurd to suppose, as would be the case on your hypothesis, that Peter meant—'I must put off this my world.'"

B. R. "You do make it appear at first glance rather untenable, but on looking again, my position not only looks plausible, but truthful. You must remember that this world, as well as the holy city, is called a 'tabernacle,' with which we are represented by the apostle as being 'clothed';—'not that we would be unclothed,' says he; that is, without any habitation; but clothed upon [with our house which is from heaven].' Thus you see it was proper and significant for Peter to say, 'I must put off [an allusion to being clothed and laying such clothing aside] this my tabernacle [or temporary dwelling place, with which I am invested], even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed.' Peter here refers to the following language of Christ (Jno. 21: 18, 19).—'When thou wast young, thou girdest thyself and walkest whither thou wouldst: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands and another shall gird thee and carry thee whither thou wouldst not. This he said signifying by what death he should glorify God.' Now what is meant by the pronouns thou and thee in this address of Christ to Peter? If they stand for the material, organized man—Peter, who according to Christ was to suffer death by martyrdom, then the pronouns my and me in Peter's language in regard to himself and the same event, must mean precisely the same thing; for to say that these pronouns are not employed in the same sense, is to make Christ and Peter contradict each other. Then what did Christ mean by these pronouns? Without doubt he meant Peter and not Peter's spirit; unless a spirit can gird itself, and walk, and stretch forth its hands and be girded, and be carried, and put to death! This settles the question.

"But to return to the word 'tabernacle.' Dr. Webster gives the following definitions:—'A tent, from taberna, a shop or shed. 2d. A temporary habitation. 3d. Among the Jews, a movable building, so contrived as to be taken to pieces,' etc. The Greek word employed in 2 Pet. 1: 14, and 2 Cor. 5: 1, is skeenee, and means a tent, a tabernacle, i. e., any temporary dwelling, a booth, an habitation, abode, dwelling, etc. The term tabernacle, as used in the Jewish law, is never, in any sense, employed as a type of the human body; but was a type of the New Jerusalem, or the holy of holies, into which Christ has entered once for all. The Jewish priest went into the first tabernacle made with hands, accomplishing the service of God. 'But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people. . . . But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building . . . is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, [the new Jerusalem] now to appear in the presence of God for us.' Heb. 9. Now 'this tabernacle' or world in which we temporarily dwell, and with which we are represented as being clothed, is, as I have before said, contrasted with the tabernacle 'not made with hands,' which is to come 'from heaven' as a 'bride adorned for her husband'; and when it comes, John says there will be a great voice out of heaven saying, behold the tabernacle of God is with men." Paul also says (Heb. 11: 9,) "By faith he (Abraham) sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles [not human bodies] with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise. For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.'

Once more. You found an argument on the word exodos, rendered decease, which means an exit, passage out of any place, a going out, decease, death. Assuming that tabernacle is the body, your idea is that Peter's spirit goes out, or departs from his body; and that therefore exodos does not here mean decease or death, as translated. Now admit all this in regard to exodos, and it is just as significant and true that Peter has made his exit—has gone out, or departed from this world, as that he has gone out of his body! But grant, for the sake of the argument, that tabernacle in 2 Peter 1: 14, refers to Peter's body, and what do you gain? It does not therefore follow that it means the body in 2 Cor. 5: 1; for I have shown conclusively, by arguments that cannot be answered, that it refers to this world as our temporary dwelling place."

M. "I gain this by such an admission: that the pronoun 'I,' in the phrase 'I must put off this my tabernacle,' must refer to something distinct from the body, as it is a manifest absurdity to suppose that Peter's body could put off itself. Then the question is, what was it that put off the body if it is not Peter's spirit?"

B. R. "I remark first, that the pronoun 'I,' about which you have had so much to say, is not in the Greek text, neither is it implied; so that Peter does not say 'I must put off,' etc. McKnight's translation is true to the original,—'knowing that the putting away of my tabernacle is soon to happen, even as,' etc. Prof. Whiting translates the 13th verse as follows: 'And I think it right, as long as I am in this tent, to rouse you up by putting you in remembrance.' (Thus showing that I am correct in my view that 'this tabernacle' or tent refers to our temporary dwelling place—this world.)

"You think it is the 'I,' or Peter's spirit that put off the tabernacle; this is absurd; for it is not to be supposed that Peter or his spirit murdered his own body! But on this hypothesis this is true. You ask, 'what was it that put off the body, if it was not Peter's spirit?' I answer, Peter's murderers did it (if body is meant) and not Peter himself! So then your last objection is fully answered.

"I now wish to present 2 Cor. 5: 1–11 in paraphrase, that its harmony with itself and with other Scriptures may be clearly seen. The apostle says:—

'For we [the people of God] know that if our earthly house [this world] which is a tent [or temporary dwelling place, McKnight's trs.] were dissolved, [by fire, as it will be according to 2 Pet. 3: 7, 10,] we have a building of God, [new Jerusalem] an house not made with hands (Heb. 11: 10,) eternal [and now] in the heavens. For in this [world] we groan [Rom. 8: 18–23] earnestly desiring [Phil. 1: 23] to be clothed upon [or invested] with an house [not the immortal body, as some say, for that don't come down, but the holy city] which is [to come down] from heaven. [Rev. 21: 2.] If so be that being clothed [or having a good hope of being invested 'with our house which is from heaven'] we shall not be found naked [or destitute of that glorious habitation.] For we that are in this tabernacle [or world] do groan being burdened [with mortal cares and perplexities:] not for that we would be unclothed, [or destitute of a dwelling place,] but [would greatly prefer to be] clothed upon [or invested with our house which is from heaven] that mortality [not immortal but mortal creatures] might be swallowed up of life, [or put on immortality, which will take place, not at death, but 'at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (who are alive, 1 Cor. 15: 51,) shall be changed [in the twinkling of an eye.) For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.] Now he that hath wrought [or prepared] us for the self same thing [i. e. to be swallowed up of life, or put on immortality at the resurrection] is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest [or pledge] of the spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we [as organized beings, possessing a body, spirit, mind, etc,] are at home in [or connected with] the [mortal] body, we [being thus mortal and corruptible] are [on this account] absent from the Lord: (for we walk by faith, not by sight:) We are confident, I say, and willing [or choose] rather to be absent from the body [which is mortal,] and to be present with the Lord [in the body that is immortal.] Wherefore we labor, that whether [we continue to be] present [i. e. connected with mortality] or absent [from it] we may be accepted of [or acceptable to] him. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ [at the last day] that every one may receive the things done in his [mortal] body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.'"

The Testing Place.

This is our testing place—ah! yes, I know—
Here thornless, fadeless roses do not grow;
Then, knowing this, if I still persevere,
And dare to press them close, and call them dear,—

Shall I complain if in my bleeding heart
A wound is felt, caused by their poison dart?
Or, if they charm awhile, then turn to dust,
Shall I complain, and think 'tis all unjust?

No! if I seek for joy where worldlings do,
I must receive their bitter portion too.
My soul, look up! thy Savior speaks to thee,—
He says, "why cleave to earth? cling close to me."

Ah! blessed Savior, well I know thy voice,
How often has it made my heart rejoice;
I do look up to thee—thou art my all—
O Jesus! never suffer me to fall.

Earth calls me sometimes, yet without thy love,
A weary, cheerless way my life would prove.
Oh! help me all these trial-tests to stand,
And bring me finally to thy right hand.

May.

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

Number Three.

III.—Reign of the Saints.

It is said that the saints shall "reign"; hence some have inferred that they are to rule, or govern; and seeing the absurdity of having a state of servitude among the immortals, they have concluded that the immortals are to rule or govern a race of surviving mortals in the future age. But this is taking a deep plunge into inconsistency. This theory carries its own antidote upon its very surface, and unless blinded by an insane zeal, all can see it.

1st. Allowing each immortal but one mortal (to begin with—the lowest number possible), to reign over, and there would not be mortals enough, at Christ's coming, to give them one subject apiece, to say nothing about the great slaughter of the ungodly at that time. It is claimed that there are now nine hundred millions of human beings on earth. It is estimated that unaccountable children (such as will be saved) die at the rate of twenty thousand per day, making seven billions, three hundred thousand millions, in the space of a thousand years; saying nothing about the millions in years before, and leaving unmentioned the adult saints of the past six thousand years, we have here a number far exceeding the whole number of mortals on earth. To reign over one subject only, would be small business; and to have two immortals reigning over one mortal, would be still smaller business. Counting all of the finally saved, at a moderate estimation, and allowing all of the mortals found alive at the Advent (except those who are to be changed to immortality) as subjects for the the saved immortals to rule or govern, and there would be as many as seven rulers to one subject!!!

2nd. Then allow these subjects to multiply, according to the claim (deaths being a rare occurrence), and the first thousand years would more than twice fill the world. At the ordinary rates, the first generation of nine hundred millions would produce two hundred and twenty-five billions in one thousand years; the second a little less, etc.

3rd. If to "reign" implies a ruling of mortal subjects, who are to propagate their species, then this work is not confined to the one thousand years, for in the new earth state it is said, "They shall reign forever and ever." Will there be mortals after the one thousand years are ended, for the immortals to rule or govern, even "forever and ever"? Then how many worlds would it take to hold their offspring?

4th. "Reign" does not always mean to rule or govern, but often signifies to "prevail": "Death reigned [prevailed] from Adam to Moses." The saints will eternally prevail or triumph over sin and death. Death once reigned over them: they now "reign" over death: they are victors.

IV.—Sacrifices in the future age.

It is claimed that these mortals, over whom the immortals bare rule, are to offer sacrifices. What a flock of lambs and rams it would require for the first quota, allowing one for each of the nine hundred millions. And then this first quota is but a priming to the future demand. How the blood flows, and how the smoke rises! And how much it makes the Kingdom look like a great slaughter-house on fire! A kingdom of butcher-knives, blood and smoke!!! Again, after the few first offerings, before the beasts could multiply, they would all be sacrificed, and a miracle be required to furnish offerings. "Sin offerings" and "trespass offerings" indicate the existence of sin. It is bad enough to dwell in a kingdom of sin now, without trying it again.

V.—Immortal "Priests."

It is claimed by some, that as the office of a priest is to offer sacrifices, and as the saints are to be "priests," they will also offer sacrifices. Then butcher-knives will be in great demand! But where will the beasts come from for the first offering for that "great multitude"?

Christ is presented as the great antitypical sacrifice. To continue the type after the arrival of the antitype, is to virtually deny Christ! The "spiritual sacrifice" is the only sacrifice recognized this side of Christ.

The Second Death.

If the natural death of a wicked man is all the punishment he receives, how can he be hurt with the second death? How can it be said that they shall die the second death, if they never are raised to life from the first death? Where, in all the Bible, do we find a passage that says the first, or natural death, of any person, is the day of judgment? Does Christ come with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, at the natural death of every wicked person, and sit in judgment in order to punish him? Is it not a positive fact, that the whole Bible refers us to the day of judgment as the time and place of punishment? Look at 2 Pet. 2: 9, and John 5: 29. Does it not plainly read in these two passages of Scripture that they came forth "to the resurrection of damnation," and are to be punished at the day of judgment? Does not our dear Savior tell us in Matt. 12: 36, "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment"? Can the wicked give an account of their sins at the day of judgment if they are dead, and are not to rise from the dead? How is it that the words of Christ inform us that he will judge the wicked at the last day, if they are not to be raised to life, to be at the judgment seat of Christ? (John 12: 48.) How could the unwise virgins, or the wicked say, "Lord, Lord, open unto us," in that day, if the wicked are not brought to life, so as to be there to make the request or plea? Matt. 25: 11.

Now, dear reader, let us look at Matt. 7: 22, 23, where our Savior plainly declares that many will say to me, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy [illegible] but he will say to them depart. In [illegible] 25, we are informed by our Lord that [illegible] fore him shall be gathered all nations. We would kindly ask if the wicked dead will be exempt from being there? The living wicked will have to die in the flames of fire and brimstone, in dreadful agony, when thousands of them are not the hundredth part so guilty as old Nero, and those cruel wretches of the papal power that put to a cruel death thousands of innocent women and children. If those wicked ones do not come forth to life at the resurrection, then they will escape all this punishment of fire and brimstone, which they deserve ten times more than many who will be alive when Christ comes in flaming fire to punish the wicked.

Once more. Can there be wailing and gnashing of teeth with those wicked dead who never rise from the dead to be punished? Again, can any one deny the fact that thousands of good christians suffer ten times more in their natural death than many wicked persons do? David says they have no bands in their death. But when David entered the sanctuary, he was permitted to see their dreadful end. Can we suppose for one moment it was only natural death?

What is the instrument of punishment to be employed upon the wicked at the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men? Fire and brimstone.

Now, dear reader, to sum up the whole story, we must come to the following conclusions:—

1st. That no one will have his final punishment until the day of final judgment.

2d. That punishment will be with fire and brimstone, which will finally destroy them; and is the second death to all the wicked that rise from the dead.

3d. That we have just as strong proof of the resurrection of the wicked to condemnation, to be destroyed with fire and brimstone, as we have of the resurrection of the saints to eternal life.

I would say to my dear brethren and sisters, in a spirit of love and kindness, let us be very careful not to deny Christ's own words, that will judge us at the last day, lest he also deny us before his Father and holy angels.

☞ Sir Humphrey Davy remarks: "I envy no quality of the mind and intellect in others, be it genius, wit, or fancy; but if I could choose what would be most delightful to me, I should prefer a firm religious belief to any other blessing; for it makes life a discipline of goodness, awakens new life even in death, and calls up the most beautiful visions of the palms and amaranths in the gardens of the blest, where the sensualist views only gloom, decay, annihilation and despair."

"Seven Kings."

"And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space."—Rev. 17: 10. "Five have fallen."—(Griesbach Text.) "Five have fallen."—(Sawyer's Trans.)

I do not propose giving an exposition of this text, but simply the inconsistency of the long-received opinion of Protestant expositors; and many also who are looking for the Lord's soon coming adopt the old view concerning this text. Since the fact is not called in question that the "seven heads" belong to the Roman Beast, let us at once come to their exposition of it, and see if it accords with either Scripture or history. The view to which I refer can be no better stated than in the language of Bishop Newton, since expositors generally who take the same position give their ideas in Newton's own words.

"And they are seven kings or kingdoms, or forms of government, as the word imports, and hath been shown to import in a former instance. 'Five are fallen.' Five of these forms of government are already past (that is, up to the Revelator's time), and one is; the sixth is now subsisting, (that is in John's time.) The five fallen are kings, and consuls, and dictators, and decemvirs, and military tribunes with consular authority; as they are enumerated and distinguished by those who should best know—the two greatest Roman historians, Livy and Tacitus. The sixth is the power of the Cæsars, or emperors which were subsisting at the time of the vision."—Newton on the Prophecies, page 573.

That this position is entirely erroneous may be seen, (1.) Because the angel takes John down in the wilderness state where the woman is drunken with the blood of saints; and from that stand-point "five have fallen," and one is, and the other is not yet come." (2.) This position is equally erroneous in an historical point of view; for, according to their interpretation, there are but six forms of government up to the time of the vision, when the truth is, there have been not less than eleven changes of government, and eight different forms of government up to that time. On this point I know of no conflicting testimony among historians.

Says Newton of the five fallen, they are thus "enumerated, and distinguished by those who should best know the two greatest Roman historians, Livy and Tacitus." Now that Tacitus thus enumerates them, making only five, is very far from being true. Tacitus commences his history with the Cæsars, and all that he says of the governments that preceded Augustus Cæsar, the first emperor, is—"Kings held dominion in the city of Rome from its foundation. Lucas Brutus instituted liberty, and the consulate Dictatorship was resorted to in temporary emergencies. Neither the [power] of the decemvirs continued in force [beyond] two years, nor the consular authority of the military tribune for any length [of time]. The domination of Cinna did not [continue] long, nor that of Lylla; the influence of Pompey and Crassus quickly merged in Cæsar. The arms of Lepidus and Antony in Augustus, who, with the title of prince, took under his command the commonwealth, existed with civil dissensions."—Tacitus' History. Vol. 1., pp. 1, 2.

With these eleven changes of government mentioned by Tacitus, agree Livy, Lydell, Quin and Goldsmith, and by them are fixed as follows:—

1. Kings from B. C. 753, to B. C. 508. 2. Consuls to B. C. 438. 3. Dictators to B. C. 493. 4. Tribunes to B. C. 451. 5. Decemviri to B. C. 443. 6. Military Tribunes to B. C. 82. 7. Dictators to B. C. 60. 8. Triumvirate to B. C. 47. 9. Dictators to B. C. 43. 10. Second Triumvirate to B. C. 31. 11. Emperors to A. D. 476. (There is no confliction among these historians, save in the fixing of dates, which in some cases vary from one to three years.) How then can they possibly make but six forms of government from all these? In Newton the triumvirate is not mentioned, while it twice makes its appearance in history.

Again, according to Rev. 13: 3, but one head appears the second time; but in their arrangement two appear twice, and one the third time; and if tribunes and military tribunes are considered one form of government, then three heads appear the second time. Again, it is said of the seventh head that when he comes "he shall continue but a short time"; that is, short in comparison with the others. Their exposition makes the seventh head to be Dukedom from A. D. 568, to A. D. 727; that is, 159 years, which is a very long time compared with some of the others. One of the other forms of government continued but twenty-two years, another thirteen, another twelve, another ten, another eight, two others but five years each.

From these facts we see how utterly inconsistent it is to apply these heads to Rome pagan, when they belong undoubtedly to Rome papal. V. P. SIMMONS.

New Tract Fund.

It will be seen in another column, that it is proposed to push the tract enterprise with vigor. We have been long satisfied that in no way can so much good be accomplished, with so small means, as by using it for the circulation of tracts; and probably there has been no time when people were as willing to read them as now. Sober men are quite dissatisfied with the present state of the churches, and are calling for light from some quarter. They cannot be satisfied as they are any longer. The glorious truths committed to our trust are just what they need, as we well know from happy experience. Shall we make a sacrifice and send them the light with which we have been favored? or shall we hide it under a bushel? Come, let us put it on a candlestick, that others may be benefited as well as ourselves. Indeed, we must do it, or else our light will go out. If we do not improve what we have, the Lord will take it away, and give it to the faithful.

Our Brn. and Srs. have already done nobly, and have raised over $600 on the old Tract Fund. Now let us double our subscription, and raise a thousand more at once to send tracts to all parts of the globe. If you could witness the greediness with which they are received and read, you would not miss the privilege of aiding in this good work. Now is our time to wor . Let us use the means while we can, for there is reason to believe that in a short time some of us will not be allowed to "buy or sell." Then our hands will be completely tied. Let us act while we are free, and sow all the seed we can. Now is the hour to strike a heavy blow. Every one can do something. Let there be a general rally to carry forward this glorious enterprise. There is no time for delay. The day of the Lord is at hand. The eternal triumph of the faithful will soon begin.

The Approaching Crisis.

Men are beginning to be satisfied that we are approaching an unparalleled crisis in human affairs. Their hearts are greatly troubled at the state of things in our world. Some power seems to be upsetting all their worldly hopes. The clouds with "silver linings" have all disappeared, and Egyptian darkness, in political matters, is coming upon our nation, accompanied also with deep moral night. Some are so thoroughly convinced of these things, that they anxiously inquire, "what shall I do?"

In an editorial of the New Republic, of Aug. 23d, 1862, published at Cleaveland, Ohio, when speaking of coming events, and the financial aspect of our country, it is remarked as follows:—

"As to 'real estate,' I have no doubt that the soil will be as productive, and as useful to grow fruits and grains upon, after the crisis, as now; but arbitrary ownership of the soil will be at an end. I would not give five dollars in present value for all the deeds of 'real estate' now held in the State of Ohio. Much ridicule has been made of Land Reform. But instead of wild land simply being free, all land will be free, and will everywhere invite free cultivators. Those who have comfortable homes, no larger than they need and can properly care for, if war, famine and pestilence shall leave them alive and undisturbed, will doubtless retain their homes, but possession and improvement will be the only valid and recognized title to them. . . . . This being true of the soil, it is plain to see that 'mortgages' will be valueless. As to 'good notes,' it is the highest order of fanaticism to undertake to say whose note will be good for anything in three years from now."

These remarks were called forth from the Editor of the New Republic in answer to an inquiry concerning the best disposition to be made of property in view of coming events. He goes on to say:—

"The best thing I can think of, on the 'worldly plane,' is to get your property into money, change it into gold, at seventeen per cent. (more or less) discount, (how hard to lose that seventeen per cent!) and BURY it! Be sure no one knows of its whereabouts. It is quite possible that gold may have a value that will survive—I am not sure. If you do not live through the crisis, the 'spirits' will doubtless be able to discover the whereabouts of your treasure.

I will make another suggestion: The time may come when FAMINE will stare us in the face. It is true there is no immediate prospect of it, but there is no occasion to be over-confident. I would sooner lay up grain, and can, and dry fruit, than any thing else in the way of worldly providence. But it will be of no use to do this for the sake of speculation. Whatever is hoarded by speculators will be used as common property when the time comes. Let the wise attend.

Seriously, I can tell those who do not already know it, that it is of no use at all to try to hold on to any property whatever, that is not needed to meet actual necessities, present and prospective; and all may expect to learn to do without all of the luxuries; and many so-considered necessaries of life. Those who escape death and get food enough to prevent actual starvation, and clothes to cover actual nakedness, may be content. It may be that great suffering, in these respects, will be the lot of the most fortunate."

We think it will be far better to put the money into tracts and scatter them among the people, and try to arouse them to make preparation to meet the King of kings who is about to appear, as the rightful Sovereign of this planet.

The New Catholic Church.

In the Banner of Light, a leading Spiritualist paper, dated Sept. 6th, 1862, we find an interesting article from Edward B. Freeland, on the principles of organization," in the new system of government, about to be established. In connection with the new government, there is to be a "new religion," "a new Universal Religion," called "the new Catholic Church." He goes on to say that the new revelation from the spirit world "requires to be signalized by the inauguration of a new religious movement; by the revival of faith; and by the organization of a church destined speedily to become as universal by the acceptance it shall meet among men, as it is, from the first, by virtue of the principles upon which it is based." "A Universal Reconciliation is about to be effected between all possible religions, metaphysical, political, and social systems." This the writer denominates the "Grand Reconciliation." We confess, we see but little room to doubt that the reconciliation will be accomplished. This is what we have been long expecting as one of the last works of Satan before the coming of Christ. If there is not a radical and speedy reform in the popular religion of the day, we think the great Deceiver will succeed in persuading nearly all its votaries to unite in the "grand reconciliation" movement. It is evident that things in the various churches cannot long remain as they are. Something must be done, and done quickly, or all hope of recovery will be lost. Many begin to feel that the strong "under-tow" is periling their foundation, and that every hour increases their danger. They inquire with alarm, what can be done? The strong church pillars are being swept away and others are tottering to their fall. As things are now progressing, soon the last barrier between the nominal church and the world will be broken down, and then comes the "grand reconciliation."

The writer further remarks, relative to the "new religion,"

"In the doctrine and polity of the new Catholic Church will be embodied substantially the creeds and institutions of all the churches of the past, freed from their crudities and puerilities merely, but essentially conserved; while they will be overlaid, illuminated and integrated into one grand composite system of truth, by the broader and higher philosophy of the present and the future.

Such is a condensed statement of the Platform of the new Church, representative of a new religion. . . . The New Religion comes with a creed, which must enthusize the world. It affirms the race to be in its infancy, the world to be its future home, heaven to be here upon earth, when, through the efforts of devoted men and women, using the methods pointed out by Science, the earth becomes the garden of the race, and humanity the dwellers therein. True Religion, the new Gospel affirms, is devotion to the discovery of all truth and its practical application for the material, intellectual, moral and spiritual regeneration of mankind.

Such a religion will lay fast hold on the hearts, and inspire the energies of all the leaders of the race, and give a new impetus to social advancement. It will engage the practical faculties of men, and call them out in new efforts toward an end worthy to be striven after, and godlike when attained. In the hands of intelligent, spiritualized, earnest men, possessing the instrumentalities of science, and inspired by the love of humanity, the work of social reconstruction will rapidly advance. Institutions, adequate to the wants of the world, based on true principles, will speedily take the place of the meagre ones we now are cramped into, and will give new conditions for a more rapid and healthful development of mankind. The abolition of poverty will quickly follow the introduction of associated industry and equitable systems of commercial exchange; rebellions, wars, bloodshed will cease under a better and truer method of government, founded on attraction and recognizing the inherent individual freedom of every one; impurity will find no home in the cultured, magnetic earth, nor disease among her love-united inhabitants; death shall be swallowed up in victory, and the day of long-foretold peace and happiness dawn upon the New Earth. This is not Utopian. A year ago it would have been. Now it is the practical possibility of earnest, devoted men and women, using their brains in the application of laws discovered by brains, their hearts in the cause to which every great heart prompts, and achieving thereby results which the culminating enlightenment of the world render feasible, and to which the sinking hopes of humanity turn expectantly."

Who cannot "discern the signs of the times?" And yet, Satan has so far blinded the eyes of his votaries, that they really think a glorious end is about to dawn upon us through the agency of spirits. Every month brings us additional proof of the importance of the Bible doctrine of the sleep of the dead, as the great bulwark of defense against Satan's last terrible attack upon the church of Christ. We know not how to express our gratitude to the Lord for showing us this glorious truth, and giving us courage to stand up for it against the popular voice of fabled theology. O Lord, continue to give unwavering confidence in thy truth, and undaunted courage to proclaim it to a dying world; and may some more see its beautiful harmony, embrace it, and be saved from the great delusion of these last days, and finally crowned with everlasting life.

Is it True?

We clipped the following from one of our exchanges. It presents a sad picture, but "facts are stubborn things."

"VITAL RELIGION.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler, of New York city, speaks of the very low state of vital religion, and the almost utter absence of converting power, and adds: 'Perhaps it is not too much to say that during the last year more souls have gone into eternity, and fewer have gone into the church of Christ, than in any year our country has yet seen.' This does not look well, coming from one of the 'pillars of the church.' What is the cause of the absence of 'converting power?' Is it because there is a lack of faith in the churches of the present day that they fail to progress? We fear such is the fact. People who feel that they need vital religion, enter the ranks of Spiritualism."

When will people open their eyes and look at the perils of these times? We fear but few will, till it is too late to prepare to meet the coming Bridegroom. Satan is devising all manner of ways to divert the attention of the people of this generation from the grand event now just at hand—the coming of Christ. He is succeeding in causing many to believe that all the coming of Christ they are to look for, is in the introduction of new and glorious principles. But when we come to examine them in the light of Divine truth, we find they are decidedly infidel.

The Plot.

This is truly a time of treachery and traitorism. Selfishness is so unbounded in these "last days," that party interests have almost absolute control in the religious and political affairs of the day. Says the New Republic, Cleveland, O.,—

"The glorious old banner of freedom has been seized by treacherous, disguised hands and consecrated to Slavery. The plot is to betray and get away true men enough to be slaughtered on southern battlefields to weaken the forces of freedom at home, till the remainder can have the choice between being assassinated at home on their own hearth-stones, or submitting and returning into the service of slavery. In this apprehension the friends of freedom are now everywhere being terrified into silence. They tell me that if I don't hush my warning voice I'm sure to be killed."

He who expects to be saved in the coming kingdom should not seek to save his life, at the expense of truth or righteousness. Stand with firmness for the right, and leave the Lord to take care of the consequences.

Drafting.

The following is from a Western paper, and relates to La Porte and vicinity, in Indiana:—

"The list below are the names of those who are conscientiously opposed to bearing arms. Forty per cent. of that class were drafted in the county. Two hundred dollars each will exempt them from going into service. If they do not pay that, they will be required to bear arms like other drafted men: Center, James T. Hopkins; Galena, Theoderick Hickman; Noble, A. Freeman; Union, Jones Winchell, John Wisgarber; Wills, Silas Rogers. All drafted men save those who pay the $200 are required to report themselves to Indianapolis next Wednesday, and there they can have the opportunity to enlist in the twelve month's service and receive a bounty for so doing."

"Signs in the Heavens."

A correspondent sends us the following, copied from the Philadelphia War Press:—

"The Monticello (Florida) Friend says that a 'flaming sword' in the sky was seen at Groversville, Ga., about four o'clock, P. M., on the 23d ult. It was a perfect representation of a sword,—handle, blade and point all visible. The blade was red, and the handle silver color. The blade pointed to the north-east, and the handle to the south-west. It was high up in the heavens, about twenty feet long, and two feet broad. Soon after it was witnessed, a wind springing up, heavy clouds appeared and screened it from view."

"Times have changed."

Walking up the avenue the other evening, my attention was drawn by a big blaze of burning barrels, and several hundred persons, in front of a church which was brilliantly lighted up. In front was erected a platform for speakers. The band was playing "John Brown," etc., with all the appearances and noise of a political campaign. On inquiring of a man, "what's up," I learned it was a meeting got up by the church to raise funds for recruiting. I remarked, "Church and State walk hand in hand now-a-days. A few years ago that would n't do." He said, "No, no; but times have changed."

Sorrowful changes! The devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour. The man would have been called a fanatic, who, two or three years ago, would have predicted the present state of society. And even we who were looking for a time of trouble, hardly expected it in this land; but looked to Europe for it. "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly," "for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible, and who can abide it." O for more faith to stand in that day, with our loins girt about with truth, and our lamps trimmed and burning, and we like men waiting the return of our Lord from heaven. The good Lord deliver us from the evil influences of the world, and hasten the time when he will come and redeem his waiting people. Brethren, let us work while the day lasts. Scatter tracts, preach the word, be instant in season. Your brother in Christ,

New York. J. T. HOWLAND.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names towards raising ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS, as a TRACT FUND, to aid the Christian Publication Society in the issue and gratuitous distribution of such Tracts and other publications as the times in which we live demand; and our subscriptions shall be paid at the call of the Treasurer of the Society as soon as the whole amount is subscribed.*

The Tract Fund.—No. 1.

"In the name of the Lord do we set up our banner." The Christian Publication Society have a mind to work. They are sending out tracts faster than ever before, and calls are coming in for more. Let them come! the more the better, only scatter the tracts carefully and prayerfully, and God will bless the word sown.

I like these little tract preachers. They do not quarrel. They can hold their tongues, if other folks cannot. They travel cheap,—never go begging for their salaries, and are patient all the time. Do you know why I started to publish tracts? Well, one reason was, I would not circulate newspapers which, if they had a truth on one page, would have a lie to contradict it on the other, or that were taken up with quarrels about men, churches, conferences, and all sorts of miserable sectarian nonsense. I thought there must be a way to get the waters of truth without having them "fouled" by so many intruding feet. Well, I have worked at it about ten years, and worked hard, and I hope good and not evil has been done. Now the Publication Society has taken hold of the matter, and I want to see them fairly out at sea, under a cloud of canvass; and so I want to see ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS raised to put the thing under good headway. I expect to see it too. Come, brethren and sisters, take hold with a will and give this craft a splendid launch. We want every preacher, wherever he goes, to have a bundle of tracts all ready to distribute, and we do not want him to have to pay for them out of the money that his wife and children need to buy bread.

You who want TRACTS, send to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass. Tell who you are, where you live, Post Office, County, State. Write your name and post office plain; how many you want; how much you will give for them. Pay for what you can, and beg if not able to pay, and tracts shall be forthcoming, if the Lord permit.

I am ready for the Kingdom.

Is this too much to say? Certainly not. A real child of God, looking for the kingdom of God, of which he is really an heir, ought always (and especially now) to be able to say it,—strong language though it be. The common idea among ordinary professors, of being about half ready for death, will not do for the real heirs of the kingdom. Our Lord and Master says, "Be ye also ready," Matt. 24: 44, and his loving children are glad to obey him.

But I hear some one asking, "What is it, after all that has been said, to be ready?" Well, I'll tell you what I must be, to be ready. I must be in harmony with God, in "fellowship" with "the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."—1 John 1: 3. I must rejoice in all that he has done from the beginning (Gen. 1: 1), in all he is now doing, and in all that he is purposing to do. Glory to God! O the precious grace of God, that has brought me into this state of salvation from sin! But I must not enlarge. My Beloved's will understand.

One word respecting his purposes. "The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."—Matt. 13: 41, 42. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—John 3: 8. Hallelujah! "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil; and deliver them, who, through fear of death, were all their life-time subject to bondage." And then shall be fulfilled the blessed promise, by the mouth of Isaiah, 65: 25. "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord."

"The Signs of the Times."

With pleasure and profit I have read half, and glanced through the remainder of "The Signs of the Times." Aside from its intent to show the depravity of the age in which we live, I think it well calculated to give such information as shall profit. Its statistical matter, so well arranged and condensed, gives evidence of considerable effort on your part to make the book alike startling and profitable. Its general appearance indicates good taste and workmanship, and its price is within the reach of thousands. GEO. W. YOUNG.

Conference at Union Mills, Ind.

The Conference at this place, commencing Thursday, Sept. 25th, holding over Sunday, was well attended, and profitable to the saints in this locality, and also to the number who were in from a distance.

Thursday evening was our first meeting, and a goodly number were in from adjoining localities, together with a liberal turn of brethren and inhabitants of the place, giving evidence that they had not forgotten to assemble themselves; we tried with much weakness to talk the same, especially the church, from John 15: 1, 2; to what effect a coming day will reveal. Some very pertinent remarks followed, made by preaching brethren and others, which served to cheer our hearts and heighten our interest in the work before us. And as we desired in our hearts to get nearer to God by faith and humility, we agreed that our first meeting for the following day be one for prayer and conference.

Friday, 9 o'clock A. M., we engaged heartily in the work. A deep solemnity rested upon the worshipers, and the "certain sound" in every testimony evinced a desire to attain to higher ground and a closer walk with God. The result of this interview exceeded our expectations, feeling at its close that God had not changed, but still had an ear open to the cries of his children. After necessary refreshments, we met again at 1 1-2 o'clock, P. M., and listened to a discourse from Bro. D. R. Mansfield, from Dan. 12: 1, upon the signs of the times. A good discourse, spoken with energy, the speaker's own heart warming up with the evidences of Christ's soon coming to deliver his children from the "time of trouble, such as never was," and give them the kingdom. We could but rejoice at the nearness of that event.

In the evening the house was well filled, and all listened attentively to a discourse from Sr. M. S. Mansfield, from Matt. 16: 1–4, upon the fulfillment of prophecy, showing from the Bible and history that God fulfills each of his prophecies once—each generation have their appropriate portion and fulfillment—and according to history and the signs spread out before us in every department, those taken out of this generation, through belief of the truth, may hope to receive, a little from this, everlasting salvation at the coming of Jesus. As we listened, the unbroken chain of evidence bound our hearts together in one, and we longed for Christ to appear and gather his children home.

Saturday, 10 1-2 o'clock, met again for prayer and conference. A lively interest prevailed, and our hearts were made better by confessing our faults, and praying for and exhorting one another, and so much much the more as we could see the day of bright glory appearing. At this juncture of the conference, several remarked that the meeting reminded them of the happy seasons in the past, with a feeling of determination to profit by past experience, and hereafter make sure work for the kingdom. At 1 1-2 o'clock P. M., we tried again to speak to the people from Matt. 5: 5. A goodly number were by this time in from various sections, and we hope the opportunity was not altogether a lost one. In the evening Bro. George Moyer spoke to a quiet and interesting house full, from Eph. 3: 11, showing the purpose of God in Christ, by his heirship, purchase, conquest, and final adjustment of His government upon earth. A timely discourse, calculated to lead people to the Bible, and a preparation to share in the glorious results of God's eternal purpose, in the ages to come.

Sunday, 9 o'clock A. M., met to speak of our hope of speedy deliverance in a little while. Some were hindered from speaking by the congregation coming in for public worship at an early hour. Notwithstanding, we had a good time, many countenances lighting up with joy, expecting to share in the glory soon to be revealed.

At 10 1-2 o'clock, Sr. M. S. Mansfield spoke again to a crowded house, from Rev. 10: 7. Of this subject we cannot say with positiveness how it was handled, as we had learned our destiny for the afternoon; and although interested in the discourse, had alternate hopes and fears of our own success, and half a mind to flee and leave the burden upon those wishing to make us more conspicuous than we have ever desired. Suffice it to say, the subject was well handled, the congregation being witnesses, and the effect most glorious. The only injury likely to have followed was, a simultaneous going into the kingdom before the time. Many of the saints forgot they had the kingdom only in prospect; and the unconverted portion of the audience seemed dead to the world for the time, and would also have gone over into the land of promise, but for their unfitness, and an end to those beautiful descriptions of future glory.

At 1 1-2 o'clock, we made another attempt to address the people, from Job 14: 14. We have the satisfaction of knowing that we tried to benefit those who heard, and hope to meet them soon where mortality will be swallowed up of life. We next met around the board, to commemorate the death of our Lord Jesus Christ. It was thought that nearly one hundred participated, willing to show forth the Lord's death until he comes. Our hearts were sad because of our Lord's absence, but we felt more than ever before in all our lives, that we should soon change our tears for songs and everlasting praises, in a world where sorrows never come.

In the evening, Bro. Noah Johnson, of Ill., preached to a full house, from 2 Pet. 3: 14. This was our last meeting, and the crowning scene of the whole. The importance of diligence, in order to be without spot, was shown to be as necessary for us as the coming of Christ, if we would be benefitted by his coming. Good attention was paid by all, who must have felt the force of the text, and to appropriate to ourselves the parting instruction, soon to meet again, if faithful, in the earth renewed.

Thus ended one of the best meetings it has been our privilege to enjoy for many a year, and believe we speak the minds of many who were present to participate in the scene. We should been glad to have given a more satisfactory report, but did not suspect the task would fall upon us until near the close of the meeting. Brethren were in from Buchanan and other portions of Mich., also from South Bend, La Porte, Stillwell, and some from Will Co., Ill. The best of feeling prevailed, and the Lord abundantly blessed. We were happy to renew old acquaintances. God has some precious "jewels" in this section, who will, we believe, soon meet to part no more.

Important Book.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Having read the new book—"Signs of the Times," by H. L. Hastings, permit me to say I believe it a very important volume for circulation at this time. Its arguments are drawn on an entirely new plan, and yet present the same startling facts which have led us to look for the speedy overthrow of all earthly governments, and the return of Christ to be our everlasting King. We think that no book has yet appeared in Europe or America, on this subject, so well calculated to enlist the serious attention and convince the careful readers of all classes, as this volume. It contains many important statistical facts, with a large amount of statistical matter, drawn from many volumes, and from extraordinary sources, relating to the currency of the world in all ages; and to the present character and condition of the principle nations of earth, with some graphic illustrations of the scriptures which relate to these "last days." It must have a wide circulation with all readers of good and true things. I. C. WELLCOME.

The "Voice of the Church."

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I did not see a notice in the Crisis of the last two numbers of the "Voice of the Prophets." I think they should be noticed, and you will allow me to call attention to them. The articles of R. Robertson, Esq., of London, on the Voice of the Prophets, and Elder A. Hale's letters to Eld. T. M. Preble, have much interested me. I think all should read them. I presume Elder Himes has a supply of these numbers, and all can be supplied who wish.

In speaking of Bro. Hale's articles, a brother recently said:—

"Bro. A. Hale's late articles are deep, broad, and strong. They will do to read a few times. They indicate a pent up fire, which, when it breaks forth, let the surroundings be removed, for there is danger of their being scorched; or they are like a powerful engine with her steam up, made fast to an incubus, which must be removed. Let men get out of the way, for there is danger to those who stand in her path. 'Look out for the engine.' The Lord bless Bro. H., and give him health and strength of body and of mind; endow him with right thoughts to do the work right up, so that it need not to be done again."

But get them and read for yourself.

Book Notice.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, A Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. 320 pp. 12 mo. Boston. 1862.

This book is not a delightful one, but it is too interesting to lie unread, either on the table or with the bookseller. It is a sad but true picture of the dark side of human nature and society, in the nineteenth century of the Christian era. It will seriously disturb the quiet of those who cry peace and joy and millennial hope, amid the groans and tears of unpitied millions.

The argument of the book lies largely in its facts, which comprise not a few statistics. If it fails to convince any reader that the world is growing really and rapidly worse, it will at least discourage all hopes of a millennium by the power of the gospel only. For those who decline the author's hope of Christ's appearing, it lays out an immense and heavy work for mankind. The workers, surely, will not be afraid to know their task. As for the idlers, it will do them no harm to be appalled.

Some questions respecting the relation of the Christian to the civil government are touched, though not treated in full. But enough is said to set the reader a thinking. O. M. E.

☞ As Joseph's heart was full of love to his brethren, even when he withdrew himself from them, for he was fain to go aside and weep, his heart by weeping; so the heart of God is full of love to his people, even when he withdraws from them.

Correspondence.

From Bro. L. Wetherbee.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord is doing up a great work here in Bradley. Since we came from the Corinna campmeeting, we have had a melting time. The church is really in working order. Backsliders are coming back to Father's house, and sinners are turning to the Lord. Satan's kingdom is being shaken in this place, and his subjects are leaving his ranks and coming over to the Lord's army. Last Sunday, I led two happy souls down into the liquid stream to follow their Lord, and others are going forward soon. O! Brn. and Srs., it does seem as though the Lord was doing up his last work; hence we should improve every moment, and show to the world that we not only have the truth, but that we are living it out in our daily lives; and then when he comes to call his saints from the east, west, north, and south, we shall be found with them.

Bradley, Me.

From Sr. C. M. Whitaker.

Bro. Grant:—I feel as though we have a great deal for which to thank the Lord; both for what he has done, and what he is still doing. But we are still needy creatures before him. We need his grace to carry us safely through this wicked world and land us on the other river shore, where "they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more.... For the Lamb, which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes"—Rev. 7: 16, 17. Brothers and sisters, let us be faithful, more in earnest, and do what we can for the Lord.

Newlane, Vt.

From Bro. H. Munger.

Bro. Grant:—God is at work here. He is shaking the place by his mighty power. Some twenty have come out, nine have been baptized, and more will go soon.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Stonington, Ct, Sept. 30, 1862, Sister E. H. Gould, wife of Bro. T. A. Gould, aged forty-one years.

For the last sixteen years Sr Gould has been a very active member of the Baptist church, and for the last ten years an Adventist. Two weeks before she died, she told her husband she could live but a little while, and had no expectations of going to glory at death, but to sleep in Jesus a little while, for he was coming to give her a home in the New Earth. I talked with her about the kingdom two days before she died. She enjoyed it very much, and talked of the same freely. The night before she died she had her children and friends called together around her bed. She addressed her husband, who had been an active companion with her in serving the Lord, and her three children separately. She talked affectionately to her brother and friends, telling them to prepare to meet her where friends will never part. She sent her love to all her friends, and bade them farewell, saying she was willing to die. In a clear voice she made a beautiful prayer, asking the Lord to take care of her family and friends, and let her die in peace. She then soon fell asleep in Jesus, without a struggle. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labor, and their works do follow them." Sister Esther was loved by all that knew her, and did not shun to declare the whole truth. Eld. A Durfee, of Kingston, R. I., preached a very interesting discourse from Isa. 38: 18, 19.

J. P. Babcock.

Died, in Brimfield, Mass, Sept. 21st, '62, Eliza, wife of Bro. John E. Ainsworth, aged fifty-two years.

Sister A's sickness was long, and her sufferings were great, especially the last five months; but were borne with christian patience and resignation, although at times, from extreme suffering, she was made to feel that rest in the grave was to be chosen rather than life. For twenty-six years, Bro. and Sr. A. have traveled the pilgrim road together, sharing mutually its joys and its sorrows; and, for many years, have walked together in the same christian, Bible faith, in which Sister A. at last fell asleep; and with Job is waiting to hear her Lord call, when she will answer, and at that time form a re-union which death cannot sunder. While our brother deeply feels his loss and affliction, yet it is in hope; and with David he feels to say, "Lover and friend hast thou put far from me, and mine acquaintance into darkness."—Ps. 88: 18.

Dear companion, thou hast left me,
Here thy loss I deeply feel,
But 'tis God that hath bereft me,
He can all my sorrows heal.

Discourse from 1 Thess. 4: 14, by the writer, assisted by Mr. Ide, the presiding clergyman.

A. M Higgins.

Died in Barnsted, N. H., Sept. 7th, 1862, of dropsy, Susan, wife of Eld. Noah Glidden, aged thirty-three years.

The subject of this notice made a profession of religion in 1854, and was baptized; but her privilege of meeting with the people of God being very limited, she lost the enjoyment of religion, like many others; but in her sickness she obtained favor with the Lord, and was made happy in his love. I conversed with her a few hours before she expired, and the last she said to me was,—"If we meet no more in this world, I hope we shall meet in the kingdom." I trust we shall. She leaves a husband and four children, and a large circle of relatives to mourn. The funeral was attended by the writer, and a discourse delivered to an attentive and solemn congregation, founded on Job 14: 10, and 1 Thess. 4: 18.

Seth S. Mooney.

Died in Cold Spring, Mass., Sept. 7th, Emily L., George A., and Sarah E Jones, wife, son and daughter of George A. Jones, of Cold Spring, Otis, Mass.

The above named persons were murdered by some unknown person or persons, while Bro. Jones was at meeting, three miles from home. A little after ten o'clock, A. M., the wife and children went out into the field, about one fourth of a mile from the house. The person of the wife was violated. She and the children were killed. They were not found until 3 o'clock, P. M., of the next day. They were found under logs, leaves and rubbish. The wife was twenty-six years of age, the son four, and the daughter two. Bro. Jones is left a widower, and childless. The funeral was attended by the writer, S. B. Munn, of Pawling, N. Y.

Died at Shabbona Grove, Ill., Sept 28th, Alice, only child of Bro. and Sr. Charles Butler, aged two years and a few months.

Also at Oswego, Oct. 6th, George N., son of Bro. and Sr. C. W. Smith, aged one year.

Thus parents are called to weep, but a little while of weeping, and your sorrow will be turned to joy, for your little ones will spring forth from their dusty beds, immortal, to glow with the vigor of endless life. The last farewell will be spoken, the last tear will dim the eye. Fathers and mothers, be ready to embrace your loved ones in that beautiful world, where the monster death can never come. Sermons by the writer. 1st, from 1 Cor. 15: 26; 2nd, from Rev. 21: 4.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Steamship Asia brings news from Liverpool to the 4th inst., Queenstown 5th.

The exportation of arms and ammunition from England to America is rapidly increasing. The shipments for the first eight months of the year are valued at 308,000 pounds sterling.

ITALY.

Victor Emmanuel's daughter, before leaving Italy, implored pardon and favor for the persons guilty of participation in the late events. The prayer was heard, and on Sunday, 5th inst., a royal decree will proclaim amnesty for Garibaldi and his followers, excepting deserters from the royal army.

A Paris correspondent writes the following: "It is considered quite certain that Juarez will offer no resistance to the advance of the French army on Mexico, of which city it is fully expected to be in possession by the first of November. When the news of the success shall have reached France there are good grounds for believing that the Emperor will decide on the recognition of the Confederation, he being joined, he hopes, in that act by the British Government."

GREAT BRITAIN.

The steamer Jona, for Mobile, heavily laden with stores for the Confederates, was run into and sunk in the Clyde.

The Times says the emancipation proclamation is a political concession to the Abolitionist wing of the Republican party. When the Union existed the Constitution gave no right either to the President alone or to the President and Congress combined to abolish slavery. Emancipation was a thunderbolt placed in Mr. Lincoln's hands to destroy the whole social organization of the South at a blow, which he has assumed the right to launch; but he is without power to enforce the decree. The North must conquer every square mile of the South before it can make the proclamation more than waste paper.

FRANCE.

Vera Cruz letters give a different account of the state of affairs in Mexico from what the French papers have published. Juarez is far from giving up the contest, and is preparing a desperate resistance to the French. The city of Mexico is strongly fortified, and the road from Orizaba will be defended by inches.

ITALY.

The King has signed a decree granting an amnesty to all persons concerned in the acts and attempts which lately took place in the southern provinces, with the exception of deserters from the army.

The Sicilians had been disarmed, in consequence of numerous assassinations.

PRUSSIA.

The Hanoverian government has declined to join in a treaty of commerce with France.

TURKEY.

The demolition of the Belgrade barricades has commenced.

CHINA.

The rebels are moving to obstruct the conveyance of silk.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Oct. 14. The War Department has received dispatches from Gen. Pope that the Sioux war is at an end. Little Crow has fled with a small party to the Yankton country, but a cavalry force has been sent after them, and there is no doubt they will be given up.

The plague at Wilmington, N. C., is increasing in violence. The Jewish citizens of that place, now at Charlotte, have contributed $1100 to the relief of the sufferers.

The Manchester American contains the following:

A gentleman by the name of James M. Smith, a native of the eastern part of this State, has just arrived in this city, direct from the interior of North Carolina. He has resided in that section for the last seven years, and had previously lived eight years in other parts of the South. He escaped to the Federal lines at Newbern. Mr. Smith states that the proclamation of President Lincoln has produced the greatest consternation among the large slaveholders of that portion of the State. Indeed, so great is their terror that a large body of them have united in a petition to the Governor, imploring him to use his influence with the Confederate Government to secure the return of the troops belonging to that State, in order that they may be protected from a slave insurrection, which they believe to be imminent. The Governor had also been requested to call a convention of the people, to take measures to bring the State back into the Union, that they might avail themselves of the offers contained in the proclamation. He says that as soon as it was known that the proclamation had been issued, measures were taken to prevent any more of the soldiers raised there by conscription from leaving the State. He is of the opinion that in a very short time the proclamation will be known to all the slaves in every nook and corner of the State.

Louisville, Oct. 16. Official dispatches were received here from Nashville to-day that the rebels were in large force near that city on the 11th. They sent a flag of truce demanding the surrender of the town. Gen. Negley declined. The Federal force was ample for the defence of the place.

I learn from the people that Jeff Davis has issued a proclamation that all Union officers held and captured shall be put to hard labor if Lincoln's proclamation is carried out.

The Times' special dispatch, dated Charlestown, Va., Oct. 16, says Gen. McClellan and staff advanced boldly to the front of the village. The rebel pickets were to be seen on the next hill. Lee is at Winchester with a large force, and Jackson at Bunker's Hill with another large force. Stuart's cavalry are on the Shenandoah. A large rebel force is at Leestown, six miles away.

The Washington Star states that circumstances conspire to induce the general impression among military men here that the rebels in Gen. McClellan's front will soon fight, as he is evidently crowding them more and more, and they have not evinced a disposition to give back.

New York, Oct 18. A letter in the Herald from Cincinnati, says, from western Virginia: we have news that the rebels are preparing to evacuate the Kanawha valley, as they have supplied themselves with all the salt they could transport away.

Cincinnati, Oct. 10. After capturing our pickets, the guerrilla Morgan dashed into Lexington yesterday morning at the head of 1500 men. Before surrendering, our troops fought him gallantly, killing and wounding several of his men. Our loss is six killed and 125 prisoners, who were immediately paroled. Two hundred and fifty of our cavalry succeeded in escaping.

To-day he was met by Dumont's cavalry, who, after a short fight, routed him, scattering his forces.

A Terrible Typhoon in China.

DREADFUL LOSS OF LIFE.

The Hong Kong Trade Report, of Aug 10th, furnishes some particulars of the devastations of a terrible typhoon which had visited some parts of China. It occurred on Sunday, July 27th, and caused the death of many thousand persons.

The centre passed over Canton and Whampoa; Macao did not have it quite so strong, and Hong Kong escaped with a stiff gale. The loss of life in the inner harbor of Macao alone was seven hundred. The loss of life in Whampoa is estimated at six thousand. In the harbor of Canton, a great imperial fleet, on the point of being despatched to the North to meet the rebels, were all driven on shore. The total number of lives lost in Canton is estimated by some as high as forty thousand.

Houses went down before the gale like packs of cards, and killed people by the hundred. The Mandarins are offering $1 for every body found, and $8000 have been already expended in this way. The Rev. Mr. Galhard was killed by the wall of his house falling upon him.

The War.—View of the Field.—The chief circumstance to be noted regarding the occurrences of the week, is the scantiness of the information which comes to hand. Aside from this, the story is:

In Virginia, nothing except that our army sat quiet while Gen. Stuart ran around it; while we ask whether his swift reconnoissance is to be followed, as on the Chickahominy, by another "strategic victory" and "change of base?"

In Kentucky, some heavy fighting, of which we get but the most confused accounts, but which seems to have resulted on the whole in favor of Buell.

In Mississippi, the recall of our victorious forces before they were ready to stop chasing the routed and demoralized assailants of Corinth.

In Missouri and Arkansas, nothing of note.

Along the coast, nothing particular; while a rumor is abroad that important naval operations are close at hand.

On the whole, the week has been another week of this intolerable helpless delay.—N. Y. Independent.

The Manufacture of Government Arms.—With its change of circumstances, the government is increasing its facilities for the manufacture of arms. The following authentic statements show with what extraordinary rapidity it can now supply itself with implements of death. "The armory in Springfield, Mass., makes 14,000 stands of arms a month. In a short time that establishment, with the five private shops in operation there, will be able to manufacture 35,000 guns per month. In a few months we shall be making first-rate arms, better than the best European can afford, at the rate of 600,000 per annum."

Dr. Evans, the celebrated American dentist of Paris, recently visited the Viceroy of Egypt on his yacht at Woolwich, and describes him as a magnificently wealthy and liberal prince. Among his table service are plates worth $3,000 each, a gold pitcher set with diamonds, worth at least $500,000, and the Viceroy's tooth-brush alone, set richly with precious stones, is worth at least $40,000, and the stand upon which rests half that sum.

Bread has just been made from corn eighteen hundred years old, found at Pompeii. Moreover, it is said that a batch of eighty-one loaves from a Pompeian oven, oddly preserved from the heat of the lava by a thick coating of ashes, has also been discovered in the recent explorations of the ruins.

There is a man in Cleaveland, Ohio, who announces that the world will come to an end on the 17th day of August, 1863, and on that day a mass convention of the whole earth will assemble at Cincinnati to settle up the business of the past and arrange matters for the future.

My Western Tour.

On my way west, I shall visit Philadelphia, Pa., and preach Sabbath, Oct. 26th. Harrisburg, Pa, Tuesday evening, Oct. 28th. Milesburg, Pa., Oct. 30th to Nov. 9th.

Pike, Muscatine Co., Iowa, Nov. 14th to 30th. This meeting will be held in a school-house, fifteen miles west of Muscatine city, ten miles south of West Liberty, ten miles north of Columbus. Inquire for Samuel Overturf. Advent conference, in Sumpter, Wis., Dec 3d and over the Sabbath.

The calls for labor in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa and Michigan are so numerous, that I can comply with only a part of them in this tour. I will look over the ground and select such fields as I can visit, and give notice duly. Brethren had better do as Bro. Spensor suggests: select a central place, and let the people gather as in conference, when I will give them a course of lectures. This will enable me to speak to a greater number, and save the time and labor of visiting many places which I would be glad to do had I the time to do so.

J. V. Himes.

Oct. 17th, 1862.

Conference.

There will be a conference in Tuftonborough, N. H., at the Christian Meeting House, commencing Thursday, Oct. 30th, at 10 o'clock, and continue over the following Sunday. Elds. Miles Grant and John Couch are expected to be in attendance to preach the Word. A general invitation is extended to all.

The Wisconsin Conference

Will be held at Sumpter, Sauk Co., Wis., six miles from Sauk city, and nine miles from Baraboo, in the "Pockett," beginning on Wednesday evening, Dec. 3d, and holding over Lord's day following. Eld. J. V. Himes of Boston will be present to aid in preaching. Let us have a rally, and let all come at the beginning. Friends in the surrounding townships are requested to bring a few blankets, as so many may come from a great distance that our beds may possibly be more than filled. Let no excuse keep a single preacher in Wisconsin at home. Let friends come from other States also. The Lord is certainly at hand. We must arouse!

It is expected that Bro. Himes will do the most of the preaching. Churches who have a standing with the conference will send their delegates, and churches who wish to unite, will do the same. Isolated brethren, who wish the sympathy and aid of preachers in the conference may send an epistle to W. Sheldon, Merrimack, Wis. I intend to have an assortment of our best books at the meeting; and Bro. Himes will have a quantity of the "Voice" bound, the Lyre, and other valuable productions. Come with praying hearts. Elders Barnes, Turner, Shears, Gibson, and others will please exert themselves to secure a general attendance.

W. Sheldon.

Notice.

For the Crisis.

Christ Died for Us!

Christ died for us—ah! did he die, or was it all a sham?
Yes, Jesus did himself expire, not his mere outward man!
All that did constitute him Christ, or lamb of God, expired;
He died, rose, and revived again, by God and man admired.
The altar sanctified the gift, the gift was God's dear Son,
Who in the flesh was put to death for crimes that we had done;
The blood it did atonement make, his soul for man has died,—
Christ was a whole sin-offering given, Jesus, the Crucified.

Christ died! the suffering Son of God! in anguish hear him cry—
"My Father! if it's possible, then let this cup pass by!"
Then pours his soul out unto death, in agony he cries—
"Oh! why hast thou forsaken me, my God, my God?" and dies!

Such love was worthy of a God! so high no top we find;
A depth no plummet ever reached, a length without an end;
So loved the world! what tongue can tell the meaning of the word?
Height, depth, length, breadth, no limit reach—Christ was the gift of God.

The Inheritance reserved in Heaven; What is it?

Many speak and write as though the earth that is promised to the meek, is the inheritance reserved in heaven. We think this is a mistake, and by examining the Scripture we shall see it is not the earth. 1 Pet. 1: 3–5,—"Blessed be God the Father of our Lord Jesus the Messiah, who in his great mercy hath begotten us (the apostles) anew by the resurrection of our Lord Jesus the Messiah, to the hope of life, and to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and unfading, which is prepared for you in heaven; while ye are kept by the power of God and by faith, for the Life that is prepared (reserved) and will be revealed in the last times." Verses 10, 11, "That Life, about which the prophets inquired, when they were prophesying of the grace which was to be given to you. And they searched for the TIME, which the Spirit of the Messiah dwelling in them did show and testify, when the sufferings of the Messiah were to occur, and his subsequent glory." (Syr.)

We see by this that the inheritance here spoken of is the incorruptible life we get through Christ our Life-giver, and it is reserved in heaven until it is revealed in the last times, or end of Gentile times, when the heavens retain our life no longer; but he comes to give that incorruptible life to all his children who have sought for it by a patient continuance in well doing.

There is something more than the earth that is promised the righteous to inherit. In Prov. 3: 35, we read the wise shall inherit glory. In Matt. 19: 29, Mark 10: 17, Luke 10: 25, and 18: 18, we see eternal life is to be inherited. We will now examine a few more passages of Scripture, and see if we can learn more about this inheritance reserved in heaven.

"Because of the hope that is laid up for you in heaven, of which ye heard before in word of truth of the gospel."—Col. 1: 5. (Syr.) "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—2 Tim. 4: 8. "And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." (This is the incorruptible inheritance or life that fadeth not away.) "For ye are dead, (been planted in baptismal death), and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3: 4. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life (which is laid up in heaven) which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."—James 1: 12. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2: 10. "And every man that striveth for the mastery (in running for an earthly crown) is temperate in all things." Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible. This is the unfading, incorruptible inheritance reserved in heaven.

Other scriptures abundantly prove that the land promised to Abraham and his seed (the Christ) is not reserved in heaven; but this terra firma—EARTH, freed from the curse. "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to promise."—Gal. 3: 29. It was land promised to Abraham. Gen. 13: 14–17. When Abraham inherits the land promised to him, then all his seed will inherit the same land, at the same time (Heb. 11: 40); and they will all inherit the incorruptible life reserved in heaven for them. When God beautifies the face of the earth and makes all things new, then it too will be unfading, and will never pass away.

O! who would not endure to the end of the race, so as to inherit all things promised? Now is the time for faithful soldiers to stand with the armor on. Now is the time for all the faithful ones who want to walk the streets of the city of our God, and to be clothed in white, to keep themselves unspotted from this world. Now is the time we need the whole armor, and be engaged in trying to get some volunteers, to enlist to go up and possess the goodly land. The "spring time" when the wilderness and the solitary places shall bud and blossom as the rose, and the desert be made like the garden of the Lord is near, very near at hand.

Within a few weeks past, while the fever was raging high in the shop where I work, and many are enlisting to kill and destroy their fellow men, I have persuaded one young man to enlist for the crown that is to be given when our King comes, and the unfading glories of the world to come. He is bound for the kingdom. Let no one think their work is done until their Master calls them from the world. Occupy till he comes. His chariot wheels will soon roll down the pathway of heaven, and then if we are not found watching and in the line of duty, we shall have no part at the Supper. Let "no man take your crown."

What Shall I Do?

Bro. Grant:—Seeing a statement in the Crisis of Sept. 30th to the effect that some of the Lord's people have been drafted as soldiers to serve in the army of the United States; and that the question is often asked, "What shall I do if drafted?" I offer the following suggestions, thinking they may perhaps, be of some little benefit to the tried soldier of the cross in this "time of trouble."

I am fully aware that no christian can sympathize with the institution of human slavery, nor with rebellion against legitimate human government. Yet christians cannot assist, either in forcibly abolishing the one, or in suppressing the other; for it is written, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord."

Christians who are called on to take up arms, would do well to remember the case of Peter, when he stoutly affirmed that, rather than deny his Master, he would die with him; and attempt nothing in their own strength, but commit their way to the Lord, who has promised, in that case, to direct their steps; and, obtaining help from Him, meekly, but firmly refuse to use carnal weapons; basing their excuse for not bearing arms on the eternal word of God; being forbidden, by the Captain of our salvation, to hurl missiles of death on their fellow men.

Again, drafted christians might, I think, with strict propriety, remind the military authorities with whom they may have to do, of the immunities guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States. In the sixth article of the original Constitution of the United States, we read as follows:—

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges of every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

The third article of the "amendment of the Constitution of the United States" reads thus:—

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Now as the Constitution of the United States, with the laws made (by the United States Legislature) in pursuance thereof, constitute "the supreme law of the land," and as, in pursuance of that instrument, no particular form of religion can be by law established in the United States, as the religion of the nation, nor the free exercise of religion prohibited, (which is equivalent to a declaration that, in the United States, all forms of religion shall be tolerated,) we are, by this "supreme law of the land," guaranteed the right to refuse to bear arms, so long as the principle of noncombativeness is an essential item of our religion. Nor can the government of the United States, according to their own constitution, inflict a punishment, or impose a commutation on those who conscientiously refuse to bear arms; for, by so doing, they "prohibit the free exercise of religion." Nevertheless, the rulers of the land may insist on having the children of the Lord to fight their battles. In that case, pray the Lord to enable you to keep his commandments, and be "subject to . . . powers," by way of suffering any penalty they may inflict on you, even to a martyr's death.

Faith.

It is well to believe that "the meek shall inherit the earth," because it is a Bible doctrine. But it is better to be meek, that we may inherit the earth.

It is well to believe that peace-makers, are blessed. But it is better to be peace-makers, and be blessed.

It is well to believe that the pure in heart shall see God. But it is better to be pure in heart, and see God.

It is well to believe that the righteous dead shall rise first. But it is better to be righteous, that we may have part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death has no power.

It is well to have faith. But it is better to show our faith by our works.

It is well to believe that this same Jesus, who is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. But it is better to be prepared to meet him when he shall come, by holy living and godly conversation.

Finally, it is well to believe the whole Bible. But as devils, too, "believe and tremble," and do no more, it will avail us nothing. We must have a living, acting, working faith.

Have faith as a grain of mustard seed, and nothing shall be impossible unto you. Faith as a pebble of the brook, though large as an egg, would yet be but dead faith. It could neither grow nor increase. "So faith without works is dead." But that faith which works by love and purifies the heart; which can do as well as say; that faith is as a grain of mustard seed; "which, indeed, is the least of all seeds; but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof." It is therefore seen to be of a living, growing, increasing principle, and it beareth much fruit.

Faith is belief. To believe God, to take God at his word, to that extent that we act on it, this is the faith required. Therefore, "Whatsoever things ye desire, when ye pray, believe that you [will] receive them, and ye SHALL have them."

Extracts from Dr. Herman Schultz.

Page 159. "The body (acc. to Paul in 1 Cor. 15: 36, etc.) decays, as grain does in the ground,—not the body, however, as it was; whereas the ear is not the seed-corn, yes, does not even bear it within itself, but leaves it behind in the ground, to be delivered up to the process of decaying. Nevertheless the ear is not out of the seed-corn, it has its most secret connection with it, has its cause in it; so also has the body, though decaying, the power within itself, to give to the new personality—where this, being delivered from the power of death, was restored again, where the breath of life, which God took away from it (the personality), was given back to man,—a body, which, rooting in it and germinating out of it, would in reality be the same body, in this wise restoring the same personality.

"So we see that, through the death of the body, the personality of man is by no means destroyed, neither is the possibility cut off that he may reach his full design provided the power of death is checked. Man in death gives the breath of life, by which his body became organ of the soul, back into the hand of God who gave it,—God can give again what he gave before (2 Macc. 7: 22, 23, etc.); and so long as the personal connection with the life is not entirely withdrawn from man, i. e., until the working out of the second death, man stands always in a certain connection, may it be ever so little, with the life-spirit, whose re-possession would give back to him new and full life.

"Another question is it, whether there, where the power of death is not removed, where it can work itself out until the second death,—a like restoration of the personality could be supposed. The abstract possibility hereof can of course be denied. As in the decaying body the power of producing a new body is thought to be inherent, just so one could suppose that at the time, where the second death does operate, where the spiritual soul—being forever banished from the fountain of life—sinks down into the everlasting flames, according to that ability of the body (to produce a new one) she (the spir. soul) would receive another body, so that all which is connected with her would be banished from the sphere of the now God-consecrated creature. Whether there is any foundation for this supposition in the doctrine of the redemption, we leave here undecided; also those passages of the scripture which only rest on the presupposition of the redemption.

"Despite of this, however, we must decidedly reject this abstract possibility. Where death is to work itself out, there it does not want to concern something, which has already been taken away from man's personality, again. The scriptural soul has no more power over her organ; on this account temporal death ensued; so without new life-power she cannot gain any power over it again; only, where she receives the breath of life from God back again, there she can form a body again as her organ. An act of God, however, which, to increase the punishment, would give back the body also, is according to the foregoing something, which is thought utterly impossible. Nevertheless, because the connection with the body remains a possibility, as long as the connection of the personal soul with the body is not utterly destroyed,—only the second death is a complete destruction of the body,—which kills body and soul in hell.

"The idea of a resurrection of the body only of those which have part in the life, has been frequently held. When Daniel, the second book of Macc., and the book of Job, speak of a resurrection of both the just and unjust, it can only be understood in regard to those that belong to the Kingdom of God, not in relation to the entire heathen world,—therefore a resurrection which does not touch the state of death out of grace. The later Jewish idea seems to have been based upon this foundation, especially that of the Pharisees. (Comp. Acts 24: 15.) The past-apostolic fathers speak especially of a resurrection of the just. The later doctrine lost sight of it, because the idea of the Kingdom of Christ and the separation in it prevailed."

Sleepy Brethren.

Some people seem to have no idea that it is wrong—a crime, to go to meeting to sleep. They do not think that the word of God to do all things "decently and in order" is of any consequence at all. Not long since I was in a place to hold a protracted meeting, and every thing seemed to favor a revival except this one most trying evil. The brethren would insist, several of them, quite a number of them, on going to sleep almost as soon as they got into the place of worship. With such an example before the unconverted, which I learned had become a talk of the citizens of the place, I could do but little in the way of calling sinners to Christ. I begged, I entreated, I scolded, but it was all of no use. Sleep they would almost from the time I named my text to the end of the sermon, and then take perhaps a small nap extra in the conference meeting. Well, I nearly failed of doing anything toward the object for which I visited the place. I left the place grieved and sad, resolving in my mind that when I preach to them again, it will be under a more healthy condition of things. The saying that "I feel so sleepy," does not fulfill God's command to "let not your good be evil spoken of,"—to have that charity that "doth not behave itself unseemly." It is as much a man's duty to behave himself properly in the house of worship, as it is to pray in his closet. For Jesus' sake, my dear brethren, do look at this grievous evil in a scriptural light and reform. Edwin Burnham.

"Until the Day break, and the Shadows flee away."

Waiting we stand,
And watching till our Savior shall appear,
Joyful to cry, as eastern skies grow clear,
"The Lord's at hand!"

But now the night
Presses around us, sullenly and chill;
Pain, doubt and sorrow seem to have their will;—
Lord, send the light!

One after one,
Thou hast taken our loved ones from our sight;
For them we know that there is no more night,
But we are lone.

Weary we wait,
Lifting our heavy eyes, bedimmed with tears,
To skies where yet no trace of dawn appears,—
Lord, it is late!

But yet thy word
Saith with sweet prophecy that cannot fail,
That light o'er darkness shall at length prevail;—
We trust thee, Lord!

O Morning Star
Of heavenly promise! light our darkened way,
Till the first beams of the expected day
Shine from afar.

So will we take
Fresh hope and courage to our fainting hearts,
And patient wait, though every joy departs,
"Till the day break."

Exposition of Scripture.—No. 1.

"In the beginning was the Logos, and the Logos was with God, and the Logos was God. This was in the beginning with God. Through it every thing was done; and without it not even one thing was done which has been done. In it was Life; and the Life was the Light of Men. And the Light shone in the Darkness, and the Darkness apprehended it not." John 1: 1–5.—Emphatic Diaglott.

According to the Greek Text, by J. J. Griesback, where a literal word-for-word translation is given, it would read:—"In a beginning was the word, and the word was with the God, and a God was the word. This was in a beginning with the God. All through it was done: and without it was done not even one that has been done. In it life was, and the life was the light of the men: and the light in the darkness shines, and the darkness is not apprehended." See Emphatic Diaglott.

Let us just notice the neuter pronoun "It," instead of "him," as in our common version, and all will be plain.

Popular Theology not Bible Theology.

Immortal soul, deathless soul, undying soul; immortal spirit, deathless spirit, undying spirit; eternal misery, unending misery, everlasting misery; immortal woe, unutterable woe, deathless woe, unceasing woe, utter woe, eternal woe, everlasting woe, never ending woe; immortal pain, everlasting pain, eternal pain, endless pain, unceasing pain, unending pain.

It is with difficulty that some are made to believe that the above expressions are not found in the Bible, yet who will find one of them between Genesis and Revelation? Let us preach and believe the Bible.

Life.

Life is sweet to all. No one desires to die when in their right mind. But what makes people say they want to die? It is because they have no shepherd; they are driven about by wild ruffians, who are seeking them as their prey. It is because they have not seen the cross and Him that hung thereon with pierced hands and side. They want to die because they are loaded down with sin and iniquity, and it is all they can do to carry it. I have been troubled in this way myself. But I found I did not want to die after all. I wanted to live. That was what ailed me. I was dead already, and I wanted to live; but I did not know it at that time until I was made alive in Jesus Christ. And ever since then I have wanted to live.

I want to live not only in this world, but in the world to come. I want to set my feet on Jerusalem's immortal shores. I want to see my friends that are asleep in Jesus, that have been hid in dust and darkness for years gone by. I want to see graves and tombs of marble, that have told me in days past where the sleeper lay, burst and let the captive go free. I want to see my Saivor and be made like him, and then I shall be satisfied. I want lo live forever. Sanford Hart.

Lack of Preachers West.

There appears to be a lack of preachers West, if I may judge by the calls in the Crisis; especially in western New York. There is a large proportion of preachers here in the east, and our appointments are almost weekly conflicting with each other, as Bro. A. P. Moore says. Now Bro., it is not the pay that the preacher gets here that keeps so many in this section, for that is scanty enough; but something else,—perhaps a love of home and friends, or a disinclination to break the ice in new fields; or the thought, shall I get bread for my family? Now there are watchmen here, I believe, that are ready to go out into "the regions beyond," to herald the glad tidings of a coming King, wherever and whenever a door opens. Come, brethren, let us buckle on our armor, and go out and fight the battles of our King; for the cry is, "Come over and help us." Some of us can go,—yes, will go. One third of the preachers in New England can be spared to go to other fields. We are stumbling over one another,—as many as three sometimes appointing to preach at the same time and place; and perhaps to not more than fifty, or one hundred hearers. These things ought not so to be, whilst others are starving for the bread of life.

Dyspepsia.

Bro. Grant:—I noticed in the Crisis a few weeks ago, an article from "Hall's Journal of Health," in which he is made to say that the symptoms of no two dyspeptics are alike; and again, that no remedy is reliable to cure two patients. Although Hall's Journal is a very useful work, and contains much important information, yet such statements as these ought not to go in a christian paper uncorrected. Some of us know of numerous cases of dyspeptics, whose symptoms fully agree; while many differ widely. And, although it needs a variety of remedies to treat various dyspeptics, yet I administer one "Liver Regulator," which has cured many, and relieved hundreds. I. C. Wellcome.

We presume, since persons will be sick and take medicine, that Bro. Wellcome's medicine is as good as any that can be found—perhaps better. We have also heard Eld. J. S. White's pills for dyspepsia highly recommended. These Bro. certainly would use nothing which they deemed injurious. The better way seems to be to eat good, healthy, plain food, and so avoid or get rid of such ailments, and then you can throw physic to the dogs.—Ed.

Can Animals live without Salt?

1st. In the fall of 1855, I came in possession of a horse that was very ugly; many of the brethren will remember the horse that I used to drive strapped down to the shafts. I kept it three and a half years, during which time, I think I drove it twelve thousand miles. It did not sweat easy, and I do not remember that it eat any salt while I had it. It always refused it.

2nd. Three years ago this fall, I bought another horse which I have now, and which is the best and fastest horse that I ever had, and whose powers of endurance, I think, exceeds the majority of horses. He very seldom sweats, and has always, with one exception, refused to eat salt. When offered him, he will shake his head, and snort as though afraid of it. He ate very little this fall at Bro. Mirick's, though I think his appetite had become depraved on account of change of food.

Whether salt should or should not be eaten, I do not say; but I give these facts because they are facts. S. B. Munn.

Letter from "Our Home."

The following letter from Bro. Benj. Wilson, Editor of the Gospel Banner, and of the "Emphatic Diaglott," will pay for a careful reading. He has been spending some time at "Our Home," in Dansville, N. Y., where he has received valuable medical aid,—not however in the line of drugs and medicines.

His letter, dated, "Our Home," Dansville, N. N., Aug. 10th, 1862, says:—

"The success which attends the practice of the physicians of 'Our Home,' is indeed astonishing to every one who believes in the use of drugs. They can scarcely believe their own eyes, or give credit to the statement, that such cures have been performed without one particle of medicine. Yet such is the fact. And the cures wrought here are generally upon persons who have gone through the whole round of drug doctors and patent medicines, in order to find relief, and having found none, they have come here as a dernier resort. And yet notwithstanding the maltreatment they have had for years, and the consequent lowering or weakening of their vitality by the use of these poisonous medicines, they get well without them, when they are brought into obedience to the laws of nature. How is this, if drug medication is a correct system of practice? I know that there are many cures, or rather what are called cures, performed by this kind of practice, but it is only a metastasis or change of one disease for another, rather than a cure. The medicine given for the cure of the sick person, instead of assisting nature to throw off the disease, interferes with the cure, and changes the acute into a chronic drug disease. I have need only to appeal to the packing and bathing rooms of this Institution for a proof of what I affirm. The sheets and bandages of such chronic patients speak loudly to the eyes and noses of all observers. Drugs given for the cure of various diseases, which have been locked up for years in the tissues, are liberated by the solvent power of pure soft water, and by the increase of vital power, expelled from the body as foreign substances, and as enemies to the welfare of the organism. And individuals who have been cured (?) of various acute diseases by drugs, frequently when under treatment here for chronic diseases come back again in the reverse order in which they had them previously, and are by this means cured of both chronic and acute at once.

Every individual ought to know that there is no curative power in any drug, whether it is applied internally or externally. . . . The vis medicatrix naturæ or curative power of nature lies in the organism and not in the medicine. Hence if a person with little vitality be attacked by acute disease, there is great danger of his not rallying under it, and especially so, if in addition to the disease, his low vitality has to contend at the same time with poisons, kindly, but often ignorantly, given with the intention to cure.

I am glad that light is spreading among the people, on this important subject, though I confess but slowly. . . . I wish the people generally knew that the most eminent men of the medical faculty, and of the most extensive practice, have little or no faith in their own practice. I will give a few quotations from some of them as a sample:

Sir John Forbes, physician to Queen Victoria says: 'Some patients get well with the aid of medicine; more without it; and still more in spite of it.'

Dr. Rush, of Philadelphia, says:—'We have assisted in multiplying diseases; we have done more; we have increased their fatality.'

Professor Gregory, of Edinburg, says: 'Ninety-nine out of every hundred medical facts are medical lies; and medical doctrines are, for the most part, stark staring nonsense.'

Professor Evans, Fellow of the Royal College, London, says:—'The medical practice of our day is, at the best, a most uncertain and unsatisfactory system; it has neither philosophy nor common sense to commend it to confidence.'

Dr. Bailie, of London, says:—'I have no faith whatever in medicine.'

Dr. Frank, an eminent European practitioner, says:—'Thousands are annually slaughtered in the quiet sick room.'

Dr. Bostock, author of History of Medicine, says:—'Our actual information or knowledge of disease does not increase in proportion to our experimental practice. Every dose of medicine given is a blind experiment upon the vitality of the patient.'

Dr. John Mason Good says:—'The science of medicine is barbarous jargon, and the effects of our medicines on the human system in the highest degree uncertain, except, indeed, that they have destroyed more lives than war, pestilence, and famine combined.'

Dr. James Johnson, Ed. of Medico-Chirurgical Review, says:—'I declare, as my conscientious conviction, founded on long experience and reflection, that if there was not a single physician, surgeon, man-midwife, chemist, apothecary, druggist nor drug on the face of the earth, there would be less sickness, and less mortality than now prevail.'

The foregoing opinions of some of the most distinguished physicians, (and very many more might be added,) will be sufficient to convince the candid reader, that any one who takes medicine for the purpose of getting well, is only practising a dangerous experiment, and is liable to be most miserably disappointed. The enlightened physician knows that there is far more dependence to be placed upon Hygienic agencies or placing the patient in natural relations, in order to his recovery, than in all the remedies of his materia medica. And thus many of them have testified. I will give a few testimonies.

Professor Parker says:—'As we place more confidence in nature, and less in preparations of the apothecary, mortality diminishes.' Again, 'Hygiene is of far more value in the treatment of disease than drugs.' And again, 'We will have less mortality when people eat to live.'

Professor Stephens, of the New York College of physicians and surgeons says: 'The older physicians grow, the more sceptical they become of the virtues of medicine, and the more they are disposed to trust to the power of nature.'

Professor Smith of the same School testifies: 'All medicines which enter the circulation, poison the blood in the same manner as do the poisons that produce disease.' Again, 'Drugs do not cure disease: disease is always cured by the vis medicatrix naturæ.'

Professor Clark says:—'All of our curative agents are poisons: and, as a consequence, every dose diminishes the patient's vitality.

Professor Carson says:—'Water is the best diaphoretic we have.' Again, My preceptor used to give colored water to his patients; and it was noticed that those who took the water recovered more rapidly than those of another physician who bled his patients.'

Professor Clark says: 'Pure cold water is the best tonic the patient can take.'

Professor Gilman says:—'Hygienic treatment for consumption is of far more value than all drugs combined.' Again, 'Water is the best febrifuge we have.'

Let this suffice. I hope, dear reader, you may be profited by what I have written. . . . I have your benefit at heart though you may reject my teachings, and esteem the subject on which I have been writing as unfit to have a place in a periodical of this class. I think otherwise, and therefore I have written. A great reform in the habits of the people—nay, in the habits of those who profess christianity—is absolutely needed. I see an intimate connection between the state of the body and the spiritual conditions. There is no use in mincing the matter, or deceiving ourselves. It is impossible to be in sound bodily health, and therefore also in sound mental and moral health, while we are habitually transgressing the laws of our being in eating, drinking, working, sleeping, &c., &c., hence the importance of discussing them, so that we may know wherein we err. . . . If I have incited you or any one else to more attention to these things, so that it may result in good, my object is accomplished."

Salt.

Dr. Alcott says in his "Home Book of Health," pp. 372–4:—

"All I know from observation is, that they who use salt very freely, from day to day, grow thin and pale, and suffer considerably from debility. . . .

You will say, 'But if salt is poisonous, how comes it to pass that men and animals, especially the latter, thrive under its use?' I might reply by asking another question: 'How comes it to pass that they thrive under the use of arsenic?' But that they do, we have what I regard as ample and unequivocal testimony.

That the use of wine, cider, and beer, may be so moderate, and so cautiously applied, as for a time to improve the appearance of a person, and that this is the fact with regard to coffee, is I believe, well known. But that the same effect can be produced by arsenic, as well as alcohol, is not so well known as it should be. Yet we have it stated in the Annual and Scientific Discourse, for 1852, and indorsed by Chamber's Journal, that the custom of eating arsenic prevails extensively in Lower Austria and Styria, where it is taken for the express purpose of giving the person a fresh, plump, healthy appearance. . . .

The truth is, that all extra stimulants, in a certain amount—coffee, alcohol, and arsenic—improve the condition of the individual at the expense of the race, if not of the future portion of the life of the individual himself. . . .

You will ask, 'What then shall we do?' My reply is, that I do not know, except to eat as little salt as possible. If we eat none, changing our habits very suddenly—we may suffer. The arsenic eater does, whether man or horse; for they give it to horses too, for the same reason that they give it to man, and for the same purpose that salt is given to improve the appearance. . . .

You will still ask, 'But is not salt needed in the human economy?' . . . Some of the savage tribes, that use no salt, are as vigorous and healthy as any other savage tribe in similar circumstances. Pereira indeed says that nature has furnished us with an appetite for salt; but he offers no proof of this. What becomes of nature's appetite for salt in the Camanches Indians, who never use, but abhor it? What becomes of it in the flocks and herds of Upper Hindostan, that never have any salt, and yet are among the best cattle in all the country? What becomes of nature's appetite in the case of Methuselah?"

Tobacco.

Bro. White:—Much has been said in the Review on this question, and especially concerning its physical effects. I wish to relate two circumstances that have transpired in the vicinity of my labors the last winter as a still further warning to tobacco users. In the town of Johnstown, twelve miles northwest of Battle Creek, about one year since a man (whose name I will not mention), began to fail in health, and consulted with several physicians, who told him he was destroying his stomach by the use of tobacco. He died about six months since. On examining his stomach, it was found that the coating was almost entirely eaten up by tobacco. But, say you, he must not swallow the juice. He did not, or at least was not conscious of doing it. The poison was carried into his stomach by the saliva being impregnated with it in the glands of the throat.

Another case is of an individual in the town of Somersett, Hillsdale Co., Mich. A person who, ten years since, was of a bright intellect, has become an idiot, no other cause being assigned for it by physicians than chewing and smoking tobacco. The Lord help us as a people to rid ourselves of these slow poisons. Amen.—J. N. Loughborough.—Advent Review.

Away!

Away from the world with its false, fleeting show,
Away from its follies, its pleasures forego;
Away from the light, transient glory, and fame,
Inscribed on earth's tablet,—it lives but in name.

Away from proud wealth, with its bright, luring snare,
Though glittering its pathway, it leads but to care.
Earth's chaplet soon fadeth—it passeth away,
Then away from earth's glory, away, haste away.

Away to the Savior, who died to redeem
The lost and the fallen from death and from shame,
Away to bright visions of beauty and light,
A soon coming King, robed in glory and might.

Away to bright visions of the kingdom to come,
The kingdom of Jesus, the saint's peaceful home,
Where rapturous music is borne on the air,
And unfading flowers are blossoming there.

Away to sweet visions of fields robed in green,
No chill frosts of autumn, no blight ever seen,
Where clear crystal rivers are winding among
The delectable bowers of the saint's Eden home.

Away! look away to the loved land of peace,
Where the joy of the ransomed shall ever increase,
No sorrow, no anguish is known on that shore,
And our King in his beauty shall reign evermore.

Made Alive.

It is sometimes said by those who deny the resurrection of the ungodly, that "there is not a single passage in the Bible which declares that a wicked dead man shall be made alive." They say, "We want no inferential testimony,—give us one plain, positive text, and we will believe. There is no such passage between the lids of the Bible."

Such assertions weigh with some minds, and they straightway conclude that the wicked dead will not be raised to judgment. But let this assertion be met with another. "There is not a passage between the lids of the Bible which teaches that a righteous dead man shall be 'MADE ALIVE'"; or, again, "There is not a passage in all the Scriptures which says that Jesus Christ when dead should be 'MADE ALIVE'". "We want no inferential testimony; give us one plain, positive text, and we will believe. There is no such passage in the Bible."

Now what do such assertions as these prove? They simply prove that an ingenious man can put words together in a certain form of speech, different from those that occur in Scripture, and then he can pretend that no words express that idea unless they are precisely the same as those that he has framed to express it. Persons do hate to be found contradicting God's word, even if they do not believe it. I said once to a person, "Do you believe that there will be a resurrection of the dead, just and unjust?" The answer was, "No." This was frank. I put the same question to another person of the same faith, and the answer was, "I do believe it." Was that frank?

Persons cannot deny that the Bible says, "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust,"—or that they "that are in the graves," "that have done evil," "shall come forth." But how do they manage the matter?—why, by statements like these;—"There is not a passage in the Bible that teaches the re-living again of the wicked dead." "There is not a passage in the Bible that teaches the revival of the wicked dead." These assertions sound very well. But there is not a passage between the lids of the Bible that asserts the "re-living" of anybody, good, bad, or indifferent. There is not a passage in the Bible that says anything about the "revival" of anybody. And why? Simply because "revival," "non-living," "re-living," etc., are words never found in the Bible at all. It is a convenient device for such persons to hunt up, or coin some unscriptural words, which express a scriptural fact, and then say that you cannot find the fact stated in the Bible, because you cannot find it stated in the precise form of words which they use, and which they took special care when they selected them to have them such as could be only found outside of the Bible. Such arts only lead to strifes about words, like those about "Trinity," "Unity," "Immateriality," "Materialism," "Annihilation," etc., etc.; and the first proper demand in any such controversy is, "Gentlemen, define your terms." It will be found that such persons generally use old words in a new sense. They have a dictionary of their own; words with them mean what they mean by them. To be sure, Webster says the word Resurrection signifies "A rising again; chiefly, the REVIVAL of the dead of the human race, or their return from the grave, particularly at the general judgment"; and Johnson defines it: "REVIVAL from the dead; return from the grave"; and Dr. Ash defines it: "The REVIVAL of the dead; the act of raising up the bodies of the dead at the last day"; but then, these men had not learned all the ways in which words are used now.

The apostle said he expected a RESURRECTION of the unjust, but then it is said he did not expect the "revival" or "re-living" of the wicked dead!! It is not to be wondered at that such a doctrine seeks to hide itself under a mantle of good words. It is found, however, very difficult to fit the words of the old Bible to the ideas of those who have the new faith. The doctrine of the Pharisees, that only the righteous should rise from the dead, against which Christ so solemnly warned his disciples, is not easily taught in the words of those apostles who believed and preached the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust.

But is there in the Bible any lack of expressive words to teach the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust? Suppose the Scriptures do not mention the "revival," the "re-living," or the being "made alive," of righteous or wicked at all; what of that? If they do not speak the words, do they fail to state the fact?

The Savior says that "the dead shall HEAR the voice of the Son of God; and they that HEAR SHALL LIVE." How many shall HEAR? "ALL that are in the graves shall HEAR his voice, and shall COME FORTH; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have DONE EVIL, unto the resurrection of damnation," or judgment. John 5: 25–29. Who shall hear? "The DEAD." Who shall live? "They that HEAR shall LIVE." How many dead shall hear? "All that are in the graves." How many shall come forth? "All that are in the graves." Who shall come forth? "All that are in the graves." What classes are there? "They that have done good." What shall they come forth to? "The resurrection [or revival] of life,"—to live forever. Who else shall come forth? "They that have DONE EVIL." To what? To a resurrection of judgment, or condemnation. "All that are in the graves," "all" hear his voice, "all" live, "all "come forth," all have a resurrection or "REVIVAL," and then, some receive eternal life, and some condemnation to the "second death." And yet there is nothing said here about the "re-living" of any body, or of righteous or wicked dead men being "made alive." This is "inferential testimony," is it?

Paul said he had "hope toward God, which they themselves (the Jews) also ALLOW (or expect), that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the JUST AND UNJUST."—Acts 24: 15. Paul here does not state the hope of the PHARISEES, for they held to the resurrection of the righteous only (for proof see Josephus; Kitto's Cyclopedia; Bible Examiner for March, 1850, p. 43; and Retribution, p. 145); nor that of the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection of all; but his own faith which the Jews,—the common people,—coincided in cherishing, was that there would be a resurrection, or a revival of the dead, JUST and UNJUST. And yet this passage says nothing of the "RE-LIVING" of either class; or of their being "made alive"!! To be sure the same terms are applied to both righteous and wicked; but then the precise words "re-living," and "made alive," are not here, and so this passage is only "inferential testimony"!!

Again, Paul writes, "As in (or by—en) Adam all die, even so in (or by—en) Christ shall all be MADE ALIVE."—1 Cor. 15: 22. Now this passage does not say that "a wicked dead man shall be made alive"; nor does it say that a righteous dead man shall be made alive. It simply says that ALL who die by Adam shall be made alive by Christ. The word rendered in is translated "by" or "through" in at least a dozen translations which I have before me. It is the clear, unmistakable sense of the passage. All die BY one, all rise BY the other; the remedy is as large as the evil; and here the apostle says, "So in (or by) Christ shall ALL be MADE ALIVE." But this is "inferential proof," I suppose; nothing positive about the matter!!

But, says one, "What do you do with the rest of the chapter?" Do with it,—why study it and believe it of course. I would not deny the first part for fear of believing the rest, nor pervert half because I did not understand the whole. But I must leave a fuller discussion of it for the pages of a work I hope to issue on "The Resurrection of the dead," in which I desire to expound it more at length. But, says one, "If I believe that all shall be made alive, I shall be a Universalist." Quite likely. This system of interpretation by which you deny the judgment to come, sends you more than half way there at a leap. But I do not fear being a Universalist, or any other "ist," or "ite"; nor shall I deny one part of my Bible to keep me from disbelieving the other. With God's help, I mean to hold fast "the principles of the doctrine of Christ, . . . repentance from dead works, . . . faith towards God, . . . the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment."—Heb. 6: 1–3. From these, I would "go on to perfection." Persons, who need that one teach them what be the principles of Christ's doctrine, will take their own way, of course.

Laying on of Hands.

Is it an innovation? Ought any save an apostle to do it? Is it a mark of antichrist? Is it priestly arrogance? or is it the plain simple form of scriptural blessings? These are questions not to be answered by prejudice, by cold, icy-hearted scepticism, nor by pride that is ashamed of the ordinances of Christ when a gainsaying world curls the lip of scorn at them. They are questions not to be left to the decision of men who bend their energies toward little else save "doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness." From such we are to withdraw ourselves while we turn our feet unto His testimonies whose word is truth.

The first instance which inspiration has recorded of laying on of hands is when Jacob blessed the two sons of Joseph (Gen. 48: 14): "And Israel stretched out his right hand and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Manasseh's head." Can a practice introduced among God's people so long ago be an innovation now? Was Jacob an apostle? Why then must an apostle only lay on hands? Since it is Christ's prerogative to bless, did Jacob presumptuously assume the authority of Christ? Was this the first development of antichrist? Or was this simply the divinely approved form for invoking great blessings upon such as were to receive them? Manifestly the latter, and nothing more. This position is most fully sustained by the whole volume of inspired testimony. When Joshua was to receive especial blessing to qualify him for the responsible duties to devolve upon him at Moses' death, the hands of Moses were laid upon him, "and Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him."—Deut. 34: 9. Here "the spirit of wisdom" is declared to be the special blessing conferred upon Joshua through Moses when he "laid his hands upon him."

That it was Christ's custom to impart blessings to the multitudes who sought his healing virtue by laying his hands on them needs no further evidence than such frequent forms of entreaty as—"Come and lay thy hand upon her."—Matt. 9: 18. The young converts of Samaria, whom the preaching of Philip "turned unto God," received not the Holy Spirit till Peter and John having prayed for them laid their hands on them. Acts 8: 17.

Thus far it is clear that God has been pleased in answer to prayer to bestow signal blessings by the laying on of the hands of Jacob, of Moses, of Christ and of his apostles. Will he do so through other than these? We find Paul exhorting Timothy, 1 Tim. 4: 14, saying, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." Timothy had received a gift by prophecy with the laying on of hands. Of whose hands? hands of the presbytery. What is a presbytery? A presbyter is an elder. The original word occurs in Acts 14: 23,—"And when they had ordained them elders in every church, * * * they commended them to the Lord on whom they believed." Paul ordained elders in every church which he planted. The same apostle considered this work so important, that what he could not do himself he appointed others to do. He wrote to Titus, saying, "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city as I had appointed thee."—Titus 1: 5. A presbyter then is an elder, of whom every church was to have more than one. The Ephesian church had several, who met Paul on his way to Jerusalem, at his request (Acts 20: 17). They were by no means apostles. They were chosen from among the disciples "in every city." A presbytery is an "assembly of elders"—elders acting in a united capacity; hence it appears plain enough that some of these elders met together and laid their hands on Timothy, and conferred upon him thereby a "gift," which he must not neglect.

Others then beside apostles may even in this dispensation lay on hands and bring from the source of all blessing, in answer to prayer, special gifts. Yea, even Timothy, a young and inexperienced minister of the gospel of Christ, is expected to do this same thing; and Paul, knowing that it would devolve upon Timothy sometime to do this work, gives him a word of caution, saying, "Lay hands suddenly on no man."—1 Tim. 5: 22. How would Paul have looked upon men who should have attempted to embarrass the young servant of God in his work by scoffingly bestowing the title of "apostle," "blasphemer," "antichrist," upon him? Who would envy the man thus found subverting faith? But Jesus, that good Shepherd who careth for his sheep, has thrown over his faithful ones an ample shield against such attacks by plainly pointing out all who are commissioned by him to lay on hands. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. * * * And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they (them that believe) cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; * * * they (them that believe) shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." Who will dare limit these signs to believers in apostolic days, since Jesus has not? These signs follow believers today, and I myself have been an eye witness of them, and a cloud of witnesses compass me about on this point.

Christ then from his own mouth empowers his believing children to lay hands on the sick and heal them. Is not then the Holy Spirit to be imparted even now in a special manner, in answer to believing prayer, accompanied with laying on of hands? When some thoughtless scoffer, therefore, shall approach the humble suppliant, who, bearing a heavy cross, dares to stretch out his trembling hand and lay it upon the head of him who seeks a blessing, and looking up to God implores the gift divine,—when some thoughtless scoffer shall approach such an one, and raise the cry of blasphemy, innovation, popery, anti-christ,—how comforting to rest unmoved upon this word—"In my name * * * they shall lay hands on the sick." This was upon the sick, says one, and not upon baptized converts. I reply, the principle is the same. The gift sought and imparted in either case is the Spirit of God. It is certainly as apostolic to heal the sick through the Spirit, as to comfort the convert. If the believer may, through the laying on of hands and prayer, obtain the gift of the Spirit unto the healing of the sick, which is the greater, why should it be denied him to obtain in like manner for the convert the comforter, which is the lesser blessing? Yet we have further testimony.

Paul, as if aware by prophetic instinct that men would remove if possible this ancient landmark of truth, has so placed this doctrine among the foundation stones of christianity (Heb. 6: 1), that he who removes it endangers the whole structure and lays in hopeless ruins the building of God. "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." Which of these foundation stones can we remove, and still leave the building resting upon a solid base? Can we remove faith? No. Repentance? No. Baptism? No. Resurrection of the dead? No. Eternal judgment? No. How then the "laying on of hands," ranked by the apostle with these great doctrines of "faith," "repentance," "baptisms," "resurrection," and "judgment"? He that would deny the propriety of "laying on of hands," may next doubt the propriety of baptism; and having disposed of baptism, he may then doubt the propriety of a "resurrection of the dead"; and having taken these steps toward infidelity, he may easily doubt whether there will ever be a day of "eternal judgment." By this time the necessity of "repentance toward God" will disappear, and soon he will "depart from the faith." Freed from all the restraint of gospel entreaty, he will imagine the day of christianity gone by, and boast like the "rapper" of the glorious liberty of the sons of perdition. Shall we enter upon this race course of infidelity? If not, then let "repentance from dead works" be followed by "faith toward God," and "faith toward God" be followed by "baptism," and "baptism" be followed by "laying on of hands"; then let the soul, "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise," wait for "the redemption of the body," and "eternal judgment."

Brethren in Christ, let us hold the apostle when he says, "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." Let us preach "faith," "repentance," "baptisms," "laying on of hands," "resurrection of the dead," and "eternal judgment," as the means and modes divinely appointed by which, in answer to prayer, God will be pleased to bestow the fulness of the blessings of Christ. While we preach, let us stand in "the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and (we) shall find rest for (our) souls." Jer. 6: 16.

"See that ye fall not out by the way."

Genesis 45: 24.

Joseph gave his brethren good advice when he warned them in going home, not to fall out by the way. I fear there is some danger of this in our case. We shall have to bear with each others' infirmities. We are not yet come to that state when we shall all see alike, especially on the nature and arrangements of the coming kingdom of Christ.

The subject of unfulfilled prophecy is not a matter of dispute, but of faith, not for contention and strife, but for hope and expectation. We profess to believe in freedom of thought and action, and have no creed but the word of God. Let us not then do ourselves, what we have so often condemned in others, shut the door of free thought and study of the Bible, on all points connected with the kingdom, except those agreeable to our own opinions, as if we were infallible, and know all that God has revealed of the age to come, and kindred doctrines, about which there still exists a diversity of opinions among advent believers.

It is said that these differences of opinion distract the church, and cause divisions there. But who is it that causes these divisions? Is it not those who denounce the examination of these subjects, and throw impediments in the way of this examination? "Freedom loves and will be free." We have thrown off the shackles of human opinions, and we are willing to give others the same liberty we seek for ourselves. If all our brethren act thus, what cause will there be for discord or disunion in the body of Christ? "It must needs be that offences come; but woe unto that man by whom the offence cometh." It is said, "two cannot walk together except they be agreed." If this is to be taken in its strict sense; then no two men in this world could ever walk together; and unity would be an impossibility.

God does not require more of us than we are able to perform. But he does require his people to "love one another with a pure heart fervently;" and not to set up ourselves, or our opinions, as lords over his heritage, saying, Hitherto shalt thou come, and no further. We, of all people, ought to know by experience, if we learn in no other school, that to denounce the honest convictions of our brethren, as dangerous and heretical, is no way to convince them of their error. Unless we can reason with them out of the Scriptures, and prove their position untenable by God's word, our time and temper will be utterly wasted, on those who want a reason for the hope that is in them; and will not give up that hope, until they have been convinced of their error in the way above stated.

So long as we hold the great and prominent truths of the gospel; the personal reign of Christ over a renovated earth; the resurrection of the saints, at his advent, to immortality in his kingdom, and the near coming of that blessed day of restoration; let minor points, on which we may differ, never be suffered to divide or distract our christian fellowship; and, while we get all the light we can from God's word, let us have patience with the infirmities of our brethren; believing that what we know not now, we shall know hereafter. May God give us grace to foil the enemy in this his last effort to scatter the little flock of the Good Shepherd, that he may devour them.

J. Parry.

Crosses.—If God has sent thee a cross, take it up and follow him; use it wisely, lest it be unprofitable; bear it patiently, lest it be intolerable; behold in it God's anger against sin, and his love towards thee in punishing the one and chastening the other. If it be light, slight it not; if heavy, murmur not. Not to be sensible of a judgment, is the symptom of a hardened heart; and to be displeased at his pleasure, is a sign of a rebellious will.

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER FOUR.

VI.—Resurrected Children on Probation.

Speculation has no end. While some have boldly affirmed that infants were to be lost, others have taken the position that all unaccountable children are to be raised to a mortal state, and put on probation for immortality. Let us, firstly, look at it in the light of reason.

1st. Those who die in helpless infancy, if raised to a mortal state, will need ordinary care and attention. Who will take care of them? They are numerous, and will need millions of nurses. Over 10,000 helpless children die per day. Omitting 1000 years, suppose they have died at that rate for 5000 years, and we have 18,250,000,000 as the number of helpless infants to be raised,—a number probably thrice as large as the number of adult saints; hence, if the saints take care of these poor helpless things, they will have as many as three infants apiece all over the Kingdom!!! If the 900,000,000 mortals, who are found alive at the Advent, are to take care of them, they would have two hundred infants each, besides the taking care of their own children, which it is said they are to raise! Over two hundred infants to each mortal!!

2nd. If raised to a mortal state they will need food to subsist upon. How will it be obtained? Do you say, "They will plant vineyards?" But how much could a man do at planting vineyards with two hundred infants on his hands? This is but a glimpse of the fading beauty of this system.

3rd. Not only does reason stand opposed to this system, but it has no foundation in the volume of truth only as it clings to perverted inferences. A "Thus saith the Lord" is wanting.

VII.—Death of Children in the Future Age.

To prove that children are to die in the next age, we are referred to Isa. 65: 20,—"The child shall die an hundred years old." This translation carries internal evidence of incorrectness, for to pronounce a person a child at the age of an hundred years, even if he could live a thousand, would be a mistake. A more critical rendering will give the true sentiment of the text:—"There shall be no more thence the young child [born], nor an old man cut short of his days; for the child that dieth [in this age] shall be as an hundred years old [in that age] but the sinner, though an hundred years old, shall be accursed" [at the introduction of that age, and not be permitted to dwell there]. Births, deaths, and infirmities are excluded from that age. This is in harmony with the Revelator's description of the same state where he says, "There shall be no more death."—Rev. 21: 4. Death will never leave his huge footprints in the "world to come." The "enemy" will thrust no darts in the kingdom.

Thy Will be Done.

Probably there is no point on which the christian character is so strongly tested as on this. Nothing so crossing to our natures as to bow our will in subservience to the will of God; to say in view of suffering, of affliction, of trial, "Thy will be done." How is it with thee, christian pilgrim? Art thou weary with the toils and trials of life! Is thy heart pained within thee, as thou art called to lay thy loved ones away in their dusty beds? Canst thou easily, at all times say, "Thy will be done?" Though dark clouds hang o'er thy head, though thick darkness precedes thee in all thy meanderings, though thou art called constantly to wade through Marah's bitter waters, yea, though all thy sweets are embittered by sorrow's stroke, all thy hopes blasted by the frosts of adversity; canst thou at all times say "Thy will be done?" Canst thou ever meekly bow, and kiss the rod that smites? If so, happy art thou. If thou canst pass through the fiery furnace, without the smell of fire upon thy garments, thou art indeed blessed. Would to God I could say the same! Would that my nature were more subservient.

The word of the Lord declares that "He doth not afflict willingly nor grieve the children of men;" and I cannot find it in my heart always to be willing to be afflicted. This does not necessarily imply that God is the direct author of our affliction, and suffering, yet by way of chastisement, he in his Providence permits us to be most sorely afflicted. These are indeed splendid opportunities to let patience have its perfect work, that we may be "perfect, and entire, wanting nothing,"—for "tribulation worketh patience," and I have felt many times during the last two years, while passing through the most heart-rending afflictions and trials, if patience were perfected in me, I should be "perfect, and entire, wanting nothing." Then I could say in the language of our dear Savior in his garden agony, "Not my will, but thine be done."

This is indeed a christian grace of rare attainment. O for grace! O for strength! to enable us at all times, and under all circumstances, to bow with submission and say—"Not my will, but thine be done."

Come to Christ.

There are not only philosophical conclusions made the basis for guaging and governing the business interests of men; but there are individuals, plenty of them, of high moral and intellectual merit, that suffer a well-balanced brain to collide with miserable prepositions, which in some things make men fools. There are people who can find no time to think or act for God; but are on tiptoe to catch the first glimpse of any new notion, no matter how simple. People who would be ashamed to speak a word in favor of Christ, will travel miles to make themselves lickspittles to some old necromancer, who pretends to divine future things, but actually is a ripe candidate for some lunatic asylum, or else an escaped inmate of that meritorious establishment.

Now this will be called sensible by some; but the Son of God, the Savior of men, whose great benevolent heart commiserated others' woes, and whose divine judgment of men's necessities was unquestionably perfect, has no acknowledged pre-eminence in their lives and deeds. It was God's wisdom, manifest in the flesh, which said, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

It is quite practical, in some phases of life, to do business by proxy. It is possible, in case of war, to procure substitutes, and thus fight by proxy. Kings and princes marry by proxy; in fine, it is feasible to perform most effectively very many arrangements by proxy; but "seeking the kingdom of God" is business which relates to men's hearts. They have got to be there. Christ's words in their application are individual; and if a man or woman would attain an eternity of wealth, they must struggle for it. Not that its price is great; but its actual possession is the fruit of intense devotion to Him who requires a constant servant.

To live here in this world is but an empty show. Fleeting days and years bury all earthly emoluments and gain, and hurry to the dead slaves to the god of mammon. Condition is nothing. The beggar claims as rich a repose as the sceptred monarch, and the red grave worm riots amid the mortality that encroaches upon his domain. This is every whit the substance of life. Now we shall surely get through with this cup of life's ills, and shall we not need something for the life beyond? Shall we not, when the momento of earthly greatness is lost in the general wreck of nature, need a refuge to shelter and protect us from the wrath of the prevailing storm? When there will be no human eye that can pity, and no human arm that can save amid the chaos of a lost world, shall we not gaze with undying solicitude for some haven of rest for our frail barque over across life's sea? We surely shall.

Then let us live and die in Christ. Let us no longer rankle the Roman halberd in the pierced side, nor scorn the intercession of Him who is now the King of kings. Let us prepare to glorify him by having him always before our face and on our right hand, that we shall not be moved. Let the millions of wasted years which in eternity might have been spent in joining in the jubilee of heaven, nerve us to end our life's journey here in a joyful faith and hope of an eternity of years in Christ's glorified realm of peace.

Ye that have "no hope," come to Christ. Your Savior bids you welcome; angels bid you welcome; and all that are saved bid you welcome. You who have long despised the day of grace may behold His blessed "arm stretched out still." His sceptre of mercy and forbearance is still [illegible], that you may touch it and live. It may be the last call of mercy, yet the [illegible], the last anchor of hope, and yet the [illegible]. By all your admiration of the good and true; by all your present hopes of a peaceful death; by all your cravings for a bright world of everlasting peace, I pray you come to Christ!

Away!

Away from the world with its false, fleeting show,
Away from its follies, its pleasures forego;
Away from the light, transient glory, and fame,
Inscribed on earth's tablet,—it lives but in name.

Away from proud wealth, with its bright, luring snare,
Though glittering its pathway, it leads but to care.
Earth's chaplet soon fadeth—it passeth away,
Then away from earth's glory, away, haste away.

Away to the Savior, who died to redeem
The lost and the fallen from death and from shame,
Away to bright visions of beauty and light,
A soon coming King, robed in glory and might.

Away to bright visions of the kingdom to come,
The kingdom of Jesus, the saint's peaceful home,
Where rapturous music is borne on the air,
And unfading flowers are blossoming there.

Away to sweet visions of fields robed in green,
No chill frosts of autumn, no blight ever seen;
Where clear crystal rivers are winding among
The delectable bowers of the saint's Eden home.

Away! look away to the loved land of peace,
Where the joy of the ransomed shall ever increase;
No sorrow, no anguish is known on that shore,
And our King in his beauty shall reign evermore.

Made Alive.

It is sometimes said by those who deny the resurrection of the ungodly, that "there is not a single passage in the Bible which declares that a wicked dead man shall be made alive." They say, "We want no inferential testimony,—give us one plain, positive text, and we will believe. There is no such passage between the lids of the Bible."

Such assertions weigh with some minds, and they straightway conclude that the wicked dead will not be raised to judgment. But let this assertion be met with another. "There is not a passage between the lids of the Bible which teaches that a righteous dead man shall be 'MADE ALIVE'"; or, again, "There is not a passage in all the Scriptures which says that Jesus Christ when dead should be 'MADE ALIVE'". "We want no inferential testimony; give us one plain, positive text, and we will believe. There is no such passage in the Bible."

Now what do such assertions as these prove? They simply prove that an ingenious man can put words together in a certain form of speech, different from those that occur in Scripture, and then he can pretend that no words express that idea unless they are precisely the same as those that he has framed to express it. Persons do hate to be found contradicting God's word, even if they do not believe it. I said once to a person, "Do you believe that there will be a resurrection of the dead, just and unjust?" The answer was, "No." This was frank. I put the same question to another person of the same faith, and the answer was, "I do believe it." Was that frank?

Persons cannot deny that the Bible says, "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust,"—or that they "that are in the graves," "that have done evil," "shall come forth." But how do they manage the matter?—why, by statements like these;—"There is not a passage in the Bible that teaches the re-living again of the wicked dead." "There is not a passage in the Bible that teaches the revival of the wicked dead." These assertions sound very well. But there is not a passage between the lids of the Bible that asserts the "re-living" of anybody, good, bad, or indifferent. There is not a passage in the Bible that says anything about the "revival" of anybody. And why? Simply because "revival," "non-living," "re-living," etc., are words never found in the Bible at all. It is a convenient device for such persons to hunt up, or coin, some unscriptural words, which express a scriptural fact, and then say that you cannot find the fact stated in the Bible, because you cannot find it stated in the precise form of words which they use, and which they took special care when they selected them to have them such as could be only found outside of the Bible. Such arts only lead to strifes about words, like those about "Trinity," "Unity," "Immateriality," "Materialism," "Annihilation," etc., etc.; and the first proper demand in any such controversy is, "Gentlemen, define your terms." It will be found that such persons generally use old words in a new sense. They have a dictionary of their own; words with them mean what they mean by them. To be sure, Webster says the word Resurrection signifies "A rising again; chiefly, the REVIVAL of the dead of the human race, or their return from the grave. particularly at the general judgment"; and Johnson defines it: "REVIVAL from the dead; return from the grave"; and Dr. Ash defines it: "The REVIVAL of the dead; the act of raising up the bodies of the dead at the last day"; but then, these men had not learned all the ways in which words are used now.

The apostle said he expected a RESURRECTION of the unjust, but then it is said he did not expect the "revival" or "re-living" of the wicked dead!! It is not to be wondered at that such a doctrine seeks to hide itself under a mantle of good words. It is found, however, very difficult to fit the words of the old Bible to the ideas of those who have the new faith. The doctrine of the Pharisees, that only the righteous should rise from the dead, against which Christ so solemnly warned his disciples, is not easily taught in the words of those apostles who believed and preached the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust.

But is there in the Bible any lack of expressive words to teach the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust? Suppose the Scriptures do not mention the "revival," the "re-living," or the being "made alive," of righteous or wicked at all; what of that? If they do not speak the words, do they fail to state the fact?

The Savior says that "the dead shall HEAR the voice of the Son of God; and they that HEAR SHALL LIVE." How many shall HEAR? "ALL that are in the graves shall HEAR his voice, and shall COME FORTH; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have DONE EVIL, unto the resurrection of damnation," or judgment. John 5: 25–29. Who shall hear? "The DEAD." Who shall live? "They that HEAR shall LIVE." How many dead shall hear? "All that are in the graves." How many shall come forth? "All that are in the graves." Who shall come forth? "All that are in the graves." What classes are there? "They that have done good." What shall they come forth to? "The resurrection [or revival] of life," —to live forever. Who else shall come forth? "They that have DONE EVIL." To what? To a resurrection of judgment, or condemnation. "All that are in the graves," "all" hear his voice, "all" live," all "come forth," all have a resurrection or "REVIVAL," and then, some receive eternal life, and some condemnation to the "second death." And yet there is nothing said here about the "re-living" of any body, or of righteous or wicked dead men being "made alive." This is "inferential testimony," is it?

Paul said he had "hope toward God, which they themselves (the Jews) also ALLOW (or expect), that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the JUST AND UNJUST."—Acts 24: 15. Paul here does not state the hope of the PHARISEES, for they held to the resurrection of the righteous only (for proof see Josephus; Kitto's Cyclopedia; Bible Examiner for March, 1850, p. 43; and Retribution, p. 145); nor that of the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection of all; but his own faith which the Jews,—the common people,—coincided in cherishing, was that there would be a resurrection, or a revival of the dead, JUST and UNJUST. And yet this passage says nothing of the "RE-LIVING" of either class; or of their being "made alive"!! To be sure the same terms are applied to both righteous and wicked; but then the precise words "re-living," and "made alive," are not here, and so this passage is only "inferential testimony"!!

Again, Paul writes, "As in (or by—en) Adam all die, even so in (or by—en) Christ shall all be MADE ALIVE."—1 Cor. 15: 22. Now this passage does not say that "a wicked dead man shall be made alive"; nor does it say that a righteous dead man shall be made alive. It simply says that ALL who die by Adam shall be made alive by Christ. The word rendered in is translated "by" or "through" in at least a dozen translations which I have before me. It is the clear, unmistakable sense of the passage. All die BY one, all rise BY the other; the remedy is as large as the evil; and here the apostle says, "So in (or by) Christ shall ALL be MADE ALIVE." But this is "inferential proof," I suppose; nothing positive about the matter!!

But, says one, "What do you do with the rest of the chapter?" Do with it,—why study it and believe it of course. I would not deny the first part for fear of believing the rest, nor pervert half because I did not understand the whole. But I must leave a fuller discussion of it for the pages of a work I hope to issue on "The Resurrection of the dead," in which I desire to expound it more at length. But, says one, "If I believe that all shall be made alive, I shall be a Universalist." Quite likely. This system of interpretation by which you deny the judgment to come, sends you more than half way there at a leap. But I do not fear being a Universalist, or any other "ist," or "ite"; nor shall I deny one part of my Bible to keep me from disbelieving the other. With God's help, I mean to hold fast "the principles of the doctrine of Christ, . . . repentance from dead works, . . . faith towards God, . . . the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment."—Heb. 6: 1–3. From these, I would "go on to perfection." Persons, who need that one teach them what be the principles of Christ's doctrine, will take their own way, of course.

Laying on of Hands.

Is it an innovation? Ought any save an apostle to do it? Is it a mark of antichrist? Is it priestly arrogance? or is it the plain simple form of scriptural blessings? These are questions not to be answered by prejudice, by cold, icy-hearted scepticism, nor by pride that is ashamed of the ordinances of Christ when a gainsaying world curls the lip of scorn at them. They are questions not to be left to the decision of men who bend their energies toward little else save "doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness." From such we are to withdraw ourselves while we turn our feet unto His testimonies whose word is truth.

The first instance which inspiration has recorded of laying on of hands is when Jacob blessed the two sons of Joseph (Gen. 48: 14): "And Israel stretched out his right hand and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Manasseh's head." Can a practice introduced among God's people so long ago be an innovation now? Was Jacob an apostle? Why then must an apostle only lay on hands? Since it is Christ's prerogative to bless, did Jacob presumptuously assume the authority of Christ? Was this the first development of antichrist? Or was this simply the divinely approved form for invoking great blessings upon such as were to receive them? Manifestly the latter, and nothing more. This position is most fully sustained by the whole volume of inspired testimony. When Joshua was to receive especial blessing to qualify him for the responsible duties to devolve upon him at Moses' death, the hands of Moses were laid upon him, "and Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him."—Deut. 34: 9. Here "the spirit of wisdom" is declared to be the special blessing conferred upon Joshua through Moses when he "laid his hands upon him."

That it was Christ's custom to impart blessings to the multitudes who sought his healing virtue by laying his hands on them needs no further evidence than such frequent forms of entreaty as—"Come and lay thy hand upon her."—Matt. 9: 18. The young converts of Samaria, whom the preaching of Philip "turned unto God," received not the Holy Spirit till Peter and John having prayed for them laid their hands on them. Acts 8: 17.

Thus far it is clear that God has been pleased in answer to prayer to bestow signal blessings by the laying on of the hands of Jacob, of Moses, of Christ and of his apostles. Will he do so through other than these? We find Paul exhorting Timothy, 1 Tim. 4: 14, saying, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." Timothy had received a gift by prophecy with the laying on of hands. Of whose hands? hands of the presbytery. What is a presbytery? A presbyter is an elder. The original word occurs in Acts 14: 23,—"And when they had ordained them elders in every church, * * * they commended them to the Lord on whom they believed." Paul ordained elders in every church which he planted. The same apostle considered this work so important, that what he could not do himself he appointed others to do. He wrote to Titus, saying, "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city as I had appointed thee."—Titus 1: 5. A presbyter then is an elder, of whom every church was to have more than one. The Ephesian church had several, who met Paul on his way to Jerusalem, at his request (Acts 20: 17). They were by no means apostles. They were chosen from among the disciples "in every city." A presbytery is an "assembly of elders"—elders acting in a united capacity; hence it appears, plain enough that some of these elders met together and laid their hands on Timothy, and conferred upon him thereby a "gift," which he must not neglect.

Others then beside apostles may even in this dispensation lay on hands and bring from the source of all blessing, in answer to prayer, special gifts. Yea, even Timothy, a young and inexperienced minister of the gospel of Christ, is expected to do this same thing; and Paul, knowing that it would devolve upon Timothy sometime to do this work, gives him a word of caution, saying, "Lay hands suddenly on no man."—1 Tim. 5: 22. How would Paul have looked upon men who should have attempted to embarrass the young servant of God in his work by scoffingly bestowing the title of "apostle," "blasphemer," "antichrist," upon him? Who would envy the man thus found subverting faith? But Jesus, that good Shepherd who careth for his sheep, has thrown over his faithful ones an ample shield against such attacks by plainly pointing out all who are commissioned by him to lay on hands. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. * * * And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they (them that believe) cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; * * * they (them that believe) shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." Who will dare limit these signs to believers in apostolic days, since Jesus has not? These signs follow believers today, and I myself have been an eye witness of them, and a cloud of witnesses compass me about on this point.

Christ then from his own mouth empowers his believing children to lay hands on the sick and heal them. Is not then the Holy Spirit to be imparted even now in a special manner, in answer to believing prayer, accompanied with laying on of hands? When some thoughtless scoffer, therefore, shall approach the humble suppliant, who, bearing a heavy cross, dares to stretch out his trembling hand and lay it upon the head of him who seeks a blessing, and looking up to God implores the gift divine,—when some thoughtless scoffer shall approach such an one, and raise the cry of blasphemy, innovation, popery, anti-christ,—how comforting to rest unmoved upon this word—"In my name * * * they shall lay hands on the sick." This was upon the sick, says one, and not upon baptized converts. I reply, the principle is the same. The gift sought and imparted in either case is the Spirit of God. It is certainly as apostolic to heal the sick through the Spirit, as to comfort the convert. If the believer may, through the laying on of hands and prayer, obtain the gift of the Spirit unto the healing of the sick, which is the greater, why should it be denied him to obtain in like manner for the convert the comforter, which is the lesser blessing? Yet we have further testimony.

Paul, as if aware by prophetic instinct that men would remove if possible this ancient landmark of truth, has so placed this doctrine among the foundation stones of christianity (Heb. 6: 1), that he who removes it endangers the whole structure and lays in hopeless ruins the building of God. "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." Which of these foundation stones can we remove, and still leave the building resting upon a solid base? Can we remove faith? No. Repentance? No. Baptism? No. Resurrection of the dead? No. Eternal judgment? No. How then the "laying on of hands," ranked by the apostle with these great doctrines of "faith," "repentance," "baptisms," "resurrection," and "judgment"? He that would deny the propriety of "laying on of hands," may next doubt the propriety of baptism; and having disposed of baptism, he may then doubt the propriety of a "resurrection of the dead"; and having taken these steps toward infidelity, he may easily doubt whether there will ever be a day of "eternal judgment." By this time the necessity of "repentance toward God" will disappear, and soon he will "depart from the faith." Freed from all the restraint of gospel entreaty, he will imagine the day of christianity gone by, and boast like the "rapper" of the glorious liberty of the sons of perdition. Shall we enter upon this race course of infidelity? If not, then let "repentance from dead works" be followed by "faith toward God," and "faith toward God" be followed by "baptism," and "baptism" be followed by "laying on of hands"; then let the soul, "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise," wait for "the redemption of the body," and "eternal judgment."

Brethren in Christ, let us heed the apostle when he says, "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." Let us preach "faith," "repentance," "baptisms," "laying on of hands," "resurrection of the dead," and "eternal judgment," as the means and modes divinely appointed by which, in answer to prayer, God will be pleased to bestow the fulness of the blessings of Christ. While we preach, let us stand in "the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and (we) shall find rest for (our) souls." Jer. 6: 16.

"See that ye fall not out by the way."

Joseph gave his brethren good advice when he warned them in going home, not to fall out by the way. I fear there is some danger of this in our case. We shall have to bear with each others' infirmities. We are not yet come to that state when we shall all see alike; especially on the nature and arrangements of the coming kingdom of Christ.

The subject of unfulfilled prophecy is not a matter of dispute, but of faith; not for contention and strife, but for hope and expectation. We profess to believe in freedom of thought and action, and have no creed but the word of God. Let us not then do ourselves, what we have so often condemned in others, shut the door of free thought and study of the Bible, on all points connected with the kingdom; except those agreeable to our own opinions; as if we were infallible, and know all that God has revealed of the age to come, and kindred doctrines, about which there still exists a diversity of opinions among advent believers.

It is said that these differences of opinion distract the church, and cause divisions there. But who is it that causes these divisions? Is it not those who denounce the examination of these subjects; and throw impediments in the way of this examination? "Freedom loves and will be free." We have thrown off the shackles of human opinions, and we are willing to give others the same liberty we seek for ourselves. If all our brethren act thus, what cause will there be for discord or disunion in the body of Christ? "It must needs be that offences come; but woe unto that man by whom the offence cometh." It is said, "two cannot walk together except they be agreed." If this is to be taken in its strict sense; then no two men in this world could ever walk together; and unity would be an impossibility.

God does not require more of us than we are able to perform. But he does require his people to "love one another with a pure heart fervently;" and not to set up ourselves, or our opinions, as lords over his heritage, saying, Hitherto shalt thou come, and no further. We, of all people, ought to know by experience, if we learn in no other school, that to denounce the honest convictions of our brethren, as dangerous and heretical, is no way to convince them of their error. Unless we can reason with them out of the Scriptures, and prove their position untenable by God's word, our time and temper will be utterly wasted, on those who want a reason for the hope that is in them; and will not give up that hope, until they have been convinced of their error in the way above stated.

So long as we hold the great and prominent truths of the gospel; the personal reign of Christ over a renovated earth; the resurrection of the saints, at his advent, to immortality in his kingdom, and the near coming of that blessed day of restoration; let minor points, on which we may differ, never be suffered to divide or distract our christian fellowship; and, while we get all the light we can from God's word, let us have patience with the infirmities of our brethren; believing that what we know not now, we shall know hereafter. May God give us grace to foil the enemy in this his last effort to scatter the little flock of the Good Shepherd, that he may devour them.

J. PARRY.

CROSSES.—If God has sent thee a cross, take it up and follow him; use it wisely, lest it be unprofitable; bear it patiently, lest it be intolerable; behold in it God's anger against sin, and his love towards thee in punishing the one and chastening the other. If it be light, slight it not; if heavy, murmur not. Not to be sensible of a judgment, is the symptom of a hardened heart; and to be displeased at his pleasure, is a sign of a rebellious will.

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER FOUR.

VI.—RESURRECTED CHILDREN ON PROBATION.

Speculation has no end. While some have boldly affirmed that infants were to be lost, others have taken the position that all unaccountable children are to be raised to a mortal state, and put on probation for immortality. Let us, firstly, look at it in the light of reason.

1st. Those who die in helpless infancy, if raised to a mortal state, will need ordinary care and attention. Who will take care of them? They are numerous, and will need millions of nurses. Over 10,000 helpless children die per day. Omitting 1000 years, suppose they have died at that rate for 5000 years, and we have 18,250,000,000 as the number of helpless infants to be raised,—a number probably thrice as large as the number of adult saints; hence, if the saints take care of these poor helpless things, they will have as many as three infants apiece all over the Kingdom!!! If the 900,000,000 mortals, who are found alive at the Advent, are to take care of them, they would have two hundred infants each, besides the taking care of their own children, which it is said they are to raise! Over two hundred infants to each mortal!!

2nd. If raised to a mortal state they will need food to subsist upon. How will it be obtained? Do you say, "They will plant vineyards?" But how much could a man do at planting vineyards with two hundred infants on his hands? This is but a glimpse of the fading beauty of this system.

3rd. Not only does reason stand opposed to this system, but it has no foundation in the volume of truth only as it clings to perverted inferences. A "Thus saith the Lord" is wanting.

VII.—DEATH OF CHILDREN IN THE FUTURE AGE.

To prove that children are to die in the next age, we are referred to Isa. 65: 20;— "The child shall die an hundred years old." This translation carries internal evidence of incorrectness, for to pronounce a person a child at the age of an hundred years, even if he could live a thousand, would be a mistake. A more critical rendering will give the true sentiment of the text:— "There shall be no more thence the young child [born]; nor an old man cut short of his days; for the child that dieth [in this age] shall be as an hundred years old [in that age]: but the sinner, though an hundred years old, shall be accursed" [at the introduction of that age, and not be permitted to dwell there]. Births, deaths, and infirmities are excluded from that age. This is in harmony with the Revelator's description of the same state where he says, "There shall be no more death."—Rev. 21: 4. Death will never leave his huge footprints in the "world to come." The "enemy" will thrust no darts in the kingdom.

Thy Will be Done.

Probably there is no point on which the christian character is so strongly tested as on this. Nothing so crossing to our natures as to bow our will in subservience to the will of God; to say in view of suffering, of affliction, of trial, "Thy will be done." How is it with thee, christian pilgrim? Art thou weary with the toils and trials of life! Is thy heart pained within thee, as thou art called to lay thy loved ones away in their dusty beds? Canst thou easily, at all times say, "Thy will be done?" Though dark clouds hang o'er thy head, though thick darkness precedes thee in all thy meanderings, though thou art called constantly to wade through Marah's bitter waters, yea, though all thy sweets are embittered by sorrow's stroke, all thy hopes blasted by the frosts of adversity; canst thou at all times say "Thy will be done?" Canst thou ever meekly bow, and kiss the rod that smites? If so, happy art thou. If thou canst pass through the fiery furnace, without the smell of fire upon thy garments, thou art indeed blessed. Would to God I could say the same! Would that my nature were more subservient.

The word of the Lord declares that "He doth not afflict willingly nor grieve the children of men;" and I cannot find it in my heart always to be willing to be afflicted. This does not necessarily imply that God is the direct author of our affliction, and suffering, yet by way of chastisement, he in his Providence permits us to be most sorely afflicted. These are indeed splendid opportunities to let patience have its perfect work, that we may be "perfect, and entire, wanting nothing,"—for "tribulation worketh patience," and I have felt many times during the last two years, while passing through the most heart-rending afflictions and trials, if patience were perfected in me, I should be "perfect, and entire, wanting nothing." Then I could say in the language of our dear Savior in his garden agony, "Not my will, but thine be done."

This is indeed a christian grace of rare attainment. O for grace! O for strength! to enable us at all times, and under all circumstances, to bow with submission and say—"Not my will, but thine be done."

Come to Christ.

There are not only philosophical conclusions made the basis for guaging and governing the business interests of men; but there are individuals, plenty of them, of high moral and intellectual merit, that suffer a well-balanced brain to collide with miserable prepositions, which in some things make men fools. There are people who can find no time to think or act for God; but are on tiptoe to catch the first glimpse of any new notion, no matter how simple. People who would be ashamed to speak a word in favor of Christ, will travel miles to make themselves lickspittles to some old necromancer, who pretends to divine future things, but actually is a ripe candidate for some lunatic asylum, or else an escaped inmate of that meritorious establishment.

Now this will be called sensible by some; but the Son of God, the Savior of men, whose great benevolent heart commiserated others' woes, and whose divine judgment of men's necessities was unquestionably perfect, has no acknowledged pre-eminence in their lives and deeds. It was God's wisdom, manifest in the flesh, which said, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

It is quite practical, in some phases of life, to do business by proxy. It is possible, in case of war, to procure substitutes, and thus fight by proxy. Kings and princes marry by proxy; in fine, it is feasible to perform most effectively very many arrangements by proxy; but "seeking the kingdom of God" is business which relates to men's hearts. They have got to be there. Christ's words in their application are individual; and if a man or woman would attain an eternity of wealth, they must struggle for it. Not that its price is great; but its actual possession is the fruit of intense devotion to Him who requires a constant servant.

To live here in this world is but an empty show. Fleeting days and years bury all earthly emoluments and gain, and hurry to the dead slaves to the god of mammon. Condition is nothing. The beggar claims as rich a repose as the sceptred monarch, and the red grave worm riots amid the mortality that encroaches upon his domain. This is every whit the substance of life. Now we shall surely get through with this cup of life's ills, and shall we not need something for the life beyond? Shall we not, when the moments of earthly greatness is lost in the general wreck of nature, need a refuge to shelter and protect us from the wrath of the prevailing storm? When there will be no human eye that can pity, and no human arm that can save amid the chaos of a lost world, shall we not gaze with undying solicitude for some haven of rest for our frail barques over across life's sea? We surely shall.

Then let us live and die in Christ. Let us no longer rankle the Roman halberd in the pierced side, nor scorn the intercession of Him who is now the King of kings. Let us prepare to glorify him by having him always before our face and on our right hand, that we shall not be moved. Let the millions of wasted years which in eternity might have been spent in joining in the jubilee of heaven, nerve us to end our life's journey here in a joyful faith and hope of an eternity of years in Christ's glorified realm of peace.

Ye that have "no hope," come to Christ. Your Savior bids you welcome; angels bid you welcome; and all that are saved bid you welcome. ### Names.

If you wish your articles published, send your names with them. We frequently receive communications with no name attached. They may be signed by P. or A. or some other letter of the alphabet; or by some fictitious names. It is important that the Editor, at least, should know the name; otherwise the writer must not expect to see his article in the paper. We again request all who write for the Crisis to sign their full names to their contributions. Every reader will be better pleased. Come, throw away this false delicacy, and not be ashamed of your name.

Short Articles.

We wish all our excellent contributors to remember that short articles are the most pleasing to the readers. Condense your thoughts into as few words as possible. There is also another advantage. If your contributions are short, more can be heard, and we can have a greater variety.

War News.

The bloody men move slowly at present. It is evident that both sides are tired of the work, but each is resolved not to be first in yielding; hence they are continually preparing for more terrible slaughter. It is frequently inquired, "When do you think the war will end?" This is all uncertain. It may end in a few months, and it may continue many. We do not think it will continue in its present form till Jesus comes; yet, we expect to see no better times for christians till the Lord appears. Perils will increase, on account of the infidelity and wickedness of the people. We do not expect any but true christians will be able to "stem the storm." The only way to be safe is to give up all to Jesus, and keep his commandments. Half-hearted religion will be of no avail. It is only "the pure in heart" that have the promise of seeing God. Dear reader, let us be in the happy company. But in order to be accepted at the marriage supper of the Lamb, we must conduct our warfare in this world, clothed only in the christian armor; hence we must lay aside all carnal weapons, and the spirit that would prompt us to use them.

Strong Delusion.

It is evident that but few are aware of the perils of these times. Most appear to be asleep, while the arch enemy is at work night and day, in every possible way to lead people astray from the word of the Lord. We are now so near the second coming of Christ, and the tokens are so bright on this subject, that Satan and his demons admit that Christ is soon coming, but it is spiritually, through various mediums, who are teaching his principles; and that he comes to those who receive them. The world and church are now quite well prepared to sympathize with this Satanic theology, and to be led astray, by demons, from the truth to fables, and consequent ruin.

That the reader may get some idea of Satan's devices in these last days, we give below a communication we received last Tuesday, Oct 21st, purporting to come from JESUS. If any who have not been aware of the great work going on, through the agency of demons, in these last days, and think the following too absurd to be believed; to such we would say, it is reported that there are several millions, who are already in full sympathy with such sentiments;—indeed, the whole is but one step removed from popular theology, and the popular belief in the various churches; and we see nothing to prevent them from being seduced by these lying spirits, who come in the form of angels of light; nearly indorsing the popular theological views of these last days. Verily, the time has come, as foretold by the apostle, when men have turned "away their ears from the truth, and" are "turned unto fables."

Dear brethren in the ministry, sound the alarm! Let us exhort one another daily, and so much the more, as we see the day approaching. Truly, the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Thank his blessed name that we have not been left to believe in a spiritual coming, but have embraced the plain Bible doctrine, expressed in the following language:—"This SAME JESUS, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall SO COME IN LIKE MANNER as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 11. Jesus, foreseeing what would come up in these last days, has given us special caution, as follows:—

"If any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before. Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth; behold, he is in the secret chambers, believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. 24: 23—27.

As the vivid lightning dazzles the eyes and startles the beholder, so the glory attending the coming of Christ is to illumine the heavens, causing all the tribes of the earth to mourn, who are not ready to welcome him. At his coming, he has declared, "Every eye shall see him." Again he says: "They shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." We are taught "to wait for his (God's) Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus." This is that "SAME JESUS" who is to come in like manner as he went away. No truth, we think, is more plainly taught by Christ and the apostles. We expect that the majority of Church members, and the whole christian world, so called, will be seduced to believe in a spiritual coming. When such a doctrine is taught, let us heed the instruction of Jesus, and "BELIEVE IT NOT."

The following is the communication to which we have referred:

PHILADELPHIA, TENTH MONTH, 1862.

Senior Editor World's Crisis:—Lo, I have come—according to the prophecies of old—in fulfillment of my promise, which I made on the authority of the written prophecy, which I believed, and which I understood and believed to point to me as the person who should come to earth's inhabitants, and give to them the long promised kingdom of God our Father [but the Father only knew the time]—and seeing no other one appointed to fulfill that mission—and finally, in our Father's own good time, my "having received the kingdom," and having the proper channel opened through which to give it unto those who make the demand for it, by their sincere desire and true faith, I have come to finish my mission which I began 1850 years ago, in my own mortal body. There is a necessity for my coming thus; even as others come, through a mortal instrument. Each instrument is used for a peculiar purpose, according to his or her capabilities or natural peculiarities of organization and power; and is used by such of the Father's hosts as are qualified to use it; and all are used in their respective order as they come into existence.

As in the musical department, the piano music could not be made before the piano was made,—as in the mechanical department, the steam power could not be applied before the steam engine was made, etc. etc., so in the human department, I could not use any mortal instrument for my special purpose, until one was created and prepared with a suitable organization, abilities, and experiences, and placed in suitable conditions, with proper surroundings therefor, and at the proper time. The time has come, and with it the man. He was a bodily sacrifice in the earth, and I took possession of him; his spirit consented to my using the body, and agreed to attend to its natural wants during the time I shall use it. Who or what he was will not be revealed to the world; because, were he known, I could not use him, and the world would hunt him to the death, as it did my own mortal body; and for other reasons to be given in another place. Through him I can finish my mission, and give to my servants and to the world all that my Father hath promised them,—can guide them safely through the terrible and bloody struggle the nations are about arraying themselves to enter into—can instruct, prepare, and arrange them for my appearance in spiritual glory,—can reveal to them how to obtain power from God to overcome all the material forces of the nations, and their armies; and can give unto them "the kingdom which shall never be destroyed." I have come, that through him I might gather together the faithful, the tried and the true; that I might lead them, so that when the armies of the nations shall come against you with numbers, and our forces ready to devour you, the power of God may be made manifest before them, and put them to flight, and cause them to "say to the mountains and rocks, fall on us," etc. etc., during the opening of the sixth seal, and at the time of my appearance.

According to the existing laws that connect the world of mankind and the world of spirit kind together, and that governs spirit communion, influence, or control, [there being no other way,] I must come to do my appointed work through a mortal; for were I now to appear in spirit to millions, it would avail them nothing practically; the instructions that are to be given, and the duties that are to be performed would be left undone, and the world be left the same as it was before; therefore, this, God's own way, I come to do his will, and to serve his children of earth. And were I to appear visible in any material body [my own, or borrowed,] and escape persecution to death, I would go through the earth of course ridiculed and abused by the multitudes, and leave the world as it was; as some have done who openly professed themselves to be the promised Christ to redeem the world, and to give to man the promised kingdom, but who had received none to give. They were men; and were it possible for man to give that kingdom, the last end of the prophecies concerning it would prove false, and it would be man's, not God's kingdom. And if I can use this body I have selected, and which I have been preparing, not with collegiate or academical training, which make men for the world, or some portion of it, as it is; but, with suitable experiences from its childhood to the present time, to do all that my Father hath sent me to do, as well as if it was my own original body; what better or more could I do? It is not the body that doeth the work, but the spirit through the instrumentality of the body. As a mechanic's tools are to the workman, so are the several parts of the body to the spirit.

It has been prophesied by some in the last few years of your time, that "a higher class of mediums would arise," and "that they were being prepared for the work before them, of reforming the world in fact." One in particular has been looked for to take the lead; but no one has yet appeared equal to the demand; neither can they find any known man, especially not among the leading hosts; all are too contracted, partial or limited in their spheres of action and purposes. But in what way they would be higher has not been given. Some few have thought themselves "the higher," and desired not the praises of the world; but, nevertheless, have by their own doings made themselves known and conspicuous before the world, are serving the world in the best way they know, but so as to receive the applause and reward of men. Herein will "the higher" be known, they will serve angels and receive angels' reward, so that no self-interest or influence of the world can lead them astray by any apparent necessity to seek and to receive reward from men, as a business transaction, or as hirelings. The first one will set the example; he will not be known to the world, so that it cannot have his person or his name to look up to; and when they see him they will not know it is he, and they will necessarily treat him as any other man, in an every day, ordinary manner; and then men will begin to look up to God, and not to man. Who he is will be revealed when necessary, to a few of my chief servants; for the time will come when I shall want them to protect him in a way that I shall then make known. Ye will plainly see in all the prophecies concerning the last government spoken of therein, that no man receives the credit, the honor, and the glory for establishing it, or for leading the people; therefore, in accordance with the prophecy, the mortal instrument, who is barely mentioned in the prophecy concerning this time and circumstance, as "one sitting on the throne," and described as a "stone," is to be unknown to the public, and is to be a mere instrument through whom God and I will act. We will receive the credit therefor. He can do nothing of himself, as a leader or servant of the people, and would not attempt it; and the man-leading, or ruling, or governing, ends with the old kingdoms, and is not to be known in the new; and as long as any man is set up as a leader, so long God and I do not lead, but man does, and receives the honor and the glory from the people therefor, as his due; and so long the prophecies concerning the establishment of God's kingdom do not begin to come to pass; herein ye will perceive the "other" and more important reasons why the man should and is to be unknown.

Certain necessary conditions are required of and among my servants and followers to enable me to appear spiritually. The connecting laws must be observed and fulfilled. The greater the manifestation to be made, the greater the difficulty to obtain the necessary conditions; and the more faith, patience and perseverance is required of those who are to make the conditions in the earth; and those are they who truly believe in my appearing in spiritual glory, and who will believe that I am he, and who will be gathered together, and do as I direct them. I purpose leading my followers, and all of the reforming hosts and freemen of the land with them, who can and will be organized in one undivided body, for the purpose of establishing more true and extended national and individual liberty, and on a more sure foundation than was the old now crumbling structure. This body will constitute they that "are called and chosen and faithful." And this is the "call," if ye will receive it. This step is necessary, owing to the existing condition of this your country, and of others, to prepare the way, and to bring on the necessity for the power of God to be made manifest to the world. Your numbers will be few, compared to your enemies, so that they and ye will know that your own power as men, or as an army, will be far from being sufficient to battle with them, much less to conquer them; and the world will be compelled, by the force of circumstances, and the nature of the events, to acknowledge God as king and ruler in the earth. Henceforward he, and not man with his engines of war, will rake the nations; his will "will be done in earth as it is in heaven." His purpose I can accomplish through a certain mortal who has already, by my influence and power, proposed himself to a few, and has pointed out in part his plans and purposes. Through him, God and I will lead you; and he also will lead through others, so that the man can not and will not be looked up to as hitherto. Be not faithless, but believe that God hath wisdom and power to do his will through his chosen and faithful few; for through you is the world now to be saved from the tyrannical rule of man, and from spiritual darkness, as foreshadowed by the falling and the sweeping away of the great man-image, by a power not produced or projected by the hands of man.

Ye must gather together and organize, and choose the man offered to you, independent of other bodies of men, parties or power. You have no government; you must make one, to satisfy the demands of the highest developed among you; and then, to those who are prepared of the Father to receive it, will be given the final and everlasting kingdom of God, into which all men and nations will enter as they become prepared therefor; as figured forth by the "stone" first enlarging until it became a "mountain," and continuing to increase until finally it covered the "whole earth." Ask for no "signs," or "wonders," tests, to rest your faith upon; for all these belong to your enemies to delude and to deceive you—"the very elect," if possible. This will test your wisdom and faithfulness. Wait until God and I will give a test to the world, that will make it tremble, so that all human thrones and their occupants will fall beneath your feet. Ye would wait in vain, and to your own destruction, for a majority to restore freedom, union, harmony and peace in your land, even if other and despotic nations were not to meddle with you at all. Your majorities have caused your troubles, and will continue to increase them; more surely as all despotic powers are interested with the majority of your treacherous leaders, to crush freedom in its strong hold. All monied institutions, powers and influences, are inseparably linked with the man-power; they all are parts of the old human ruling machinery or system. Three hundred true and faithful are more effective in God's hands, than thirty and two thousand of doubtful minds. And then the small body can say not, "mine own hand hath saved me." Be not forgetful that He who made the worlds hath power to keep them, or change them in all their parts, "according to his will," and in his own times. "Many are called, but few chosen," or willing, to risk their lives upon the power of God with the few, in opposition to the many who will have so great warlike powers of man's invention. Men are greater than all they invent, and God is greater than all he creates, or has created. Those who profess to follow me, but who have "hired men leaders" to guide and instruct them, depend upon the power of sword and all implements of war; the power of God they know not of to trust in him; they have all gone astray after the "god of [physical] power;" they constitute the "beast," and his "image," and those who have their "mark"; they will fight against God and his people; therefore, I call upon all my true followers to come out from among them, and join together in a one body, and be a one people—"God's people; and wait for God's church, that he may guide them instead of man. "Come out of her, my people," not out of one of them only, but out of all; for all are but members of the same family, the "beast" being the "mother," and all the others are but "harlot" off-springs of several generations—divisions and subdivisions. The "image" was copied in great part from the mother church, and hath "temporal" power joined thereto as hath the beast; therefore it is called the image. Those that have the mark of the beast bear a resemblance to the mother, sufficient to be recognized by the offspring, and they all alike profess to be my followers, therefore they are all to be known as one family; and it will be seen ere long that they all, each to some extent, will unite with the beast against God's people; because, their being of one kind, they have like interests, and a deadly foe to one must be alike deadly to all. Verily I come to them "unawares," in a way and "time they look not for me," while they feel themselves secure in the world, hidden behind the works of their own hands. Where God's people are there is unity and peace; and no divisions or separate organizations can be among them; the moment they divide, they divide to follow presumptuous men, and cease to be God's people; but men, individually, will come out of all them, and be free; and of such will God's people be composed, together with such as never bowed the knee at any altar of man's invention and construction. Now will the separation take place; they shall be divided "as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats," and from the wolves in sheep's clothing, God's people, or my true followers, who will answer my call and follow me now, from the people who follow men of whatever name or denomination,—enlightened freemen and all true reformers, from despots and their willing subjects, and from all adherents to old forms and powers; for all things shall be made new. It will be national and individual freedom, and God to be king over all, against tyranny, oppression, and control of the rule and power of man over man.

Doctrines are but chains in the hands of their promulgators to bind the minds of men, and keep them from expanding and looking up to the infinite God of all, who instructeth all alike and truly; thus the "beast" [the church], and the "dragon" combined [church and human government] "cast the truth to the ground" by putting to death or silencing, through all the dark ages even until now, all whom Heaven employed to reveal new truths to mankind. As a local magnet is in the hands of a self-wise helmsman to make the needle of the compass point as he wishes, and thereby takes it from under the control of the universal magnet, so is a doctrine in the hands of a man to influence the minds of others. All must be free for God to guide them. A man will not bind and oppress himself to the same extent, that one will bind and oppress another; self interest forbids in the one case, and propels in the other.

He who has proposed to lead will lead through others; twenty-four will be chosen for that purpose; they will be chosen as I will direct through him. He will correspond to the material body described as "sitting on the throne;" and he is as one dead, or as "a stone;" he can do nothing himself. The twenty-four will correspond to the "twenty-four elders," and will represent the "twelve tribes of the children of Israel," and the "twelve apostles" who followed me to mortal death. The throne is in the midst of the "four beasts;" they being round about the throne; the throne being in the midst of the beast and the elders. The throne signifies the source and channel of intelligence, guidance and power, back of the elders. More about those four beasts, and the opening of the "seals," etc., etc., hereafter.

Were it not that the Father hath sent his angel and spirit hosts to prepare the way, I would not now be received by any; but the windows of heaven are opened, and all who will may get light therefrom, according to their ability to receive, and to what they seek or desire. Ye who desire to be led by me, and who desire the kingdom, which I now have to give, can now have your desires gratified to the full; and much more could be given were ye able to receive or to desire it. I said that I would come "with the holy angels." They came, and are with you; now, I come, and the Father's hosts are with me to do his holy will. If ye will now receive me, ye can say that ye have received evidence that my spiritual appearing is at hand—that I have chosen my messenger, and through him have communed with you, and have begun to instruct and direct you in what ye shall do, and that ye have the promise that the Father and I henceforth will guide and direct you to the end; which we will, if ye prove faithful and true.* Be patient, calm, cautious, yet persevering, and confident that a glorious victory will be yours in the end, though dark and hopeless all may now appear to mortal vision. Have full faith in God.

I came to my own people, in accordance with natural laws, and according to prophecy; they looked for me then, and for "the kingdom," even before the destruction of their government, and their scatterment, in fulfillment of prophecy; I could not then give it, for I had not yet received it; consequently, they rejected me; they would not believe that I was the person. They overlooked the prophecies concerning my being "cut off," "stricken," "broken"; and they could not understand how my days could be "prolonged"; how I could come again, and, finally, "be satisfied"; which however could not be fully understood by men until these the latter days of prophesied events, and they "come to pass," and ye see them. I now come to those who look for my second coming, and the promised kingdom, in a way just as natural as was my first coming; but different from what many have been looking for; and many consequently will reject me in their turn, as did my people; and some of my people will receive me now, as I said, "Many that are first shall be last, and the last first." To you who look for me last, I come first; and some of you will receive me; and afterward some of my nation also will be gathered with you, and I will lead you safely.

I have chosen thee, if thee will, to begin the gathering of the faithful, the true and the free; begin on a free, broad, universal platform, and fear not the result; on such only can ye be united and successful. Thee must begin first privately and cautiously to call together a few of the leading servants, of thy brethren, who can be relied upon as true to the cause, and consult together privately as to the mode of organizing and operating harmoniously and safely until you get under way. Ye may consult with the following named persons, or some of them who will, concerning the man and his propositions before referred to, and afterwards with all who may be favorable to such a cause. As long as ye can, do all things quietly, privately, unknown to the public:—Mrs. F. O. Hyzer, Miss Emma Hardinge, Mrs. Amanda M. Spence, Rev. M. Taylor, L. Judd Pardee, and Leo Miller,† whose notices as speakers appear in the "Banner of Light." Editor of "New Republic" ‡ is to be chosen also, if he will, to work hand in hand with thee and thy brethren in the immediate cause of reform in your land. Many others are ready and waiting for the beginning movement. As the Father did not design man to lead in this movement, all have necessarily been restraining their desires, holding back for him whom God would send to them in his own good time; whom they knew not, and how they knew not; yet they looked for some one as a necessary instrument among mortals, through whom the Father would do his will in the earth, and through whom my mission may be finished.

Let not sectarianism, partyism, or any other isms, be brought into question among you, but organize on a purely national foundation, that all may rest safely and harmoniously thereon. If men believe not in me, but will be true to God and to the cause of freedom, they will nevertheless be with us in the immediate struggle to accomplish that which is necessary as preparation for future and more glorious results, which ye look for. Remember that "the truth maketh free indeed;" therefore for the time be content. Hesitate not; the time for action has arrived; be not afraid to begin the mission assigned thee. God and I will be with thee, and numberless hosts of angels will be with ye all. Be careful who thee will show this writing to, to avoid any imposition and confusion by imitation and false pretension. Great caution will be needed to keep out designing, false and disunionizing men. "A house divided against itself cannot stand." All the instructions that will be wanted and needed from time to time will be given in a manner hereafter to be adopted, for safety, in case of miscarriage, &c., of mails. Believe and act.

The world's servant through his chosen instrument, JESUS.

Oct. 21st, 1862.

* NOTE.—Instruct the leading servants of thy brethren everywhere, wherever there be one, to inform the brethren that I, Christ, have manifested myself in a way that ye did not look for, and that henceforth I will guide you; and that they shall in a quiet manner make it known to all men, so that the "idea" may be impressed upon the minds of your opposers and enemies, and their minds thereby be prepared to receive "the fact" of my appearing, with proper effect, when that event transpires; for then the scale will turn in your favor, and not till then. Further instructions will be given in due time, as the need is indicated by the action taken by you, my faithful servants.

[† These are prominent Spiritualists. I had a discussion with the latter in Plymouth, Mass. He made sport of the great truths of the Bible.—ED.

‡ The following is from the New Republic of Oct. 4th. It speaks for itself:—

"But this book [the Bible]—this worshiped and reverenced guide—is like a post by the road side, which should point every way for the same place! It teaches goodness, but it also teaches all kinds of wickedness. It enjoins peace, charity, kindness, justice and love; also war, hate, injustice, revenge and murder! It proclaims liberty to all, and also slavery and the worst forms of despotism. It enjoins temperance, also intemperance and drunkenness. It enjoins purity, chastity, celibacy, monogamy, polygamy, adultery, rape, and the grossest sensuality! I challenge denial. No wonder it takes forty thousand hireling pettifoggers, in these States, to keep it in repute; to gloss over its startling deformities and immoralities; and to bind the aspirations and genius of revolving ages to the jargon of an old priest-begotten book of fables and crude puerilities. L. C. TODD."

Predictions.

The following predictions appear in the Herald of Progress, Oct. 11th, '62. The demons may know from the prophetic scriptures that "the end of all things is at hand;" hence they profess to foretell coming events; and when they come to pass, their dupes think the light originated with these seducing spirits, who tell us Jesus is never coming back in person, and that there is no resurrection of the dead.

"Pestilence and famine to afflict the South.—Remarkable signs are given to the effect that great distress and sickness will visit the cities, towns, camps, and populous places in the Southern States during the summer and autumn of 1863. Let your Herald give the warning voice! There should be military and political action with reference to the visitation of these dire calamities. Northern harvests this year are more abundant than they will be for two years to come. Parts of the South will be threatened with a terrible famine, and northern fields and northern industry and benevolence will be greatly overtaxed. Thousands of sufferers by disease and hunger may be saved from victimization by timely political and military precautions.

Opening of the seventh seal in 1862–'63.—It is ascertained that the medium who wrote the Book of Revelations was not destitute of the prophetic faculty, although it is possible that his organ of time was not under the full torrent of heavenly inspiration. He wrote with the fearful eloquence of an impulsive prompting from the upper world. His language has electrified millions with joyful news and prophecies of terrible import. The battle of Michael, with the Dragon and his angels, was begun about five years ago, and the conclusion of the national changes described will be visible in one year more. In 1863 the full import of divine retributive dispensations will be openly manifested. Those who welcome Justice as a bride and Freedom as a bridegroom will remember 1863 as the greatest, grandest, happiest, and most terrible year in the political history of America."

New Tracts.

Report of the R. I. Quar. Conf.

WESTERLY, SEPT. 24TH, 1862.

Wednesday, 2 P. M. Conference met according to appointment. Prayer was offered by Eld. James Lee. The minutes of the last conference were called for, read and accepted. Brethren were called upon to report from the churches. The Clerk reported from the church at River Point, R. I. No special interest there at present. Prayer meetings—three or four a week—quite interesting—some five or six added to the church since last conference, and some dropped off. Brethren that did not belong to the conference were invited to take a part with us.

Bro. Peter Noka reported his labors—been at Lafayette and at Central Village church. Omens of good—hoped some of the brethren would stop there on their way. Should be rejoiced to see souls coming out from the world. Bro. P. C. Rodman reported. Came home from last conference—heard Bro. Simmons preach at Rocky Brook—did them good. Been at Exeter—found them holding fast to the faith—thought they were gaining in numbers and in strength. Hoped the church at R. B. would come up out of the state they are now in—which he called almost helpless—felt that the Lord would bless them if they followed the truthful course. Thought the way to the kingdom was through great tribulation.

Bro. Samuel Hancock reported. Been at Westerly some eight Sundays since last conference—thought the church was on gaining ground—they loved to walk before God. He could say with Bro. Hastings, he was the Lord's. Bro. Joseph Northup reported. At W. most of the time. Thought the church was gaining ground. Been at Carolina Mills some. Glad to be here. As for himself he was aiming for the kingdom—bound to sacrifice all for God.

Bro. J. T. Dixon reported. Tried to preach the word of the Lord—thought the church was not so much engaged as they might be at Carolina Mills. Brethren that had not walked together in times past, seemed united now. Thought he should meet in the large Conference. Could say, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Bro. J. D. Brown reported his labors. Thought he could find some persons on the rock, who when storms came did not tremble. Church in Providence did not send delegate—somewhat few and feeble. Prayer meetings held at private places—had heavenly seasons—some there he had confidence would bear the reproach of the world. His labors had been but half in the field. No less determined to be servant of church. Hoped he should be able to give himself wholly to the ministry—been praying for a door to open.

Bro. Bellows reported. Was not at the last conference. Since that time had been moving round. Had not seen much effort—been at places where there seemed to be indications of good. Glad to be here—was willing to go where the Lord called him—hoped this conference would be a blessing to all, and that he should meet them in the great Conference.

Bro. A. Durfee reported. Had but little to say. Labored at the old place—about the same thing. Been at River Point—been refreshed in their meetings—could not tell what the interest was at Clarks' Mills. His object was to preach the truth and nothing but the truth—had pleasure in doing it—could not do it so much as he would like to—wanted to do more the coming year—did not know how it would be—was determined to serve the Lord. Hoped the blessing of God would rest on this conference and on the church.

Bro. Bracket, from Abington church, did not come as a delegate. Church requested Bro. Jones to send a letter. He had thought interest increased—had three meetings during the week—church small—thought there were some good souls—they were determined to meet in the Kingdom. Requested the Conference to meet there the next session, if it seemed to be duty.

Bro. James Lee, of Long Island, was called on to report. He desired to do God's will—labors confined to small circle—had reasons to rejoice—thought it was best to continue though they be few—held conference meetings—been five converted to God, he hoped—desired the prayers of christians that he might be enabled to gain the kingdom.

Bro. I. Potter, from Stafford, Ct., was called upon to report. Was not here as a delegate—felt blessed already—lived fifty miles from here. There were some there determined to face the storm, day in and day out. He met at the Axe Factory for worship—quite a number of good brethren there, who felt an interest in the coming Kingdom. Had the pleasure of preaching to a few at Muddy Brook—chance of doing good. Brethren Simmons and Jones had been there—congregations increasing—indications of good. Two sisters started the meetings there. He was willing to do what he could for the Lord.

Eld. Durfee offered the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved, That this Conference recommend to the churches of the Advent faith, and especially those connected with this conference, to take a deeper interest in the subject of Sabbath Schools.

2. Resolved, That we as members and ministers of the R. I. Conference of reformers will (God willing) labor more for the salvation of children in and out of the Sabbath School than we have done heretofore.

They were laid on the table until Thursday morning.

7.30 P. M. Met for prayer and conference. Had a refreshing time—felt it was good to be there. 8 P M. Preaching by Eld. E. Bellows, from Rom. 10: 1. Thursday morning, 9 o'clock. The report of the Treasurer was called for, read and accepted. Bro. Durfee's Resolutions were called for and read. Remarks in regard to Sabbath Schools were made by several of the brethren, and the Resolutions were passed.

Bro. Bellows moved that the church at Westerly be invited to join the conference. Passed. Bro. Bellows moved that a committee of two be appointed to act with the Chairman in selecting Preachers for this conference. It was passed. Brn. J. P. Babcock and Edmund Slocum were chosen as a committee for said purpose. Bro. Irving Potter and Edwin Straight offered themselves as candidates for ordination for the ministry. They were accepted.

6.30 A. M. Met for social meeting, after which Brn. Irving Potter and Edwin Straight were ordained for the ministry. 8 P. M. Eld. Durfee preached from Acts 19: 20, 21.

Friday, 9 A. M. Prayer by Bro. Hancock. Bro. Albert Sweet reported from Exeter church—striving together for the faith—Lord blessed them by an addition of one to the church. Eld. Edwin Wood pastor. Bro. Nathaniel Lewis reported from the church at Carolina Mills—trying to keep along—members few—have preaching two or three times a month—prayer meetings not so interesting as they might be—war spirit around them had rather a depressing influence.

Bro. David Hopkins, from the church in Foster, reported. Seemed to keep along same as they had in the past. Meetings interesting, both prayer and preaching. Church in pretty good state—some lately united with them—thought they stood on pretty good ground generally, as they love one another. Church close by. Some of them lately embraced the truths that we hold dear. Things looked bright.

The church at Westerly requested to join the conference—they were accepted. Moved, That the church at Carolina Mills be invited to join this conference by delegate, if it saw fit. It was passed. Moved, That the church at Rocky Brook be invited to join this conference—Bro. Rango carry the message. Passed. Bro. Hancock requested to become a member of the conference, afterwards withdrew his request. Brn. James Lee and Irving Potter were invited to join, and did so. Moved and seconded that the churches at Warwick Plains and Gloucester be invited to join this conference,—that the Clerk send a letter to said churches. Passed. Moved, That Preachers failing to attend the conference should send letters. Passed.

It was voted that the following question be discussed at the next session of this conference. Resolved, That the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments make the observance of the seventh day Sabbath obligatary on all churches of God as long as time lasts.

Bro. Robert Rounds arrived from Central Village church—reported quite an interest—prayer meetings full—had to move to the Hall—one requested prayers.

Arrived home—found two letters at the Office, one from D. A. Jones, representing the Abington church, saying that they were in a healthy condition. He supplies the desk one half of the time—meetings on the Sabbath attended with some apparent interest—prayer meetings well attended—thought they ought to be highly commended (especially in these days of covetousness), for they have a care for those that watch over them in spiritual things, and see to it that they are cared for in temporal things. One letter from Jennie D. Roberts, representing the church at Danielsonville since last conference. Have had some additions to the church, both in numbers and strength—prayer meetings been attended with much interest and profit of late. Two have seen their unsafe position out of Christ, and found peace in accepting him for their Savior; others are under conviction. We are anxious that they too may renounce the world, with its anti-gospel affections, and accept Christ as their Savior. Felt sorry that none were to attend from D. Several of the brethren had been to campmeeting—just held a protracted meeting—felt it duty to stay at home.

It was voted that the conference meet at Abington the last Wednesday in December, 1862, at 2 P. M.

Preaching brethren present:—Elds. E. Bellows, P. C. Rodman, J. T. Dixon, J. Northup, P. Noka, A. Durfee, S. Hancock, James Lee, J. D. Brown, I. V. Potter, E. Straight, D. O. Hopkins.

For the Crisis.

Eld. Himes' Mission.

At the regular prayer meeting held in the Hudson Street Chapel, Wednesday evening, Oct. 22d, 1862, the departure of Eld. Himes on a mission tour to the West became the leading topic, on which remarks were made by Brn. Fassett, Hale, Leslie, and others, in which Bro. Himes was most heartily, and by common consent referred to and endorsed as the missionary of this church, of which he has been so long pastor. The following letter of commendation having been presented and adopted, on motion it was voted that it be signed by the deacons, and published in the Advent Herald and World's Crisis.

LETTER OF COMMENDATION.

The Hudson Street Church of Advent Believers in Boston having secured, in Bro. Fassett, a pastor in which we feel bound gratefully to acknowledge the good hand of our God, we take this opportunity to congratulate our brethren and friends of the cause abroad, that the health of our old pastor, Eld. J. V. Himes, has become so renewed that he can devote himself, with his usual energy and faithfulness, to supplying the numerous calls from the great field in which he has so long labored; and to express our unabated confidence in him, as he is now about to leave us for a distant part of that field, and to commend him to the confidence, sympathy and co-operation of all Adventists and others, wherever the door may be opened for him to labor. We believe God has called him to this work, and that he is in all respects reliable and fully devoted to its advocacy and defence.

And it is due to him to state that, as he holds no official relation to any of the organized Advent bodies which would afford him a support, his outlay for the publications which he distributes, for traveling and family expenses, requires that the christian law—"the laborer is worthy of his hire"—should be remembered, that he may be sustained, as he is worthy, by those with whom he labors.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Perham.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I have just been reading that noble paper, called the Crisis; and I am so much elated at the contents, especially those excellent letters from our dear brethren and sisters, that I am obliged to acknowledge that I think it is the best religious publication in the world; for I believe it contains the most real truth of any newspaper or christian publication of the kind, in Christendom; and I would kindly ask any brother or sister in Christ, how can you do without it? Are there not many things that you indulge in, that you could do without better than to do without the Crisis? Certainly, dear brethren, we cannot forward the cause of truth, in relation to the coming kingdom of the Messiah, in any other way than to do all we are able to circulate the most noble paper that ever was printed; and it is my humble prayer to God, that he would prosper every effort to establish the truth of the soon coming kingdom.

Brattleboro, Vt.

From Bro. N. F. Nason.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I preached at Weeks Mills, Sept. 21st, in the Union house. Had a good time. Your discussion with Fletcher did good. I had the privilege of reading his wonderful review. There was present a Methodist sister. I was reading privately. When I got to this sentence, "A boy twelve years old could have done all that he has done," I stopped, and asked the sister if she heard the discussion? "Yes." What did you think of it? "F. did not do any thing." If your statement is true, what do you think of this declaration,—"Any boy twelve years old could have done all that he has done?" "Any boy ought to have done all that Fletcher did." Can any boy beat F. in falsehoods? "I do not know that he could."

I next talked with a Spiritualist who heard the whole debate. He said, "F. did not understand the subject, and could not do any thing with Grant; and that G. was a gentleman."

Obituary Notices.

Killed at the battle of Antietam Creek, Sept. 17th, W. P. ORVILLE CAMPBELL, Ord'y. Serg't. of Co. I. 16th Conn. Reg., and youngest son of W. S. and Paulina D. Campbell, of New Britain, Ct., aged nineteen years.

The deceased was a young man of much promise and of an unblemished reputation, respected and beloved by all who knew him, and by his sudden death the fondest hopes are blighted, and the family of Bro. C. deeply afflicted. Sadness reigns over the broken circle, and the vacant seat at the table and fireside remind the sorrowing ones that the dutiful son and affectionate brother has gone, to return no more.

In his childhood Orville was converted to God, and with his brothers and young sister was, in Dec. 1854, baptized by Bro. S. S. Brazee, at Chester Factories, Mass. Through after years he ever retained a deep interest in and love for the great truths and hope of the gospel.

For some months past he felt it to be his duty to engage in the service of his country in this hour of her peril, and conscientiously he went forth, well knowing his life might be sacrificed in the struggle. But a few short weeks was he engaged in the work, yet his duties were faithfully performed, and in that time he won the hearts of all his company, who testify to his many good qualities, his consistent life and daily perusal of the Scriptures.

He was buried on the battle-field, but through the affection and untiring efforts of an elder brother (also in the army,) he was disenterred, embalmed, and removed to New Britain, where, on the afternoon of Oct. 8th, just three weeks from the day he fell, he was followed by many mourning friends and hundreds of sympathizing citizens to the village cemetery, and laid away to rest in hope, as we trust, till the voice of the Life-giver shall call him from his slumbers.

God speed the day when the sound of war and violence shall no more be heard in the land, wasting nor destruction within our borders; when tears and mourning, separation and death be known no more forever.

O death! thou enemy of man—
Thou king of terrors! art thou insatiate
Ever? Still holdest thou thy revels 'mid
Broken, anguished hearts, draping the earth
Itself with weeds of deepest mourning?
Behold! thy Victor cometh, and thine hour
Of final doom; for lo! thy sentence is Recorded, "and death itself shall die;"
While shouting myriads shall take up the song,—
"O death, where is thy sting, and where, O grave, Thy boasted victory?"

LOUISA J. BEACH.

Died at Boulesville, Mt. Holly, Vt., Oct. 14th, 1862, of typhoid fever and diphtheria, ALVIN JACKSON, son of Bro. Rufus Jackson of the same place, aged twenty-eight years.

Death found its victim among the newly enlisted militia volunteers of Vermont, a promising young man, the idol of parental hearts, the beloved of all who knew him. He sickened from the damp chill of camp life ere he had left his native State,—hastened home, but to die after a brief period of severe suffering, leaving a large circle of stricken hearts to mourn his early fall. The writer addressed a large concourse of people on the occasion of his burial, from Job 14: 14.

H. F. C.

Died in the Louisville Hospital, No. 3d Kentucky, Jan. 25th, 1862, of typhoid fever, EDWARD R. SWEET, aged eighteen years. He enlisted in the 2nd Reg. of Minn. Vol. to serve his country. I learn by his surgeon that he died a believer in Christ, and in hope of a bright immortality in the resurrection from the dead. We listened to an able and appropriate discourse, delivered Sept. 23d, to a large and attentive congregation, by our much esteemed Sister Matilda Bowel, from Ezk. 24: 16,—"Son of man, behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke.

ELD. WM. SWEET.

Died in Manchester, N. H., Oct. 2nd, of diphtheria, ARDONO P. BROCK, son of John P. and Eliza A. Brock, aged four years.

Married.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Steamship Kangaroo, we have advices from Liverpool to the 9th inst. Queenstown 10th.

Mr. Gladstone's strong language regarding the South continues to be the prominent theme.

It is asserted that the British and French governments have lost no time in announcing their resolution to persist in their policy of perfect neutrality. It is also asserted that there is a likelihood of immediate recognition.

Sir John Packington, in a speech, said he thought the time had come when England, France, and possibly Russia might offer mediation in America on the basis of separation, with the understanding that if mediation was not accepted, recognition must follow.

Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, in a speech, said he looked upon the restoration of the Union as impossible, and that the Union could not long survive a separation.

The Daily News editorially disputes the idea that the South would willingly, in the event of a separation, concede any of the border States, and adduces evidence tending to prove quite the contrary.

The Morning Post draws a parallel between Lincoln's government and that of the Ex-King of Naples, and charges Lincoln's proceedings with closely resembling those which preceded the downfall of Napoleon's throne. It says Francis of Naples failed by pursuing a similar course. Why should Abraham of America succeed?

Garibaldi has been notified of the Royal amnesty. He goes shortly to Genoa.

It is reported that Garibaldi, in accepting the terms of the amnesty, reserved the right of protesting against it.

Advices from Italy say Garibaldi is about to issue another manifesto that he will still endeavor to carry out his project of taking Rome.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Oct. 21. The Herald's Washington dispatch says the pressure for a forward movement is becoming almost general. It is urged with an earnestness that never has been equaled. The argument is used that a protraction of our present inactivity will ruin the country.

The Times' dispatch has the following. A gentlemen who left Culpepper county, Va., on last Wednesday, says rebel conscripts are pouring constantly into Winchester.

Seventeen negroes were hung there on the 11th inst., charged with organizing an insurrection against the whites. Copies of the Washington National Republican, containing the President's proclamation of emancipation, were found among them. The conspiracy, our informant says, is supposed to extend throughout several counties, and the greatest excitement and fear prevails of an outbreak among the negroes. The inhabitants of the counties where the insubordination exists threaten to resist the conscription act, on the plea of self-defence, to protect themselves against the negroes. Two-thirds of the slaves in Virginia have already heard of President Lincoln's proclamation and know that they are free, and the people think that should the rebel army retreat from its present position another Nat Turner rebellion would occur in Eastern Central Virginia.

A Washington correspondent of the New York Times says that reason exists for the belief that our European relations are at present in a more delicate condition than has been supposed. He also says

"Private letters from diplomatists in Paris indicate a suspicion that a French armada, with fifty thousand men on board, and convoyed by the invincible iron-clad frigate La Gloire, although ostensibly being organized for service against Mexico, will, under sealed orders, to be opened when half way across the Atlantic, assume a northerly direction, and finally appear off the mouth of the Mississippi, under the pretext of asking a settlement of the act complained of against Gen. Butler by the French Consul-General at New Orleans."

The Wilmington Journal of the 13th inst has the following account of the fearful ravages of yellow fever in that place

"We had hoped that, although the epidemic now raging here had by Friday last reached an unprecedented extent, as regards the number of cases, that the worst of the mortality was over. And it might have been so but for the violent change in the temperature which occurred on Saturday night

About ten o'clock on Saturday night a cold rain came on, with but little lightning, and the thermometer fell rapidly, almost immediately, some sixteen degrees

The effect upon over five hundred cases of yellow fever may be imagined. The mortality on Saturday night and Sunday exceeded anything that had been known since the epidemic commenced, or since Wilmington was a town. Coffins, coffins, was the great want, and so continues. Coffins cannot be obtained as fast as people die. Drip, drip, from the leaden sky. Death and sickness all around—this last Sunday, to which we had looked forward with some hope, was the gloomiest and saddest of all the days we have yet seen.

We cannot to-day obtain any report of the interments at the cemetery, and the doctors do not generally report the deaths, but we feel convinced that the number of deaths since our last report will not fall short of thirty, if it does not greatly exceed that number. The number of new cases on Saturday was fifty-three; on Sunday forty.

New York, Oct 25. The Times' Sharpsburg dispatch says indications of a speedy movement are apparent. Orders were issued to the various commands last night to prepare for an advance by daylight this morning.

Oct. 24. A correspondent writing from Bolivar Hights states that more than half of the army is now under the command of Major Gen Burnside.

A special dispatch from Louisville states: Those that have heretofore styled the battle of Perrysville a Union success, are sadly mistaken. It was a terrible and wholly fruitless waste of life and property. Official returns from all the divisions engaged show an aggregate loss of 820 killed, 2585 wounded, and nearly 500 missing and prisoners. The enemy captured 11 guns during the battle, but abandoned them in a disabled condition upon their retreat on Thursday morning, except two Napoleon guns, in place of which they left two smooth bore 6 pounders. After a careful investigation, I have become satisfied that the rebel loss does not exceed two-thirds of ours. Between 600 and 700 of their dead were buried by us, and about 1300 wounded remained in our hands.

All accounts from Mobile say that the greatest determination exists on the part of the people of Mobile, in the event of the city being attacked by the Federals, to fight it out to the bitter end. Private advices all agree in this, and in representing that, even if the forts guarding Mobile are taken, the citizens will stand out until the last man falls. A dispatch from Washington to the Philadelphia Ledger, says: "The fears expressed by the Richmond journals of an attack on Mobile are well grounded, and before many weeks elapse, the blow will fall. That the Mobilians have made every effort to render it unsuccessful is well known, and from the accounts received here I am inclined to believe that if we are successful it will be only after a most sanguinary struggle."

A Washington letter in the New York Journal of Commerce says that a large number of troops will spend the coming winter in Washington, is proven by the fact that the Government has issued proposals for more than a million feet of lumber. And as several leading lumber merchants of the District are known to be bitter secessionists, it is announced that proposals from disloyal persons will not be considered; and each proposition must be accompanied by an oath of allegiance to the United States. The Government is also in want of a large number of stoves.

It is estimated that Bragg has carried out of Kentucky at least ten thousand horses, immense quantities of corn, beef and bacon, and three thousand wagons.

A special dispatch to the Herald, dated Cincinnati, 24th, says: I have it on good authority that the Governors of the loyal States are to assemble in Convention at Washington in the early part of next week for the purpose first, of demanding the removal of Major General McClellan and the appointment of a new commander of the army of the Potomac; second, the removal of Gen. Buell from the command of the army of Kentucky; third, to urge a more vigorous prosecution of the war, the immediate advance of the army of the Potomac, the enforcement of the confiscation act, and the treatment of rebels in arms as traitors. No more troops are to be furnished by the States until these demands are complied with.

Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 27. Upon inquiry we learn that Governor Curtin has no knowledge whatever upon the subject of another meeting of the Governors at Washington. The whole story is believed to be a canard.

New York, Oct 27. The Tribune's special Harper's Ferry dispatch, dated 26th, says the citizens from Winchester, who came into our lines to-day, confirm the previous reports that the rebels have evacuated that place and fallen back toward Staunton.

The Express professes to have reliable information from semi-official circles in Europe that England and France have decided upon a recognition of the Southern Confederacy, if the joint offers of mediation and armistice for four or six months to be proposed to Mr. Seward are not accepted. They fear a slave insurrection in the South (says the Express) after the first of January, and it is to afford their own citizens residing there ample protection under the aegis of their regularly appointed agents, that England and France will claim the necessity of recognizing the new Confederacy.

The Times' Washington dispatch says we have intelligence from the South, through sources entitled to credit, that the rebels have really determined upon the dangerous policy of arming the negroes.

In Atlanta, Montgomery and other cities, it is said, negro regiments are already organized and supplied with weapons.

A recent North Carolina newspaper states that about 8000 blacks, officered by white men, have been sent from camps of instruction to garrison fortifications and important towns.

ITEMS.

☞ A report prevails in Ulster County that in 1860 a deranged woman, while being conveyed to the Insane Asylum, threw up her hands and said: "In eighteen sixty-one the war will be begun; in eighteen sixty-two we'll have all we can do; in eighteen sixty-three we'll all be free! Glory to God!"

☞ The French have made a treaty with the Cochin Chinese, securing to the former the splendid port of Saigon, and a belt of territory fifty miles into the interior.

☞ It is announced that the marriage of the Prince of Wales with the Princess Alexandrina of Denmark will take place next spring.

☞ There are 25,000 operatives in Manchester England, out of work, on account of the scarcity and high price of cotton.

☞ Eight millions and a half in number of internal revenue stamps were distributed last week. This does not meet the demand in any material degree.

☞ Extensive orders for iron-clad vessels are now in course of execution in England for the Russian Government.

Tour to California.

By the will of God, I shall make a tour in the State of California in the course of the coming year. Cannot fix the time now. But I wish all persons in California, interested in my visit, to address me, Boston, Mass., or Bro. Jesse Jewell, Petaluma, Cal., on the subject. Each will state what they will do to sustain me in the mission, that I may make arrangements accordingly, to meet expenses. Bro. Jewell and others have expressed their wish for a visit, which I had contemplated. Let me hear soon, and on my return from the West I shall be able to decide on the time.

Sheldon, Merrimack, Wis. I intend to have an assortment of our best books at the meeting; and Bro. Himes will have a quantity of the "Voice" bound, the Lyre, and other valuable productions. For the Crisis.

The Happy Land.

"Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear, for the time is at hand."—REV. 1: 3.

We hear of a land that is fair and bright,
We hear of the new city of gems,
We hear of a throne that is pure and white,
There the King in his beauty shall reign.
We hear of a time when the poor of this earth
Shall be rich in the Kingdom of God;
We hear for the meek there will be a new birth
By the Spirit that quickened our Lord.

We hear that the living will also be changed,
In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye;
We hear that Diabolus will then be chained,
No more the pure spirits to try.
We hear that the kingdoms of this age shall fall,
Soon they'll sink to rise no more;
That Christ the King shall reign o'er all,
And sway the sceptre from shore to shore.

We hear that the mighty men of earth
Shall gather in battle array;
They gather from north, east, west and south,
To the battle of Armageddon's day.
The nations are angry! Is Thy wrath come?
The dead to be judged, the wheat and the tare;
Thy children to enter their long happy home,
The corrupt of the earth their portion to share?

We read of the blessed who escape that last storm,
They soar with their Lord upon high;
They are "pilgrims," but to Jesus belong;
They live, they never, no, never shall die.
We read! yes, blessed are they that do read,
And thrice blessed they who obey,
Such from the trials of earth will be freed,
And blessed of the Lord in that day.

S. K. GIBSON.

For the Crisis.

Butler Co. Grove Meeting, Iowa.

The day our meeting was to begin (Aug. 29th), was lowery and wet. Nothing done. Saturday the Protestant Methodists had a quarterly meeting at New Hartford at the same time, and occupied the school-house. So Bro. Deyo and myself went to them and proposed a union meeting, and all to come together at the school-house, if the weather was unfavorable for a grove meeting; if fair, to meet in the grove; and Bro. Deyo was to preach Saturday evening at the school-house, and then to announce the arrangements for the next day. One Methodist brother was present to make the arrangement. He announced that they would meet for love-feast at 9 o'clock, A. M., preaching at 10 1-2, and then communion, and we could have the rest all day. We saw from the arrangement, and from the fact that there were no Methodists out at the evening meeting, that there was no union, and that they had been advised to keep away. Sunday the school-house was filled, and a good congregation assembled in the grove. Bro. Deyo went to invite them to retire to the grove, and hear preaching; but they made excuses and would not go. So he told them as there was a congregation assembled in the grove, he would go and preach to them; so we had two meetings at the same time. Sunday evening Bro. Deyo preached at the school-house. The Episcopal Methodists came in. Their preacher taking exceptions, asked me if I "endorsed those views?" I told him "I did." Whereupon he remarked that it was "an easy matter for good men to differ," and that he "did not believe them." He said he "could prove by the Bible that the soul existed separate from the body, and is immortal," etc. I replied, "Perhaps you would like to discuss the question?" "Yes," he said, he would "discuss the subject as long as we pleased." Whereupon I told Bro. Deyo that they had challenged us for a debate; he also reported that we had challenged them; so we came together to agree upon the question, etc., and they charged me with making the challenge, and I told them if I had, I had done it inadvertently, and withdrew the challenge. The Bro. said he should review Bro. Deyo as soon as he was gone. And as several misrepresentations had already been made, Bro. Deyo and Conser thought that they had better meet them and debate the question before they left.

Saturday evening, Sept. 6th, they threw in an appointment for Sunday morning, at nine o'clock, A. M. Some of our brethren supposed we were all to meet there. Eld. H. H. Janes and some others met with them. They opened their batteries upon us, and briskly assailed our views, misrepresenting us, and asking several questions. Whereupon Bro. Conser, a young student from near Dubuque, who had left his school to attend our meeting, answered some of their questions, and then asked the liberty of answering more. His answers were clear and logical, right to the point, astonishing all who heard them, both friends and foes; he slew them right and left, as Sampson did the Philistines. The discussion was carried on by their champions who were on their way to conference, and others, and Bro. Conser alone on our side; but our cause was ably defended by this school boy, who but two years since enlisted in the cause of truth.

At the close of the afternoon service, Bro. Deyo led one happy convert into the water, and buried her with Christ in baptism; and after sermon, in the evening, two tables were spread, and the brethren and sisters sat around to celebrate the death and sufferings of our Lord. How solemn to look at the empty chair placed at the head of the table for our departed Lord! After which the right hand of fellowship was extended to our young sister, and Sr. P., wife of the Rev. A. Converse. This was done by singing an appropriate [illegible] each extending the hand of fellowship to the sisters as they passed. This was a melting and refreshing time.

Monday met Rev. L. D. Tracy, who agreed to debate (or furnish a man that would) the following questions:—

I. Resolved, That the conscious existence of the soul of man immediately after the death of the body is a Bible doctrine.

II. Resolved, That the punishment of the finally wicked will result in the extinction of their conscious being.

III. Resolved, That Jesus Christ is the supreme God of the universe.

Resolved, That the kingdom of God is not now established.

Rules of Debate.—1. The disputants shall treat each other with christian courtesy. 2. There shall be no new argument presented in the closing speech. 3. The debate shall occupy two successive evenings upon each question. 4. Each party shall choose a moderator, and they shall choose a third one. 5. There shall be no demonstrations or expressions during debate. 6. Thirty minutes shall be allowed to each speaker.

The first question was debated upon the evenings of the 8th and 9th of Sept. The other three questions were adjourned until the first Tuesday in Nov. next. Rev. Mr. Tracy went to Cedar Falls, and engaged the services of the Rev. Mr. Bowman, late chaplain of the army of the Potomac, both Episcopal Methodists. They vauntingly offered to meet any man or men Bro. Deyo had a mind to send for, either Lyons, Grant, or Dr. Cummings of London, anywhere in the circle of a hundred miles, and debate the balance of the questions.

BOWMAN'S FIRST SPEECH.

Matt. 10: 28. "Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." Prov. 5: 11, 12. Heb. "God is a spirit." He then brought forward the argument of amputation, showing it did not affect the soul, and that the body was the clothing, or house the soul lived in, or tabernacle for the spiritual man. Isa. 57: 1-4, and Jude 7. "ARE" "suffering the vengeance of eternal fire:" commenting freely upon the words "are" and "suffering." 2 Cor. 5: 1, 2, "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved." This he called the body. Phil. 1: 23, 24. Paul's "desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." His soul wanted to go to heaven. Luke 23: 43. "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Paradise was in heaven. Rev. 6: 9. "Souls under the altar." They were in heaven. "The rich man and Lazarus." Literal facts.

DEYO'S FIRST SPEECH.

Made his opening, and met the arguments manfully; first, by quoting Matt. 16: 26. "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" or LIFE; then showed, by Luke 9: 25, that soul was put for the man himself. "For what is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be a castaway?" Prov. 5: 11, 12. We need only to read the context, and all is plain. "God is a spirit." Here he showed according to orthodoxy, from their own definitions, that there is no God. They teach that he is "without body or parts." Then that "there are three persons of one substance." Just declared him to be without body or parts; yet they are of one substance. Met the argument of amputation by Fowler, showing that the brain was the seat of the mind, and let the brain of either of the organs be removed, the man would be an idiot upon that particular organ, or part.

Jude 9. "ARE suffering." Showed that the word "ARE," upon which was placed so much stress, was not in the Bible. Hence the meaning was entirely changed by adding "are" to the sentence. The position was false. Asked if Paul had two houses—one earthly and another in heaven? If he could not rent one of them while he occupied the other? Luke 23: 43. "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." If paradise was in heaven, it was three days afterwards, Jesus said unto Mary, "touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father." Also that Jesus died upon Thursday, about three o'clock, P. M., and the thief not until the next day; hence they were not in heaven that day together. Rev. 6: 9. "Souls under the altar." Asked if they had altars in heaven? and if those immortal souls were clothed in white robes, and cried in heaven? The idea was absurd.

BOWMAN'S SECOND SPEECH.

The soul is immortal, cannot be hurt any more than the sunbeam that shines through a crevice can be harmed by the falling of a building. Man has a soul and can lose it. John 11: 26. "And whoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." The soul cannot die. Acts 7: 60. Stephen died, and his soul went up to God. "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." That he was now in heaven.

CONSER'S FIRST SPEECH.

Took up the words soul and spirit, and showed that they were never in the Bible used interchangeably in all the 400 passages in the Old, and the 385 in the New Testament. He followed Bro. Grant's work—"The Spirit in Man; What is it?" or at least took the same position. He showed himself "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." "Whosoever liveth (until the Lord comes) and believeth in me, shall never die," but he "changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye."—1 Cor. 15: 51, 52.

BOWMAN'S THIRD SPEECH.

Here Mr. Bowman took the desk for the third time that evening, regardless of the rules and the protestations of Bro. Deyo and Conser. An appeal was made to the Moderator, who read the rules of debate, and decided that there was nothing in them to prohibit his speaking again if he chose; yet it was the agreement that but two hours were to be occupied in speaking each evening, and was omitted by mistake from the rules. Hence he proceeded in a harangue of unwarrantable assertions, and abuse of Miller and all Adventists, quoting poets instead of Bible. Yea, he nearly destroyed all that he had done in his other two arguments, in the minds of the people. He said all parables were founded on facts.

DEYO'S SECOND SPEECH.

[Bro. Deyo rose to reply, but, upon a moment's reflection, deferred speaking until the next evening] Deyo showed by Judges 9: 8-15, "The trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them."—Ezk. 17: 2-10. "Son of man, put forth a riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel." Proved that all parables were not founded on facts. Showed that Jesus loves us, whether dead or alive. Rom. 8: 11; Job 10: 18-22, and 14: 7-15. "Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee. Thou wilt have a desire to the work of thy hands." Job 19: 23-27. "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth." He then showed that man violated God's law, the penalty of which was death, and was driven from the garden of Eden, and a flaming sword placed there to keep man from eating of the tree of life, "and live forever" an immortal sinner. Consequently man was mortal, and only gets immortality through Christ.

BOWMAN'S FOURTH SPEECH.

Opened his speech by calling us Sadducees, who shut up the door to heaven, etc. Repeated some of his former arguments, and said that Job was combating and refuting infidels as he was now. To die was to go into a state of eternal suffering, where "their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

CONSER'S SECOND SPEECH.

Resumed the chain of his former argument. Ps. 78: 50. "Spared not their soul from DEATH." Death is not life, but the very opposite. Ps. 49: 12. "Man being in honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish." Ps. 146: 4. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Eccl. 9: 5, 6. "For the living know that they shall die: but dead know not anything:" Then if their "soul dies," "like the beasts that perish," "that very day his thoughts perish." "The dead know not anything." Then where is the conscious existence of the soul after the death of the body?

BOWMAN'S FIFTH SPEECH.

Did not say all parables, but all the parables of our Lord were founded on facts. Takes the rich man and Lazarus as it reads. Eccl. was using up infidel doctrine, also Ps. 73. It is no matter whether Christ comes to-morrow, next year, or ten million of years from now. The flaming sword was placed to keep the way of the tree of life open to man, and he had free access to it. Their interpretation of this flaming sword is like many other of their interpretations, that they give to Scripture, etc. Infants die and go right to heaven.

DEYO'S LAST SPEECH.

This showed that his position was not true, by Jer. 31: 15-17. "A voice was heard in Ramah." Matt. 2: 17-18. "Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, in Rama." And Jeremiah says, "And they shall come again from the land of the enemy." Now if they have gone to heaven, they are in the land of the enemy. Is heaven the enemy's land? No, they are sleeping in death. Death is an enemy, and the "last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." The flaming sword was to keep man from eating of the tree of life. "Lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever. Therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden."

Bowman made his closing speech. Quoted from poets, and appealed to the sympathies and prejudices of the people; was very sarcastic, and was called to order five or six times during the last evening's debate.

Conser's closing speech showed that in all the quotations Mr. Bowman had made, he had not given but three passages that mentioned the soul, and not one of them referred to conscious existence after the death of the body; hence he had utterly failed to sustain his position. Then took up the earthly house, (2 Cor. 5: 1-4.) "For we (plural) know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God." Paul was the plural number "we." Hence this tabernacle could not be his body, unless there was more than one occupant. See Eph. 2: 19-22. "But fellow citizens . . . of the household of God, and are built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets," (the church of God.) Now if this tabernacle, or church, be dissolved, we shall have a building of God, (the holy city, New Jerusalem) which will come down from God out of heaven. Rev. 21: 2, 3. "And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven. . . . The tabernacle of God is with men."

Here Mr. Bowman interrupted Bro. Conser, making an effort to get up a laugh through the congregation, as he had done several times before; evidently with the intention of frustrating him in his closing speech; but Bro. C. told him that he had not produced a single passage of Scripture that proved his position, and that we had produced many to prove ours.

I have given the substance of the debate, as near as I can recollect; only the heads of the arguments were taken down. The truth has been brought before the people. A glorious victory has been achieved. Another prominent individual was taken into the church last Sunday, and another presented herself for baptism. Bro. Deyo left on Saturday, but the work goes on. To God be all the glory.

The Evergreen Shore.

(Published by request.)

We are joyously voyaging over the main,
Bound for the evergreen shore,
Whose inhabitants never of sickness complain,
And never see death any more.
CHORUS.—Then let the hurricane roar,
It will the sooner be o'er.
We will weather the blast, and will land at last,
Safe on the evergreen shore.

We have nothing to fear from the wind and the wave,
Under our Savior's command;
And our hearts in the midst of the dangers are brave,
For Jesus will bring us to land.
CHO.—Then let, &c.

Both the winds and the waves our commander controls,
Nothing can baffle his skill;
And his voice, when the thundering hurricane rolls,
Can make the loud tempest be still.
CHO.—Then let, &c.

In the thick murky night, when the stars and the moon
Send not a glimmering ray,
Then the light of his countenance, brighter than noon,
Will drive all our terror away.
CHO.—Then let, &c.

Let the high heaving billow and mountainous wave
Fearfully overhead break,
There is one by our side that can comfort and save—
There is one who will never forsake.
CHO.—Then let, &c.

Let the vessel be wrecked on the rock or the shoal,
Sink to be seen nevermore,
He will bear, none the less, every passenger soul
Safe, safe to the evergreen shore.
CHO.—Then let, &c.

The Political Influence of the Jews.

"I thank God I am neither serf nor Jew," exclaimed the Dauphin of France, in a conversation with Richard Cœur-de-Lion. Had the noble prince lived in our enlightened days, he might have been glad to be a Jew, or at least to have the assistance of Jews. Next to the Majesty of France, there is no more important man within the empire than the Israelite Achilles of finance, who is stemming the tide of bankruptcy, as his brother-in-law, the great Cremieux, smoothed before him the waves of the revolution. It is little more than two hundred years ago that the good Partisans petitioned King Louis XIII., in great reverence and humility, that he might be pleased to have all Jews burnt alive, and they thought it a great hardship when Louis did not commence burning at once, but merely ordered the Jews to leave the kingdom within one month, under penalty of death. Since that good old time every office in the state, with the exception only of that of the monarch, has been filled by the proscribed race. The number of civic functionaries in France belonging to the Jewish communion, is immensely larger than the proportionate Israelite population. M. Achille Fould, at Paris, is but the head of a cohort of Jewish notabilities, financiers, and employees, who are quite as numerous in the departments as in the capital. At Lyons, Marseilles, and other towns of the South, a large number of the higher government officials are Jews, and at Epinal, the chief city of the department of the Vosges, there is the curious spectacle of the four most eminent civic functionaries—the paymaster, the military superintendent, the president of the court of justice, and the keeper-general of forests—being Jews, one and all. It is unnecessary to speak of La Bourse, the heart of imperial France, where Israel reigns supreme, and the name of Rothschild takes precedence of that of Louis Napoleon. There was a meaning in the fact that while M. Pereire's shares went up at Paris, M. Mires gained the day against the government at Douai. Dauphins of France must say nothing more against Jews.

Nor must dauphins or ministers of Imperial Austria. Scarcely a century ago, the Jews were hunted like mad dogs in the dominions of the Kaiser, at the mercy of every monk or police-officer, and with not the slightest security for life or property. Now, in this year of grace, 1862, two eloquent Jews are the leaders of the great Liberal party of the Austrian Reichsrath, and Imperial ministers tremble before the names of Giskra and Kuranda. It was only on Friday week that Dr. Giskra, growing in boldness with every success, bearded not merely the Imperial government, but the gigantic Ultramontane power before which government itself trembles. Never before had the concordat with Rome been denounced in so fierce a tone and with sarcasm so withering as it was on this occasion, and the bench of bishops literally quailed under the vehement oration of the Jew deputy of Brunn. Only a week before another Hebrew representative, Dr. Kuranda, a native of that Prague where the Jews from time immemorial were chained up in a dark Ghetto and burnt for sport about once a year, attacked proud Count Rechberg in the council of the empire on account of Austria's policy in the affairs of Italy. The Count, it is stated, got pale with rage under the charge of the despised Israelite, and left the house in a high state of excitement. It was lucky for him he did not give vent to his feelings, as he might have been made to suffer for it like one of his predecessors. Baron Bach, the alter ego of the Kaiser, on one occasion, when Minister of the interior, offended M. Kuranda by mumbling something about detested Jews; and the eloquent Hebrew last week took his revenge by carrying the motion in the Reichsrath that £2,000 be knocked off from the salary of the Austrian ambassador at Rome. This ambassador is nobody else than Baron Bach, a gentleman known to be very fond of cash. Impossible for Hebrew cruelty to inflict a deeper wound!

More marked than even in Austria is the rise of Jews in Prussia. In the present political agitation, Hebrew leaders play the most conspicuous part, and their participation in the recent elections was so pronounced that the Kreuz-Zeitung for weeks did scarce anything else but abuse the so-styled Jew democrats. According to this paper, nearly one-fourth the number of Wahler chosen by the people of Prussia to elect the deputies was composed of Jews—a number about twenty times as large as is warranted by the population of the kingdom. At Berlin and other large towns the Hebrew preponderance was still more conspicuous, and in some of the ancient Polish provinces the descendants of Abraham had it all their own way. The Kreuz-Zeitung consequently believes itself justified in speaking of the present chamber as a Jew-parliament, and defining the political struggle as between Jews, infidels, and anarchists on the one side, and loyal orthodox king-fearing Prussians on the other. The ire of the High Tory paper is increased by the incidental discussion in Parliament of the statistics of the higher Prussian schools for 1861, issued by Government at the opening of the Chambers. These statistics are curious indeed. On classifying the students of the universities and high schools, the startling result is displayed that the superior academies are attended by five times as many Jews in proportion as christians, regard of course being had to the general population, of which the Israelites form scarcely one and a half per cent. Similar observations had been made in former years, to which however, little attention was then paid by the Ultramontane and feudal parties whose fears were not yet stirred up by the advent of a terrific Jew-parliament. Their eyes, it seems, have only of late been fully opened to the coming danger. In a recent article of the party organ, it is conclusively shown, first, that during the last fifty years the Jews had grown learned beyond measure for the express purpose of rising to the head of the government of all the states of Europe: and, secondly, that they are getting to the top for the express purpose of upsetting all christian rule, and seeking their advantage in universal anarchy. The proofs are that the educated Jews form part in all revolutionary movements, from the Ural to the Atlantic, and from Lapland to Sicily. They are, as it were, the yeast in the European fermentation. It was in vain that Czar Nicholas expelled every Hebrew soul from his capital on his accession to the throne, the yeast has returned stronger than ever, and is working now in full power wherever tyranny and oppression are rife. The Jew element is perceptible in the Galician peasantry, in the Finnish malcontents, in the Servian progressists, and in the surging masses of revolutionary Poland. The whole east of Europe even more than the west, is in violent ferment, and everywhere the Jew is the living yeast.—The Spectator.

Domestic Economy.

Domestic economy should be a study in these times. Look over the prices of articles used in a family and it will be seen that most of them are enormously high, nor are they likely to be lower for a long time to come. There has been no suffering yet, for money has been abundant, but this cannot continue forever, and while the cost of living will probably increase in the next twelve months and much longer the means of living will decrease. It is quite plain, therefore, that if profits of trade fall off and business diminishes, there will eventually be suffering and privation unless we resort to the strictest economy and frugality. This change of habits will be unavoidable; we shall delay as long as possible, but necessity will compel retrenchment, and the sooner we look forward to that point, the wiser will it be in us.

We have no doubt that such a change will in the end prove beneficial. The wastefulness, extravagance and excesses of the American people, in eating, drinking and dressing, have not had a parallel in the history of the world; and all this has been against health, happiness and morals.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Methodism in New Orleans.

One of our army chaplains writes from New Orleans, under date of June 5th:—"Yesterday I visited the office of the New Orleans Advocate and Southern Methodist Book Depository, situated on Camp street, a few squares south of Canal street, and found the whole establishment closed, and as desolate in appearance as though a pestilence had passed over it. A business man in the next door, and a member of their church, told me that the Advocate suspended for the want of paper, and the Depository for the want of purchasers; and that all the business men of the establishment, from the highest to the lowest, were in Beauregard's army at Shiloh, in some official capacity, the last he knew of them. So that in New Orleans, no less than in Nashville, the Methodist Episcopal church at the south has left its moral, intellectual and religious operations to languish and die. Their churches are, most of them, without pastors or preachers, except what the local ministry supply, and prayer and class meetings are generally suspended."—Meth.

FORMATION OF CHARACTER.—Have you ever watched an icicle as it formed? You noticed how it froze, one drop at a time, until it was a foot long or more. If the water was clean, the icicles remained clear and sparkled in the sun; but if the water was but slightly muddy, the icicle looked foul, and its beauty was spoiled. Just so our characters are formed. One little thought or feeling at a time adds its influence. If every thought be pure and right, the soul will sparkle with happiness.

BRO. GRANT:—I send you a piece for the children's department, which I clipped from one of the weekly papers. Every day I see the importance of instructing the youth in a proper manner. May God bless you, and all that conduct the Crisis, and make it a complete family paper. God bless the children, and enable us as preachers of his word to instruct them aright.

All Play and no Work.

Bessie was a very little girl; and like many another, she sometimes had foolish thoughts. This was one of them: "If I only could have a whole day to do nothing in—no work, and no lessons—only play, play, all day—I should be perfectly happy." When she told this wish, her mother said, "To-day shall be yours. You may play as much as you please; and I will not give you any work, no matter how much you may want to do it."

Bessie laughed at the idea of wishing for work, and ran out to play. She was swinging on the gate when the children passed to school, and they all envied her for having no lessons. When they were gone, she went to the cherry-tree, and ate as much fruit as she wanted, and picked a lapful for pies; but when she carried them in, her mother said, "This is work, Bessie! Don't you remember you cried yesterday, because I wished you to pick cherries for the pudding? You may throw these to the pigs; I cannot take them." The baby began to awake, and Bessie ran forward to rock the cradle, but her mother stopped her again. "No work to-day, you know!" And the little girl went away, rather out of humor. She got her doll, and played with it awhile, but soon was tired. She tried all her other toys, but they did not seem to please her any better. She came back, and watched her mother, who was shelling peas, and rocking the cradle with her foot.

"May not I help you, mother?" she asked.

"No, Bessie, this isn't play."

Bessie felt very much like crying. She went out into the garden again, and leaned over the fence, watching the ducks and geese in the pond. Soon she heard the clatter of plates; her mother was setting the table for dinner. Bessie longed to help. Then her father came back from his work, and they all sat down to dinner. Bessie was quite cheerful during the meal; but when it was over, and her father away, she sat down on the low seat by the cradle, and said, wearily, "Mother, you don't know how tired I am of doing nothing! If you would only let me wind your cotton, or put your work-box in order, or even sew at that tiresome patchwork, I would be so glad!"

"I cannot, little daughter, because I said I would not give you work to-day. But you may find some for yourself, if you can."

So Bessie hunted up a pile of her father's old stockings, and began to mend them, for she could darn them very neatly. Her face grew brighter; and presently she said, "Mother, why do people get tired of play?"

"Because God did not mean us to be idle. His command is, "Six days shalt thou labor." He has given all of us work to do, and has made us so that unless we do just the very work that he gave us, we cannot be happy."

"What is your work, mother?" asked Bessie.

"To serve God in my daily life as a wife, mother and christian."

Bessie did not quite understand this; but she said, "Don't you ever get tired?"

"Yes, often, but then I go to my heavenly Father, and tell him so; and if he thinks I have more than I can bear, he either takes it away, or gives me strength to do it."

"And may I do the same, mother?"

"You may, my dear. If you will be God's child, you may ask his help in every work you have to do through life, and he will give you everything you need."

So, on Bessie's day of idleness she learned one lesson which she never forgot.

"Creation Groaneth."

Old earth is weary, and faded and pale,
And her strength already begins to fail;
She staggers, she reels in her course to-day,—
The weary old earth is passing away.

There's a blight on her roses, a gloom in her bowers,
And thorns grow abundant amid her flowers;
The cry goes up from her children sad,
O when shall our desolate hearts be glad?

There's death in the wind and grief on the wave,
For servants and kings there's waiting a grave,
Though the sun may shine, he is death-struck too,
And waits to be made, with "all things," new.

Our mother, great Nature, is sick at heart,
And groans for the shadows of night to depart;
Preserver, Protector, Redeemer and Friend,
Restore peace and order,—let mortality end!

The Mystery of the Gospel.---No. 1.

"And for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel."—EPH. 6: 19.

What is the mystery of the gospel? No question of greater importance can occupy the minds of mortals; for "the mystery of the gospel" sets forth the way of salvation. From what source then shall we learn the mystery? Shall we go to the clergy of Rome? They claim to be the depositaries of the mysteries of God. But what can they know of God's mysteries except what he has revealed? We have the only revelation from God extant, in the Scriptures; then why not go with all teachableness of mind directly to them for instruction? "The common people cannot understand the Bible," says the Pope. But with all due respect to the aged Pope, and his learned clergy, we beg leave to say, that we prefer to examine the Scriptures for ourselves a little longer, before we surrender ourselves to the guidance of "the wise and prudent," who, we suspect, are "blind leaders of the blind." But the Scriptures contradict themselves," say the Spiritualists. Not being satisfied, however, that the Spiritualists are competent judges in matters of revelation, we will leave them to consult the shades of the dead concerning the mysteries of the fancied "spirit land," and the endless progression of the invisible, intangible, material, corporeal, spiritual, inhabitants of that airy land; while we turn our attention to the apostolic explanation of the law and the testimony of the living God, concerning the "mystery of the Christ."—Eph. 3: 4.

In Paul's letter to the Romans, we read the following words: "Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world begun, but now is made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith.—Rom. 16: 25, 26. Again, "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the ages [Greek aionon] unto our glory, which none of the princes of this world [age] know; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory."—1 Cor. 2: 7, 8. "By revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few word, whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ,) which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel. . . . Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see, what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world [ages] hath been hid in God."—Eph. 3: 3–10. "Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfill the word of God; even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but is now made manifest to his saints; to whom God would make known what is the riches of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ in you the hope of glory."—Col. 1: 22–27. "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you; searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into."—1 Pet. 1: 9–12. "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the vail, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."—Heb. 10: 19–22. From these scriptures we learn the following particulars:—

1. The mystery of the gospel is a revealed mystery.

2. It was concealed from the sons of men, even from the prophets, during the ages and generations of the law.

3. It was concealed in the prophetic writings.

4. It was revealed to the apostles by the Spirit.

5. The apostles made it known to the nations.

6. It was, according to commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith.

7. It was concerning the "new and living way" of salvation, or justification of souls, through the blood of Jesus, without the deeds of the law of Moses.

Every one, who carefully examines these scriptures, and their connection, must admit that these seven particulars are contained in them. When, and where, then, did the apostles, the ambassadors of Jesus, to whom God "committed . . . the word of reconciliation," (2 Cor. 5: 19) commence the work of making known the mystery to the nations? The answer to this undoubtedly is, on the day of Pentecost, at Jerusalem. This is evident, because the apostles did not understand the mystery themselves till after the resurrection of Jesus. Matthew tells us, that when Jesus foretold his death and resurrection, Peter rebuked him. Matt. 16: 21, 22. See also Mark 8: 31, 32. Luke informs us that the disciples did not understand the meaning of this saying of Jesus, "The Son of man shall be delivered into the hands of men."—Luke 9: 44, 45. Also, that the two disciples on their way to Emmaus, after the resurrection of Jesus, were reproved by him for their slowness of heart to understand all that the prophets had written concerning his sufferings. Luke 24: 25.

Finally, he tells us, that when the eleven were together, Jesus appeared to them, and "opened . . . their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures; and said unto them, thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead on the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."—Luke 24; 45–47. Here, then, is ample evidence that the apostles did not understand the sufferings of Christ, and the design of those sufferings, until after his resurrection. Consequently they were, until then, ignorant of "the mystery of the gospel," the revelation of which was based upon the death and resurrection of the Messiah, the representative testator of the New Covenant, or Testament. Heb. 9: 12–22. Jesus, having thus instructed his disciples concerning his suffering and the kingdom of God (Acts 1–3), commanded them to tarry at Jerusalem until they should "be endued with power from on high"; when they were to commence the work of discipling the nations, baptizing them with "the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28: 19; Luke 24: 49. From these premises, we deduce the following conclusion, which we will call

Proposition 8th. The apostles, being filled with the Holy Spirit, began to make known the mystery to the nations on the day of Pentecost at Jerusalem.

Here we must pause for the present. In the next article, we will examine the preaching of the apostles, commencing with Peter's Pentecost sermon, with a view to learn definitely what it is that Paul calls "the mystery of the gospel." J. W. NILES.

What shall I Believe?

Believe the word of God! But some things seem dark and intricate; and one says it is after this manner, and another says it is after that; and how am I, who am weak and unlettered, to know what is truth relative to the doctrines of the Bible, when there exist so many differences of opinion with regard to the same? Have faith in God. Do you not believe that He who takes cognizance when the archer brings to the earth one of those insignificant creatures, valued at only half penny, and who numbers the very hairs of your head, has made provident care for the weak? Why, he makes it a most flagrant crime to offend, or cause to stumble, "one of his little ones!" Mark 9. 42.

If, then, the Divine injunction remains obligatory upon us to "take heed unto the doctrine," in order to save ourselves as well as those who listen to us, (1 Tim. 8: 16) shall we not conclude that a kind Father hath made ample provision for us to comprehend his doctrines in case we do "take heed?" I praise the name of the Lord that the common people may "know of the doctrine whether it be of God!" And when I reflect upon the translation of our version of the Scriptures and see that the translators themselves disbelieved what the original constrained them to pen, I step upon another round of faith's ladder, and jubilantly exclaim, Blessed be the name of the Lord in that he hath restrained, and so far led even the unbeliever to make a plain and positive platform, on which his humble and unlettered ones may fearlessly venture their whole weight!

This strong and safe doctrinal platform is that of Positive Declarations!! That is, I take the ground that no doctrine is obligatory upon us, unless there is a plain, positive declaration of Inspiration, without parable or innuendo. For example; "The dead shall be raised" and "The meek shall inherit the earth," &c. Yes, I must have as plain a statement for every doctrine I step out upon as the above, and bless God I have it, for I never will, God being my helper, step out on mere inferential testimony, but always make inferences succumb to positive statements.

But do you not receive the figures and tropes used in Sacred Writ? Most certainly I do; but I earnestly contend they were never given to teach doctrine in any instance. So when one comes to me to introduce a doctrine, I say give me a thus saith the Lord—a plain declaration from Inspiration. If no such statement can be adduced to support their theory, but I must wait for proof until they can spin and weave a webb—warp of inferences and woof of sophistry, and then correct the translation of every passage of Scripture (numbering some six or eight) which treats on the point in question, I make up my mind never to venture on to such a platform. When we see a plausible looking platform, on which we have never ventured, will it not be well to send out all the feelers God hath provided for us ere we venture, lest the foundation on which it rests prove rotten, and we sink in irremediable ruin?

And is it indeed true, says one, that every cardinal doctrine of the Bible is stated in plain, unequivocal terms? I most fearlessly answer in the affirmative. But are there not some things in the Scriptures which do not appear so plain? There are. But that does not destroy the plain doctrinal platform on which we are to stand.

I do not deny having opinions as well as other people, which are not positively stated in the Bible, but never allow an opinion that will clash with positive declarations. And for me to lug such opinions into a church where many hold opposite ones, and thus create a disagreeable sensation and perhaps a real muss would be wrong; for an opinion founded on inferences, would, I think, render me highly culpable in the sight of Heaven.

Now, for instance, there are various opinions relative to the "sign of the Son of man"—what it will be. My opinion is, that it is a supernatural brightness! I form that opinion from certain inferential Scriptures, such as "a fiery stream shall issue and come forth before him" (Christ;) and then in Rev., just prior to Christ's coming, the "earth is lightened with his (Christ's) glory; also in Ezek;—the glory of the Lord appeared from the way of the east, and the earth shined with his glory;" And then at the transfiguration, where Jesus gives a representation of the coming kingdom, there was a "bright cloud" which overshadowed them. But this is not certainly the sign of the Son of man. One thing is certain, that there will be such a sign just prior to his personal appearance, because it is positively declared thus; and also that this supernatural brightness will appear in close proximity with his coming, and I therefore infer that this is the sign.

But all can see at once, that God does not say expressly that it is: hence I have no right to press it upon the church as obligatory upon them, that they must receive it as a doctrine or imperil their salvation. B. Mathewson.

Where are We?

Is it true that we are dwelling
In that last, that awful time?
That around all nature's telling
Of events grand and sublime?

Has the sun been "black as sackcloth,"
And the moon been "turned to blood?"
Have the stars of heaven fallen,
Smitten by the hand of God?

Is there now "distress of nations?"
Do men's hearts still "fail for fear?"
Are the powers of heaven shaken?
Do these speak our Savior near?

Will he in yon clouds of heaven,
Clothed in glory, soon appear?
And will all his faithful children
Rise to meet him in the air?

Yea, for faithful is the witness,
And the promise stands secure;
For our Savior is its author,
And his word is ever sure.

Then we will not be disheartened,
Though our trials seem severe,
For we're cheered by the assurance
That our dear Redeemer's near.

Soon shall we with all the ransomed
Joy to meet our blessed Lord,
And he'll say to all his children
Who have trusted in his word,—

"Come, ye blessed of my Father,"
Enter your eternal home,
Faithfully you've served the Master,
Sit ye now upon his throne.

Then we'll join the hallelujahs,
Ringing through high heaven's dome,
And we'll shout the "Lamb is worthy!"
He hath brought us to our home.

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER FIVE.

VIII.—"Healing of the Nations."

It is sometimes claimed that in the Kingdom of God, a thousand years will precede the New Earth state, during which time there will be more or less sickness among a class of surviving mortals, who will stand in need of healing; and in proof of this we are referred to Rev. 22: 2, "And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." But unfortunately for this theory, this "tree of life" is located, NOT in a thousand years to precede the New Earth state, but in the New Earth state itself; hence, if this text proves the existence of sickness in the future age, it proves it in the New Earth state; and if it proves the existence of a class of mortals in the future age, it locates them in the New Earth state, and not in a previous age of a thousand years duration!

1st. Observe this fact. Let this "healing of the nations" signify what it may, it is connected with the New Earth state.

2nd. It cannot signify the healing of nations from sickness, firstly, because it does not say so, and secondly, because in that state there shall not be "any more pain" (Rev. 21: 4), "and the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick" (Isa. 33: 24), being "equal to the angels."

3rd. The literal rendering of the text is, "For the SERVICE [tharapeuan] of the nations"; thus harmonizing with Rev. 22: 14—"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life." We read of the "nations of them that are saved"; and of these nations it is said, "The leaves of the tree were for the service of the nations." A thing can be of service in more ways than in curing sickness, especially in a land where there is no sickness.

The deathless state, or New Earth state, cannot be crowded off a thousand years beyond the resurrection. Mark this fact. In Isa. 25: 8, we read,—"He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces." Paul informs us that this swallowing up of death in victory is to occur at the "last trump," and the Prophet connects the wiping away of tears with that event; and the Revelator, in introducing the New Earth state, remarks: "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Now as God cannot "wipe away all tears" but once, and as he does do this at the sound of the resurrection trumpet, and does do it at the introduction of the New Earth state, it is an invulnerable fact that the New Earth state is connected with the resurrection of holy ones, and not deferred for a thousand years, for God is not to wipe away tears once at the beginning, and again at the ending of the thousand years. The deathless state begins at the resurrection. No healing of sickness after that.

"Thy Brother Shall Rise Again."

When the dark, cold and unfriendly world in which we live is held up in contrast to the brighter and the better one to come; how inspiriting to the way worn and tempest-tossed when he reads of the countless good things to be obtained. The gloomy hours of sadness and sorrow; the unceasing struggle for dear life; the cares of this world, with its many trials, all ALL tend to lessen his love for the present, and he is beckoned on to a freedom from all this when ten thousand times ten thousand saints make glad the city of God. A promise of relief from present cares; a word of encouragement to pursue the beaten track of God's worthies; an exhortion to be faithful; are things calculated to make life happier. I think of the time when Jesus offered those words of consolation to Martha,—"thy brother shall rise again." How SATISFIED she seemed to believe he would rise again in the resurrection at the LAST day; and not like the mass of professors of the present time, see IN death the gate to endless joy; she was to look beyond this vale of tears, and confidently exclaim, "I KNOW that he shall rise again." Jesus loved Lazarus so that when he came to the grave he was troubled in spirit; and I fancy I see those surrounding him, with breathless silence hear him say, "Lazarus, come forth!" and then to see the one that had been dead rise up and be unloosed of his grave clothes, and to hear Jesus say "Loose him, and let him go." It was doubtless to those who saw this great miracle, the most surprising sight they ever beheld.

I linger around the spot; I see many of those Jews going away to tell the Pharisees the things Jesus had done; having gone and elicited the opposition of these people, hear what they say: 'If we let him thus alone, all will believe on him: and the Romans shall come, and take away both our place and nation." This was good evidence they did not want this man to reign over them, so after awhile there was an arraignment of this, to them, obnoxious individual, and the judgment carried him to the accursed tree, but did this save their place and nation? Nay, verily! A few years after saw their temple destroyed, and themselves without an high priest. God judged them with sore trials, the history of which is awful.

Shall not God avenge his own elect who constantly cry unto him? He will, and that speedily. The time may to us seem deferred, but it is not so, He who sees all things from the beginning, will in the proper time dispose of those who corrupt the earth in the way and manner stated by the prophets.

"Life is real, life is earnest,"

and there is no use in deceiving ourselves; if we make any reckonings for a futurity, we must see to it that we live as though the judgment was impending, and the time for the settlement of earth's affairs was the next thing. Let it not be said of any who know their Lord, that they are more anxious about the present fleeting life than the life to come.

Be in earnest! Realize the solemn truth that whatever a man soweth that shall he reap; if sown to the Spirit, it is everlasting life; if to the flesh, it is corruption, death, destruction. And oh! to hear the all powerful voice of Christ say to us as to Lazarus, "Come forth!" To be the blessed of the Lord who rise to life unending, may it be our constant effort so to live as to be accounted worthy to stand when he shall appear. G. W. YOUNG.

Spiritualism.—No. 1.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS.

There are some phases of this latter day "Revelation" which are just beginning to be seen, and are not generally understood. This monster has already shown its capability of being "all things to all men," but the end is not yet.

The following extracts are taken from a book entitled "Spiritual Sunday School Class Book, No. 1," and which is for sale at the depot of Spiritual publications in Boston, No. 14 Bromfield Street. It seems that our Spiritualist friends are seeing the necessity of training up a child in "the way he should go," and so they are adopting the Sunday School system. This, along with their "New Testament as corrected by the Spirits," (which I shall notice more at length soon) and the book of Job corrected likewise, and perhaps other parts of the Bible which may be hereafter remodelled to suit the demands of this progressive age, will undoubtedly be used to some extent; and though many of the leading minds will shun any thing that has the appearance of authority in religion, yet there are very many in the rank and file who will find this development just suited to their wants. The "Old Bible" even now has hardly lost the magic influence it has swayed over many of them heretofore, although rejected nominally, as may be seen by the numerous quotations by their writers, and the employment of Bible phrases to express the ideas of the masses, as well as the numerous appeals to it in order to prove their dogmas correct. The fact is simply this; Spiritualists are learning that notwithstanding the brilliancy of the "inner light," and the demonstrability of the New Religion, men generally will have a Bible; and so to avoid a return to the "old paths," they propose to inspect the old road, construct another alongside somewhat similar, dig down the hills and fill up the valleys, put on an engine, and drive easily and quickly to—where? A parallel case may be seen in the setting up of the golden calf by Jeroboam, that he might draw the true worshipers of God away from the temple, and thus destroy all chance of a revolt.

"Spiritualism teaches us something about life after death. It teaches us something, too, about our life before death. By Spiritualism we learn that our life cannot die, nor our souls die; that our life on earth is a part of our immortal life.

Teacher. Do you think that the dear friends who loved you before death are still with you in an invisible state?

Ans. Yes.

T. Why?

Ans. Christ came and talked to those he loved immediately after death, and he is a good example for all good folks.

T. What other reason can you give . . . ?

Ans. I feel that it is so, and that is the best and truest reason."

Notice the words "immediately after death." Does "immediately" mean three days? And then, though Christ said, "A spirit hath not flesh and blood as ye see me have," the child is taught that his appearance to the disciples is proof that the spirits of the dead are present, though invisible. And more emphatically so because he is a "good example for all good folks!" I think "good folks" would do well to try their hand raising the dead if that be so! And then, feeling is the "best and TRUEST reason"! O, is that the way we are taught by the advocates of the only demonstration of immortality?

"Teacher. The Bible relates many instances of the presence of deceased friends. . . . Did not Christ talk with the spirits of deceased men?

Ans. Yes, he saw and talked with Moses and Elias.

T. Did St. Paul commune with the spirit world?

Ans. Yes, he saw and talked with Christ after his crucifixion.

T. Did St. John talk with spirits?

Ans. He talked with Christ many times, and with angels that were once men.

T. Did the dead come out of their graves and talk with many when Jesus was crucified?

Ans. The Bible says they did. . . Christ also appeared unto the eleven disciples, and they also talked with him after his crucifixion."

I think it would be difficult to find a statement further from the truth than the first paragraph above. "Many instances of the presence of deceased friends"! If any one is foolish enough to believe this assertion without proof, let them read the Bible through, and from Genesis to Revelation they will find not one instance where the appearance of a departed friend or relative is even hinted at! In a pamphlet before me entitled "A Catechism on the History and Teachings of the Bible," in reference to the appearance of "the spirits of men deceased," it gives as positive testimony only three instances; the witch of Endor, Moses and Elias, and the angel that talked with John! None of them appeared to personal friends. My Spiritualist friend, is it not rather strange that the Bible, written at different periods during a lapse of more than a thousand years, by a score of men, of different dispositions, characters and pursuits, should preserve so terrible a silence on this question, which is the very life of your faith? Then Elias was a spirit! What became of his body? Did the spirits "steal" it? And John talking with angels that were once men! A little proof, if you please. And St. Paul too!

Well, I suspect if our friends had to meet spirits in the way that Paul met Christ, they would attend circles less frequently than they do now. That was not done "in a corner," at a "dark circle," but at mid-day, by a light from heaven, "above the brightness of the sun," which smote the persecutor and his company to the earth as by a thunderbolt. And that is called "communing with the spirit world"!

As evidence that we have the same feelings, etc., after death as before, the child is taught to say; "Christ talked to the Marys and to his disciples, and expressed the same feelings and desires as before death." Then, after speaking of the naturalness of death, and of its desirableness as "freeing the soul from the weight and conflict of matter," the teacher asks, "Why then do we mourn and weep when our friends die? (A very reasonable question.) Ans. Because we are not yet permitted to see the beautiful realities that are beyond the grave. We hold not yet a victory over the grave. T. And when will that victory be? Ans. When we shall have a clearer and more vivid perception of life after death, . . . when our affections shall be set on things above more than on things below." (More Bible phrase!)

So the victory over the grave is a state of mind, not a fact. Thank God! we look for a time when death shall be conquered; when the glorious anthem of TRIUMPH shall roll over the hills and plains of a world redeemed, and we shall see our King—not a spirit—but the "same Jesus" who says "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold, I AM ALIVE FOREVERMORE." God pity the young who are taught such doctrines as these, and open their eyes to the cruel deception practised upon them.

E. P. WOODWARD.

Alone!

Alone! This word has always thrilled through my heart, but now it has a sadder tone than ever before—my only brother has gone to the war! The sun rose as usual, and ushered in the day for the last, sad parting. Faces passing by wore the same cheerful aspect, while a shadow—a deep gloom, had settled over our entire household.

How I listened to his footsteps as he moved about the house! How eagerly I caught the words as they fell from his lips! How I treasured them in my memory! How long I wanted the day to be, and how short it was! Time, ever regardless of either joy or sorrow, flew rapidly on, and brought the hour for his departure.

With a heart too full to bid him "good bye," too sad to cheer others who were struggling through this great and heavy trial, I hastened to my room, and sat down by an open window. Alone! alone! echoed and re-echoed through the room. Everything that met my eyes seemed to have the same sad word written upon it. Not a sound broke the death-like stillness of that beautiful night; the moon was just appearing behind the trees, casting her pale light over the face of nature; but all things are dark to sorrow, and the light and loveliness blended strangely with the sadness of my heart. Can I ever forget that night?

I cannot tell how long I sat there; but I heard or felt these words: "I am not alone, because the Father is with me." At once I recalled a letter written by a brother (who had long lain in the grave), telling me of that Friend who wept with Mary and Martha over the grave of their brother Lazarus; of that Friend who suffered and died for me; who, in the hour of deepest trial, deserted by his friends, yea, by his disciples, looked up to the Source of every blessing, and said, "Yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me." Why had I not thought of this before? Ah! there was a pall over my heart,—a dark cloud hung over me. I heard the voice, looked up, and saw the hand that "doeth all things well." The whole current of my thought was changed. Who gave my brother his life? who sustained it until the present time? Who sitteth in the heavens, and not a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice? Who numbereth the hairs of our head? I paused; I had forgotten

"E'en the hour that darkest seemeth,
Will His changeless goodness prove;
From the gloom his brightness streameth;
God is wisdom, God is love."

I felt now, though surrounded with all the temptations of camp-life, though exposed to the thousand dangers of the dreaded battle-field, the same hand that guided him here, would protect him there. How happy I felt, and how gently that voice whispered, "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest." In humility and reverence I bowed before my Father's throne, asking for submission, for grace for every time of need; and the peace of God which passeth understanding filled my soul.

O! that in one of the thousand bereaved households in our sorrowing land these lines might fall, and by one of the thousand aching hearts be read with the same earnestness they are written; that you might be led to the same Friend who wept with Mary and Martha,—to the same Savior who is ever at the mercy-seat, pleading for you, and who has gone to prepare a place for you, who will soon come and take his children home to his Father's house of many mansions, where God will wipe all tears from our eyes.

"One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er;
I'm one day nearer home
Than I've ever been before.
Nearer my Father's house,
Where the many mansions be,
Nearer the "great white throne,"
Nearer the "jasper sea."
Nearer that bound of time,
Where we lay our burdens down,
Nearer leaving my cross,
Nearer wearing my crown."

"Creation Groaneth."

Old earth is weary, and faded and pale,
And her strength already begins to fail;
She staggers, she reels in her course to-day,—
The weary old earth is passing away.

There's a blight on her roses, a gloom in her bowers,
And thorns grow abundant amid her flowers;
The cry goes up from her children sad,
O! when shall our desolate hearts be glad?

There's death in the wind and grief on the wave,
For servants and kings there's waiting a grave;
Though the sun may shine, he is death-struck too,
And waits to be made, with "all things," new.

Our mother, great Nature, is sick at heart,
And groans for the shadows of night to depart;
Preserver, Protector, Redeemer and Friend,
Restore peace and order,—let mortality end!

The Mystery of the Gospel.—No. 1.

"And for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel."—EPH. 6: 19.

What is the mystery of the gospel? No question of greater importance can occupy the minds of mortals; for "the mystery of the gospel" sets forth the way of salvation. From what source then shall we learn the mystery? Shall we go to the clergy of Rome? They claim to be the depositaries of the mysteries of God. But what can they know of God's mysteries except what he has revealed? We have the only revelation from God extant, in the Scriptures; then why not go with all teachableness of mind directly to them for instruction? "The common people cannot understand the Bible," says the Pope. But with all due respect to the aged Pope, and his learned clergy, we beg leave to say, that we prefer to examine the Scriptures for ourselves a little longer, before we surrender ourselves to the guidance of "the wise and prudent," who, we suspect, are "blind leaders of the blind." But the Scriptures contradict themselves," say the Spiritualists. Not being satisfied, however, that the Spiritualists are competent judges in matters of revelation, we will leave them to consult the shades of the dead concerning the mysteries of the fancied "spirit land," and the endless progression of the invisible, intangible, material, corporeal, spiritual, inhabitants of that airy land; while we turn our attention to the apostolic explanation of the law and the testimony of the living God, concerning the "mystery of the Christ."—Eph. 3: 4.

In Paul's letter to the Romans, we read the following words: "Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world begun, but now is made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith.—Rom. 16: 25, 26. Again, "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the ages [Greek aionon] unto our glory, which none of the princes of this world [age] know; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory."—1 Cor. 2: 7, 8. "By revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few word, whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ,) which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel. . . . Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see, what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world [ages] hath been hid in God."—Eph. 3: 3–10. "Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfill the word of God; even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but is now made manifest to his saints; to whom God would make known what is the riches of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ in you the hope of glory."—Col. 1: 22–27. "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you; searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into."—1 Pet. 1: 9–12. "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the vail, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."—Heb. 10: 19–22. From these scriptures we learn the following particulars:—

1. The mystery of the gospel is a revealed mystery.

2. It was concealed from the sons of men, even from the prophets, during the ages and generations of the law.

3. It was concealed in the prophetic writings.

4. It was revealed to the apostles by the Spirit.

5. The apostles made it known to the nations.

6. It was, according to commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith.

7. It was concerning the "new and living way" of salvation, or justification of souls, through the blood of Jesus, without the deeds of the law of Moses.

Every one, who carefully examines these scriptures, and their connection, must admit that these seven particulars are contained in them. When, and where, then, did the apostles, the ambassadors of Jesus, to whom God "committed . . . the word of reconciliation," (2 Cor. 5: 19) commence the work of making known the mystery to the nations? The answer to this undoubtedly is, on the day of Pentecost, at Jerusalem. This is evident, because the apostles did not understand the mystery themselves till after the resurrection of Jesus. Matthew tells us, that when Jesus foretold his death and resurrection, Peter rebuked him. Matt. 16: 21, 22. See also Mark 8: 31, 32. Luke informs us that the disciples did not understand the meaning of this saying of Jesus, "The Son of man shall be delivered into the hands of men."—Luke 9: 44, 45. Also, that the two disciples on their way to Emmaus, after the resurrection of Jesus, were reproved by him for their slowness of heart to understand all that the prophets had written concerning his sufferings. Luke 24: 25.

Finally, he tells us, that when the eleven were together, Jesus appeared to them, and "opened . . . their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures; and said unto them, thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead on the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."—Luke 24; 45–47. Here, then, is ample evidence that the apostles did not understand the sufferings of Christ, and the design of those sufferings, until after his resurrection. Consequently they were, until then, ignorant of "the mystery of the gospel," the revelation of which was based upon the death and resurrection of the Messiah, the representative testator of the New Covenant, or Testament. Heb. 9: 12–22. Jesus, having thus instructed his disciples concerning his suffering and the kingdom of God (Acts 1–3), commanded them to tarry at Jerusalem until they should "be endued with power from on high"; when they were to commence the work of discipling the nations, baptizing them with "the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28: 19; Luke 24: 49. From these premises, we deduce the following conclusion, which we will call

Proposition 8th. The apostles, being filled with the Holy Spirit, began to make known the mystery to the nations on the day of Pentecost at Jerusalem.

Here we must pause for the present. In the next article, we will examine the preaching of the apostles, commencing with Peter's Pentecost sermon, with a view to learn definitely what it is that Paul calls "the mystery of the gospel." J. W. NILES.

What shall I Believe?

Believe the word of God! But some things seem dark and intricate; and one says it is after this manner, and another says it is after that; and how am I, who am weak and unlettered, to know what is truth relative to the doctrines of the Bible, when there exist so many differences of opinion with regard to the same? Have faith in God. Do you not believe that He who takes cognizance when the archer brings to the earth one of those insignificant creatures, valued at only half penny, and who numbers the very hairs of your head, has made provident care for the weak? Why, he makes it a most flagrant crime to offend, or cause to stumble, "one of his little ones!" Mark 9: 42.

If, then, the Divine injunction remains obligatory upon us to "take heed unto the doctrine," in order to save ourselves as well as those who listen to us, (1 Tim. 8: 16) shall we not conclude that a kind Father hath made ample provision for us to comprehend his doctrines in case we do "take heed?" I praise the name of the Lord that the common people may "know of the doctrine whether it be of God!" And when I reflect upon the translation of our version of the Scriptures and see that the translators themselves disbelieved what the original constrained them to pen, I step upon another round of faith's ladder, and jubilantly exclaim, Blessed be the name of the Lord in that he hath restrained, and so far led even the unbeliever to make a plain and positive platform, on which his humble and unlettered ones may fearlessly venture their whole weight!

This strong and safe doctrinal platform is that of Positive Declarations! ! That is, I take the ground that no doctrine is obligatory upon us, unless there is a plain, positive declaration of Inspiration, without parable or innuendo. For example; "The dead shall be raised" and "The meek shall inherit the earth," &c. Yes, I must have as plain a statement for every doctrine I step out upon as the above, and bless God I have it, for I never will, God being my helper, step out on mere inferential testimony, but always make inferences succumb to positive statements.

But do you not receive the figures and tropes used in Sacred Writ? Most certainly I do; but I earnestly contend they were never given to teach doctrine in any instance. So when one comes to me to introduce a doctrine, I say give me a thus saith the Lord—a plain declaration from Inspiration. If no such statement can be adduced to support their theory, but I must wait for proof until they can spin and weave a webb—warp of inferences and woof of sophistry, and then correct the translation of every passage of Scripture (numbering some six or eight) which treats on the point in question, I make up my mind never to venture on to such a platform. When we see a plausible looking platform, on which we have never ventured, will it not be well to send out all the feelers God hath provided for us ere we venture, lest the foundation on which it rests prove rotten, and we sink in irremediable ruin?

And is it indeed true, says one, that every cardinal doctrine of the Bible is stated in plain, unequivocal terms? I most fearlessly answer in the affirmative. But are there not some things in the Scriptures which do not appear so plain? There are. But that does not destroy the plain doctrinal platform on which we are to stand.

I do not deny having opinions as well as other people, which are not positively stated in the Bible, but never allow an opinion that will clash with positive declarations. And for me to lug such opinions into a church where many hold opposite ones, and thus create a disagreeable sensation and perhaps a real muss would be wrong; for an opinion founded on inferences, would, I think, render me highly culpable in the sight of Heaven.

Now, for instance, there are various opinions relative to the "sign of the Son of man"—what it will be. My opinion is, that it is a supernatural brightness! I form that opinion from certain inferential Scriptures, such as "a fiery stream shall issue and come forth before him" (Christ;) and then in Rev., just prior to Christ's coming, the "earth is lightened with his (Christ's) glory; also in Ezek;—the glory of the Lord appeared from the way of the east, and the earth shined with his glory;" And then at the transfiguration, where Jesus gives a representation of the coming kingdom, there was a "bright cloud" which overshadowed them. But this is not certainly the sign of the Son of man. One thing is certain, that there will be such a sign just prior to his personal appearance, because it is positively declared thus; and also that this supernatural brightness will appear in close proximity with his coming, and I therefore infer that this is the sign.

But all can see at once, that God does not say expressly that it is; hence I have no right to press it upon the church as obligatory upon them, that they must receive it as a doctrine or imperil their salvation. B. Mathewson.

Where are We?

Is it true that we are dwelling
In that last, that awful time?
That around all nature's telling
Of events grand and sublime?

Has the sun been "black as sackcloth,"
And the moon been "turned to blood?"
Have the stars of heaven fallen,
Smitten by the hand of God?

Is there now "distress of nations?"
Do men's hearts still "fail for fear?"
Are the powers of heaven shaken?
Do these speak our Savior near?

Will he in yon clouds of heaven,
Clothed in glory, soon appear?
And will all his faithful children
Rise to meet him in the air?

Yea, for faithful is the witness,
And the promise stands secure;
For our Savior is its author,
And his word is ever sure.

Then we will not be disheartened,
Though our trials seem severe,
For we're cheered by the assurance
That our dear Redeemer's near.

Soon shall we with all the ransomed
Joy to meet our blessed Lord,
And he'll say to all his children
Who have trusted in his word,—

"Come, ye blessed of my Father,"
Enter your eternal home;
Faithfully you've served the Master,
Sit ye now upon his throne.

Then we'll join the hallelujahs,
Ringing through high heaven's dome,
And we'll shout the "Lamb is worthy!"
He hath brought us to our home.

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER FIVE.

VIII.—"HEALING OF THE NATIONS."

It is sometimes claimed that in the Kingdom of God, a thousand years will precede the New Earth state, during which time there will be more or less sickness among a class of surviving mortals, who will stand in need of healing; and in proof of this we are referred to Rev. 22: 2; "And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." But unfortunately for this theory, this "tree of life" is located, NOT in a thousand years to precede the New Earth state, but in the New Earth state itself; hence, if this text proves the existence of sickness in the future age, it proves it in the New Earth state; and if it proves the existence of a class of mortals in the future age, it locates them in the New Earth state, and not in a previous age of a thousand years duration!

1st. Observe this fact. Let this "healing of the nations" signify what it may, it is connected with the New Earth state.

2nd. It cannot signify the healing of nations from sickness, firstly, because it does not say so, and secondly, because in that state there shall not be "any more pain" (Rev. 21: 4), "and the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick" (Isa. 33: 24), being "equal to the angels."

3rd. The literal rendering of the text is, "For the SERVICE [tharapeian] of the nations"; thus harmonizing with Rev. 22: 14—"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life." We read of the "nations of them that are saved"; and of these nations it is said, "The leaves of the tree were for the service of the nations." A thing can be of service in more ways than in curing sickness, especially in a land where there is no sickness.

The deathless state, or New Earth state, cannot be crowded off a thousand years beyond the resurrection. Mark this fact. In Isa. 25: 8, we read,—"He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces." Paul informs us that this swallowing up of death in victory is to occur at the "last trump," and the Prophet connects the wiping away of tears with that event; and the Revelator, in introducing the New Earth state, remarks: "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Now as God cannot "wipe away all tears" but once, and as he does do this at the sound of the resurrection trumpet, and does do it at the introduction of the New Earth state, it is an invulnerable fact that the New Earth state is connected with the resurrection of holy ones, and not deferred for a thousand years, for God is not to wipe away tears once at the beginning, and again at the ending of the thousand years. The deathless state begins at the resurrection. No healing of sickness after that.

"Thy Brother Shall Rise Again."

When the dark, cold and unfriendly world in which we live is held up in contrast to the brighter and the better one to come; how inspiriting to the way worn and tempest-tossed when he reads of the countless good things to be obtained. The gloomy hours of sadness and sorrow; the unceasing struggle for dear life; the cares of this world, with its many trials, all ALL tend to lessen his love for the present, and he is beckoned on to a freedom from all this when ten thousand times ten thousand saints make glad the city of God. A promise of relief from present cares; a word of encouragement to pursue the beaten track of God's worthies; an exhortion to be faithful; are things calculated to make life happier. I think of the time when Jesus offered those words of consolation to Martha,—"thy brother shall rise again." How SATISFIED she seemed to believe he would rise again in the resurrection at the LAST day; and not like the mass of professors of the present time, see IN death the gate to endless joy; she was to look beyond this vale of tears, and confidently exclaim, "I KNOW that he shall rise again." Jesus loved Lazarus so that when he came to the grave he was troubled in spirit; and I fancy I see those surrounding him, with breathless silence hear him say, "Lazarus, come forth!" and then to see the one that had been dead rise up and be unloosed of his grave clothes, and to hear Jesus say "Loose him, and let him go." It was doubtless to those who saw this great miracle, the most surprising sight they ever beheld.

I linger around the spot; I see many of those Jews going away to tell the Pharisees the things Jesus had done; having gone and elicited the opposition of these people, hear what they say: 'If we let him thus alone, all will believe on him: and the Romans shall come, and take away both our place and nation." This was good evidence they did not want this man to reign over them; so after awhile there was an arraignment of this, to them, obnoxious individual, and the judgment carried him to the accursed tree; but did this save their place and nation? Nay, verily! A few years after saw their temple destroyed, and themselves without an high priest. God judged them with sore trials, the history of which is awful.

Shall not God avenge his own elect who constantly cry unto him? He will, and that speedily. The time may to us seem deferred, but it is not so; He who sees all things from the beginning, will in the proper time dispose of those who corrupt the earth in the way and manner stated by the prophets.

and there is no use in deceiving ourselves; if we make any reckonings for a futurity, we must see to it that we live as though the judgment was impending, and the time for the settlement of earth's affairs was the next thing. Let it not be said of any who know their Lord, that they are more anxious about the present fleeting life than the life to come.

Be in earnest! Realize the solemn truth that whatever a man soweth that shall he reap; if sown to the Spirit, it is everlasting life; if to the flesh, it is corruption, death, destruction. And oh! to hear the all powerful voice of Christ say to us as to Lazarus, "Come forth!" To be the blessed of the Lord who rise to life unending, may it be our constant effort so to live as to be accounted worthy to stand when he shall appear. G. W. YOUNG.

Spiritualism.—No. 1.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS.

There are some phases of this latter day "Revelation" which are just beginning to be seen, and are not generally understood. This monster has already shown its capability of being "all things to all men," but the end is not yet.

The following extracts are taken from a book entitled "Spiritual Sunday School Class Book, No. 1," and which is for sale at the depot of Spiritual publications in Boston, No. 14 Bromfield Street. It seems that our Spiritualist friends are seeing the necessity of training up a child in "the way he should go," and so they are adopting the Sunday School system. This, along with their "New Testament as corrected by the Spirits," (which I shall notice more at length soon) and the book of Job corrected likewise, and perhaps other parts of the Bible which may be hereafter remodelled to suit the demands of this progressive age, will undoubtedly be used to some extent; and though many of the leading minds will shun any thing that has the appearance of authority in religion, yet there are very many in the rank and file who will find this development just suited to their wants. The "Old Bible" even now has hardly lost the magic influence it has swayed over many of them heretofore, although rejected nominally, as may be seen by the numerous quotations by their writers, and the employment of Bible phrases to express the ideas of the masses, as well as the numerous appeals to it in order to prove their dogmas correct. The fact is simply this; Spiritualists are learning that notwithstanding the brilliancy of the "inner light," and the demonstrability of the New Religion, men generally will have a Bible; and so to avoid a return to the "old paths," they propose to inspect the old road, construct another alongside somewhat similar, dig down the hills and fill up the valleys, put on an engine, and drive easily and quickly to—where? A parallel case may be seen in the setting up of the golden calf by Jeroboam, that he might draw the true worshipers of God away from the temple, and thus destroy all chance of a revolt.

"Spiritualism teaches us something about life after death. It teaches us something, too, about our life before death. By Spiritualism we learn that our life cannot die, nor our souls die; that our life on earth is a part of our immortal life.

Teacher. Do you think that the dear friends who loved you before death are still with you in an invisible state?

Ans. Yes.

T. Why?

Ans. Christ came and talked to those he loved immediately after death, and he is a good example for all good folks.

T. What other reason can you give . . .?

Ans. I feel that it is so, and that is the best and truest reason."

Notice the words "immediately after death." Does "immediately" mean three days? And then, though Christ said, "A spirit hath not flesh and blood as ye see me have," the child is taught that his appearance to the disciples is proof that the spirits of the dead are present, though invisible. And more emphatically so because he is a 'good example for all good folks!" I think "good folks" would do well to try their hand raising the dead if that be so! And then, feeling is the "best and TRUEST reason"! O, is that the way we are taught by the advocates of the only demonstration of immortality?

"Teacher. The Bible relates many instances of the presence of deceased friends. . . . Did not Christ talk with the spirits of deceased men?

Ans. Yes, he saw and talked with Moses and Elias.

T. Did St. Paul commune with the spirit world?

Ans. Yes, he saw and talked with Christ after his crucifixion.

T. Did St. John talk with spirits?

Ans. He talked with Christ many times, and with angels that were once men.

T. Did the dead come out of their graves and talk with many when Jesus was crucified?

Ans. The Bible says they did. . . Christ also appeared unto the eleven disciples, and they also talked with him after his crucifixion."

I think it would be difficult to find a statement further from the truth than the first paragraph above. "Many instances of the presence of deceased friends"! If any one is foolish enough to believe this assertion without proof, let them read the Bible through, and from Genesis to Revelation they will find not one instance where the appearance of a departed friend or relative is even hinted at! In a pamphlet before me entitled "A Catechism on the History and Teachings of the Bible," in reference to the appearance of "the spirits of men deceased," it gives as positive testimony only three instances; the witch of Endor, Moses and Elias, and the angel that talked with John! None of them appeared to personal friends. My Spiritualist friend, is it not rather strange that the Bible, written at different periods during a lapse of more than a thousand years, by a score of men, of different dispositions, characters and pursuits, should preserve so terrible a silence on this question, which is the very life of your faith? Then Elias was a spirit! What became of his body? Did the spirits "steal" it? And John talking with angels that were once men! A little proof, if you please. And St. Paul too!

Well, I suspect if our friends had to meet spirits in the way that Paul met Christ, they would attend circles less frequently than they do now. That was not done "in a corner," at a "dark circle," but at mid-day, by a light from heaven, "above the brightness of the sun," which smote the persecutor and his company to the earth as by a thunderbolt. And that is called "communing with the spirit world"!

As evidence that we have the same feelings, etc., after death as before, the child is taught to say; "Christ talked to the Marys and to his disciples, and expressed the same feelings and desires as before death." Then, after speaking of the naturalness of death, and of its desirableness as "freeing the soul from the weight and conflict of matter," the teacher asks, "Why then do we mourn and weep when our friends die? (A very reasonable question.) Ans. Because we are not yet permitted to see the beautiful realities that are beyond the grave. We hold not yet a victory over the grave. T. And when will that victory be? Ans. When we shall have a clearer and more vivid perception of life after death, . . . when our affections shall be set on things above more than on things below." (More Bible phrase!)

So the victory over the grave is a state of mind, not a fact. Thank God! we look for a time when death shall be conquered; when the glorious anthem of TRIUMPH shall roll over the hills and plains of a world redeemed, and we shall see our King—not a spirit—but the "same Jesus" who says "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold, I AM ALIVE FOREVERMORE." God pity the young who are taught such doctrines as these, and open their eyes to the cruel deception practised upon them.

Alone!

Alone! This word has always thrilled through my heart, but now it has a sadder tone than ever before—my only brother has gone to the war! The sun rose as usual, and ushered in the day for the last, sad parting. Faces passing by wore the same cheerful aspect, while a shadow—a deep gloom, had settled over our entire household.

How I listened to his footsteps as he moved about the house! How eagerly I caught the words as they fell from his lips! How I treasured them in my memory! How long I wanted the day to be, and how short it was! Time, ever regardless of either joy or sorrow, flew rapidly on, and brought the hour for his departure.

With a heart too full to bid him "good bye," too sad to cheer others who were struggling through this great and heavy trial, I hastened to my room, and sat down by an open window. Alone! alone! echoed and re-echoed through the room. Everything that met my eyes seemed to have the same sad word written upon it. Not a sound broke the death-like stillness of that beautiful night; the moon was just appearing behind the trees, casting her pale light over the face of nature; but all things are dark to sorrow, and the light and loveliness blended strangely with the sadness of my heart. Can I ever forget that night?

I cannot tell how long I sat there; but I heard or felt these words: "I am not alone, because the Father is with me." At once I recalled a letter written by a brother (who had long lain in the grave), telling me of that Friend who wept with Mary and Martha over the grave of their brother Lazarus; of that Friend who suffered and died for me; who, in the hour of deepest trial, deserted by his friends, yea, by his disciples, looked up to the Source of every blessing, and said, "Yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me." Why had I not thought of this before? Ah! there was a pall over my heart,—a dark cloud hung over me. I heard the voice, looked up, and saw the hand that "doeth all things well." The whole current of my thought was changed. Who gave my brother his life? who sustained it until the present time? Who sitteth in the heavens, and not a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice? Who numbereth the hairs of our head? I paused; I had forgotten

"E'en the hour that darkest seemeth,
Will His changeless goodness prove;
From the gloom his brightness streameth;
God is wisdom, God is love."

I felt now, though surrounded with all the temptations of camp-life, though exposed to the thousand dangers of the dreaded battle-field, the same hand that guided him here, would protect him there. How happy I felt, and how gently that voice whispered, "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest." In humility and reverence I bowed before my Father's throne, asking for submission, for grace for every time of need; and the peace of God which passeth understanding filled my soul.

O! that in one of the thousand bereaved households in our sorrowing land these lines might fall, and by one of the thousand aching hearts be read with the same earnestness they are written; that you might be led to the same Friend who wept with Mary and Martha,—to the same Savior who is ever at the mercy-seat, pleading for you, and who has gone to prepare a place for you, who will soon come and take his children home to his Father's house of many mansions, where God will wipe all tears from our eyes.

"One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er;
I'm one day nearer home
Than I've ever been before.
Nearer my Father's house,
Where the many mansions be,
Nearer the "great white throne,"
Nearer the "jasper sea."
Nearer that bound of time,
Where we lay our burdens down,
Nearer leaving my cross,
Nearer wearing my crown."

The Better Resurrection.

The above expression, found in Hebrews 11: 35, having been cited in proof of the resurrection of the wicked, it is proper to call attention to the fact that it gives no support whatever to that doctrine. The entire passage reads: "Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." It has been asked,—Does not a better resurrection imply a worse one? In answer to the inquiry we would observe:

1. The word "worse" is an adjective in the comparative degree, and implies that something to which it is not applied is bad. Now if the supposed "worse" resurrection be that of the wicked, that of the righteous must be a bad one! Better turn Sadducee than accept this conclusion! What shall we do then? Deny that there is "a better resurrection"? No, for Paul says the "tortured" ones had their eye upon such a "resurrection," and he gives no hint that their expectation was groundless. What is the "resurrection" which they will "obtain"? The answer is easy. It is that resurrection which the Son of God will give them "at the last day." John 6: 39, 40, 44, 54. It is that resurrection by which their "vile body" will be "changed" and "fashioned like unto" Christ's "glorious body," when he returns from heaven. Phil. 3: 21. It is that resurrection which will result from the indwelling of "the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead." Rom. 8: 11. It is that resurrection which will give them "incorruption." 1 Cor. 15: 42. It is that resurrection which will give them "glory." V. 43. It is that resurrection which will give them "power." (Ib.) It is that resurrection which will give them "a spiritual body." V. 44. It is that resurrection by which they shall be made to "bear the image of the heavenly." V. 49. It is that resurrection by which they shall "put on immortality." V. 53. It is that resurrection which will accomplish "the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." V. 54. It is that resurrection which will justify the song of triumph, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" V. 55. It is that resurrection the anticipation of which should make us "steadfast, unmovable," and cause us to be "always abounding in the work of the Lord." V. 58.

2. If such be the "better," what is the good or inferior "resurrection"? Evidently that mentioned by the Apostle in the words—"Women received their dead RAISED TO LIFE again." Murdoch's rendering of the Syriac of the passage in question is as follows—"and restored to women their children, by a resurrection from the dead. And some died under tortures, and did not hope to escape, that there might be for them a better resurrection."

Be it ours to "attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Phil. 3: 11.

Rev. Henry Grew.

I have hoped since the death of that most excellent brother, to see an extended notice of his life and labors in the Crisis. He was long known as a firm believer in the personal coming of our Lord and life only through him, and maintained before all classes a walk consistent with his profession, so that he was commended as an exemplary christian. So far as my knowledge of him extends, he was not one of those who, by harsh language and denunciatory epithets, repulse instead of win those who differ on points of Bible truth. But in a spirit of love and kindness, he endeavored to make known to others all that he had learned at the feet of the great Teacher. His christian life is that which I love to dwell upon, because there is such a lack of this among many who profess to believe the doctrine of the Lord's speedy coming, and which is continually bringing such a reproach upon the cause of God.

But I took my pen to make a short extract from a letter, received a few days since, relative to this brother. It is from a veteran in the religion of Christ, a man ninety years of age—a sincere and lovely christian, and minister of the gospel, yet not an Adventist. He writes thus:—

"I thank you for the few verses to the memory of Bro. Henry Grew, with whom I was acquainted many years, and never have I witnessed, in any professor of attachment to the cause of Zion, a more devout and humble soul, or a more consistent one before the world than shone in the whole life of that dear saint, beloved by all, of whatever denomination. Yes, truly 'a veteran in the most honored army of the Lord' has gone to rest with him of whose blessed name and mission he delighted to speak. When visiting my son at Philadelphia, he came to see and dine with us. This was the last interview I had with him, and one that I regarded as a high privilege. Yes, he was a pattern of the christian graces, and the lines were just to the point, 'And now he sleeps in Jesus.'"

So much for the testimony of this Pres. minister and aged man. It would be very gratifying to myself, and no doubt to many others, to have some one who was intimately acquainted with Bro. G. give something of a history of his life, how and where he labored, and of the church with which he was connected. Perchance "his mantle" might fall more effectually upon some ministers of the gospel for this effort. Simply a brief statement would be satisfactory, if nothing more could be given.

Who's going to Preach?

There are many whose seats are vacant in the meeting-house, unless they can listen to their favorite preacher. They wish to know who is to preach, before they will consent to go; consequently, when the young preacher comes, he finds but few to listen, and they perhaps sit as critics, instead of holding up his hands by prayer and sympathy; while many more are at home reading the news of the day, or lounging in careless ease. Such must not expect to grow up into Christ, and be ready for his coming.

When a young commander first goes up to meet the enemy, it is not expected that the veteran soldiers will remain in camp; but on the contrary, that is the very time for every warrior to do his best. So when the weak preacher comes, let every christian rally to his side, and sustain him in every possible way. Then is the time you are most needed. Never be absent on such occasions. The ablest preachers find it hard preaching to empty seats. Give the weak one all the aid within your power to bestow. Though it be not so entertaining to you, be sure and see that your seat is not empty when the small preacher comes. Greet him warmly, make him welcome; let him feel that there are some noble hearts who will not leave him to struggle alone, because he is no more eloquent than Moses. Cheer his burdened heart with kind words and deeds. His situation is not a pleasant one. Gladly would he be excused, but the wo is upon him if he remains in silence. Many of the men, sent out at other times to sound the alarm, have risen above their work, and are trying to please men, instead of the Lord. Hence new ones must be raised up to fill their places, and these, like Peter and others, may be only ignorant fishermen; but if you would please the Lord, stand by them.

Revolution.

The political affairs of our nation are in a very critical condition, and continually becoming more complicated. Politicians are greatly perplexed as to what course to take. All their plans seem to fall to the ground, and many have become disheartened and discouraged. They know not what to do. They are being satisfied that a strong under current is paralyzing all their efforts. Some unseen power is pulling down faster than they can build up. They begin to feel that the ship of state is sinking, and must go down; and yet they are determined it shall not be so. But we are well satisfied that all efforts to save the Union will result in a complete revolution. In passing through the streets of our cities and villages we see many banners torn into strings by the winds of heaven,—fit emblems, we think, of the present and prospective state of our nation. It might be said to America, as Jesus said to Peter, "When thou wast young, thou girdest thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldst; but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not." It is clear that the days of her boasting will soon be over, and she will be clothed in sackcloth, humbled in the dust for her pride and arrogant wickedness. Upon the flag of our Union may be read,—"mene, mene, tekel, upharsin." and the same inscription is upon the ensign of all nations.

The kingdoms of this world are about to be dashed in pieces, and be swept away "like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors." All the efforts of men to establish righteous order upon our planet have proved so many failures. None but the Prince of princes can do the work. Then hasten the time, dear Savior, when this rebel world shall be Eden restored, possessed by the meek, who shall for ever delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

Exposition of Dan. 7: 15, and Mark 9: 17-29.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please give your views of the following passages of Scripture?:—

I. Dan. 7: 15.—"I Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body." Was it his soul that was grieved? i. e., that immortal, immaterial substance, said to dwell in man's body?

II. Mark 9: 17 and onward.—"I have brought unto thee my son which hath a dumb spirit," etc. Had this spirit a tangible, material body? If so, how could it enter the child; or how could a legion of them enter the body of one man, as stated in Luke 8: 30?

JAMES G. STERLING.

Springwater, N. Y.

I. In answer to the first inquiry, we would say that the word rendered spirit is not rendered soul once in the entire Bible, and the word rendered soul is not once rendered spirit. The words soul and spirit are not used interchangeably.

The word ruach, rendered spirit, is used in four senses in the Bible. 1st. It represents a being, as angels are called spirits. When the word is used to represent a being, it indicates a tangible organism. This is proved from the fact that angels, who are spirits, are real persons, resembling men, with bodily organs, though not composed of flesh and blood. Angels were entertained by Lot and Abraham. John "fell down to worship before the feet of the angel," whom Jesus sent to instruct him, while upon the isle of Patmos. The angels, or spirits, so resemble men in their physical form, that they have been frequently mistaken for them. Hence we read, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels [or spirits] unawares." We think there is no danger of mistaking a stranger for an immaterial essence. The fact that an angel, or spirit, may be mistaken for a stranger, is positive proof that there is a striking resemblance in their exterior appearance. These angels are an order of beings higher than men. This we know, because man was "made . . a little lower than the angels"; therefore, angels are not men.

2. The word rendered spirit is used to represent an influence, or power, emanating from a being, as the Holy Spirit, "which proceedeth from the Father."

3. The same word is used to denote the atmosphere we breathe, when it is called "the breath of life." This is a common meaning.

4. It is used to denote a state of feeling; as "the proud in spirit," the "haughty spirit," etc. The word is frequently used in this sense. When Daniel says, "I was grieved in my spirit," we understand him to mean that he was grieved in his feelings. Observe, it reads, "I DANIEL was grieved," not some immaterial, indivisible, uncompounded essence. When we meet a person who sympathizes with us, we say of him, "he is a kindred spirit;" by which we mean, he has kindred feelings with ours.

II. We now pass to the second inquiry relative to Mark 9: 17–29. In this case, we have an example of one possessed by a demon, or unclean spirit. This was "a dumb spirit"; or, as the Syriac reads, "a spirit that would not speak." The record shows that the spirit had great power over the young man, and used him very harshly. Our brother wishes to know if this spirit had "a tangible, material body? if so, how could it enter the child; or how could a legion of them enter the body of one man as stated in Luke 8: 30?"

Many have stumbled at this point, not knowing the manner of operation by these demons, who are "tangible, material" bodies. We will illustrate this point. Suppose one man mesmerizes another. While the subject is under the influence of the mesmerizer, he can control his mental powers; consequently, he is in his subject in some sense; otherwise, he could not thus control him. He is not in him personally. How then? By a spiritual influence which proceeds from the mesmerizer, by means of which he exerts his power over him Suppose forty men combine their mesmeric powers upon one man; in that case, they perform greater wonders through their subject. In a certain sense, these forty men are all in the man. How would they be cast out? By cutting off the magnetic or mesmeric currents proceeding from the mesmerizers. Then their subject again possesses self-control. The demons, or unclean spirits, operate in the same way as mesmerizers. This the spirits admit, and their followers teach. When a demon, or spirit, takes possession of a man, he controls him by means of the mesmeric or spiritual influence which proceeds from him to his subject, and by this means he is in him; and in the same way a "legion" may be in one man, giving him wonderful power. When these are cast out of the man, their mesmeric or spiritual powers are taken off, and the man is again free to act as he pleases. The spirits which exercise this power over men are as truly "tangible, material" beings as the men upon whom they operate; but they do not enter personally into their subjects, any more than the mesmerizer does into his. In Mesmerism, men take possession of their mediums; in Spiritualism, demons do the work. In Christianity, the Holy Spirit "which proceedeth from the Father," takes possession of men and abides in them, so long as they will obey the Lord. In this way our heavenly Father dwells in us, and we partake of his divine nature, while he himself is in heaven.

Going to the Slaughter.

It is a sad sight to see so many noble youth, affectionate husbands and fathers going to the field of slaughter, while weeping wives and children are left to spend lonely days and nights in desolated homes. But still they come, regiment after regiment pass in sight of our office, day after day, in heavy tread for the battle-field. As we look out upon the melancholy sight, and think of the bleeding hearts left at the cottage home, and realize that many of these soldiers will soon lie mangled on the battle-field, or be wasting away in gloomy hospitals, with no dear friend to administer to their comfort, the tears unbidden come gushing out of our eyes, causing us to cry, "Come Lord Jesus," "come quickly." Do come, and end the bloody strife. Come and set up the kingdom of peace, and be thyself the King.

"Come and reign, come and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne."

The State of Europe.

Things are in a very unsettled state in Europe, and indicate vast preparations for a coming struggle on a grand scale, which is liable to burst forth at any time. All minds are in a state of excitement relative to coming events. Men "may cry, peace, but there is no peace." Preparations for war upon the most extensive scale are seen in all directions. The muttering of the coming storm is heard in the distance, and men begin to tremble at its awful approach. They try to keep up good cheer but their hearts are trembling with fear. There is a deep and settled conviction that the next outbreak will be terrible, and each monarch seems disposed to avert it as long as possible. They dread the onset, but they must drink the cup, however bitter its contents. The harvest is about ripe for the reaper's sickle. Soon the angels will begin their work. The following is from the London Observer:

"To even a casual observer it is apparent that Europe is gradually but surely drifting into a convulsion. Notwithstanding that respective European Governments profess to be at amity with all neighboring powers, that emperors, kings, and diplomatists are studiously polite to one another, and that professions of friendship are on their lips, there is much reason to fear that they mutually distrust one another, and are quietly preparing for the storm which is believed to be impending. Everywhere a spirit of uneasiness seems to pervade Europe. Russia, for instance, would appear to be on the verge of a revolution, which may burst forth at any moment. General dissatisfaction is felt in the army, on which the Czar solely relies. A vast conspiracy exists, not only among the soldiery, but also among the officers. A secret society, something after the principle of Ribbonism in Ireland, appears to have been formed; and when the work of assassination is decided upon, parties are elected to carry out the sentence of the tribunal. The nobles and the middle class population are also disaffected, and the numerous incendiary fires in all parts of the kingdom indicate how widely the conspiracy has spread. Poland shows unmistakable signs that ere long it will be in a state of convulsion; indeed, actual revolution is only kept down by martial law and the presence of a large army. With these internal sources of disquiet existing in his empire, the Czar has thought it a favorable opportunity to enter into a treaty (it is said of a very intimate character) with France and Italy—a combination that looks ominous for the future peace of Europe, and especially threatening to England."

This rebel planet will soon be a scene of interesting events. The prophetic word is about to be confirmed by the events foretold. It is evident that we are living in the last generation of mankind before the glorious coming of our Savior. His lonely bride is anxiously waiting his return; while her lamps are being trimmed for the grand triumphal procession "to the marriage supper of the Lamb."

Till the glad day arrives, we need expect no better times for the christian than the present. Let us be ready for the coming events, that we may be welcomed by the bridal King of glory.

Sayings of the Spirits.

The following are some of the sayings of the spirits as published in the Banner of Light. They need no comments. One says:—"We declare, there never was a miracle performed." In answer to the question,—"Are mediums capable of performing the miracles that Jesus performed?" the same spirit says:—"They are capable of performing just what he did."—Banner of Light, Feb. 8, 1862.

Another spirit says:—"The hour is fast drawing nigh when all intelligent men and women, whether in or out of the body, will agree with us, when we say there is no death—death is become obsolete. . . The time is coming when man shall no longer fear the idle dream of death.—Banner, Dec. 21, '62.

The following question was asked a spirit:—"Was there ever a universal deluge?" The spirit answers:—"We have no faith in the biblical record of the deluge—none at all."—Banner, Feb. 8, '62.

It is a sad fact that there are many more who believe these lying spirits, than there are who have full confidence in the word of the Lord. A mighty effort is being made to reduce the Bible to the standard of all mere human productions; but they might as well attempt to reverse the Niagara as to overthrow the blessed book.

Parents and Children.

The following sensible and truthful remarks, from the Herald of Gospel Liberty, should be read by every parent in the land. Ponder them well, and carry them into effect, with kindness and perseverance:

"LOVE YOU LESS.—A word to parents.—Parents, will your children love you less for your being dutiful to them, for obeying God in subduing their wills, for making them, through grace divine, submissive, obedient, humble, contrite, meek, loving, Christ-like?

Will your little ones love you less for teaching them early the way of salvation through Jesus Christ,—for training them 'in the way they should go,' in the path of virtue, purity and love? for making them happy here, happy forever?

No child is happy till his will is subdued, brought into sweet, lamb-like submission, made to bow humbly, joyfully at the feet of Jesus.

The reason why so many children disrespect their parents and are miserable, wretchedly so, their proud, stubborn, selfish wills are not subdued, because they are petted, pampered, indulged in their foolish, wicked, sensual appetites and fashions.

In a word, children are unhappy, and despise their parents because of parental neglect in disobeying God, in household discipline. Parents, if you suppose your children will love or respect you more by indulging them in pride, folly and fashion, in living as they list, you are greatly mistaken."

Our Tract Column.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names towards raising ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS, as a TRACT FUND, to aid the Christian Publication Society in the issue and gratuitous distribution of such Tracts and other publications as the times in which we live demand; and our subscriptions shall be paid at the call of the Treasurer of the Society as soon as the whole amount is subscribed.

The Thousand Dollar Tract Fund.

NUMBER TWO.

Bro. F. H. Burbank writes from my old battle ground at Plymouth, Mass., under date of Oct. 14th:—

"A number of the children of the Lord have formed a society for the purpose of buying tracts and distributing them in every family in the town of Plymouth. We are poor, pecuniarily, but we will do what we can. Our society was formed last Tuesday, and started with eighteen members, who are to pay one dollar per year, or two cents per week. Some will pay more than that. We are confident of having thirty members in our society. By their paying two cents a week, we may raise $30 a year for tracts. We hold a meeting once a week; have religious exercises, reading, singing, etc. One has paid in his year's contribution, though he will not stop there. Hence this week we send two dollars to the Tract Fund, and wish to have it credited to the Plymouth Tract Society. There is none other in the place. We wish to have ten thousand pages of tracts right away, as we wish to go right along with the work."

This is a move in the right direction. There have been many tracts scattered in old Plymouth in years gone by, and the seed sown there has not been entirely in vain. Some has brought forth fruit an hundred fold, and under the faithful labors of Bro. Burbank the little flock there have been strengthened in grace, in faith, and in numbers largely; and as he has a mind to work, we are glad to see that he is training them in the right way.

Are there not other preachers who are willing to form such a society as that at Plymouth, and place tracts in every house in their town? Let us hear from such. Remember, every dollar given will purchase 1800 pages of tracts from the Christian Publication Society.

Others have been interested in scattering tracts in other parts of Plymouth. One sister has sent for, and received some thousands of pages. She has written expressing her thanks for the tracts sent her. She says:—

"I had a chance to give nearly two-thirds of them away to send off Saturday night, and yesterday I had a chance to give half I had left to a sailor in the United States service. He said he would read them all, and lend them all he could. He will do well, I know, for he is a christian. . . . God be praised that I had a chance to give the tracts away yesterday. O, I have wanted some so bad to give all my friends when they were going to sea, and since I have seen the truths of the Bible in a clearer light, I feel as if I could not keep still: I want every one to know the truth and love it. I have but few of those tracts left; and any time they will send me more, they will be thankfully received.

H."

The same sister writes again that her tracts were all distributed except single copies of some she had not read. Some were given to ministers who were interested in the gospel of Christ, and it is hoped that they may do much good.

A sister waiting for the Lord, and "longing for his appearing," writes from Iowa:

"For twelve years I have been sick, and being destitute of this world's goods, I had to depend on friends. Eight years ago I came west to live with a friend, and since that time I have not seen one believer. My Bible is my only Advent book. I have not even a hymn book. A lady on a visit east a few weeks ago came across some tracts on Future Punishment, by Henry Grew, and brought them to me. There is a work written by D. T. Taylor,—"The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer." How happy I should be to have that book! It would seem as if I almost sat under the sound of his voice again. I will not be particular what is sent if it will feed the soul, for I am starving for the true word. Shall the poor have the gospel? Yours looking for Christ.

H. T. M."

I have sent the Crisis and other publications to this lonely pilgrim, and pray God they may be blessed, and be a blessing to others. Here comes another letter from the far West. Sister McC——, from Dodge Co., writes, while ordering a copy of "Retribution" and "Signs of the Times":—

"I presume you have quite forgotten the McC—— family. How often my husband and myself talk of the seasons we have had in sitting under your preaching in New York city, in Mechanic and Temperance Halls. We are debarred from that great blessing since we came to this western world. We do sometimes hear preaching, but seldom. We had a visit from C. F. Hudson last spring. He preached twice to us. We went forty miles last June to hear preaching in Eureka. We heard the dear and talented H. V. Reed. When we told him we were personally acquainted with you, how pleased he seemed. We also heard J. M. Stephenson, with some others. O, will the good Lord send some of his servants to this vicinity, and open the hearts of the people to receive them.

"Since we came to this western country we have been called to pass through the deep waters of affliction. We lost our second son. He received a spinal injury by a fall. I fed him like an infant for between five and six months. His end was peace. Since then we have lost a beloved daughter, aged twelve years, and a boy of fourteen years. Yet we hope they will come again from the land of the enemy. Our remaining child lies in the hospital at Washington, a wounded soldier. His father has gone for him, to strive and bring him home. Now, dear brother H., will you remember us at the throne of grace? for I believe the prayers of the righteous avail much. My mind is dark. I do not rejoice at the coming of Christ; with tears I say it. I want that darkness to be scattered. If you should ever come to F. L., here is a house, and hearts open to receive you.

C. McC."

We send this sister a dollar's worth of tracts. I distinctly remember Bro. M., and the days of association with him in New York, and I pray God that his blessing may rest upon their lonely and saddened hearts, now stricken and bereaved by so many bitter griefs. Brethren, pray that God may comfort the sad and sorrowing ones; and so, our hearts drawn together in unity with all the scattered and afflicted flock of God, shall realize more fully that we are "one body," and members of Christ. What would some of our brethren and sisters think, who find it hard to go a mile to meeting, if they were under the necessity of traveling forty miles to hear the word of God preached? May God send laborers into his harvest field! And while we cannot always send men, let us send our printed messages of truth, and pray that God's blessing may be on them as they go.

Bro. A. F. Servis writes from Kingsbury, Ind., Sept. 27th:—

"I will acknowledge the bundle of tracts sent to this place; also a bundle to Grand Blanc, Mich.; all of which are acceptable. I hope they may do much good in opening the eyes of the blind, and leading men to seek for eternal life through Jesus Christ."

This is the real object we have in view in sending out tracts. We desire to be so supplied that no preacher who goes forth weeping, bearing precious seed, may be necessarily destitute of tracts to scatter among the people. I have now before me perhaps fifty letters such as these, with extracts from which I hope hereafter to enrich "The Tract Column."

And now, brethren, remember what we purpose to do. We intend to raise ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS forthwith, to scatter tracts among the destitute localities. How much will you give towards raising the amount? Send your subscriptions to Miles Grant. And if you wish for tracts, send your requests to him, and they shall be forwarded forthwith.

Yours in Christ, H. L. HASTINGS.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 21st, '62.

For the Crisis.

The Duty of Christians in the Present Crisis.

The following, from the pen of H. Grattan Guinness, was furnished us by G. C. Colson. It was published in "The Herald of the Kingdom and Age to Come."—ED.

MY DEAR BRETHREN:—Civil war having broken out, and the call to arms being sounded from the press, the platform and the pulpit, and your mind exercised about your duty as a christian in the present crisis, allow me as a fellow-christian and as a minister to offer you a few weighty considerations upon this subject. But first let me ask you, is your mind subjected, my dear brethren, to the word of God? It ought to be perfectly so in all moral and spiritual things. That word alone should be your standard of judgment, your law, your guide. Pardon me if in faithfulness I say you cannot fairly have examined that word upon this subject, and have also thoroughly submitted yourself to its declarations and commands, and yet be in error or even uncertainty upon this matter; so plain are the teachings of Scripture on this as on all other points of christian morality. I can understand, however, the manner in which your mind has been drawn into its present state of perplexity or error. You have listened to the words of man rather than to those of God; human arguments and human examples have misled you;—now turn from them to the divine word; there inquire for the mind of God. Men or devils and your natural heart will seek to hinder you from this. They will tell you it is unnecessary—will try to settle the matter with such words as these:—the Government can only be defended on such occasions as this with the sword—the christian is bound to defend the Government, and therefore bound to use the sword—if war is an evil it is a necessary one—principles of peace cannot be carried out in this world. So argues man, and so doth Satan; but not so the word of God. It notices the existence of human governments. It declares that the powers that be are ordained of God. It prophesies, too, their course. It shows what man is when entrusted with worldly power and authority. It foretells the judgment of those who have abused such responsibility, and points forward to the coming and millennial reign of Christ, the manifestation of whose kingdom is to break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms (Dan. 2: 44), and to fill the whole earth with its presence and glory, its righteousness and peace. But it does not attempt to regulate such governments on christian principles. It lays down the duty of husbands and wives, of parents and children, of masters and servants; but not of christian rulers, and that because while it contemplates the certainty of the christianity of individuals, it does not contemplate the possibility of the christianity of nations or governments, before the personal return and millennial reign of Christ.

But as to the duty of christians towards earthly governments, the word of God is not silent. It does not tell them to seek or accept positions of power in them, and thus have power and rule over that world which is in open and avowed rebellion against God (the Satan being still its prince and its God—John 14: 30; 2 Cor. 4: 4); it does not tell them to seek authority over the world which has rejected Christ, but rather "it is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord." It does not even tell them to defend any government under which they live. There is not a single passage in the Scriptures bidding christians to defend any government on earth. They are commanded to be subject to the higher powers, to pay tribute, to render to all their dues,—"tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor" (Rom. 13). They are commanded to be "subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work, to speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, showing all meekness unto all men."—Titus 3: 13. The word of God exhorts that "supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty."—1 Tim. 2: 1, 2. And in cases in which the command of rulers and those of God are directly opposed and conflicting, it bids them to "obey God rather than men." Acts 4: 19, and 5: 29.

These are the duties of christians towards earthly governments laid down in the Scriptures, and the only ones with which I am acquainted. And as the word of God does not command the christian to defend such governments, nor in any way to identify himself with them, but simply to submit to and pray for them, so it does not command him to use the sword in their defense or for any purpose, but directly the contrary. It positively forbids his using any weapon of injury in an offensive or defensive way. It commands him to act towards all others on those principles of love which are utterly opposed to the infliction of injury, whether by the sword or by other means; and to those christians who have been betrayed into the use of the sword, it speaks words of rebuke and warning, threatening those who persist in such a course with punishment and death by the very weapon they have drawn in aggression or defense.

The testimony which the word of God bears upon this subject may be divided into three parts.

1. The great principles it lays down as characteristic of christianity.

2. The precepts which it gives to the church.

3. The example of our Lord and the examples of the apostles and first christians (as far as they followed in Christ's steps), which it presents to the church for imitation.

1. As to the principles characteristic of christianity. If we examine the principles on which God acts towards his saints in this dispensation, we find they are those of love. Mercy and grace are only love in action towards the guilty and the vile. If we examine the foundation of all christianity—the cross of Christ—we find that its grand characteristic is that of love. "But God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."—Rom. 5: 8. And if we examine the principles on which christians are to act towards God, men, each other and the world, we find they are those of love. "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children; and walk in love."—Eph. 5: 1, 2. Because God has shown them mercy, they are to show others mercy. Because God has forgiven them their trespasses, they are to forgive others their trespasses. Because God deals with them in grace, pure, unmingled grace, they are to deal with others in grace, even such grace, following God, walking in love.

Now I ask you, do such principles accord with those of war? Can a christian acting upon such engage in the work of human slaughter? If he plunges the sword in a human bosom, must it not be in direct and shocking violation of these principles? Is it acting in love towards a man to stab him, run him through with a bayonet; or in grace, to blow his brains out? Can any man dare to say that it is? If you say that it is not—and you cannot do otherwise—then you admit that the christian, being bound by the gracious manner of God's dealings with him, and by the first and deepest principles of the religion of Jesus, to act towards all others in grace, mercy and love, cannot lawfully engage in the work of human slaughter—cannot lawfully engage in war.

Perhaps like many others you urge the fact that war was permitted and even commanded by God under the Jewish dispensation, and that what was right for the people of God to do then, cannot be wrong

The Better Resurrection.

The above expression, found in Hebrews 11: 35, having been cited in proof of the resurrection of the wicked, it is proper to call attention to the fact that it gives no support whatever to that doctrine. The entire passage reads: "Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." It has been asked,—Does not a better resurrection imply a worse one? In answer to the inquiry we would observe:

1. The word "worse" is an adjective in the comparative degree, and implies that something to which it is not applied is bad. Now if the supposed "worse" resurrection be that of the wicked, that of the righteous must be a bad one! Better turn Sadducee than accept this conclusion! What shall we do then? Deny that there is "a better resurrection"? No, for Paul says the "tortured" ones had their eye upon such a "resurrection," and he gives no hint that their expectation was groundless. What is the "resurrection" which they will "obtain"? The answer is easy. It is that resurrection which the Son of God will give them "at the last day." John 6: 39, 40, 44, 54. It is that resurrection by which their "vile body" will be "changed" and "fashioned like unto" Christ's "glorious body," when he returns from heaven. Phil. 3: 21. It is that resurrection which will result from the indwelling of "the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead." Rom. 8: 11. It is that resurrection which will give them "incorruption." 1 Cor. 15: 42. It is that resurrection which will give them "glory." V. 43. It is that resurrection which will give them "power." (Ib.) It is that resurrection which will give them "a spiritual body." V. 44. It is that resurrection by which they shall be made to "bear the image of the heavenly." V. 49. It is that resurrection by which they shall "put on immortality." V. 53. It is that resurrection which will accomplish "the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." V. 54. It is that resurrection which will justify the song of triumph, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" V. 55. It is that resurrection the anticipation of which should make us "steadfast, unmovable," and cause us to be "always abounding in the work of the Lord." V. 58.

2. If such be the "better," what is the good or inferior "resurrection"? Evidently that mentioned by the Apostle in the words—"Women received their dead RAISED TO LIFE again." Murdoch's rendering of the Syriac of the passage in question is as follows—"and restored to women their children, by a resurrection from the dead. And some died under tortures, and did not hope to escape, that there might be for them a better resurrection."

Be it ours to "attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Phil. 3: 11.

For the Crisis.

Rev. Henry Grew.

I have hoped since the death of that most excellent brother, to see an extended notice of his life and labors in the Crisis. He was long known as a firm believer in the personal coming of our Lord and life only through him, and maintained before all classes a walk consistent with his profession, so that he was commended as an exemplary christian. So far as my knowledge of him extends, he was not one of those who, by harsh language and denunciatory epithets, repulse instead of win those who differ on points of Bible truth. But in a spirit of love and kindness, he endeavored to make known to others all that he had learned at the feet of the great Teacher. His christian life is that which I love to dwell upon, because there is such a lack of this among many who profess to believe the doctrine of the Lord's speedy coming, and which is continually bringing such a reproach upon the cause of God.

But I took my pen to make a short extract from a letter, received a few days since, relative to this brother. It is from a veteran in the religion of Christ, a man ninety years of age—a sincere and lovely christian, and minister of the gospel, yet not an Adventist. He writes thus:—

"I thank you for the few verses to the memory of Bro. Henry Grew, with whom I was acquainted many years, and never have I witnessed, in any professor of attachment to the cause of Zion, a more devout and humble soul, or a more consistent one before the world than shone in the whole life of that dear saint, beloved by all, of whatever denomination. Yes, truly 'a veteran in the most honored army of the Lord' has gone to rest with him of whose blessed name and mission he delighted to speak. When visiting my son at Philadelphia, he came to see and dine with us. This was the last interview I had with him, and one that I regarded as a high privilege. Yes, he was a pattern of the christian graces, and the lines were just to the point, 'And now he sleeps in Jesus.'"

So much for the testimony of this Pres. minister and aged man. It would be very gratifying to myself, and no doubt to many others, to have some one who was intimately acquainted with Bro. G. give something of a history of his life, how and where he labored, and of the church with which he was connected. Perchance "his mantle" might fall more effectually upon some ministers of the gospel for this effort. Simply a brief statement would be satisfactory, if nothing more could be given.

Who's going to Preach?

There are many whose seats are vacant in the meeting-house, unless they can listen to their favorite preacher. They wish to know who is to preach, before they will consent to go; consequently, when the young preacher comes, he finds but few to listen, and they perhaps sit as critics, instead of holding up his hands by prayer and sympathy; while many more are at home reading the news of the day, or lounging in careless ease. Such must not expect to grow up into Christ, and be ready for his coming.

When a young commander first goes up to meet the enemy, it is not expected that the veteran soldiers will remain in camp; but on the contrary, that is the very time for every warrior to do his best. So when the weak preacher comes, let every christian rally to his side, and sustain him in every possible way. Then is the time you are most needed. Never be absent on such occasions. The ablest preachers find it hard preaching to empty seats. Give the weak one all the aid within your power to bestow. Though it be not so entertaining to you, be sure and see that your seat is not empty when the small preacher comes. Greet him warmly, make him welcome; let him feel that there are some noble hearts who will not leave him to struggle alone, because he is no more eloquent than Moses. Cheer his burdened heart with kind words and deeds. His situation is not a pleasant one. Gladly would he be excused, but the wo is upon him if he remains in silence. Many of the men, sent out at other times to sound the alarm, have risen above their work, and are trying to please men, instead of the Lord. Hence new ones must be raised up to fill their places, and these, like Peter and others, may be only ignorant fishermen; but if you would please the Lord, stand by them.

Revolution.

The political affairs of our nation are in a very critical condition, and continually becoming more complicated. Politicians are greatly perplexed as to what course to take. All their plans seem to fall to the ground, and many have become disheartened and discouraged. They know not what to do. They are being satisfied that a strong under current is paralyzing all their efforts. Some unseen power is pulling down faster than they can build up. They begin to feel that the ship of state is sinking, and must go down; and yet they are determined it shall not be so. But we are well satisfied that all efforts to save the Union will result in a complete revolution. In passing through the streets of our cities and villages we see many banners torn into strings by the winds of heaven,—fit emblems, we think, of the present and prospective state of our nation. It might be said to America, as Jesus said to Peter, "When thou wast young, thou girdest thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldst; but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not." It is clear that the days of her boasting will soon be over, and she will be clothed in sackcloth, humbled in the dust for her pride and arrogant wickedness. Upon the flag of our Union may be read,—"mene, mene, tekel, upharsin." and the same inscription is upon the ensign of all nations.

The kingdoms of this world are about to be dashed in pieces, and be swept away "like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors." All the efforts of men to establish righteous order upon our planet have proved so many failures. None but the Prince of princes can do the work. Then hasten the time, dear Savior, when this rebel world shall be Eden restored, possessed by the meek, who shall for ever delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

Exposition of Dan. 7: 15, and Mark 9: 17-29.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please give your views of the following passages of Scripture?:—

1. Dan. 7: 15.—"I Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body." Was it his soul that was grieved? i. e., that immortal, immaterial substance, said to dwell in man's body?

II. Mark 9: 17 and onward.—"I have brought unto thee my son which hath a dumb spirit," etc. Had this spirit a tangible, material body? If so, how could it enter the child; or how could a legion of them enter the body of one man, as stated in Luke 8: 30?

JAMES G. STERLING.

Springwater, N. Y.

I. In answer to the first inquiry, we would say that the word rendered spirit is not rendered soul once in the entire Bible, and the word rendered soul is not once rendered spirit. The words soul and spirit are not used interchangeably.

The word ruach, rendered spirit, is used in four senses in the Bible. 1st. It represents a being, as angels are called spirits. When the word is used to represent a being, it indicates a tangible organism. This is proved from the fact that angels, who are spirits, are real persons, resembling men, with bodily organs, though not composed of flesh and blood. Angels were entertained by Lot and Abraham. John "fell down to worship before the feet of the angel," whom Jesus sent to instruct him, while upon the isle of Patmos. The angels, or spirits, so resemble men in their physical form, that they have been frequently mistaken for them. Hence we read, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels [or spirits] unawares." We think there is no danger of mistaking a stranger for an immaterial essence. The fact that an angel, or spirit, may be mistaken for a stranger, is positive proof that there is a striking resemblance in their exterior appearance. These angels are an order of beings higher than men. This we know, because man was "made . . a little lower than the angels"; therefore, angels are not men.

2. The word rendered spirit is used to represent an influence, or power, emanating from a being, as the Holy Spirit, "which proceedeth from the Father."

3. The same word is used to denote the atmosphere we breathe, when it is called "the breath of life." This is a common meaning.

4. It is used to denote a state of feeling; as "the proud in spirit," the "haughty spirit," etc. The word is frequently used in this sense. When Daniel says, "I was grieved in my spirit," we understand him to mean that he was grieved in his feelings. Observe, it reads, "I DANIEL was grieved," not some immaterial, indivisible, uncompounded essence. When we meet a person who sympathizes with us, we say of him, "he is a kindred spirit;" by which we mean, he has kindred feelings with ours.

II. We now pass to the second inquiry relative to Mark 9: 17-29. In this case, we have an example of one possessed by a demon, or unclean spirit. This was "a dumb spirit"; or, as the Syriac reads, "a spirit that would not speak." The record shows that the spirit had great power over the young man, and used him very harshly. Our brother wishes to know if this spirit had "a tangible, material body? if so, how could it enter the child; or how could a legion of them enter the body of one man as stated in Luke 8: 30?"

Many have stumbled at this point, not knowing the manner of operation by these demons, who are "tangible, material" bodies. We will illustrate this point. Suppose one man mesmerizes another. While the subject is under the influence of the mesmerizer, he can control his mental powers; consequently, he is in his subject in some sense; otherwise, he could not thus control him. He is not in him personally. How then? By a spiritual influence which proceeds from the mesmerizer, by means of which he exerts his power over him. Suppose forty men combine their mesmeric powers upon one man; in that case, they perform greater wonders through their subject. In a certain sense, these forty men are all in the man. How would they be cast out? By cutting off the magnetic or mesmeric currents proceeding from the mesmerizers. Then their subject again possesses self-control. The demons, or unclean spirits, operate in the same way as mesmerizers. This the spirits admit, and their followers teach. When a demon, or spirit, takes possession of a man, he controls him by means of the mesmeric or spiritual influence which proceeds from him to his subject, and by this means he is in him; and in the same way a "legion" may be in one man, giving him wonderful power. When these are cast out of the man, their mesmeric or spiritual powers are taken off, and the man is again free to act as he pleases. The spirits which exercise this power over men are as truly "tangible, material" beings as the men upon whom they operate; but they do not enter personally into their subjects, any more than the mesmerizer does into his. In Mesmerism, men take possession of their mediums; in Spiritualism, demons do the work. In Christianity, the Holy Spirit "which proceedeth from the Father," takes possession of men and abides in them, so long as they will obey the Lord. In this way our heavenly Father dwells in us, and we partake of his divine nature, while he himself is in heaven.

Going to the Slaughter.

It is a sad sight to see so many noble youth, affectionate husbands and fathers going to the field of slaughter, while weeping wives and children are left to spend lonely days and nights in desolated homes. But still they come, regiment after regiment pass in sight of our office, day after day, in heavy tread for the battle-field. As we look out upon the melancholy sight, and think of the bleeding hearts left at the cottage home, and realize that many of these soldiers will soon lie mangled on the battle-field, or be wasting away in gloomy hospitals, with no dear friend to administer to their comfort, the tears unbidden come gushing out of our eyes, causing us to cry, "Come Lord Jesus," "come quickly." Do come, and end the bloody strife. Come and set up the kingdom of peace, and be thyself the King.

"Come and reign, come and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne."

The State of Europe.

Things are in a very unsettled state in Europe, and indicate vast preparations for a coming struggle on a grand scale, which is liable to burst forth at any time. All minds are in a state of excitement relative to coming events. Men "may cry, peace, but there is no peace." Preparations for war upon the most extensive scale are seen in all directions. The muttering of the coming storm is heard in the distance, and men begin to tremble at its awful approach. They try to keep up good cheer but their hearts are trembling with fear. There is a deep and settled conviction that the next outbreak will be terrible, and each monarch seems disposed to avert it as long as possible. They dread the onset, but they must drink the cup, however bitter its contents. The harvest is about ripe for the reaper's sickle. Soon the angels will begin their work. The following is from the London Observer:

"To even a casual observer it is apparent that Europe is gradually but surely drifting into a convulsion. Notwithstanding that respective European Governments profess to be at amity with all neighboring powers, that emperors, kings, and diplomatists are studiously polite to one another, and that professions of friendship are on their lips, there is much reason to fear that they mutually distrust one another, and are quietly preparing for the storm which is believed to be impending. Everywhere a spirit of uneasiness seems to pervade Europe. Russia, for instance, would appear to be on the verge of a revolution, which may burst forth at any moment. General dissatisfaction is felt in the army, on which the Czar solely relies. A vast conspiracy exists, not only among the soldiery, but also among the officers. A secret society, something after the principle of Ribbonism in Ireland, appears to have been formed; and when the work of assassination is decided upon, parties are elected to carry out the sentence of the tribunal. The nobles and the middle class population are also disaffected, and the numerous incendiary fires in all parts of the kingdom indicate how widely the conspiracy has spread. Poland shows unmistakable signs that ere long it will be in a state of convulsion; indeed, actual revolution is only kept down by martial law and the presence of a large army. With these internal sources of disquiet existing in his empire, the Czar has thought it a favorable opportunity to enter into a treaty (it is said of a very intimate character) with France and Italy—a combination that looks ominous for the future peace of Europe, and especially threatening to England."

This rebel planet will soon be a scene of interesting events. The prophetic word is about to be confirmed by the events foretold. It is evident that we are living in the last generation of mankind before the glorious coming of our Savior. His lonely bride is anxiously waiting his return; while her lamps are being trimmed for the grand triumphal procession "to the marriage supper of the Lamb."

Till the glad day arrives, we need expect no better times for the christian than the present. Let us be ready for the coming events, that we may be welcomed by the bridal King of glory.

Sayings of the Spirits.

The following are some of the sayings of the spirits as published in the Banner of Light. They need no comments. One says:—"We declare, there never was a miracle performed." In answer to the question,—"Are mediums capable of performing the miracles that Jesus performed?" the same spirit says:—"They are capable of performing just what he did."—Banner of Light, Feb. 8, 1862.

Another spirit says:—"The hour is fast drawing nigh when all intelligent men and women, whether in or out of the body, will agree with us, when we say there is no death—death is become obsolete. . . The time is coming when man shall no longer fear the idle dream of death.—Banner, Dec 21, '62.

The following question was asked a spirit:—"Was there ever a universal deluge?" The spirit answers:—"We have no faith in the biblical record of the deluge—none at all."—Banner, Feb. 8, '62.

It is a sad fact that there are many more who believe these lying spirits, than there are who have full confidence in the word of the Lord. A mighty effort is being made to reduce the Bible to the standard of all mere human productions; but they might as well attempt to reverse the Niagara as to overthrow the blessed book.

Parents and Children.

The following sensible and truthful remarks, from the Herald of Gospel Liberty, should be read by every parent in the land. Ponder them well, and carry them into effect, with kindness and perseverance:

"LOVE YOU LESS.—A word to parents.—Parents, will your children love you less for your being dutiful to them, for obeying God in subduing their wills, for making them, through grace divine, submissive, obedient, humble, contrite, meek, loving, Christ-like?

Will your little ones love you less for teaching them early the way of salvation through Jesus Christ,—for training them 'in the way they should go,' in the path of virtue, purity and love? for making them happy here, happy forever?

No child is happy till his will is subdued, brought into sweet, lamb-like submission, made to bow humbly, joyfully at the feet of Jesus.

The reason why so many children disrespect their parents and are miserable, wretchedly so, their proud, stubborn, selfish wills are not subdued, because they are petted, pampered, indulged in their foolish, wicked, sensual appetites and fashions.

In a word, children are unhappy, and despise their parents because of parental neglect in disobeying God, in household discipline. Parents, if you suppose your children will love or respect you more by indulging them in pride, folly and fashion, in living as they list, you are greatly mistaken."

Our Tract Column.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names towards raising ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS, as a TRACT FUND, to aid the Christian Publication Society in the issue and gratuitous distribution of such Tracts and other publications as the times in which we live demand; and our subscriptions shall be paid at the call of the Treasurer of the Society as soon as the whole amount is subscribed.

The Thousand Dollar Tract Fund.

NUMBER TWO.

Bro. F. H. Burbank writes from my old battle ground at Plymouth, Mass., under date of Oct. 14th:—

"A number of the children of the Lord have formed a society for the purpose of buying tracts and distributing them in every family in the town of Plymouth. We are poor, pecuniarily, but we will do what we can. Our society was formed last Tuesday, and started with eighteen members, who are to pay one dollar per year, or two cents per week. Some will pay more than that. We are confident of having thirty members in our society. By their paying two cents a week, we may raise $30 a year for tracts. We hold a meeting once a week; have religious exercises, reading, singing, etc. One has paid in his year's contribution, though he will not stop there. Hence this week we send two dollars to the Tract Fund, and wish to have it credited to the Plymouth Tract Society. There is none other in the place. We wish to have ten thousand pages of tracts right away, as we wish to go right along with the work."

This is a move in the right direction. There have been many tracts scattered in old Plymouth in years gone by, and the seed sown there has not been entirely in vain. Some has brought forth fruit an hundred fold, and under the faithful labors of Bro. Burbank the little flock there have been strengthened in grace, in faith, and in numbers largely; and as he has a mind to work, we are glad to see that he is training them in the right way.

Are there not other preachers who are willing to form such a society as that at Plymouth, and place tracts in every house in their town? Let us hear from such. Remember, every dollar given will purchase 1800 pages of tracts from the Christian Publication Society.

Others have been interested in scattering tracts in other parts of Plymouth. One sister has sent for, and received some thousands of pages. She has written expressing her thanks for the tracts sent her. She says:—

"I had a chance to give nearly two-thirds of them away to send off Saturday night, and yesterday I had a chance to give half I had left to a sailor in the United States service. He said he would read them all, and lend them all he could. He will do well, I know, for he is a christian. . . . God be praised that I had a chance to give the tracts away yesterday. O, I have wanted some so bad to give all my friends when they were going to sea; and since I have seen the truths of the Bible in a clearer light, I feel as if I could not keep still: I want every one to know the truth and love it. I have but few of those tracts left; and any time they will send me more, they will be thankfully received. H."

The same sister writes again that her tracts were all distributed except single copies of some she had not read. Some were given to ministers who were interested in the gospel of Christ, and it is hoped that they may do much good.

A sister waiting for the Lord, and "longing for his appearing," writes from Iowa:

"For twelve years I have been sick, and being destitute of this world's goods, I had to depend on friends. Eight years ago I came west to live with a friend, and since that time I have not seen one believer. My Bible is my only Advent book. I have not even a hymn book. A lady on a visit east a few weeks ago came across some tracts on Future Punishment, by Henry Grew, and brought them to me. There is a work written by D. T. Taylor,—"The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer." How happy I should be to have that book! It would seem as if I almost sat under the sound of his voice again. I will not be particular what is sent if it will feed the soul, for I am starving for the true word. Shall the poor have the gospel? Yours looking for Christ. H. T. M."

I have sent the Crisis and other publications to this lonely pilgrim, and pray God they may be blessed, and be a blessing to others. Here comes another letter from the far West. Sister McC——, from Dodge Co., writes, while ordering a copy of "Retribution" and "Signs of the Times":—

"I presume you have quite forgotten the McC—— family. How often my husband and myself talk of the seasons we have had in sitting under your preaching in New York city, in Mechanic and Temperance Halls. We are debarred from that great blessing since we came to this western world. We do sometimes hear preaching, but seldom. We had a visit from C. F. Hudson last spring. He preached twice to us. We went forty miles last June to hear preaching in Eureka. We heard the dear and talented H. V. Reed. When we told him we were personally acquainted with you, how pleased he seemed. We also heard J. M. Stephenson, with some others. O, will the good Lord send some of his servants to this vicinity, and open the hearts of the people to receive them.

"Since we came to this western country we have been called to pass through the deep waters of affliction. We lost our second son. He received a spinal injury by a fall. I fed him like an infant for between five and six months. His end was peace. Since then we have lost a beloved daughter, aged twelve years, and a boy of fourteen years. Yet we hope they will come again from the land of the enemy. Our remaining child lies in the hospital at Washington, a wounded soldier. His father has gone for him, to strive and bring him home. Now, dear brother H., will you remember us at the throne of grace? for I believe the prayers of the righteous avail much. My mind is dark. I do not rejoice at the coming of Christ; with tears I say it. I want that darkness to be scattered. If you should ever come to F. L., here is a house, and hearts open to receive you. C. McC."

We send this sister a dollar's worth of tracts. I distinctly remember Bro. M., and the days of association with him in New York, and I pray God that his blessing may rest upon their lonely and saddened hearts, now stricken and bereaved by so many bitter griefs. Brethren, pray that God may comfort the sad and sorrowing ones; and so, our hearts drawn together in unity with all the scattered and afflicted flock of God, shall realize more fully that we are "one body," and members of Christ. What would some of our brethren and sisters think, who find it hard to go a mile to meeting, if they were under the necessity of traveling forty miles to hear the word of God preached? May God send laborers into his harvest field! And while we cannot always send men, let us send our printed messages of truth, and pray that God's blessing may be on them as they go.

Bro. A. F. Servis writes from Kingsbury, Ind., Sept. 27th:—

"I will acknowledge the bundle of tracts sent to this place; also a bundle to Grand Blanc, Mich.; all of which are acceptable. I hope they may do much good in opening the eyes of the blind, and leading men to seek for eternal life through Jesus Christ."

This is the real object we have in view in sending out tracts. We desire to be so supplied that no preacher who goes forth weeping, bearing precious seed, may be necessarily destitute of tracts to scatter among the people. I have now before me perhaps fifty letters such as these, with extracts from which I hope hereafter to enrich "The Tract Column."

And now, brethren, remember what we purpose to do. We intend to raise ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS forthwith, to scatter tracts among the destitute localities. How much will you give towards raising the amount? Send your subscriptions to Miles Grant. And if you wish for tracts, send your requests to him, and they shall be forwarded forthwith.

Yours in Christ, H. L. HASTINGS.

For the Crisis.

The Duty of Christians in the Present Crisis.

The following, from the pen of H. Grattan Guinness, was furnished us by G. C. Colson. It was published in "The Herald of the Kingdom and Age to Come."—ED.

MY DEAR BRETHREN:—Civil war having broken out, and the call to arms being sounded from the press, the platform and the pulpit, and your mind exercised about your duty as a christian in the present crisis, allow me as a fellow-christian and as a minister to offer you a few weighty considerations upon this subject. But first let me ask you, is your mind subjected, my dear brethren, to the word of God? It ought to be perfectly so in all moral and spiritual things. That word alone should be your standard of judgment, your law, your guide. Pardon me if in faithfulness I say you cannot fairly have examined that word upon this subject, and have also thoroughly submitted yourself to its declarations and commands, and yet be in error or even uncertainty upon this matter; so plain are the teachings of Scripture on this as on all other points of christian morality. I can understand, however, the manner in which your mind has been drawn into its present state of perplexity or error. You have listened to the words of man rather than to those of God; human arguments and human examples have misled you;—now turn from them to the divine word; there inquire for the mind of God. Men or devils and your natural heart will seek to hinder you from this. They will tell you it is unnecessary—will try to settle the matter with such words as these:—the Government can only be defended on such occasions as this with the sword—the christian is bound to defend the Government, and therefore bound to use the sword—if war is an evil it is a necessary one—principles of peace cannot be carried out in this world. So argues man, and so doth Satan; but not so the word of God. It notices the existence of human governments. It declares that the powers that be are ordained of God. It prophesies, too, their course. It shows what man is when entrusted with worldly power and authority. It foretells the judgment of those who have abused such responsibility, and points forward to the coming and millennial reign of Christ, the manifestation of whose kingdom is to break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms (Dan. 2: 44), and to fill the whole earth with its presence and glory, its righteousness and peace. But it does not attempt to regulate such governments on christian principles. It lays down the duty of husbands and wives, of parents and children, of masters and servants; but not of christian rulers, and that because while it contemplates the certainty of the christianity of individuals, it does not contemplate the possibility of the christianity of nations or governments, before the personal return and millennial reign of Christ.

But as to the duty of christians towards earthly governments, the word of God is not silent. It does not tell them to seek or accept positions of power in them, and thus have power and rule over that world which is in open and avowed rebellion against God (the Satan being still its prince and its God—John 14: 30; 2 Cor. 4: 4); it does not tell them to seek authority over the world which has rejected Christ, but rather "it is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord." It does not even tell them to defend any government under which they live. There is not a single passage in the Scriptures bidding christians to defend any government on earth. They are commanded to be subject to the higher powers, to pay tribute, to render to all their dues,—"tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor" (Rom. 13). They are commanded to be "subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work, to speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, showing all meekness unto all men."—Titus 3: 13. The word of God exhorts that "supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty."—1 Tim. 2: 1, 2. And in cases in which the command of rulers and those of God are directly opposed and conflicting, it bids them to "obey God rather than men." Acts 4: 19, and 5: 29.

These are the duties of christians towards earthly governments laid down in the Scriptures, and the only ones with which I am acquainted. And as the word of God does not command the christian to defend such governments, nor in any way to identify himself with them, but simply to submit to and pray for them, so it does not command him to use the sword in their defense or for any purpose, but directly the contrary. It positively forbids his using any weapon of injury in an offensive or defensive way. It commands him to act towards all others on those principles of love which are utterly opposed to the infliction of injury, whether by the sword or by other means; and to those christians who have been betrayed into the use of the sword, it speaks words of rebuke and warning, threatening those who persist in such a course with punishment and death by the very weapon they have drawn in aggression or defense.

The testimony which the word of God bears upon this subject may be divided into three parts.

1. The great principles it lays down as characteristic of christianity.

2. The precepts which it gives to the church.

3. The example of our Lord and the examples of the apostles and first christians (as far as they followed in Christ's steps), which it presents to the church for imitation.

1. As to the principles characteristic of christianity. If we examine the principles on which God acts towards his saints in this dispensation, we find they are those of love. Mercy and grace are only love in action towards the guilty and the vile. If we examine the foundation of all christianity—the cross of Christ—we find that its grand characteristic is that of love. "But God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."—Rom. 5: 8. And if we examine the principles on which christians are to act towards God, men, each other and the world, we find they are those of love. "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children; and walk in love."—Eph. 5: 1, 2. Because God has shown them mercy, they are to show others mercy. Because God has forgiven them their trespasses, they are to forgive others their trespasses. Because God deals with them in grace, pure, unmingled grace, they are to deal with others in grace, even such grace, following God, walking in love.

Now I ask you, do such principles accord with those of war? Can a christian acting upon such engage in the work of human slaughter? If he plunges the sword in a human bosom, must it not be in direct and shocking violation of these principles? Is it acting in love towards a man to stab him, run him through with a bayonet; or in grace, to blow his brains out? Can any man dare to say that it is? If you say that it is not—and you cannot do otherwise—then you admit that the christian, being bound by the gracious manner of God's dealings with him, and by the first and deepest principles of the religion of Jesus, to act towards all others in grace, mercy and love, cannot lawfully engage in the work of human slaughter—cannot lawfully engage in war.

Perhaps like many others you urge the fact that war was permitted and even commanded by God under the Jewish dispensation, and that what was right for the people of God to do then, cannot be wrong

now. Let me entreat you to pause and consider what you say. Your argument is, that what was right under the Jewish dispensation is right under the Christian; that war was right under the first, and therefore must be right under the second. But is not this argument on an unscriptural assumption? Know you not the difference between the Jewish and Christian dispensations? Know you not that the Jews were placed under law, whereas christians are placed not under law, but under grace, and are consequently bound to deal with others not in law but in grace? And know you not that on this very ground the Lord himself forbids christians doing things that the Jews had been commanded to do? Look at the fifth of Matthew. There the Lord, after pronouncing benedictions upon the poor in spirit, the meek, the merciful, the peacemakers, says (alluding to the Jewish law, "thou shalt give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe," Ex. 21 : 24), "Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." Is not this clear? Is it not to the point? Does it not show that whereas the first was one of pure justice, righteousness, law, the second is one of unmingled grace? Does it not show that there are acts commanded by the first which are forbidden by the second? Does it not prove that certain actions right under the first, would be wrong under the second? And does it not show that war, which was lawful under the Jewish dispensation, is forbidden to saints as wrong under the gospel? For what is war in its mildest form—defensive war—but resistance of evil? and does not our Lord here forbid all such resistance of evil? Perhaps you hesitate to admit this. Strange hesitation! have the words—"I say unto you that ye resist not evil," any meaning at all? If they have, what is that meaning? Does not our Lord illustrate it in three different ways, and can you be in darkness about it? Look at the first example which he gives in explanation of his command—resist not evil. A man smites you on the right cheek. Are you to retaliate? No. Are you to inflict deserved punishment? No. Are you to threaten? No. Are you to submit to be smitten again if he wills to repeat his wicked act? "Turn to him the other also." Is this the spirit and practice of human warfare? Is it not diametrically opposed to it?

Look again at the fifth of Matthew. Our Lord continues:—"Ye have heard that it hath been said, thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven. For he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good; and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." Thus again does he distinguish between the Jewish and christian dispensations, and condemns under the christian dispensation the principles which lead to wars opposite even to perfect peace. "I say unto you love your enemies." Can you hesitate any longer, dear brethren? Do you not see that you cannot, under the influence or in the exercise of tender love towards your enemy, stab or shoot or kill him? and that if you may not stab or shoot or kill, you may not go to war? God forbid you should shrink back from this truth any longer.

A word or two more about the general character of christianity. The following passages present the simple truth upon this subject, and in so doing speak volumes against christians engaging in war. First look at the character of those whom Christ pronounces blessed in the fifth chapter of Matthew. "Blessed are the poor in spirit." "Blessed are they that mourn." "Blessed are the meek." "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness." "Blessed are the merciful." "Blessed are the pure in heart." "Blessed are the peacemakers." "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake." This is the spirit of true christianity; and how opposed to that of war! Observe the benediction he pronounces upon the meek, the merciful, and the peacemaker. The meek shall "inherit the earth,"—the merciful shall "obtain mercy," and the peacemakers shall be "called the children of God." Well may these words present the spirit of christianity, seeing they give us the very transcript and image of the character of Christ himself. Look also at the characteristics of christian charity presented in 1 Cor. 13. I quote some of them. "Charity suffereth long and is kind, . . . doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, . . . beareth all things, endureth all things, . . . never faileth!" What a contrast does this present to even the spirit of defensive warfare. Let us remember that whatever else we have, if we have not this "charity" we are nothing before God. Look also at the works of the flesh and the fruit of the Spirit, described in the fifth of Galatians. Here again we find contrasted the spirit of war and that of christianity.

THE WORKS OF THE FLESH.

"Now the works of the flesh are manifested, which are these: . . . hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, . . . and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT.

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law."

What, let me ask you, are the passions which lead to wars and fightings, but those of the flesh here so solemnly condemned? And on the other hand, how is it possible to conceive wars and fightings carried out on the principles of the fruit of the Spirit here so earnestly enjoined? Is it possible for man to fight with man on principles of love, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness and peace? Happy are they who like the apostle can add, we who are Christ's "have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts." Dear brethren, if we live in the Spirit let us walk in the Spirit, and we shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh.

More Preachers Wanted.

Where? All through the field. What kind? The kind that God sends,—who care more for the flock than for the fleece; who preach more to build up the cause than to distract it; who love to pray better than to dispute; who love to preach and practice practical godliness better than to invent and promulgate some new item of theology which can never benefit any body; who love the warm prayer meeting more than a spirited debating circle; who have more of the Holy Ghost in their hearts than of new theology in their heads; who can labor more zealously for the salvation of souls than to exalt self; who can gather rather than scatter the flock; and who can labor, rather than be idle. These preachers are wanted in the field. They may have to live on small salaries; they may sometimes even suffer; they will meet opposition; they will suffer persecution; but they will be owned of God and will be a blessing to the cause. These preachers are wanted now; for the work of preaching is almost done. The scenes of the judgment are almost upon us. The great day of wrath has almost arrived, when sinners will pray to rocks and mountains.

Two New Tracts.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I have revised my tract on The Rich Man and Lazarus, and published an edition; also, tract on The Two Horned Beast of Rev. 13. I have written the above with a humble desire to contribute a small share of light and interest on these two very intricate subjects, and now solicit the sympathy and aid of my brethren in the circulation of them.

Your brother in the bonds of the gospel,

Obituary Notices.

Died, at West Ossipee, N. H., August 26th, 1862, Mr. BENJAMIN MOODY, aged seventy-four years.

He enjoyed good health, for one of his age, until a few months before his death. In May he had a slight shock of the palsy, but soon recovered a little, so that he was able to work some until the 14th of June, when he came in and told his wife that his work was done. His right side became entirely paralyzed, and in about ten days he lost the power of speech and also his appetite, and could not take any kind of food for twenty-seven days; he then revived, so that he could move his right hand, take food and talk for about two weeks; when he again lost his appetite and power of speech. He suffered a great deal, but was very patient all through his sickness.

He said he felt that he was prepared for and earnestly desired the time to come when he should be at rest. He had been a professor of religion for a number of years, and his hope was in the resurrection. We deeply mourn his loss; but we hope to meet him in the new earth where death will not come to sever from us those we love.

Bro. T. Piper attended the funeral. He preached a very comforting and interesting discourse, proving that the saints will rest in their graves until the resurrection, when they will come forth victorious.

HATTIE HODGDON.

Died in La Porte, Ind., Oct. 21st, LOUISA D. SERVIS, wife of Bro. A. F. Servis, aged thirty-two years, seven months and seven days.

The subject of the above notice was converted to the Advent faith some eleven years ago. Bro. S. was preaching for the Methodists at the time they first heard preached the faith of life only through Christ. She with her companion embraced the truth. Since that time she has been a devoted believer; and especially since the death of their then only child, Emma Jessie, who died Jan. 6, '62, has she seemed to be dead to the world, and often expressed a desire to sleep until the storm of these last perilous times were over. She was possessed of a sweet temper. Those who knew her best loved her most.

In conversation with her a few years since, we remarked that it was quite a sacrifice for one possessing ability and commanding a good support among a popular people (which was the condition of her husband formerly) to leave all, come out and go with this unpopular cause, referring to the Advent faith. She replied that a noble cause demanded a noble sacrifice. Yes, and in her life she has exemplified this. With her it was no vain talk, but a reality.

Her death was quite sudden. Only sick a few hours. Nevertheless she was ready. The shock to our Bro. is very severe. He had just entered his new field of labor in La Porte Co., Ind., when his helpmeet, who knew how to sympathize with him in all his trials, was cut down at his side. May Heaven sustain him in all his lonely moments, and bring him to enjoy the sweet society of his lost dear ones in the kingdom of God.

Brethren and sisters, pray that our dear Bro. may be sustained under this deep trial. Two infant daughters are left upon his hands to care for. God must sustain him, or he will sink under the present bereavement.

A few remarks were offered upon the occasion for his comfort having for their foundation 1 Thess. 4 : 18.

D. R. & M. S. MANSFIELD.

Died in Holderness, N. H., Oct. 3, Sister MARY ANN, wife of Bro. Daniel Smith, aged forty-one years, eight months, and two days.

The subject of this notice professed the religion of Christ before the Advent doctrine was preached in those parts, and united with the Methodist church; but when the glorious news of the Redeemer's coming was preached, she heartily embraced it with her companion. Being somewhat isolated from those she loved and from meeting privileges, she may have seen times when her enjoyment was low; still she never ceased to cherish the "blessed hope," as something far more valuable than anything earthly, and the truth and promises of God far preferable to the fables of these last days.

Our sister, for the last six months of her life, suffered much. During that time there were seasons when it was thought that she might recover her health, and be a comfort to her anxious family; but in this they were destined to be painfully disappointed. Although our sister had great anxiety for her children, which were of the right age to need a mother's care, in this day of temptations, yet she was enabled by the grace of God to live or die. In this her heart was filled with joy that was unspeakable; thus leaving to mourning friends the evidence of the strength and preciousness of the christian's hope in the dying hour. Her companion, with two children, and other friends, are left to mourn, but truly not as others that have no hope. May surviving friends be ready to meet the absent one in the Eden world.

Sunday, Oct. 5th, the people assembled to sympathize with and assist the afflicted, and to listen to the promise and oath of God, as presenting a hope that yields strong consolation to all that have fled to Christ for refuge, as recorded in Heb. 6 : 17–20.

Married.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Oct. 25. The Washington Star of last evening says Gen. McClellan to-day removed his headquarters to the Virginia side of the Potomac—precisely where, it may not be proper to say.

The evacuation of Winchester by the rebels, and their falling back toward Staunton, is confirmed by several citizens who came into our lines yesterday. The small pox has broken out with unusual violence among the people at Winchester, and among the troops, which probably hastened the departure of the rebels.

The Philadelphia Press contains a hint that Gen. Banks is to head an expedition to the coast of Texas. It also says that Gen. McClernand's expedition, after clearing the West of obstructions, is to go to the interior of Texas.

Harper's Ferry, Oct. 29. A portion of the rebel army is still in the vicinity of Winchester. A wagon train four miles long moved south yesterday from Martinsburg.

Twenty platform cars, two thousand bales of hay, some other supplies, with a portion of the tressle-work of the railroad bridge in the rear of the arsenal buildings, were destroyed by fire this afternoon. The fire is supposed to have been accidentally set by the soldiers.

Since Saturday last the movements of troops in this vicinity have been constant, and with the exception of Sumner's corps, on Bolivar Hights, our whole army may now be said to be in motion.

The movements of the enemy are very mysterious and the reports are conflicting.

A Williamsport letter of the 27th, says an arrival from Winchester reports that the small pox and typhoid fever are raging fearfully, and that at least fifty or sixty rebels are dying daily.

The main body of Lee's army is between Bunker Hill and Winchester. Nothing seems to indicate a retreat. There is no doubt that Bragg is hastening to the relief of Lee. A great battle without doubt will be fought before the close of the week.

Cairo, Ill., Oct. 29. An officer direct from Gen. Grant's headquarters reports that the rebels were massing their forces nine miles below Grand Junction on Sunday, and passengers who left Corinth yesterday say that the night before they left, our scouting parties had driven in the rebel pickets.

New York, Oct. 31. The Wilmington (N. C.) Journal announces the arrival of seven regiments of negroes to garrison the town and fortifications during the sickly season. They have been in a camp of instruction under white officers three months.

The Times' special Washington dispatch says advices from Fortress Monroe indicate that the rebels are in force and continually increasing at Petersburg. They are commanded by Gen. Longstreet, and are believed to be largely composed of veterans from the army of Gen. Lee.

An Apalachicola letter reports that a naval expedition sent up the river captured a sloop and eighty bales of cotton, but not, however, without a fight with the rebels on the banks. Several of our men were slightly wounded.

A correspondent of the World says: "The war in Kentucky teaches us this lesson; that it was badly managed on both sides. That the Confederates made bad use of their start, and the Federals failed to take advantage of their subsequent superiority of numbers. The things are left here nearly as they were a year ago. No conversion or change in this State.

A new march into Tennessee; a new campaign in the Kanawha Valley. The rising of the rivers is our opportunity. Cumberland Gap reoccupied, and East Tennessee held. The mountains themselves are barriers against all but Morgan, and nothing seems to be a barrier to him.

Further than this, we should say that the elements of the contest are rapidly burning themselves out in the West. There are but a few months more of grace in which to wield the armies now in the field, or all hope is gone. The new levy should be put in the hands of brave and sagacious generals, or the winter will see their dissolution. The rebels have done their work; higher the flame cannot rise. Henceforth, the struggle, however long it may be, will be of diminished proportions, and if marplots are not allowed to meddle with it, it cannot be of much longer duration."

Cairo, Oct. 31. A late Grenada Appeal says Price is reported to have evacuated Holley Springs on Sunday last.

The Columbus (Georgia) Times of the 17th says Gen. Butler with 7000 men had landed at Pensacola, and it was expected he would advance on the junction of the Mobile, Montgomery and Pensacola roads.

New York, Oct. 31. The Commercial says the army of the Potomac will hereafter consist of three grand armies, 9 corps, 30 divisions and 70 brigades. The first grand army will consist of the corps of Generals Raynolds, Porter and Franklin, under Gen. Hooker.

The second army will consist of the corps of Generals Couch, Wilcox and Slocum, under Gen. Burnside.

The third army will consist of the corps of Gen. Cox and two other corps, to whom permanent commanders have not yet been assigned, under Gen. Sumner.

New York, Nov. 1. The Times' Washington dispatch says Gen. Longstreet is at Petersburg, and is to command the rebel army moving to attack Suffolk.

Gen. Dix is said to be strong in the belief that an attack is to be made there, and at Yorktown and Fortress Monroe.

According to information from Mexico, received per steamer Eagle from Havana, about half of the French troops, amounting to nearly 17,000 men, had arrived and were immediately ordered to Orizaba. It is thought that the fortifications at Orizaba had been selected as the base of operations, and that the expedition for the City of Mexico would start in December.

A Philmont dispatch to the Herald states that a balloon reconnoissance discovered the rebel cavalry with a battery this side of Charlestown, commanding the turnpike.

Gen. Pleasanton came up with the enemy's cavalry at Philmont yesterday. The fight which was conducted wholly by artillery, lasted five hours, when the enemy retreated to Union, a small town about three miles beyond. This morning the attack was renewed, and the rebels fell back from Union. Our troops occupy the town.

Prominent rebel sympathizers in Washington, who have been uniformly well posted as to the plans of the Richmond Junta, assert that Gen. Lee has accomplished everything for which his recent campaign was undertaken, and that his army will risk no general engagement on this side of Richmond.

There is reliable information of substantial aid being furnished by England for the construction of a rebel navy. Several immense iron clad frigates are being constructed at present, calculated to cross the ocean, and of power sufficient to devastate our coasts and annihilate our shipping.

A gentleman who left Richmond about a week ago, and who had while there opportunity of free intercourse with leading rebels, informs us that it was their avowed policy to avoid any further serious fighting on the line of the Potomac, and to draw our forces into their interior retreats. This is confirmed by the retirement of Gen. Lee from the Upper Potomac. They pursued the same line of tactics when Gen. McClellan landed at Fortress Monroe last spring, drawing him back until he came within sight of Richmond, and then pouncing upon him just at the right moment.

Boston, Nov. 3. The brig Baron de Castine of Boston, Capt. Saunders, arrived at this port yesterday (Sunday) afternoon at four o'clock. She sailed toward the close of last month from Bangor, Me., for Cardenas.

Capt. Saunders reports that, on the 29th of Oct., while in latitude 39, lon. 69, the brig was captured by the pirate steamer, Capt. Semmes, and after the officers and crews of several vessels which had been captured previously had been put on board his vessel, the pirate chief took his bond for $6000 and allowed the brig to go.

The Indian massacres in Minnesota have produced great distress among the settlers all along the frontier counties. Appeals for contributions to aid them are being made in two principal cities. The Governor of Minnesota states that at least thirty thousand miserable men, heart-broken women and abject children are wandering, homeless, naked and starving. Certainly our country affords no parallel of suffering such as this. Clothing is greatly needed by the suffering, for the rigors of winter are close at hand.

A Vienna paper contains a letter from Rome which gives some interesting information concerning the Pope's health. Pio Nono, according to this Austrian writer, is rapidly breaking down, under the weight of years and troubles. "His Holiness lately remarked to an ecclesiastical dignitary, 'The hand of Providence has already written for me the Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin. My days are numbered; my acts are weighed in the balance of Divine justice, and I hope they will not be found too far wanting; my empire is falling into secular hands. Will it be for very long? who knows?'" This statement appears contemporaneous with another, which is to the effect that Victor Emmanuel has recently declared that the Roman difficulty would be settled before the end of the year. This last version is founded on the statement of a Paris correspondent of the Daily News, to the following effect:—"A serious consultation about Italian affairs is about to take place at Biarritz. M. Nigra and D'Azeglio are on their way, and will be joined by M. Pepoli, the Italian Minister, and the Emperor's cousin, who has arrived in Paris this afternoon, bringing with him, it is said, a pressing representation from the Ratazzi Cabinet that it cannot hold on unless it is enabled to promise a solution within some reasonable time of the Roman question." The French occupation of Rome will continue, but any change in the personnel of the office would develop whatever plans the Emperor of the French may have for the pacification of Italy.

A letter dated July 18, received in this city from Accra, west coast of Africa, states that an earthquake entirely destroyed that town on the 10th of July. Every house in the town was demolished, and the three English forts near the place were in ruins.

now. Let me entreat you to pause and consider what you say. Your argument is, that what was right under the Jewish dispensation is right under the Christian; that war was right under the first, and therefore must be right under the second. But is not this argument on an unscriptural assumption? Know you not the difference between the Jewish and Christian dispensations? Know you not that the Jews were placed under law, whereas christians are placed not under law, but under grace, and are consequently bound to deal with others not in law but in grace? And know you not that on this very ground the Lord himself forbids christians doing things that the Jews had been commanded to do? Look at the fifth of Matthew. There the Lord, after pronouncing benedictions upon the poor in spirit, the meek, the merciful, the peacemakers, says (alluding to the Jewish law, "thou shalt give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe," Ex. 21 : 24), "Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." Is not this clear? Is it not to the point? Does it not show that whereas the first was one of pure justice, righteousness, law, the second is one of unmingled grace? Does it not show that there are acts commanded by the first which are forbidden by the second? Does it not prove that certain actions right under the first, would be wrong under the second? And does it not show that war, which was lawful under the Jewish dispensation, is forbidden to saints as wrong under the gospel? For what is war in its mildest form—defensive war—but resistance of evil? and does not our Lord here forbid all such resistance of evil? Perhaps you hesitate to admit this. Strange hesitation! have the words—"I say unto you that ye resist not evil," any meaning at all? If they have, what is that meaning? Does not our Lord illustrate it in three different ways, and can you be in darkness about it? Look at the first example which he gives in explanation of his command—resist not evil. A man smites you on the right cheek. Are you to retaliate? No. Are you to inflict deserved punishment? No. Are you to threaten? No. Are you to submit to be smitten again if he wills to repeat his wicked act? "Turn to him the other also." Is this the spirit and practice of human warfare? Is it not diametrically opposed to it?

Look again at the fifth of Matthew. Our Lord continues:—"Ye have heard that it hath been said, thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven. For he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good; and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." Thus again does he distinguish between the Jewish and christian dispensations, and condemns under the christian dispensation the principles which lead to wars opposite even to perfect peace. "I say unto you love your enemies." Can you hesitate any longer, dear brethren? Do you not see that you cannot, under the influence or in the exercise of tender love towards your enemy, stab or shoot or kill him? and that if you may not stab or shoot or kill, you may not go to war? God forbid you should shrink back from this truth any longer.

A word or two more about the general character of christianity. The following passages present the simple truth upon this subject, and in so doing speak volumes against christians engaging in war. First look at the character of those whom Christ pronounces blessed in the fifth chapter of Matthew. "Blessed are the poor in spirit." "Blessed are they that mourn." "Blessed are the meek." "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness." "Blessed are the merciful." "Blessed are the pure in heart." "Blessed are the peacemakers." "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake." This is the spirit of true christianity; and how opposed to that of war! Observe the benediction he pronounces upon the meek, the merciful, and the peacemaker. The meek shall "inherit the earth,"—the merciful shall "obtain mercy," and the peacemakers shall be "called the children of God." Well may these words present the spirit of christianity, seeing they give us the very transcript and image of the character of Christ himself. Look also at the characteristics of christian charity presented in 1 Cor. 13. I quote some of them. "Charity suffereth long and is kind, . . . doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, . . . beareth all things, endureth all things, . . . never faileth!" What a contrast does this present to even the spirit of defensive warfare. Let us remember that whatever else we have, if we have not this "charity" we are nothing before God. Look also at the works of the flesh and the fruit of the Spirit, described in the fifth of Galatians. Here again we find contrasted the spirit of war and that of christianity.

THE WORKS OF THE FLESH.

"Now the works of the flesh are manifested, which are these: . . . hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, . . . and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT.

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law."

What, let me ask you, are the passions which lead to wars and fightings, but those of the flesh here so solemnly condemned? And on the other hand, how is it possible to conceive wars and fightings carried out on the principles of the fruit of the Spirit here so earnestly enjoined? Is it possible for man to fight with man on principles of love, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness and peace? Happy are they who like the apostle can add, we who are Christ's "have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts." Dear brethren, if we live in the Spirit let us walk in the Spirit, and we shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh.

More Preachers Wanted.

Where? All through the field. What kind? The kind that God sends,—who care more for the flock than for the fleece; who preach more to build up the cause than to distract it; who love to pray better than to dispute; who love to preach and practice practical godliness better than to invent and promulgate some new item of theology which can never benefit any body; who love the warm prayer meeting more than a spirited debating circle; who have more of the Holy Ghost in their hearts than of new theology in their heads; who can labor more zealously for the salvation of souls than to exalt self; who can gather, rather than scatter the flock; and who can labor, rather than be idle. These preachers are wanted in the field. They may have to live on small salaries; they may sometimes even suffer; they will meet opposition; they will suffer persecution; but they will be owned of God and will be a blessing to the cause. These preachers are wanted now; for the work of preaching is almost done. The scenes of the judgment are almost upon us. The great day of wrath has almost arrived, when sinners will pray to rocks and mountains.

W. SHELDON.

Two New Tracts.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I have revised my tract on The Rich Man and Lazarus, and published an edition; also, tract on The Two Horned Beast of Rev. 13. I have written the above with a humble desire to contribute a small share of light and interest on these two very intricate subjects, and now solicit the sympathy and aid of my brethren in the circulation of them.

Your brother in the bonds of the gospel,

S. S. BREWER.

Obituary Notices.

Died, at West Ossipee, N. H., August 26th, 1862, Mr. BENJAMIN MOODY, aged seventy-four years.

He enjoyed good health, for one of his age, until a few months before his death. In May he had a slight shock of the palsy, but soon recovered a little, so that he was able to work some until the 14th of June, when he came in and told his wife that his work was done. His right side became entirely paralyzed, and in about ten days he lost the power of speech and also his appetite, and could not take any kind of food for twenty-seven days; he then revived, so that he could move his right hand, take food and talk for about two weeks; when he again lost his appetite and power of speech. He suffered a great deal, but was very patient all through his sickness.

He said he felt that he was prepared for and earnestly desired the time to come when he should be at rest. He had been a professor of religion for a number of years, and his hope was in the resurrection. We deeply mourn his loss; but we hope to meet him in the new earth where death will not come to sever from us those we love.

Bro. T. Piper attended the funeral. He preached a very comforting and interesting discourse, proving that the saints will rest in their graves until the resurrection, when they will come forth victorious.

HATTIE HODGDON.

Died in La Porte, Ind., Oct. 21st, LOUISA D. SERVIS, wife of Bro. A. F. Servis, aged thirty-two years, seven months and seven days.

The subject of the above notice was converted to the Advent faith some eleven years ago. Bro. S. was preaching for the Methodists at the time they first heard preached the faith of life only through Christ. She with her companion embraced the truth. Since that time she has been a devoted believer; and especially since the death of their then only child, Emma Jessie, who died Jan. 6, '62, has she seemed to be dead to the world, and often expressed a desire to sleep until the storm of these last perilous times were over. She was possessed of a sweet temper. Those who knew her best loved her most.

In conversation with her a few years since, we remarked that it was quite a sacrifice for one possessing ability and commanding a good support among a popular people (which was the condition of her husband formerly) to leave all, come out and go with this unpopular cause, referring to the Advent faith. She replied that a noble cause demanded a noble sacrifice. Yes, and in her life she has exemplified this. With her it was no vain talk, but a reality.

Her death was quite sudden. Only sick a few hours. Nevertheless she was ready. The shock to our Bro. is very severe. He had just entered his new field of labor in La Porte Co., Ind., when his helpmeet, who knew how to sympathize with him in all his trials, was cut down at his side. May Heaven sustain him in all his lonely moments, and bring him to enjoy the sweet society of his lost dear ones in the kingdom of God.

Brethren and sisters, pray that our dear Bro. may be sustained under this deep trial. Two infant daughters are left upon his hands to care for. God must sustain him, or he will sink under the present bereavement.

A few remarks were offered upon the occasion for his comfort having for their foundation 1 Thess. 4 : 18.

D. R. & M. S. MANSFIELD.

Died in Holderness, N. H., Oct. 3, Sister MARY ANN, wife of Bro. Daniel Smith, aged forty-one years, eight months, and two days.

The subject of this notice professed the religion of Christ before the Advent doctrine was preached in those parts, and united with the Methodist church; but when the glorious news of the Redeemer's coming was preached, she heartily embraced it with her companion. Being somewhat isolated from those she loved and from meeting privileges, she may have seen times when her enjoyment was low; still she never ceased to cherish the "blessed hope," as something far more valuable than anything earthly, and the truth and promises of God far preferable to the fables of these last days.

Our sister, for the last six months of her life, suffered much. During that time there were seasons when it was thought that she might recover her health, and be a comfort to her anxious family; but in this they were destined to be painfully disappointed. Although our sister had great anxiety for her children, which were of the right age to need a mother's care, in this day of temptations, yet she was enabled by the grace of God to live or die. In this her heart was filled with joy that was unspeakable; thus leaving to mourning friends the evidence of the strength and preciousness of the christian's hope in the dying hour. Her companion, with two children, and other friends, are left to mourn; but truly not as others that have no hope. May surviving friends be ready to meet the absent one in the Eden world.

Sunday, Oct. 5th, the people assembled to sympathize with and assist the afflicted, and to listen to the promise and oath of God, as presenting a hope that yields strong consolation to all that have fled to Christ for refuge, as recorded in Heb. 6 : 17–20.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Oct. 28. The Washington Star of last evening says Gen. McClellan to-day removed his headquarters to the Virginia side of the Potomac—precisely where, it may not be proper to say.

The evacuation of Winchester by the rebels, and their falling back toward Staunton, is confirmed by several citizens who came into our lines yesterday. The small pox has broken out with unusual violence among the people at Winchester, and among the troops, which probably hastened the departure of the rebels.

The Philadelphia Press contains a hint that Gen. Banks is to head an expedition to the coast of Texas. It also says that Gen. McClernand's expedition, after clearing the West of obstructions, is to go to the interior of Texas.

Harper's Ferry, Oct. 29. A portion of the rebel army is still in the vicinity of Winchester. A wagon train four miles long moved south yesterday from Martinsburg.

Twenty platform cars, two thousand bales of hay, some other supplies, with a portion of the tressle-work of the railroad bridge in the rear of the arsenal buildings, were destroyed by fire this afternoon. The fire is supposed to have been accidentally set by the soldiers.

Since Saturday last the movements of troops in this vicinity have been constant, and with the exception of Sumner's corps, on Bolivar Hights, our whole army may now be said to be in motion.

The movements of the enemy are very mysterious and the reports are conflicting.

A Williamsport letter of the 27th, says an arrival from Winchester reports that the samll pox and typhoid fever are raging fearfully, and that at least fifty or sixty rebels are dying daily.

The main body of Lee's army is between Bunker Hill and Winchester. Nothing seems to indicate a retreat. There is no doubt that Bragg is hastening to the relief of Lee. A great battle without doubt will be fought before the close of the week.

Cairo, Ill., Oct. 29. An officer direct from Gen. Grant's headquarters reports that the rebels were massing their forces nine miles below Grand Junction on Sunday, and passengers who left Corinth yesterday say that the night before they left, our scouting parties had driven in the rebel pickets.

New York, Oct. 31. The Wilmington (N. C.) Journal announces the arrival of seven regiments of negroes to garrison the town and fortifications during the sickly season. They have been in a camp of instruction under white officers three months.

The Times' special Washington dispatch says advices from Fortress Monroe indicate that the rebels are in force and continually increasing at Petersburg. They are commanded by Gen. Longstreet, and are believed to be largely composed of veterans from the army of Gen. Lee.

An Apalachicola letter reports that a naval expedition sent up the river captured a sloop and eighty bales of cotton, but not, however, without a fight with the rebels on the banks. Several of our men were slightly wounded.

A correspondent of the World says: "The war in Kentucky teaches us this lesson; that it was badly managed on both sides. That the Confederates made bad use of their start, and the Federals failed to take advantage of their subsequent superiority of numbers. The things are left here nearly as they were a year ago. No conversion or change in this State.

A new march into Tennessee; a new campaign in the Kanawha Valley. The rising of the rivers is our opportunity. Cumberland Gap reoccupied, and East Tennessee held. The mountains themselves are barriers against all but Morgan, and nothing seems to be a barrier to him.

Further than this, we should say that the elements of the contest are rapidly burning themselves out in the West. There are but a few months more of grace in which to wield the armies now in the field, or all hope is gone. The new levy should be put in the hands of brave and sagacious generals, or the winter will see their dissolution. The rebels have done their work; higher the flame cannot rise. Henceforth, the struggle, however long it may be, will be of diminished proportions, and if marplots are not allowed to meddle with it, it cannot be of much longer duration."

Cairo, Oct. 31. A late Grenada Appeal says Price is reported to have evacuated Holley Springs on Sunday last.

The Columbus (Georgia) Times of the 17th says Gen. Butler with 7000 men had landed at Pensacola, and it was expected he would advance on the junction of the Mobile, Montgomery and Pensacola roads.

New York, Oct. 31. The Commercial says the army of the Potomac will hereafter consist of three grand armies, 9 corps, 30 divisions and 70 brigades. The first grand army will consist of the corps of Generals Raynolds, Porter and Franklin, under Gen. Hooker.

The second army will consist of the corps of Generals Couch, Wilcox and Slocum, under Gen. Burnside.

The third army will consist of the corps of Gen. Cox and two other corps, to whom permanent commanders have not yet been assigned, under Gen. Sumner.

New York, Nov. 1. The Times' Washington dispatch says Gen. Longstreet is at Petersburg, and is to command the rebel army moving to attack Suffolk.

Gen. Dix is said to be strong in the belief that an attack is to be made there, and at Yorktown and Fortress Monroe.

According to information from Mexico, received per steamer Eagle from Havana, about half of the French troops, amounting to nearly 17,000 men, had arrived and were immediately ordered to Orizaba. It is thought that the fortifications at Orizaba had been selected as the base of operations, and that the expedition for the City of Mexico would start in December.

A Philmont dispatch to the Herald states that a balloon reconnoisance discovered the rebel cavalry with a battery this side of Charlestown, commanding the turnpike.

Gen. Pleasanton came up with the enemy's cavalry at Philmont yesterday. The fight which was conducted wholly by artillery, lasted five hours, when the enemy retreated to Union, a small town about three miles beyond. This morning the attack was renewed, and the rebels fell back from Union. Our troops occupy the town.

Prominent rebel sympathizers in Washington, who have been uniformly well posted as to the plans of the Richmond Junta, assert that Gen. Lee has accomplished everything for which his recent campaign was undertaken, and that his army will risk no general engagement on this side of Richmond.

There is reliable information of substantial aid being furnished by England for the construction of a rebel navy. Several immense iron clad frigates are being constructed at present, calculated to cross the ocean, and of power sufficient to devast our coasts and annihilate our shipping.

A gentleman who left Richmond about a week ago, and who had while there opportunity of free intercourse with leading rebels, informs us that it was their avowed policy to avoid any further serious fighting on the line of the Potomac, and to draw our forces into their interior retreats. This is confirmed by the retirement of Gen. Lee from the Upper Potomac. They pursued the same line of tactics when Gen McClellan landed at Fortress Monroe last spring, drawing him back until he came within sight of Richmond, and then pouncing upon him just at the right moment.

Boston, Nov. 3. The brig Baron de Castine of Boston, Capt. Saunders, arrived at this port yesterday (Sunday) afternoon at four o'clock. She sailed toward the close of last month from Bangor, Me., for Cardenas.

Capt. Saunders reports that, on the 29th of Oct., while in latitude 39, lon. 69, the brig was captured by the pirate steamer, Capt. Semmes; and after the officers and crews of several vessels which had been captured previously had been put on board his vessel, the pirate chief took his bond for $6000 and allowed the brig to go.

The Indian massacres in Minnesota have produced great distress among the settlers all along the frontier counties. Appeals for contributions to aid them are being made in the principal cities. The Governor of Minnesota states that at least thirty thousand miserable men, heart-broken women and abject children are wandering, homeless, naked and starving. Certainly our country affords no parallel of suffering such as this. Clothing is greatly needed by the suffering, for the rigors of winter are close at hand.

A Vienna paper contains a letter from Rome which gives some interesting information concerning the Pope's health. Pio Nono, according to this Austrian writer, is rapidly breaking down, under the weight of years and troubles. "His Holiness lately remarked to an ecclesiastical dignitary, 'The hand of Providence has already written for me the Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin. My days are numbered; my acts are weighed in the balance of Divine justice, and I hope they will not be found too far wanting; my empire is falling into secular hands. Will it be for very long? who knows?'" This statement appears contemporaneous with another, which is to the effect that Victor Emmanuel has recently declared that the Roman difficulty would be settled before the end of the year. This last version is founded on the statement of a Paris correspondent of the Daily News, to the following effect:—"A serious consultation about Italian affairs is about to take place at Biarritz. M. Nigra and D'Azeglio are on their way, and will be joined by M Pepoli, the Italian Minister, and the Emperor's cousin, who has arrived in Paris this afternoon, bringing with him, it is said, a pressing representation from the Ratazzi Cabinet that it cannot hold on unless it is enabled to promise a solution within some reasonable time of the Roman question." The French occupation of Rome will continue, but any change in the personnel of the office would develop whatever plans the Emperor of the French may have for the pacification of Italy.

A letter dated July 18, received in this city from Accra, west coast of Africa, states that an earthquake entirely destroyed that town on the 10th of July. Every house in the town was demolished, and the three English forts near the place were in ruins.

Englishman's Greek Concordance.

I have a few copies of this invaluable book. The regular price is $4, for which I will send it by express to any address. To preachers and those ordering books for sale, I will furnish it at a liberal discount. Cash must accompany the orders, which should be addressed to H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass.

The Wisconsin Conference

Will be held at Sumpter, Sauk Co., Wis., six miles from Sauk city, and nine miles from Baraboo, in the "Pockett," beginning on Wednesday evening, Dec. 3d, and holding over Lord's day following. Eld. J. V. Himes of Boston will be present to aid in preaching. Let us have a rally, and let all come at the beginning. Friends in the surrounding townships are requested to bring a few blankets, as so many may come from a great distance that our beds may possibly be more than filled. Let no excuse keep a single preacher in Wisconsin at home. Let friends come from other States also. The Lord is certainly at hand. We must arouse!

It is expected that Bro. Himes will do the most of the preaching. Churches who have a standing with the conference will send their delegates, and churches who wish to unite, will do the same. Isolated brethren, who wish the sympathy and aid of preachers in the conference may send an epistle to W. Sheldon, Merrimack, Wis. I intend to have an assortment of our best books at the meeting; and Bro. Himes will have a quantity of the "Voice" bound, the Lyre, and other valuable productions. Come with praying hearts. Elders Barnes, Turner, Shears, Gibson, and others will please exert themselves to secure a general attendance.

W. SHELDON.

A Friendly Appeal to Americans.

BY E. THAYER.

The writer of this appeal has been careful to express his thoughts in language which makes it "national," and not "sectional," thus adapting it equally to every portion of our distracted and suffering country. He hopes it may be received in the same kind spirit which has dictated it, and that the whole people will labor zealously and judiciously to heal the dissensions which now so unhappily divide our countrymen, till we shall have the joy to hail the advent of universal peace.

I Hear a Voice.

I.

I hear a voice, my country,
Speaking from heaven to thee;
Its sound is borne on every breeze,
Across the land and sea.

II.

It speaks to all the people,—
I seem to hear it say—
Are ye not all one family?
Then why each other slay?

III.

Have ye not all one Father,
For whom in prayer ye bow?
O why not then your qurrels cease,
And end your troubles now!

IV.

Think how much life and treasure
Your heritage has cost;
And will you still this strife prolong
Until the whole is lost?

V.

Think of the weeping widows,
With hearts oppressed with grief,—
Who mourn for those in battle slain,
While none can give relief:

VI.

Think of the lone home circles,
Their cause of sadness learn,—
Which BROTHERS for the war have left,
Who'll never more return:

VII.

Think, too, how many children,
'Reft of a father's care,
From day to day will beg their bread,
With few to hear their prayer:

VIII.

And think how earthly despots—
With scornful taunt and jeer—
If Freedom's fires shall here go out,
Will at republics sneer.

IX.

How great the sum of evils
Which from this war shall flow,—
The human suffering it shall cause,
The Lord alone can know.

X.

My heart is rent with anguish
For thee—"my native land,"—
To save from foes who would destroy,
May God stretch forth his hand.

XI.

A voice is speaking to thee,—
It cometh from above,—
O, BROTHERS, cease this bitter feud,
And live henceforth in love.

XII.

Then shall this night of sorrow
Forever disappear,
And in our midst the Lord shall dwell,
Without one "TRAITOR" here.

Financial Matters.

"Stand from under." This now seems to be the word. This nation is engaged in a desperate and bloody war, involving a vast necessary outlay, and an unlimited amount expended in "stealings and pickings." The Government being out of money issues notes, "promises to pay." These notes of course will be good when paid, and are estimated good in proportion to the value of government credit; but they flood the country with paper money. A thousand dollar note can be made as cheap as a ten dollar note. Three cents outlay is more than sufficient to make a thousand dollars of paper money. Probably $5, or $10 a bushel, is a large price so far as the actual price of manufacturing is concerned. This is propably true of all bank paper. Doubtless government paper is much better than that of any other private bank; but along with this issue of government paper comes a suspension of specie payment by all the banks. This allows the banks to lend their paper to any extent they choose, nobody being able to present it to them and demand of them specie. The result necessarily must be, paper money is plenty, but while being plenty it depreciates in value. One dollar in paper money will now buy only about seventy or eighty cents worth of gold, or, $11 of paper are worth only about $7 or $8 in gold.

The English pound sterling, formerly worth five dollars here, is now worth between six and eight dollars; or, in other words, if a person wishes to send twenty pounds sterling to England, while he formerly would have to pay $100, he must now pay nearly $150 to obtain the requisite draft.

The prospects are for the present an abundant supply of money such as it is. What the future will be, no mortal can tell. Our greatest financiers are puzzled. The bankers of this country have previously been "coasting"; now they are "out at sea," beyond soundings. What their destination is, no man knows. Gold is being hoarded up in this country to a great extent, in anticipation of a crash. Single banks in Boston have from $500,000 to $800,000 in gold lying idle in their vaults; some perhaps more. The amount of gold lying thus in New York probably amounts to nearly forty or fifty million dollars. Gold is going out of the country to a considerable extent. Many United States Railroad bonds, stocks, and securities of various kinds held in Europe, are being sent to this country to be sold at whatever price they may bring, and the proceeds are returned in gold to their owners, who have no confidence now in anything American. On the other hand, however, our grain crop this year is large, and there will be a great European demand. This will send large quantities across the water, helping to equalize the debt. But against this may be noted the fact that our imports are larger probably than ever before.

Hence the present prospects are for a limited period, money plenty, times easy, prices high, and then one universal crash. Much of course will depend upon the course of the war that is being waged, and these results none can predict.

Under these circumstances a word of caution to christian brethren may not be misplaced. They will do well to remember one thing: almost all debts are contracted in what are termed "easy times," when money is plenty. When times are hard, men pay up debts, and hardly ever get in debt; but when times are easy, they assume large responsibilities, involve themselves in debt, and are crushed when the revulsion comes. No better counsel can be given at such times as this than that of the apostle, "Owe no man anything." Now should money become plenty for a time, persons who are in debt should make all haste to pay their debts. Persons who are out of debt should keep out of it forever. And not only should we avoid becoming indebted to others, but we should avoid others becoming indebted to us.

The whole system of debt and credit is ruinous. If you have anything to spare, it is much better generally to give it away than to lend it. If a man comes to you to borrow a hundred dollars, and you can spare it, you had much better give him fifty dollars and let him go, than to lend him a hundred and lose the whole, besides losing your patience, temper, and confidence in his honesty, while you tease and dun him, and he is unable to pay. A man that lends in these days, may well "lend, hoping for nothing again." The man that borrows may well doubt whether he ever can pay. The truest policy is the policy of the Bible. Keep out of debt and out of danger. One good man said, "For many years I have made it a rule to owe no man more than I am able to pay, and to let no man owe me more than I am able to lose."

Especially avoid indorsements. When a man comes to you and asks you to write your name on the back of his note, merely as "a matter of form," "for accommodation," just think about it a couple of days, meditate upon it, read the whole book of Proverbs through, and then if you are "wiser than Solomon," go ahead; and if not, remember that "he that hateth suretyship is sure," and that Solomon himself says, "Take his garment who is surety for a stranger." If you want to be stripped to the last rag, there is not a readier way to reach that result.

In conclusion, lay up your treasures in heaven, if you want them safe. Gold hoarded away in old stockings will melt in the burning day. Silver treasured up in secret places will not buy admittance to the celestial city. "Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath." "In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, to the moles and the bats, and go into the clefts of the rocks, and the tops of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord, for the glory of his majesty when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth."

A few years ago a California steamer went down at sea. One man, I think it was said, had some $30,000 in gold on board, which he poured out upon the floor, and all were welcome to take it, but no one cared to do so. The man who fills his pocket with dollars as he leaps from the sinking ship, goes down inevitably. And we are to remember that "they that will be rich fall into a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition."

How many who read this article can look back upon means wasted in speculations, or by lending to dishonest men, or in useless extravagance and expenditures, of which they now say, "If I only had that, I might do good with it; but it is too late." Let the time past suffice for this folly. "Sell that ye have, give alms, provide bags that wax not old, a treasure in heaven where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth; for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

"Blessed be nothing," said the poor man. We may be sure of one thing, that "the blessing of the Lord maketh rich, and addeth not sorrow thereunto." If our goods, our farms, our merchandize and our money cause us care, hamper our souls, make us sleepless and weary, furrow our brows with traces of earnest thought, and clip the wings of faith, and dim the vision of hope, then it is time for us to take heed to the words of Jesus and watch, lest at any time our hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, or the cares of this world, and that day come upon us as a thief. As a snare shall it come; and while the waves of trouble surge around us, and we are preparing to bid adieu forever to these scenes of storm and gloom, let us when we go forth have this satisfaction, that we have left nothing behind us.

Beware of the sin of Lot! When he had the whole land before him wherein to choose, he pitched his tent toward Sodom, while Abraham departed to a quiet and hilly country. The plain of Sodom was well watered, fertile, and beautiful, but the men of Sodom were sinners exceedingly. Lot was willing to peril his salvation, and that of his family, by locating in the midst of a herd of ungodly men, that he might thereby insure temporal prosperity. The results were disastrous. First, he was plundered and captured by an invading army, and only rescued by the kindness of Abraham. Second, his soul was vexed from day to day by the unlawful deeds of the Sodomites around him, and his family doubtless were corrupted by their influence. Third, he had to leave his pleasant city mansion and go forth forsaking wealth, comfort, ease, elegance, and all the things which he had delighted in. Fourth, his wife, doubtless coveting the treasures that they had left behind, looked back and perished by the way. Fifth, he and his daughters were finally constrained to take refuge in a cave, and there was an end, so far as we know, of Lot's prosperity in the well-watered plain of Jordan, while the corruptions of Sodom followed them even to their mountain fastness; and the drunkenness of Lot, and the incest of his daughters, reveal their folly as the last recorded scene in the life of the patriarch, while from the two daughters sprang the two accursed races of the Ammonites and the Moabites, who, after long ages of iniquity, have been blotted out from the earth by the judgment of God.

While our Savior's admonition rings in our ears, "Remember Lot's wife," it also may be well to suggest that men of business should remember Lot! H. L. HASTINGS.

Reflections on Eden.

My heart is made sad as I cast my eye o'er earth and take a survey of it in all its marked deformity. I look at man as he was when first he came from the hand of his Maker, innocent and harmless, in unison with his Father. In connection with his better half, he walked among Eden's beautiful bowers, whilst his ears were saluted with the sweet notes of its feathered tribes, borne along on zephyrs' stainless wing, in accents most melodious. All nature smiled in gladness as yon orb of day sent forth its genial rays; and to make the scene still more sublime and glorious, the sons of God shouted for joy.

But oh, how soon this scene was changed! The serpent, with his sparkling eye and sanctimonious look, approached the better part of man, and by his artful and gentlemanly address seduced her to reach forth her hand and take of the forbidden fruit and eat. Then she gave it to her husband, and he did eat. And on that day in which he committed this un-manly act, he became a dying man; and consequently was doomed to go back to the earth from which he had been taken; and a door opened for an introduction into this world of all the train of evils which have stalked abroad o'er all this wide earth.

Behold what a mighty change has taken place! That once beautiful and happy pair are now compelled to leave that beautiful garden which God planted for their special benefit, to wander as exiles until the penalty of the law should be inflicted upon them. And in order to make their punishment secure, the tree of life is guarded by placing at the east of the garden of Eden cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life, lest man should eat and live forever. Solemn thought! Yet in this act we see most clearly the attribute of mercy displayed. But how great the change! The beasts are now no longer in subjection to man. Misery at once begins to roll its dark and turbid waves over the world, and man is doomed to go back to the earth from which he has been taken; where he must have remained eternally had not the Father found a ransom.

The lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, prevailed to open the book, and loose the seven seals thereof. But oh! how few there are out of the great mass of Adam's race who are not traveling the broad road which leads to death,—that death from which there is no recovery. But few are disposed to believe and obey the gospel, and square their lives by it; and thereby secure themselves life, territority, dominion and glory, in Jesus, and at his coming receive it; and at last be brought on to Beulah's blissful plains, all dressed in white, bearing in their hands the conqueror's palm, as they walk among its beautiful groves which will be scattered over Eden's verdant plains; and all in harmony join in singing the emancipation song, saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." Amen and amen. R. V. LYON.

Influence.

"He that is not with me is against me."—Matt. 12:30.

There is no individual so low or in so humble a station that his influence is not considerable. Our influence indeed is vast. While we may seem to have none, yet if we keep steadily on thinking rightly, talking rightly, acting rightly, we may be assured that it does have its impress. What if we do not see the immediate result? Do we reap our harvest soon as we sow? Or, do we see the blade shoot forth and ripen into ears? We have to patiently wait for the growth, though so slow as not to be seen.

"Continual dropping will wear a stone." Continual perseverance in righteousness can never fail to have its effect for good. Be assured, that if we are not scattering abroad, we are gathering with Christ. Be assured, also, that if we are not gathering with Christ, we are scattering abroad.

Be not discouraged, dear brother or sister, if you see no result; leave the result with God: hold on, persevere; keep doing. You may plant, a sister may water with her tears, but God will assuredly give the increase. The darkest time is said to be just before day. Be that as it may, we know that men often rave the worst when convinced of the truth, and unwilling to yield to it. But surely he is nearer the truth than before he believed, and may yet confess it.

I wish to make the impression that each individual's influence is far greater than you are generally aware of. The great thing then is, to see that our influence is always in the right direction: cast for truth and righteousness.

We'll not be Weary There.

We're often weary here
With grief and care and fear,
And often pray that rest
Our lives may soon invest.

We'll not be weary there,
In that bright world so fair;
For joy shall crown the brow
That's twined with sorrow now.

'Tis here that death and pain
Have boasted long their reign,
And stained with bitter tears
Earth's long and saddened years.

But there shall ne'er be known
Nor death, nor pain, nor moan,
Nor grief, nor heaving sigh,
Nor tears to dim the eye.

For in that lovely land,
An air forever bland
Shall kiss the brow of youth,
And innocence and truth.

Her friends will often grieve,
Or with feigned words deceive,
And wring our hearts with wo
Of earth's vain, empty show.

But there the years shall prove
The truth of angel love,
And all that's good and pure
Eternal shall endure.

Then hail that Eden home,
That blissful world to come;
All hail its cloudless light,
Its sweet, its glad delight;

That will the pilgrim bless
With joy and happiness;
While ages long revolve
The Savior's love to solve.

From a Son to his Mother.

BRO. GRANT:—By permission, I forward you a copy of a letter written by a Bro. of this village to his aged mother, which for high-toned truth and consoling merit I believe deserves a place in the columns of the Crisis. If you think so, you are privileged to publish it. I copy it verbatim, with the exceptions of a private nature, and which are irrelevant to this part of the correspondence. C. G. C.

It reads thus:—"Well, Mother, I have just finished reading my "Journal," and have snatched my pen to tell you that I believe the President's Emancipation scheme is all a sham. He gives the South one hundred days to return to their allegiance; then, if they are incorrigible, he will recommend to Congress the feasibility of Emancipation! Now this indirect method of legislation suggests a pandering to an iniquitous institution. It is caviling with justice, and shirking the responsibility which an immediate, absolute amelioration of an oppressed and tyrannized race demands at his hands.

O, I would to God I could see an end of this fratricidal strife! But I have no hope of ever seeing this country reconstructed an undivided union. The federal army may conquer a peace, but it can never subjugate the South. It is impossible. Henry the eighth fled from Scotland; Henry the seventh fled from Bannockburn; Charles the fifth fought seventy successive battles, and could not subdue the pirates of Algiers; and Napoleon Bonaparte with ten hundred thousand men could not conquer Spain. What kind of a republic is that which demands for its cohesion a standing army of one hundred thousand men? Why, sometimes, when I get to thinking, I am astonished at the inconsistency of such a theory as a dictatorial republic. The polity of government based on the affections and filial interests of men, needs no military power to perpetuate and strengthen its internal elements, for the reason that its prosperity is simply a question of human confidence. It is said that Humboldt's chameleon had the peculiar power of turning his eyes in opposite directions simultaneously; it could turn one eye towards heaven, while with the other it inspected the earth. There are a good many clergymen who have the same power. But there is just as much consistency in the foregoing traditional report, as there would be in the successful permanency of a government which has for its attraction a gleaming sword. I know, dear mother, such expressions are crude and distasteful, but I am honest in their utterance.

The only solution of this question can be found in God's dealings among men. Not that I believe with the masses of the church that this is God's chastisement for any special sin, as slavery, for then the fact of its existence in the States for nearly a hundred years would prove that He has for so long a time looked upon a slave oligarchy as quite endurable when compared in the light of other local iniquity. The divine countenance of such a wrong is a special argument for justification by the South, and now at this late hour for God to reveal his whirlwind of wrath against any specific sin which, judging from its successful continuance, and which in itself involves no greater catalogues of crime than divers other pursuits, and infamous traffics, is substantially saying that He has just discovered to mankind the obnoxious hatred he bears to slavery, while contrary to all his analogous dealings with his ancient people, he refuses to punish in proportion to the increase of guilt. This particular sin is horrible; but there are others which have received the condemnation which shall as effectually shut their worshipers out of Christ's kingdom as those whose hands are red with the blood and guilt of slavery. See Gal. 5:18–24. Any of such is sufficient to "drown men in destruction and perdition." For this reason, I believe simply that an abuse of no particular privilege has entailed this calamity upon this people.

But there is a reason for this strife aside from the general local causes to which it is imputed. This world is growing old in iniquity and age. Now, mother, you know that mankind believes in some form of proposition from which they desire no appeal, no matter whether it is formally stated or not. And you and I, and the religious world at large, profess to guage our opinions of men and things by divine TRUTH. If this is so, I invite you to consider a few thoughts relative to this subject.

There is a time coming when "the kingdoms of this world" must "become the kingdoms of our Lord" Jesus Christ. Now it is impossible for this world to grow better, or to become perfect so as to preface the glorious advent of this blessed era; for "seducers shall wax worse and worse; deceiving and being deceived."—2 Tim. 3:13. "Some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron." See 1 Tim. 4:1–3. "In the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, blasphemous, unthankful, unholy, traitors, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." See 2 Tim. 3:1–5. And, finally, the tares will grow together with the wheat until the harvest—all of which, according to God's word, must be the particularizing future that prefaces the incoming age of righteousness and truth.

Now, mother, if the general aspect of the moral and religious world bears a hue so utterly opposed to any long coveted period of "peace and safety," or so diametrically opposed to any tolerance of earthly tranquillity, why must we not expect that the threatening attitude of the nations of the earth, in their wickedness, is held by God as the subservient element that shall finally engulf in this geyser of death every opposing foe to the triumphant ingress of an eternity glorified by the reign of the "Prince of Peace"? While Christ's truth shall never pass away, yet the diffusive merits of His grace will fail to convince this world that they grow more iniquitous. The genius of war seems to rack the heart and brain of man in devising engines of death. Religion folds her wings of peace to war's stern demands, and is fashioned and hewn to be the corner-stone for an edifice cemented by the blood of God's creatures. The redemptive power of Christ, as exhibited in his pleadings for the salvation of lost men, and imbibed by a few fishermen, as a successful purchase of eternal life, is now made the gigantic lever that turns the fortunes of war as developed in heaps of gory dead. Its potent sceptre is made the oracle in the "halls of Odin," where conquerors pleaded and the genii of death joyously drained their glasses. And Jesus Christ, whose great heart of benevolence ever commiserated others' woes, must feel the rankling of the Roman halberd, as he becomes deified the "God of battles." But this is enough. When will He walk on this troubled sea, and cry, "Peace, be still"?

My mother, through long and careful study, I have learned that to be members of the household of Jesus is to faithfully believe. And this is something besides inquiring, "What shall I eat? or what shall I drink?" But a loftier sense of joys substantial is ever asking, When shall this incorruptible substance of an immortal life be given us? We have learned a lesson of immortal worth which ever cries, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." We are pilgrims, journeying through a howling wilderness, to a land of promise; and as Moses stirred not from his tent except the "cloud by day" and the "pillar of fire by night" hung over him, so the Pharos light of God's TRUTH should be the only monitor to swallow us up in the will of Christ.

Your afflictions which have so long pressed heavily, and made life dark and almost unendurable, bespeak for you an antidote which through its healings will find you at the judgment, pure as the "purified silver." Your long and patient watchfulness, your undying solicitude for all that is good and true, your unalterable constancy to that principle of life—"Lord, I believe," perhaps has kept you from a more general notice among the autocrats of the church; but in your poverty you are a "joint heir with Jesus Christ." And at last, when the volcanic fires of earth shall feast upon the general wreck of nature, and the enrobement of earth in her immortal verdure shall be completed, crowned among the blood-washed throng, you shall look out upon a world where

The sun once shown down on a world of gloom,
But now sparkles and dances on the new earth bloom.

Dear mother, let us "watch and pray," that when the "Master of assemblies" visits the guests of his kingdom, we may cry,

"Earth hath not known so glad a day."

Sleeping with Others, etc.

"The following came under the Editor's attention:

'My little son, eight years old, is lively and well in all respects, as far as I can judge, in the day, but at night he wakes up and screams in the most distressing manner. He awoke frightened almost every night for a year. He has been subject to this for several years, but it is getting to be a distressing case. I almost dread to go to sleep. He sleeps with me, and once every night, sometimes twice, he springs as quick as lightning, screams the most soul-piercing screams, and I take him in my arms, and he looks back with horror on his face. I could not, unless you saw it, give you an idea how distressing it is. He is strong and lively, playful, and full of fun and life, until he gets to sleep. This happens every night, and often so shocks me I can not go to sleep for a long time. He takes dinner at one, supper at sundown, of cambric tea with a piece of bread. All my other children are entirely different; they are lively, hearty, and cheerful; and so is he, otherwise.'

The directions given were on the presumption that these effects in the child were caused by sleeping in the same bed with the father, habitually. In two months the report was made that 'he had not waked up frightened for a long time.' The national troubles at this point put an end to the correspondence. It may be instructive to know under what bodily symptoms the father had been laboring for some years, but whom the author succeeded in restoring to 'better health than had been enjoyed for seven years.' Age, thirty-seven; height, five feet seven; broad shouldered, dark skin, black eyes, and had remarkable health, strength, and activity, never having had any severe sickness; began to chew tobacco ravenously, and became gradually very nervous, from one meal to another; especially in summer, would become so exhausted as to scarcely be able to walk. The least excitement or agitation would keep him from eating enough to sustain his strength until the next meal-time. Then came on chronic diarrhea, aggravated by any unusual intelligence, or shock of any desciption. 'The least feeling like it, or appearance of loose bowels, completely unmans me; I can't help it; and if I was very hungry or exhausted, the occurrence of any looseness kills my appetite. I cannot help being alarmed at any symptom of diarrhea, for it has used me up long ago. I am greatly depressed in spirits from the sympathy incident to planning for and nursing my children, and solicitude for them in sickness, for these ten years. My wife is an angel of goodness to me, and I have every reason to be a happy man. Please don't say any thing that might have a tendency to depress me. As soon as I get the least hungry, I become weak and nervous, and the same if there is any cause for anxiety or excitement. Coffee is poison to me; two swallows would distress my head and make my ears feel as if water were in them; at the same time there is a feeling of wanting to draw a long breath. If I talk much, or read aloud at times, I feel as if I had been violently blowing up a fire. Hot weather is ruinous to me.' It was in August, when the thermometer had been ranging at one hundred degrees Fahrenheit, that he wrote of the great improvement in his health. This man's nervous system had been so impaired, and his general health so poor, that it is not to be wondered at if a young child sleeping with him constantly, should have its own nervous organization impaired."—Hall's Journal of Health.

Care of the Feet.

We have received from the publishers, Bradley and Webb, of Cincinnati, a pamplet of 111 pages on the Causes and Cure of diseases of the feet, with practical suggestions as to their clothing, by C. H. Cleaveland, M. D.

It discusses elaborately and with apparent intelligence the various diseases of the feet with their treatment. We give the following extracts as being of general interest:—

CLOTHING OF THE FEET.

From the first wearing of socks and shoes, great care and attention are requisite. In childhood, the socks in summer should be made of fine cotton or silk, in cold weather of a woolen fabric, and of sufficient length that every toe may have room to extend itself.

The feet should be washed evening and morning, the same as are the hands, and wiped thoroughly dry, particularly between the toes, and the nails should not be cut too often, nor at any time shorter than to be on a level with the tops of the toes. It is advisable that the shoes be a size larger than the foot, and made of soft leather.

WASHING THE FEET.

In addition to washing the feet, as recommended above, it is quite necessary that foot baths should be resorted to in a great variety of conditions of the feet. Ordinarily the proper time for taking a foot bath is at night, just before retiring to rest; but under peculiar circumstances, to be mentioned, they may be demanded at other times in the day.

The employment of foot baths, whether hot or cold, must depend greatly on the difference of constitution and habit. For persons advanced in age, the tepid bath is preferable, particularly if they are subject to gout or rheumatism. Any sudden change of temperature in such cases might do harm, and the feet ought not to be put into water of any kind while the patient is actually suffering from either of those disorders, except by the direction of the medical attendant.

In advanced age persons should not generally bathe the feet; they would, however, derive great comfort from sponging them once or twice a week, or oftener, with soap and warm water, wiping them thoroughly dry immediately afterward, then using the flesh brush or the hand and rubbing off the loose cuticle or scales with a coarse towel. When there is an accumulation between the toes, a fine cloth, wet with eau de Cologne or any other spirit, may be drawn backward or forward between them two or three times a week.

Adults in good health may bathe their feet every morning with cold water, wipe them thoroughly dry afterward, and then rub eau de Cologne freely over them with the palm of the hand. When dressing for dinner the feet should be washed with soap and water in the same manner as the hands.

EXTIRPATION OF CORNS.

Extirpation of corns, by the chiropedists, is usually effected by a careful process of cutting and tearing out the central portion of the corn, while the circumference of the diseased part is left to serve the purpose of taking off pressure from the more tender portion at the seat of the disease. Some of these peripatetic operators make use of the tincture of iodine or some other substance that will produce a stain of the surface, under pretense of using some secret to deaden the sensibility of the parts, but such washes do no good. A continued use of some solution of iodine, with the removal of all pressure, will, in time, cure some corns; and especially the softer ones, but acetic acid of the proper strength is preferable.

The only sure and complete cure for a corn is its complete removal, and the wandering chiropedists either have not skill or have not patience sufficient to produce this result, and hence seldom or never produce a radical cure. After a hard corn has been extirpated, acetic acid, or a solution of iodine should be applied to the part, until all remains of the disease have disappeared. Even then, if pressure is allowed, a new corn is quite liable to occupy the seat of the old one.

TREATMENT OF BLISTERS.

In marching, if blisters rise on the toes or heel, they should at once be punctured with a needle, passing the needle a little distance under the sound skin so as to produce a valvular opening to prevent the introduction of air as the fluid passes out. If not sooner attended to, all blisters should be opened in the evening after the foot bath, and the fluid gently pressed out, and then the patient assuming the horizontal position they may not fill up again, and by morning they may be nearly or quite well. Sometimes blisters form on the end of the toes, or on the heel, and the person is not required to resume the march on the following day. In such cases it may be as well to let such blisters remain unopened, and as the water is absorbed and the dead skin becomes dry it should be removed.—Scientific American.

Good for Measles.

The following, furnished by a Mr. Swift, of Detroit, seems like a simple and harmless means of facilitating the culmination of this disease, and is easily tried:

"As there is a great deal of the measles among children throughout the country, I wish to make known a plan that will speedily cure and keep the disease on the surface of the skin until it turns, and will bring it out when it has turned in, or struck in. Though simple, it is sure: Take a pint of oats and put them into a tight vessel. Pour on boiling water, and let it stand a short time; then give it the person to drink. It must be pretty warm. In fifteen minutes you will see a change for the better."—Ex.

"A Short Method with Night-caps."—H. H. B., Wis.,—Aunt Cinda's method is to tie a knot to each of the opposite corners of the handkerchief, about two inches from the end. Put it on the head, one knot before and the other behind, and tie the other two ends under the chin. A shorter method still is to put a not before the whole kerchief instead of a knot in the two ends. We eschew night-caps and dogs. A clean head makes a clean pillow-case. Soap and water at the roots of the hair are better than cotton at the other end. Keep the head cool.—Exchange.

A Friendly Appeal to Americans.

BY R. THAYER.

The writer of this appeal has been careful to express his thoughts in language which makes it "national," and not "sectional," thus adapting it equally to every portion of our distracted and suffering country. He hopes it may be received in the same kind spirit which has dictated it, and that the whole people will labor zealously and judiciously to heal the dissensions which now so unhappily divide our countrymen, till we shall have the joy to hail the advent of universal peace.

I Hear a Voice.

I.

I hear a voice, my country,
Speaking from heaven to thee;
Its sound is borne on every breeze,
Across the land and sea.

II.

It speaks to all the people,—
I seem to hear it say—
Are ye not all one family?
Then why each other slay?

III.

Have ye not all one Father,
For whom in prayer ye bow?
O why not then your qurrels cease,
And end your troubles now!

IV.

Think how much life and treasure
Your heritage has cost;
And will you still this strife prolong
Until the whole is lost?

V.

Think of the weeping widows,
With hearts oppressed with grief,—
Who mourn for those in battle slain,
While none can give relief:

VI.

Think of the lone home circles,
Their cause of sadness learn,—
Which BROTHERS for the war have left,
Who'll never more return:

VII.

Think, too, how many children,
'Reft of a father's care,
From day to day will beg their bread,
With few to hear their prayer:

VIII.

And think how earthly despots—
With scornful taunt and jeer—
If Freedom's fires shall here go out,
Will at republics sneer.

IX.

How great the sum of evils
Which from this war shall flow,—
The human suffering it shall cause,
The Lord alone can know.

X.

My heart is rent with anguish
For thee—"my native land,"—
To save from foes who would destroy,
May God stretch forth his hand.

XI.

A voice is speaking to thee,—
It cometh from above,—
O, BROTHERS, cease this bitter feud,
And live henceforth in love.

XII.

Then shall this night of sorrow
Forever disappear,
And in our midst the Lord shall dwell,
Without one "TRAITOR" here.

Financial Matters.

"Stand from under." This now seems to be the word. This nation is engaged in a desperate and bloody war, involving a vast necessary outlay, and an unlimited amount expended in "stealings and pickings." The Government being out of money issues notes, "promises to pay." These notes of course will be good when paid, and are estimated good in proportion to the value of government credit; but they flood the country with paper money. A thousand dollar note can be made as cheap as a ten dollar note. Three cents outlay is more than sufficient to make a thousand dollars of paper money. Probably $5, or $10 a bushel, is a large price so far as the actual price of manufacturing is concerned. This is propably true of all bank paper. Doubtless government paper is much better than that of any other private bank; but along with this issue of government paper comes a suspension of specie payment by all the banks. This allows the banks to lend their paper to any extent they choose, nobody being able to present it to them and demand of them specie. The result necessarily must be, paper money is plenty, but while being plenty it depreciates in value. One dollar in paper money will now buy only about seventy or eighty cents worth of gold, or, $11 of paper are worth only about $7 or $8 in gold.

The English pound sterling, formerly worth five dollars here, is now worth between six and eight dollars; or, in other words, if a person wishes to send twenty pounds sterling to England, while he formerly would have to pay $100, he must now pay nearly $150 to obtain the requisite draft.

The prospects are for the present an abundant supply of money such as it is. What the future will be, no mortal can tell. Our greatest financiers are puzzled. The bankers of this country have previously been "coasting"; now they are "out at sea," beyond soundings. What their destination is, no man knows. Gold is being hoarded up in this country to a great extent, in anticipation of a crash. Single banks in Boston have from $500,000 to $800,000 in gold lying idle in their vaults; some perhaps more. The amount of gold lying thus in New York probably amounts to nearly forty or fifty million dollars. Gold is going out of the country to a considerable extent. Many United States Railroad bonds, stocks, and securities of various kinds held in Europe, are being sent to this country to be sold at whatever price they may bring, and the proceeds are returned in gold to their owners, who have no confidence now in anything American. On the other hand, however, our grain crop this year is large, and there will be a great European demand. This will send large quantities across the water, helping to equalize the debt. But against this may be noted the fact that our imports are larger probably than ever before.

Hence the present prospects are for a limited period, money plenty, times easy, prices high, and then one universal crash. Much of course will depend upon the course of the war that is being waged, and these results none can predict.

Under these circumstances a word of caution to christian brethren may not be misplaced. They will do well to remember one thing: almost all debts are contracted in what are termed "easy times," when money is plenty. When times are hard, men pay up debts, and hardly ever get in debt; but when times are easy, they assume large responsibilities, involve themselves in debt, and are crushed when the revulsion comes. No better counsel can be given at such times as this than that of the apostle, "Owe no man anything." Now should money become plenty for a time, persons who are in debt should make all haste to pay their debts. Persons who are out of debt should keep out of it forever. And not only should we avoid becoming indebted to others, but we should avoid others becoming indebted to us.

The whole system of debt and credit is ruinous. If you have anything to spare, it is much better generally to give it away than to lend it. If a man comes to you to borrow a hundred dollars, and you can spare it, you had much better give him fifty dollars and let him go, than to lend him a hundred and lose the whole, besides losing your patience, temper, and confidence in his honesty, while you tease and dun him, and he is unable to pay. A man that lends in these days, may well "lend, hoping for nothing again." The man that borrows may well doubt whether he ever can pay. The truest policy is the policy of the Bible. Keep out of debt and out of danger. One good man said, "For many years I have made it a rule to owe no man more than I am able to pay, and to let no man owe me more than I am able to lose."

Especially avoid indorsements. When a man comes to you and asks you to write your name on the back of his note, merely as "a matter of form," "for accommodation," just think about it a couple of days, meditate upon it, read the whole book of Proverbs through, and then if you are "wiser than Solomon," go ahead; and if not, remember that "he that hateth suretyship is sure," and that Solomon himself says, "Take his garment who is surety for a stranger." If you want to be stripped to the last rag, there is not a readier way to reach that result.

In conclusion, lay up your treasures in heaven, if you want them safe. Gold hoarded away in old stockings will melt in the burning day. Silver treasured up in secret places will not buy admittance to the celestial city. "Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath." "In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, to the moles and the bats, and go into the clefts of the rocks, and the tops of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord, for the glory of his majesty when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth."

A few years ago a California steamer went down at sea. One man, I think it was said, had some $30,000 in gold on board, which he poured out upon the floor, and all were welcome to take it, but no one cared to do so. The man who fills his pocket with dollars as he leaps from the sinking ship, goes down inevitably. And we are to remember that "they that will be rich fall into a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition."

How many who read this article can look back upon means wasted in speculations, or by lending to dishonest men, or in useless extravagance and expenditures, of which they now say, "If I only had that, I might do good with it; but it is too late." Let the time past suffice for this folly. "Sell that ye have, give alms, provide bags that wax not old, a treasure in heaven where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth; for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

"Blessed be nothing," said the poor man. We may be sure of one thing, that "the blessing of the Lord maketh rich, and addeth not sorrow thereunto." If our goods, our farms, our merchandize and our money cause us care, hamper our souls, make us sleepless and weary, furrow our brows with traces of earnest thought, and clip the wings of faith, and dim the vision of hope, then it is time for us to take heed to the words of Jesus and watch, lest at any time our hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, or the cares of this world, and that day come upon us as a thief. As a snare shall it come; and while the waves of trouble surge around us, and we are preparing to bid adieu forever to these scenes of storm and gloom, let us when we go forth have this satisfaction, that we have left nothing behind us.

Beware of the sin of Lot! When he had the whole land before him wherein to choose, he pitched his tent toward Sodom, while Abraham departed to a quiet and hilly country. The plain of Sodom was well watered, fertile, and beautiful, but the men of Sodom were sinners exceedingly. Lot was willing to peril his salvation, and that of his family, by locating in the midst of a herd of ungodly men, that he might thereby insure temporal prosperity. The results were disastrous. First, he was plundered and captured by an invading army, and only rescued by the kindness of Abraham. Second, his soul was vexed from day to day by the unlawful deeds of the Sodomites around him, and his family doubtless were corrupted by their influence. Third, he had to leave his pleasant city mansion and go forth forsaking wealth, comfort, ease, elegance, and all the things which he had delighted in. Fourth, his wife, doubtless coveting the treasures that they had left behind, looked back and perished by the way. Fifth, he and his daughters were finally constrained to take refuge in a cave, and there was an end, so far as we know, of Lot's prosperity in the well-watered plain of Jordan, while the corruptions of Sodom followed them even to their mountain fastness; and the drunkenness of Lot, and the incest of his daughters, reveal their folly as the last recorded scene in the life of the patriarch, while from the two daughters sprang the two accursed races of the Ammonites and the Moabites, who, after long ages of iniquity, have been blotted out from the earth by the judgment of God.

While our Savior's admonition rings in our ears, "Remember Lot's wife," it also may be well to suggest that men of business should remember Lot! H. L. HASTINGS.

Reflections on Eden.

My heart is made sad as I cast my eye o'er earth and take a survey of it in all its marked deformity. I look at man as he was when first he came from the hand of his Maker, innocent and harmless, in unison with his Father. In connection with his better half, he walked among Eden's beautiful bowers, whilst his ears were saluted with the sweet notes of its feathered tribes, borne along on zephyrs' stainless wing, in accents most melodious. All nature smiled in gladness as yon orb of day sent forth its genial rays; and to make the scene still more sublime and glorious, the sons of God shouted for joy.

But oh, how soon this scene was changed! The serpent, with his sparkling eye and sanctimonious look, approached the better part of man, and by his artful and gentlemanly address seduced her to reach forth her hand and take of the forbidden fruit and eat. Then she gave it to her husband, and he did eat. And on that day in which he committed this un-manly act, he became a dying man; and consequently was doomed to go back to the earth from which he had been taken; and a door opened for an introduction into this world of all the train of evils which have stalked abroad o'er all this wide earth.

Behold what a mighty change has taken place! That once beautiful and happy pair are now compelled to leave that beautiful garden which God planted for their special benefit, to wander as exiles until the penalty of the law should be inflicted upon them. And in order to make their punishment secure, the tree of life is guarded by placing at the east of the garden of Eden cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life, lest man should eat and live forever. Solemn thought! Yet in this act we see most clearly the attribute of mercy displayed. But how great the change! The beasts are now no longer in subjection to man. Misery at once begins to roll its dark and turbid waves over the world, and man is doomed to go back to the earth from which he has been taken; where he must have remained eternally had not the Father found a ransom.

The lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, prevailed to open the book, and loose the seven seals thereof. But oh! how few there are out of the great mass of Adam's race who are not traveling the broad road which leads to death,—that death from which there is no recovery. But few are disposed to believe and obey the gospel, and square their lives by it; and thereby secure themselves life, territority, dominion and glory, in Jesus, and at his coming receive it; and at last be brought on to Beulah's blissful plains, all dressed in white, bearing in their hands the conqueror's palm, as they walk among its beautiful groves which will be scattered over Eden's verdant plains; and all in harmony join in singing the emancipation song, saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." Amen and amen. R. V. LYON.

Influence.

"He that is not with me is against me."—Matt. 12: 30.

There is no individual so low or in so humble a station that his influence is not considerable. Our influence indeed is vast. While we may seem to have none, yet if we keep steadily on thinking rightly, talking rightly, acting rightly, we may be assured that it does have its impress. What if we do not see the immediate result? Do we reap our harvest soon as we sow? Or, do we see the blade shoot forth and ripen into ears? We have to patiently wait for the growth, though so slow as not to be seen.

"Continual dropping will wear a stone." Continual perseverance in righteousness can never fail to have its effect for good. Be assured, that if we are not scattering abroad, we are gathering with Christ. Be assured, also, that if we are not gathering with Christ, we are scattering abroad.

Be not discouraged, dear brother or sister, if you see no result; leave the result with God: hold on, persevere; keep doing. You may plant, a sister may water with her tears, but God will assuredly give the increase. The darkest time is said to be just before day. Be that as it may, we know that men often rave the worst when convinced of the truth, and unwilling to yield to it. But surely he is nearer the truth than before he believed, and may yet confess it.

I wish to make the impression that each individual's influence is far greater than you are generally aware of. The great thing then is, to see that our influence is always in the right direction: cast for truth and righteousness.

We'll not be Weary There.

We're often weary here
With grief and care and fear,
And often pray that rest
Our lives may soon invest.

We'll not be weary there,
In that bright world so fair;
For joy shall crown the brow
That's twined with sorrow now.

'Tis here that death and pain
Have boasted long their reign,
And stained with bitter tears
Earth's long and saddened years.

But there shall ne'er be known
Nor death, nor pain, nor moan,
Nor grief, nor heaving sigh,
Nor tears to dim the eye.

For in that lovely land,
An air forever bland
Shall kiss the brow of youth,
And innocence and truth.

Her friends will often grieve,
Or with feigned words deceive,
And wring our hearts with wo
Of earth's vain, empty show.

But there the years shall prove
The truth of angel love,
And all that's good and pure
Eternal shall endure.

Then hail that Eden home,
That blissful world to come;
All hail its cloudless light,
Its sweet, its glad delight;

That will the pilgrim bless
With joy and happiness;
While ages long revolve
The Savior's love to solve.

From a Son to his Mother.

BRO. GRANT:—By permission, I forward you a copy of a letter written by a Bro. of this village to his aged mother, which for high-toned truth and consoling merit I believe deserves a place in the columns of the Crisis. If you think so, you are privileged to publish it. I copy it verbatim, with the exceptions of a private nature, and which are irrelevant to this part of the correspondence. C. G. C.

It reads thus:—"Well, Mother, I have just finished reading my "Journal," and have snatched my pen to tell you that I believe the President's Emancipation scheme is all a sham. He gives the South one hundred days to return to their allegiance; then, if they are incorrigible, he will recommend to Congress the feasibility of Emancipation! Now this indirect method of legislation suggests a pandering to an iniquitous institution. It is caviling with justice, and shirking the responsibility which an immediate, absolute amelioration of an oppressed and tyrannized race demands at his hands.

O, I would to God I could see an end of this fratricidal strife! But I have no hope of ever seeing this country reconstructed an undivided union. The federal army may conquer a peace, but it can never subjugate the South. It is impossible. Henry the eighth fled from Scotland; Henry the seventh fled from Bannockburn; Charles the fifth fought seventy successive battles, and could not subdue the pirates of Algiers; and Napoleon Bonaparte with ten hundred thousand men could not conquer Spain. What kind of a republic is that which demands for its cohesion a standing army of one hundred thousand men? Why, sometimes, when I get to thinking, I am astonished at the inconsistency of such a theory as a dictatorial republic. The polity of government based on the affections and filial interests of men, needs no military power to perpetuate and strengthen its internal elements, for the reason that its prosperity is simply a question of human confidence. It is said that Humboldt's chameleon had the peculiar power of turning his eyes in opposite directions simultaneously; it could turn one eye towards heaven, while with the other it inspected the earth. There are a good many clergymen who have the same power. But there is just as much consistency in the foregoing traditional report, as there would be in the successful permanency of a government which has for its attraction a gleaming sword. I know, dear mother, such expressions are crude and distasteful, but I am honest in their utterance.

The only solution of this question can be found in God's dealings among men. Not that I believe with the masses of the church that this is God's chastisement for any special sin, as slavery, for then the fact of its existence in the States for nearly a hundred years would prove that He has for so long a time looked upon a slave oligarchy as quite endurable when compared in the light of other local iniquity. The divine countenance of such a wrong is a special argument for justification by the South, and now at this late hour for God to reveal his whirlwind of wrath against any specific sin which, judging from its successful continuance, and which in itself involves no greater catalogues of crime than divers other pursuits, and infamous traffics, is substantially saying that He has just discovered to mankind the obnoxious hatred he bears to slavery, while contrary to all his analogous dealings with his ancient people, he refuses to punish in proportion to the increase of guilt. This particular sin is horrible; but there are others which have received the condemnation which shall as effectually shut their worshipers out of Christ's kingdom as those whose hands are red with the blood and guilt of slavery. See Gal. 5: 18–24. Any of such is sufficient to "drown men in destruction and perdition." For this reason, I believe simply that an abuse of no particular privilege has entailed this calamity upon this people.

But there is a reason for this strife aside from the general local causes to which it is imputed. This world is growing old in iniquity and age. Now, mother, you know that mankind believes in some form of proposition from which they desire no appeal, no matter whether it is formally stated or not. And you and I, and the religious world at large, profess to guage our opinions of men and things by divine TRUTH. If this is so, I invite you to consider a few thoughts relative to this subject.

There is a time coming when "the kingdoms of this world" must "become the kingdoms of our Lord" Jesus Christ. Now it is impossible for this world to grow better, or to become perfect so as to preface the glorious advent of this blessed era; for "seducers shall wax worse and worse; deceiving and being deceived."—2 Tim. 3: 13. "Some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron." See 1 Tim. 4: 1–3. "In the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, blasphemous, unthankful, unholy, traitors, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." See 2 Tim. 3: 1–5. And, finally, the tares will grow together with the wheat until the harvest—all of which, according to God's word, must be the particularizing future that prefaces the incoming age of righteousness and truth.

Now, mother, if the general aspect of the moral and religious world bears a hue so utterly opposed to any long coveted period of "peace and safety," or so diametrically opposed to any tolerance of earthly tranquillity, why must we not expect that the threatening attitude of the nations of the earth, in their wickedness, is held by God as the subservient element that shall finally engulf in this geyser of death every opposing foe to the triumphant ingress of an eternity glorified by the reign of the "Prince of Peace"? While Christ's truth shall never pass away, yet the diffusive merits of His grace will fail to convince this world that they grow more iniquitous. The genius of war seems to rack the heart and brain of man in devising engines of death. Religion folds her wings of peace to war's stern demands, and is fashioned and hewn to be the corner-stone for an edifice cemented by the blood of God's creatures. The redemptive power of Christ, as exhibited in his pleadings for the salvation of lost men, and imbibed by a few fishermen, as a successful purchase of eternal life, is now made the gigantic lever that turns the fortunes of war as developed in heaps of gory dead. Its potent sceptre is made the oracle in the "halls of Odin," where conquerors pleaded and the genii of death joyously drained their glasses. And Jesus Christ, whose great heart of benevolence ever commiserated others' woes, must feel the rankling of the Roman halberd, as he becomes deified the "God of battles." But this is enough. When will He walk on this troubled sea, and cry, "Peace, be still"?

My mother, through long and careful study, I have learned that to be members of the household of Jesus is to faithfully believe. And this is something besides inquiring, "What shall I eat? or what shall I drink?" But a loftier sense of joys substantial is ever asking, When shall this incorruptible substance of an immortal life be given us? We have learned a lesson of immortal worth which ever cries, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." We are pilgrims, journeying through a howling wilderness, to a land of promise; and as Moses stirred not from his tent except the "cloud by day" and the "pillar of fire by night" hung over him, so the Pharos light of God's TRUTH should be the only monitor to swallow us up in the will of Christ.

Your afflictions which have so long pressed heavily, and made life dark and almost unendurable, bespeak for you an antidote which through its healings will find you at the judgment, pure as the "purified silver." Your long and patient watchfulness, your undying solicitude for all that is good and true, your unalterable constancy to that principle of life—"Lord, I believe," perhaps has kept you from a more general notice among the autocrats of the church; but in your poverty you are a "joint heir with Jesus Christ." And at last, when the volcanic fires of earth shall feast upon the general wreck of nature, and the enrobement of earth in her immortal verdure shall be completed, crowned among the blood-washed throng, you shall look out upon a world where

The sun once shown down on a world of gloom,
But now sparkles and dances on the new earth bloom.

Dear mother, let us "watch and pray," that when the "Master of assemblies" visits the guests of his kingdom, we may cry,

"Earth hath not known so glad a day."

Sleeping with Others, etc.

"The following came under the Editor's attention:

'My little son, eight years old, is lively and well in all respects, as far as I can judge, in the day, but at night he wakes up and screams in the most distressing manner. He awoke frightened almost every night for a year. He has been subject to this for several years, but it is getting to be a distressing case. I almost dread to go to sleep. He sleeps with me, and once every night, sometimes twice, he springs as quick as lightning, screams the most soul-piercing screams, and I take him in my arms, and he looks back with horror on his face. I could not, unless you saw it, give you an idea how distressing it is. He is strong and lively, playful, and full of fun and life, until he gets to sleep. This happens every night, and often so shocks me I can not go to sleep for a long time. He takes dinner at one, supper at sundown, of cambric tea with a piece of bread. All my other children are entirely different; they are lively, hearty, and cheerful; and so is he, otherwise.'

The directions given were on the presumption that these effects in the child were caused by sleeping in the same bed with the father, habitually. In two months the report was made that 'he had not waked up frightened for a long time.' The national troubles at this point put an end to the correspondence. It may be instructive to know under what bodily symptoms the father had been laboring for some years, but whom the author succeeded in restoring to 'better health than had been enjoyed for seven years.' Age, thirty-seven; height, five feet seven; broad shouldered, dark skin, black eyes, and had remarkable health, strength, and activity, never having had any severe sickness; began to chew tobacco ravenously, and became gradually very nervous, from one meal to another; especially in summer, would become so exhausted as to scarcely be able to walk. The least excitement or agitation would keep him from eating enough to sustain his strength until the next meal-time. Then came on chronic diarrhea, aggravated by any unusual intelligence, or shock of any desciption. 'The least feeling like it, or appearance of loose bowels, completely unmans me; I can't help it; and if I was very hungry or exhausted, the occurrence of any looseness kills my appetite. I cannot help being alarmed at any symptom of diarrhea, for it has used me up long ago. I am greatly depressed in spirits from the sympathy incident to planning for and nursing my children, and solicitude for them in sickness, for these ten years. My wife is an angel of goodness to me, and I have every reason to be a happy man. Please don't say any thing that might have a tendency to depress me. As soon as I get the least hungry, I become weak and nervous, and the same if there is any cause for anxiety or excitement. Coffee is poison to me; two swallows would distress my head and make my ears feel as if water were in them; at the same time there is a feeling of wanting to draw a long breath. If I talk much, or read aloud at times, I feel as if I had been violently blowing up a fire. Hot weather is ruinous to me.' It was in August, when the thermometer had been ranging at one hundred degrees Fahrenheit, that he wrote of the great improvement in his health. This man's nervous system had been so impaired, and his general health so poor, that it is not to be wondered at if a young child sleeping with him constantly, should have its own nervous organization impaired."—Hall's Journal of Health.

Care of the Feet.

We have received from the publishers, Bradley and Webb, of Cincinnati, a pamplet of 111 pages on the Causes and Cure of diseases of the feet, with practical suggestions as to their clothing, by C. H. Cleaveland, M. D.

It discusses elaborately and with apparent intelligence the various diseases of the feet with their treatment. We give the following extracts as being of general interest:—

CLOTHING OF THE FEET.

From the first wearing of socks and shoes, great care and attention are requisite. In childhood, the socks in summer should be made of fine cotton or silk, in cold weather of a woolen fabric, and of sufficient length that every toe may have room to extend itself.

The feet should be washed evening and morning, the same as are the hands, and wiped thoroughly dry, particularly between the toes, and the nails should not be cut too often, nor at any time shorter than to be on a level with the tops of the toes. It is advisable that the shoes be a size larger than the foot, and made of soft leather.

WASHING THE FEET.

In addition to washing the feet, as recommended above, it is quite necessary that foot baths should be resorted to in a great variety of conditions of the feet. Ordinarily the proper time for taking a foot bath is at night, just before retiring to rest; but under peculiar circumstances, to be mentioned, they may be demanded at other times in the day.

The employment of foot baths, whether hot or cold, must depend greatly on the difference of constitution and habit. For persons advanced in age, the tepid bath is preferable, particularly if they are subject to gout or rheumatism. Any sudden change of temperature in such cases might do harm, and the feet ought not to be put into water of any kind while the patient is actually suffering from either of those disorders, except by the direction of the medical attendant.

In advanced age persons should not generally bathe the feet; they would, however, derive great comfort from sponging them once or twice a week, or oftener, with soap and warm water, wiping them thoroughly dry immediately afterward, then using the flesh brush or the hand and rubbing off the loose cuticle or scales with a coarse towel. When there is an accumulation between the toes, a fine cloth, wet with eau de Cologne or any other spirit, may be drawn backward or forward between them two or three times a week.

Adults in good health may bathe their feet every morning with cold water, wipe them thoroughly dry afterward, and then rub eau de Cologne freely over them with the palm of the hand. When dressing for dinner the feet should be washed with soap and water in the same manner as the hands.

EXTIRPATION OF CORNS.

Extirpation of corns, by the chiropedists, is usually effected by a careful process of cutting and tearing out the central portion of the corn, while the circumference of the diseased part is left to serve the purpose of taking off pressure from the more tender portion at the seat of the disease. Some of these peripatetic operators make use of the tincture of iodine or some other substance that will produce a stain of the surface, under pretense of using some secret to deaden the sensibility of the parts, but such washes do no good. A continued use of some solution of iodine, with the removal of all pressure, will in time, cure some corns; and especially the softer ones, but acetic acid of the proper strength is preferable.

The only sure and complete cure for a corn is its complete removal, and the wandering chiropedists either have not skill or have not patience sufficient to produce this result, and hence seldom or never produce a radical cure. After a hard corn has been extirpated, acetic acid, or a solution of iodine should be applied to the part, until all remains of the disease have disappeared. Even then, if pressure is allowed, a new corn is quite liable to occupy the seat of the old one.

TREATMENT OF BLISTERS.

In marching, if blisters rise on the toes or heel, they should at once be punctured with a needle, passing the needle a little distance under the sound skin so as to produce a valvular opening to prevent the introduction of air as the fluid passes out. If not sooner attended to, all blisters should be opened in the evening after the foot bath, and the fluid gently pressed out, and then the patient assuming the horizontal position they may not fill up again, and by morning they may be nearly or quite well. Sometimes blisters form on the end of the toes, or on the heel, and the person is not required to resume the march on the following day. In such cases it may be as well to let such blisters remain unopened, and as the water is absorbed and the dead skin becomes dry it should be removed.—Scientific American.

Good for Measles.

The following, furnished by a Mr. Swift, of Detroit, seems like a simple and harmless means of facilitating the culmination of this disease, and is easily tried:

"As there is a great deal of the measles among children throughout the country, I wish to make known a plan that will speedily cure and keep the disease on the surface of the skin until it turns, and will bring it out when it has turned in, or struck in. Though simple, it is sure: Take a pint of oats and put them into a tight vessel. Pour on boiling water, and let it stand a short time; then give it the person to drink. It must be pretty warm. In fifteen minutes you will see a change for the better."—Ex.

"A Short Method with Night-caps."—H. H. B., Wis.,—Aunt Cinda's method is to tie a knot to each of the opposite corners of the handkerchief, about two inches from the end. Put it on the head, one knot before and the other behind, and tie the other two ends under the chin. A shorter method still is to put a not before the whole kerchief instead of a knot in the two ends. We eschew night-caps and dogs. A clean head makes a clean pillow-case. Soap and water at the roots of the hair are better than cotton at the other end. Keep the head cool.—Exchange.

Lines.

Long time we've wandered weary,
Through earth's vast domain;
O'er her desert wilds, and dreary,
Seeking rest in vain.
Long we've been exposed to sorrow,
And temptation's snare;
While around each coming morrow
Hangs some weight of care.

Long we've watched our loved ones dying,
Trod affection's vale,
Listened to the mourner's sighing—
Heard the orphan's wail.
But we see each sign appearing,
Speaks the morning nigh;
And we know the time is nearing
When stern death shall die.

Soon the grave will yield its treasure,
All our loved come forth,
Rise to share unmingled pleasure,—
Rise to reign on earth.
Then we'll rest in Eden bowers,
Rest all free from care—
Pillowed by ambrosial flowers,
Know no sorrow there.

While is borne the angel harping
On the breeze along,
Blended with the birdlet's trilling,
And the saint's glad song;
Then we'll join the happy chorus—
"Praise to God on high!
Jesus evermore reigns o'er us,
And we'll never die."

The Mystery of the Gospel.—No. 2.

"Men and brethren, what shall we do?"—Acts 2; 37.

The Jews, when they put this question to the apostles, were still ignorant of "the mystery of the gospel"; for had they known the mystery, they would have known what to do; for when revealed, it was made known for "the obedience of faith." Rom. 16: 26. It is evident, then, that Peter's answer made known the mystery in making known "the obedience of faith." It is also evident that the answer was delivered in plain, unfigurative language; for such language was necessary to reveal "the mystery." It ought also to be remembered that it was given after the abolition of "the law of commandments contained in ordinances," called by Paul the Old Testament; Eph. 2: 15, Col. 2: 14, Heb. 8: 9, 13; and the confirmation of the New Testament by the death of Christ, as the mediatorial Testator thereof; Heb. 9: 15–17; and when the inquirers were convinced that Jesus, who had been put to death by the Jews, had been raised from the dead, and made "both Lord and Christ." We are now prepared to look at the answer. "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Plain, intelligible language. Who can misunderstand it? Luke states specifically, in this place, the means by which remission is obtained. We must take it, therefore, as it is. And taking it as it is, we are compelled to believe that the revealed mystery requires repentance and baptism upon the name of Jesus for the remission of sins; and that this is the obedience of faith. These Jews, then, having learned the "new and living way" of "reconciliation," from the lips of Peter, who had unlocked to them the long-concealed mystery of the kingdom, Matt. 16: 18, "gladly received his words" and "were baptized; and the same day there were added" to the disciples "about three thousand souls." Thus the apostles began to preach repentance and remission of sins in the name of Jesus.

We will now consider their preaching to the Gentiles. "Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band, a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway," was directed by an angel to send for Peter to tell him what he ought to do,—words whereby he should be saved and his house. Acts 10: 1–6, 11: 14. God removed the prejudices of Peter against the Gentiles by the vision of the sheet and its accompaniments; thus disclosing to his mind the fellowship of the mystery. Thus prepared, he goes to the house of Cornelius and proclaims to him and his house that "God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him"; thus calling their attention to the preaching of Jesus, he declares his death and resurrection, and that God had ordained him Judge of quick and dead; and that "to him gave all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." At this juncture, the Holy Spirit fell on the hearers, causing them to speak in tongues, to the astonishment of the circumcision. Peter inquires if "any man can forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" and then commands them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.

From the facts and testimonies now before our minds, I come to the conclusion, that the mystery hidden from the prophets and the Jews under the law, was, that in the interval between the resurrection of the Messiah, and his occupation of the throne of his father David, God would take from among all nations a people to inherit the kingdom with him, which people should be saved from past sins and constituted heirs of the kingdom, by belief of the gospel, repentance and baptism into his name. In the next article, we will examine the gospel.

Tyler, Va. J. W. NILES.

"Search the Scriptures."

Would you be wise in the things that pertain to God? then "search the Scriptures." Are you in doubt as to what is truth, feeling that you are walking in darkness, without the certainty of a good hope? then by all means search the Scriptures; take the word of God into your hand and carefully and prayerfully make it your study. It will bring peace to your soul, and fill you with all the fulness and consolation of God. Let us then search the Scriptures, and inquire a little into the nature of their teachings.

1. David says, in Ps. 119: 105,—"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." And again, "The entrance of thy word giveth light." The ancient men of God—the teachers of Israel—were regarded as lights, so far as they made known and inculcated the will of God to man. Thus Jesus—the great teacher sent from God, who spoke as one having authority—declares concerning himself (John 8: 12), "I am the light of the world." Christ being the greatest of all teachers, is the greatest of all lights. "They that sat in darkness saw a great light." Christ was not only a great teacher, but he was emphatically the true teacher, and is therefore called in John 1: 9 the "true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world"; because he taught truth unmixed with error, and as pure as heaven from which he came. He was "full of grace and truth," so that he became identified with it and called himself "the way, the truth, and the life." He was then the way and the life because he taught the way of God in all its power and perfection, which he acknowledged and affirmed to be the truth, the word of God. This word dwelt in him—he was full of it,—hence we read, "In him was life, and the life was the light of men; and the light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehended it not."

2. The light of life. What is this? John 6: 63,—"The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." Hence says Paul in Phil. 2: 15 to the church, "Shine ye as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life." The light of life then is the word of life. If we desire life eternal, we cannot obtain it without the word. John 6: 68,—"Unto whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." So it is with all the blessings of the gospel. If we want faith, we must obtain it through the "word of faith which we preach."—Rom. 10: 8. If we desire the grace of God, the Apostle would say (Acts 20: 32), "And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and the word of his grace, which is able to build you up and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified."

If you desire salvation, you may inquire for one Peter, and he will tell you words whereby you may be saved. "For to you is the word of this salvation sent."—Acts 11: 14, 13: 26. And the exhortation of James is, "Receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls." If we want to be converted, David says (Ps. 19: 7) that the "law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." If we want reconciliation, we must not look for the Lord to come down from heaven to speak peace to our souls, but rather go to the apostles, for says Paul, in 2 Cor. 5: 19,—"God . . . hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation" If we wish to be begotten by the Holy Spirit and born again, the testimony is (James 1: 18), "Of his own will begat he us, with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures." And Peter says (1 Pet. 1: 23), "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

If we desire our souls purified, the apostle (1 Pet. 1: 22) informs us that we are to purify our souls in obeying the truth. If we pray for sanctification, the Savior also prays, "Sanctify them through thy truth." If any are seeking and praying for the Spirit to guide, direct, govern and defend them, we say with Paul (Eph. 6: 17), take the "sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." If any are seeking the light that is within, and singing,

"O drive these dark cares from my mind," we would say in the language of Paul (2 Cor. 4: 4).—"The God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ should shine upon them." Are we seeking for immortality and incorruptibility? The Apostle tells us in 2 Tim. 1: 10, that life and incorruptibility have been "brought to light through the gospel," and that we have it only by seeking for it. But if men will still persist in their blind and sinful pursuits, and continue to plod their way in the dark, notwithstanding God's timely warnings, we are constrained to tell them in the language of the Savior, "They love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

The possession of such a blessed book as the Bible, if rightly used, is one of the greatest blessings and advantages that can be conferred upon us. Everything, however, depends upon the use that we make of it. For if a person had swallowed poison, the best remedy in the world would do him no good unless he took it. So it is here. Our Bible will do us no good unless we use it and obey its precepts. In fact, it would be much better not to have a Bible than to have one and not use it. Because the Bible is a talent, as it were, entrusted to our care, for the due improvement of which we must give an account to God who gave it to us. Besides, to disregard it, as if it were of no value, is a high affront to God. How important then that we study, yea, "search the Scriptures."

"Search," etc. "This phrase," says A. Clarke, "refers to digging in mines after metals, such as gold, silver, etc. Search, i. e., shake and sift them, as the word signifies. Search narrowly, till the true force and meaning of every sentence and word be understood. Compare, place with place, the scope and design of one place with that of another,—things going before with things coming after, comparing word with word and letter with letter, and search the whole thoroughly." This is the way to obtain a practical knowledge of the Scriptures. In Luke 11: 28, our Savior says, "Blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it." Paul says in Col. 3: 16, "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom." Yea, search the Scriptures, for they are profitable and are able to make thee "wise unto salvation." GEO. MOYER.

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER SIX.

IX.—JEWS' RETURN.—ISA. 11TH CHAPTER.

This chapter is claimed as proof of the gathering of mortal Judah and Israel in the future age. If the gathering here mentioned is a future gathering, impossibilities are crowded into the future.

1st. In speaking of this gathering, the Prophet says, "They shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines" (ver. 14); hence, this gathering must take place while there are Philistines in existence: and it is an historical fact that the Philistines were exterminated in the time of Alexander the Great; therefore the gathering predicted in this prophecy must have received its fulfillment prior to that time. This fact cannot be set aside. If by "Judah and Israel", literal Judah and Israel are meant, then literal Philistines are meant, and they do not now exist; hence, the prophecy must have been fulfilled while they did exist.

2nd. This gathering is said to be "the SECOND time" of gathering (ver. 11th), in contradistinction to the first gathering from Egypt. The gathering under Cyrus was "the second." It is said it was not extensive enough. Read Cyrus' proclamation: "All the kingdoms of the earth hath the Lord God of heaven given me; . . . Who is there among you of all his people . . . let him go up." 2 Chron. 36: 23. Is not this extensive enough? It gave permission to "ALL the kingdoms of the earth," to return to their land. It is said that all of the ten tribes did not return: nor did all of the two tribes return; but a larger number of the ten tribes returned, in proportion to their dwindled numbers, than of the two tribes; and after their return they offered "for a sin offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel." Ezra 6: 17. Thus the "twelve tribes" were represented there, even if a portion of them chose to remain in heathen lands.

1st. Those prophecies which bring to view the return of Israel in connection with sacrifices, receive their fulfillment in an age where sacrifices were required, and not in an age where they are excluded by the antitype.

2nd. Those prophecies which bring to view the return of Israel, and connect therewith births, and deaths, and mortality, must be fulfilled in an age of mortality, and not in an age of immortality.

3rd. Those prophecies which have conditional threatenings and promises associated with them, are not to be interpreted to the disparagement of the conditions.

4th. There are other prophecies which bring to view the gathering of literal Israel in their resurrected or immortal state. Let these points be observed, and there will be no need of mixing up mortality with immortality, sin with glory, or death with eternal life. Let things have their right place, and all will be right. W. SHELDON.

The Duty of Christians in the Present Crisis.

The following, from the pen of H. Grattan Guinness, was furnished us by G. C. Colson. It was published in "The Herald of the Kingdom and Age to Come."—ED

Before passing to the next point, I would notice some objections urged against the views I here advocate. It is alleged that the passages already quoted refer exclusively to the christian's duty of non-resistance when persecuted for Christ's sake. To prove the fallacy of this objection, it is enough to refer to our Lord's words in the fifth of Matthew. One of the cases there mentioned in which our Lord commands non-resistance on the christian's part, is the case of the christian's being merely robbed of his coat by a thief (evidently not one of persecution for Christ's sake.) The objection therefore falls to the ground. Again it is stated, that the passages here quoted discountenance only a wicked spirit of revenge and malice; not an infliction of deserved punishment on evil doers. The thing forbidden by our Lord in the fifth of Matthew is the very thing permitted by God to the Jews under the old dispensation, and cannot be therefore merely a wicked spirit of revenge and malice. No one will say that God ever sanctioned such a spirit; but it is impossible to deny that he did sanction in the Jew an exercise of strict justice towards others, which the Lord Jesus Christ emphatically prohibits in the christian.

Again, it is said that while a christian is forbidden avenging his private injuries, he is not freed from the responsibility of assisting to avenge public wrongs; but, on the contrary, he is bound for the good of society to do so. Now why is a christian forbidden to avenge his own personal wrongs? Not on the ground that such avenging of evil is reprehensible in itself (as we have seen,) but simply as a christian he is responsible to God to act towards his fellow men only in grace: (on what other ground did our Lord forbid the christians exercising righteous judgment, in Matt. five, and command his non-avenging evil treatment? On no other surely.) Now this responsibility to God can never be set aside by his position in society. The same principle which prohibits his avenging personal injury, a thing right in itself, also prohibits his avenging public injury, a thing right in itself. Both involve the exercise of unmingled justice, and are opposed to the exercise of pure grace. Observe, dear brethren, I speak of the duty of the christian, not of the duty of worldly men towards each other.

2. As to the precepts which the word of God gives to the christian church, what do they inculcate but peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness (Gal. 5: 22, 23) mercy, kindness, forbearance, forgiveness, charity, (Col. 3: 12–14?) In a word, what but love? There is not one precept given to the christian church which enjoins war, whether offensive or defensive. There is not one which countenances war. There is not one which permits war. I will go still further—there is not one which countenances the christian in inflicting deserved punishment upon his fellow men. Nor one which countenances his going to law with another, or casting another into prison for debt, or in any way entering into judgment with another. There is not one which even enjoins or permits the christian's resisting evil treatment from others. There is not one which does not in spirit or in letter, or both, positively discountenance and condemn all dealing with others which is not characterized by grace, mercy and love.

For the sake of clearness, I have selected from the mass of christian precepts contained in the New Testament (all harmonious, I need hardly observe, in spirit,) the following twelve, which I have contrasted with corresponding precepts of war, and from the comparison I leave you to draw the inference with respect to the lawfulness or unlawfulness of war for the christian.

PRECEPTS OF WAR.

Resist evil treatment from others. Hate thine enemy. (Quoted in Matt. 5: 43.)

Recompense to your enemies evil for evil.

Avenge yourself on those who oppress you, or rebel against you.

Submit not to insult, injustice or cruelty; vengeance is ours: we will repay.

Overcome opposition and rebellion with the sword and the gun, with shot and shell.

Follow war with the enemies of your country.

Fight for military glory.

Put on therefore as the defenders of your country, brave and patriotic swords, pistols, daggers, guns and bayonets, fighting with one another, and killing one another, if your nation have quarrels against each other.

The servant of his country must strive and be violent towards some men.

Your country sends you forth as armed soldiers, to destroy her enemies; be ye therefore warlike as eagles, and fierce as lions.

Draw your swords and defend yourselves and your country, lest you perish with the sword.

PRECEPTS OF CHRISTIANITY.

"Resist not evil." Matt. 5: 39. "Love your enemies." Matt. 5: 44.

"Recompense to no man evil for evil." Rom. 12: 17.

"Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, vengeance is mine. I will repay, saith the Lord." Rom. 12: 19.

"Overcome evil with good." Rom. 12: 21.

"Follow peace with all men." Heb. 12: 44.

"Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory." Phil. 2: 8.

"Put on therefore as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long suffering, forbearing one another and forgiving one another. If any man have a quarrel against any."—Col. 3: 12, 13.

"The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men." 2 Tim. 2: 24.

"I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves. be ye therefore harmless as doves."—Matt. 18: 16.

"Put up again thy sword into its place, for all they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword." Matt. 26: 52.

I cannot forbear adding, in review of these and similar Scriptures, that it is my solemn conviction before God that a christian engaging in or encouraging war, whether offensive or defensive, does so in open violation of every precept of christianity bearing upon his conduct in this respect.

3. As to the example of our Lord, and the example of the apostles and first christians (as far as they trod in Christ's steps,) which the word of God presents to the church for imitation.

First, with respect to the example of our Lord as far as it bears upon this subject. My dear christian brethren, is there any need that I should prove to you that He who left to us an example that we should follow in his steps, never lifted up hand to do injury to others even in his own defense? Oh! how opposite to everything warlike was his spirit and conduct. Look at some of the declarations of Scripture concerning him. Isaiah says of him, He was oppressed and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth." Isa. 53: 7. He did no violence. Isa. 53: 7. When the Samaritans rejected him, and James and John said, "Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them?" even as Elias did, he turned and rebuked them and said, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them," Luke 9: 53–55. Even when foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem, he wept over the city. Luke 19: 41. When Peter struck the servant of the high priest with the sword and smote off his ear, the Lord healed the wounded man and rebuked Peter, saying, "Put up again thy sword into its place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Matt. 26: 52. And when struck and spat upon, and mocked and blasphemed, scourged and crucified, his only cry was, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Luke 23: 34. Well might the apostle Paul say of him that he was harmless, as well as holy, undefiled, separate from sinners, Heb. 7: 26; and the apostle Peter, that "when he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously. 1 Pet. 2: 23. Perhaps you feel half inclined to urge that our Lord just before his betrayal said, he "that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one," and ask, what were they to buy swords for, if swords might not be used? I freely admit that if our Lord meant that his servants should buy military weapons, he meant that they should use them; but did he mean to command his disciples to purchase and use such weapons? Perhaps you say Peter so understood him, for he used the sword just afterwards to smite off the ear of the high priest's servant. I answer, did not our Lord rebuke him for so doing? did he not heal the wound his rash and mistaken follower had made? did he not disarm him of this military weapon by the stern and positive command,, "Put up thy sword again into its place"? did he not in disarming Peter of the sword express his desire to disarm all his followers of such weapons? and did he not in the strongest manner reprobate the use of the sword by the emphatic sentence, "All they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword"? What can be plainer than that our Lord never meant to command or countenance the use by his servants of this deadly weapon?

If you take the words literally, you must understand the Lord to mean that the twelve apostles should arm themselves with twelve swords; that in order to obtain these weapons they were, if necessary, even to sell their garments, that they might with the money thus obtained purchase them; and that having procured swords, they were to use them or at least to defend themselves from their enemies. Now I beg you to observe that the Lord could not mean the disciples thus to act; and that, therefore, the text, "He that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one," cannot be taken literally, for the following reasons: first, he could not mean that the twelve apostles should arm themselves with twelve swords; for when some of them said, "Lord, here are two swords," he answered, "It is enough." How could two swords be enough to arm twelve men? And secondly, that our Lord could not mean that they should use swords as weapons of defense, for when Peter drew one for this purpose, he rebuked him, saying, "Put up again thy sword into its place," and added the solemn declaration, which I entreat you to ponder well—"All they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword."

As to the true meaning of our Lord's words, "He that hath no sword," etc., it appears to me that he meant by them to put strongly before his disciples the general truth that they were about to be left in an exposed and defenceless condition, by his being removed from their midst. The following seems to be the substance of his address to them: "Formerly, when I was with you, to provide for and protect you, I sent you forth without purse or scrip or sword; but now you must prepare to provide for and protect yourselves; for I am about to be removed from you, and to leave you in a state of want and exposure in the midst of your enemies." Certainly, whatever be the meaning of these words, they only apply to the brief interval of our Lord's absence from his disciples—the interval between his betrayal and his resurrection,—or, at most, between his betrayal and the descent of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost; for neither before his betrayal nor after his resurrection and the descent of the Holy Spirit did he leave them unprovided for and unprotected. His last words on earth to his disciples were—"Lo I am with you all the days, even to the end of the age." These words then cannot, by any possible construction, justify the use of the sword by christians at the present day.

I believe that some persons have ventured to assert that the only reason why our Lord did not permit himself to be defended on this occasion by the sword was, that it would have prevented the accomplishment of his great object—the laying down of his life upon the cross. To such it is sufficient to answer, that our Lord in disarming Peter spoke as follows:—"Put up again thy sword into its place, for all they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword"; and thus assigned as his primary reason for the command, one which would not merely prevent his servants fighting then, but would also prevent their fighting at any time during his absence. He did not say, Put up thy sword on this occasion, because I desire to lay down my life; but, Put up thy sword, for all they that take it shall perish with it.

Having looked at our Lord's example with reference to this subject, let us now examine that of the apostles and of the first christians, as presented to us in Scripture for our imitation. Did they engage in or countenance offensive or even defensive warfare? Never, that we have any record of, did they attempt righteously to avenge themselves on others who ill treated them, using for that purpose the arm of the law or civil powers. Never, that we have any record of, did they make use of any weapon to defend themselves from personal assault or injury from the hands of their enemies. Ever, (except in the case of Peter, whose act on this occasion was condemned by the Lord, as we have already seen,) instead of revenging themselves directly or indirectly on others, instead of even resisting evil treatment from others, their course was one of submission, one of grace. They were insulted, beaten, robbed, scourged, imprisoned, stoned, and many of them murdered, and all this without provocation or evil on their part, and yet they maintained through it all the path of unresisting submission. True, they sometimes spoke of the injustice and cruelty of such treatment, but never did they revenge themselves, never availed themselves of the law for the punishment of their persecutors; never used deadly weapons in self-defense; but on the contrary returned evil with good, cursing with blessing, hatred with love. Who, following such examples, treading in such steps, can plunge the sword in human bosoms? Can grace be ever the executioner of wrath? Can grace ever inflict even deserved judgment—merited death? If it can, then grace is no more grace, but is law. But, dear brethren, you know grace is not law, and those who walk in grace, as did the apostles and first christians, would sooner suffer the sword to be sheathed in their own bosoms than bury it in that of another. Who that is intelligent and ingenuous, can doubt this?

Two or three passages would I quote from the writings of the apostles in illustration of their opinions and practices with respect to war.

"From whence come wars and fightings among you?" says the apostle James, "come they not hence even of your lusts, that war in your members? Ye lust and have not; ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain; ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God, . . . submit yourselves therefore to God. . . . Cleanse your hands, ye sinners, and purify your hearts, ye double minded." See also James 4: 14–18.

The apostle Paul declares with respect to his own course, "For though we walk in the flesh (i. e., in the body,) we do not war after the flesh, for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal."—2 Cor. 10: 3, 4. Can any soldier thus disclaim the use of carnal weapons? Can any man who fights with his fellow man deny that he wars after the flesh? Elsewhere the apostle declares, "We wrestle not against flesh and blood (or human beings,") Eph. 6: 12. No, their warfare was of a different character; like their divine Master they sought not to destroy men's lives, but to save them. They wrestled only against Satan and his hosts, and the only armor they wore was the "whole armor of God," even the girdle of "truth," the "breastplate of righteousness," shoes of the "preparation of the gospel of peace," the "shield of faith," the "helmet of salvation," and the "sword of the Spirit" (Eph. 6;) and well will it be for us if we use no armor but this, and engage in no warfare but the good fight of faith; for God hath called us to peace.

It is Plainly Revealed,

1. That there is a first and second advent of our Lord Jesus Christ to this sin-cursed earth.

2. That as the one was real and literal, so will be the other.

3. That eternal life is dependent upon a resurrection from the dead, and that faith in Christ is the only ground of hope for that "better resurrection."

4. That a resurrection from the first death will be experienced by all mankind, whether good or evil; but,

5. That a resurrection from the second death can never be attained, and therefore it is called eternal.

6. That saving faith in Christ is not a mere assent to Bible doctrines; but a living, daily exercise of confidence and consecration—a walk with God—a holy life, and godly conversation.

7. That the true children of God are not found in any party or sect, or among those who denounce all organizations; but,

8. That wherever any fear God and work righteousness, they are accepted of him.

9. That none need expect admittance into the kingdom who are not living in conformity to Bible doctrines and precepts.

10. That prayer—secret, social, family, and sanctuary—is a plain christian duty, and cannot be neglected with impunity.

11. That the First, or Lord's day, is given as one of rest (not pastime,) and that to devote it to sacred, not worldly purposes, is the duty and privilege of every believer.

12. That where the Spirit of Christ exists, there will be union, love, fellowship; not railing, backbiting, hatred, and false accusation.

Thus do I read and understand the word of God. A. C. JUDSON.

How can I do any Good?

Lend your paper round to your neighbors, if they do not take it.

Wear your old coat another year, instead of getting a new one, and send the paper to some minister you know.

Have some tracts by you to distribute.

Wear your old bonnet another season, and pay the minister who comes along, if only to preach one sermon. Who can tell what good may come of it? It will give you more pleasure than a new bonnet. Don't gratify pride, and let sinners go to destruction. H. S. [illegible]

Spiritualism.—No. 2.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS.

It has been customary for a long time, among a certain class of people, to "explain away" those passages in the Bible which did not harmonize with their preconceived notions of what a divine revelation ought to teach, and so cut the knot when they failed to untie it. Thus the Jews made the word of God of none effect by their tradition. Then again, others have found that an unbiassed interpretation of Scripture would prove their darling theories false, and so they have rejected it, denying that God has revealed his will in a book. Of these two classes the latter is the more honorable, and does less harm than the other. In fact, false interpretation of Scripture is the foundation of open denial of the claims of revealed religion. Probably not one infidel in a hundred, unless it be true that his infidelity was taken up to escape the stings of remorse, and the fear of a "judgment to come," but what will say that his first feelings of repugnance to the Bible arose from some such doctrine as eternal torment, infant damnation, an angry God, etc. All over Christendom to-day, there are thousands who have gone into open infidelity, or secret scepticism, solely as the result of religious teaching which has no warrant in the word. And thousands more will follow unless the watchmen on the towers of Zion sound the alarm, or rather cease to sound a false alarm.

But it has remained for the "last days" to witness the union of these two plans, producing a New Testament expurgated of all objectionable doctrines, and the meaning of what is left nearly all explained away, without the least regard to the weight of evidence for or against the genuineness of the passages omitted or altered. The result of this is presented to the world in a volume entitled "The New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, as revised and corrected by the spirits." Some—perhaps most—of the leading Spiritualists treat the thing rather coldly; but unless they can prove that it was got up by some one in the normal state, it has just as much weight as anything the spirits have ever said or written. There is not a particle of proof either way, except the simple say so of the spirits themselves; and if we are called upon to believe any spirit, why not the one or ones who have done this? Some intelligence, who signs his name "Paul," says he has corrected Acts, Romans, and now gives them to the world as first written. Who will prove (admitting that Paul now lives as a conscious, active entity, with full power, under certain circumstances, to communicate his thoughts to us upon earth) that it is not Paul? Therefore, while the work claims to come from spirits, I shall deal with it as with any other communication purporting to come from another world.

1. This revision claims to be the work of the spirits of Christ, Paul, John, and others. They have long sought for an opportunity to do this; but, for some reason not given, the world has had to grope in darkness for eighteen hundred years, injured full as much by the errors, as benefitted by the truths, contained in the gospel! At this late day we are blessed in having all this error cast out. Why have we had to wait so long? But "better late than never," I suppose. And now, since the Bible has been the great barrier to advancement, we may look for unprecedented progress in "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity"!

2. The divinity of Christ, in any and every sense, is wholly ignored. Everything in his birth, life, death and resurrection, that declares him to be the Son of God, is either omitted or explained away. "Son of God," in the few passages where it does occur, is said to mean "the same as when God called the posterity of Jacob his son (Ex. 4: 22)."

3. His mission, to be a propitiation for the sins of the world, and to "give eternal life," is with one stroke blotted from the pages of the record. "Eternal life" is usually changed to "eternal glory"; and once where it is not changed, it is defined as "a condition of holiness"! This is orthodox, however, with many christians. To do this, required the omission of Romans third to eleventh inclusive, and the entire book of Hebrews!

4. His teachings are mutilated and changed. The counsel not to lay up treasures on the earth, but in heaven; not to be anxious about the morrow; to "seek first the kingdom of God,"—are all gone. The command to "love your enemies, do good, to them that hate you, bless them that curse you, and pray for them that despitefully use you," is made to read, "Love your friends, and hate not your enemies." And by the way, the spirits made a mistake on this point in Luke 6, and left it unchanged; so a second revision was necessary, and they have pasted over it the above sentence. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive your trespasses," now reads, "But if ye love not your neighbors, neither will your Father love you"! The advice in case we are smitten on one cheek, compelled to go a mile, or deprived of garments at law, is not to be found. The admonition beginning, "If thy right hand offend thee," etc., is omitted. Most everything that is said of adultery and fornication is left out. These two words are said in the introduction to be translated from words that mean "only the worship of idols." So in the few cases where the terms are retained, the sense is lost. Consequently, we shall not expect to hear anything more said about the immorality of the Bible. Christ's stringent law respecting divorce is wanting. No "marriage law" in the New Dispensation.

5. Christ's works share the same fate of his teachings. Raising the dead is nothing but awaking one from a "trance sleep." Instead of five thousand men fed miraculously, the new version reads five hundred. That helps the matter wonderfully, I suppose.

6. Christ's resurrection is denied. Only his spirit came forth, and angels stole the body! So it seems the Jews were mistaken in the man when they charged this upon the disciples. Resurrection is defined as simply "the resurrection of the spirit."

7. The state of the dead, as a state of rest and unconsciousness, is quietly ignored. Instead, we have only to "shuffle off this mortal coil," and enter the "spirit land," and live forever. (See Gen. 3: 4, 22.

8. All distinctions of character, good and bad, in the future state, are practically laid aside. Some may be "unprogressed," but "all may become holy and happy." And consequently, all reference to the "wrath to come" is passed by. With one exception, from Revelation fourth to twentieth inclusive, chapters full of records of judgments, both present and to come,—all is omitted.

9. The hope of the "glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," to destroy them that destroy the earth, and give his reward to his holy ones, is forever crushed. Those inspiring sentences of Paul, in which he rests the christian's hope on the resurrection of Christ, and his second coming to awake the sleepers, are very coolly left out. Where his second coming is noticed, it is explained to be "spiritual," manifested in the developments of Spiritualism for a few years past. And so the light which God has placed in their hands to light their way through the valley of the shadow of death, is thrown away, and man is left to follow the ignis fatuus of this doctrine of devils! In fact, everything that makes the Bible a book unlike other books, is left out, so far as they have gone. Almost everything that makes it valuable is wanting.

Now, christian, do you think Spiritualism is "not worth noticing"? I tell you—and I believe the record of God coincides with observation in this respect—that ere many years pass by, that cry will be hushed forever. When the hosts of Satan have spread their net and laid their toils; when the word "Ready!" from their leader's lips passes down the lines,—then, LOOK OUT! And the day is coming, coming. We must meet it; we cannot escape it. And those who are asleep in that day will never wake till the voice of God awakes them from their death-like slumbers.

The only way we can meet this foe is by action. The church is now on the "Enchanted Ground"; and many, oh! how many, will perish with the Holy City in sight. Christian brethren and sisters, young and old, let us take the sword of the Spirit, and go forth, leaning on the Almighty arm, to meet this mortal enemy. It will not be long; this is the last great struggle. O my God! send forth men who shall rouse thy sleeping children, and save them from the coming storm! And shall we do our duty? God help us each and every one, to watch, and pray, and work.

How long? O Lord! how long?

"I am pained at my very heart; my heart maketh a noise in me; I cannot hold my peace, because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war. . . . How long shall I see the standard, and hear the sound of the trumpet?"—JER. 4: 19, 21.

Not a day passes, nor an hour, free from the dread alarm of war. In every city, and town, and village, rings the clarion of battle. High above the forest trees, between the heavens and the earth, floats the standard of bloody conflict, whilst yonder on the field of strife rings the trumpet that calleth men to the fight. Above all these are heard and seen the roar of artillery and the flash of musketry; and all around this field of blood men lie in the agonies of death,—fathers and sons and brothers,—all mangled, dead and dying; while, at home, we hear the cries of the bereft ones.

Whose heart is so hardened that he cannot pray for King Jesus to come and change this vile world to one of purity and peace? My eyes have beheld the scene of woful carnage long enough. My soul crieth out, How long shall I see the standard and hear the trumpet that calleth men from east and west, north and south, to the awful carnage of war? I am thankful in God that this world is not my home; but oh! how many poor dying soldiers on the battle field are ignorant of this one thing—that this is not our home. While I think of these things, I feel to exclaim in the language of the prophet:—"O! that thou wouldest rend the heavens! that thou wouldest come down! that the mountains might flow down at thy presence!" ### Our Pilgrimage.

Thursday, Oct. 9th. This evening, we commenced meetings in the Town Hall, at Holden, Mass. This series of meetings was continued every evening and over the Lord's day. The Lord blessed us, and several decided to serve him. A large and attentive audience was present on the Sabbath. Quite a number of members of other churches attended. People are anxious to hear on "the signs of the times." They are troubled at the state of things in the world, and are satisfied that some great event is at hand. Their minds are perplexed. Fearfulness is coming upon them. They begin to think that the hope we love so well, and which they have long despised, is, after all, founded upon a true exposition of the Bible. Where they have been looking for light, there comes nothing but darkness. While they expected peace, war comes instead, and all their hopes of the world's conversion are blasted, and they have become satisfied that the masses are rushing to ruin, rather than to the Lord. Those who have been indifferent in relation to the prophetic scriptures are now earnestly inquiring for the light. Many have "ears to hear" now, who would have scorned to listen two years ago. All classes appear to be coming to a point where they must decide either for the Lord and his truth, or stand directly opposed. Conservative men will not be able, we think, to be neutral much longer. We must be wholly for the Lord, or entirely against him.

Several in Holden have made the wise choice. We closed our meetings by a very pleasant communion season, on Sabbath evening. We all sat around the table, and felt the sweet influences of the Holy Spirit. The prospect in this place is good. The brethren and sisters appear to be decided to endure to the end.

Saturday, Oct 19th. At 12 o'clock, we left Boston for Concord, N. H., where we spent the following Lord's day, and had one of the best seasons we have enjoyed with the saints in this city. The Lord blessed us in a special manner, causing a shout of joy. It was a heavenly season. This church is pressing for the kingdom with a noble zeal. The young converts appear to be in a very healthy condition, showing that they have had a genuine work in their hearts.

Bro. Himes and Preble were with us in the evening, on their return from the conference at Loudon Ridge, where they had an excellent meeting. Bro. H. preached on the "vials," to a large and attentive audience, showing that the second coming of Christ is at hand. Bro. Himes is enjoying good health, and is earnestly engaged in efforts to arouse people to prepare to meet the coming Bridegroom. He has received great benefit from Dr. Jackson's treatment at "Our Home" in Dansville, N. Y. He says he never was better in his life. He feels like a new man physically, and this contributes much to his religious enjoyment, because he has learned to eat and drink to the glory of the Lord, by using only those articles of diet which are healthy. How much sickness and consequent suffering and premature death might be prevented if people would only adopt the same rule. But few know the luxuries of a temperate diet.

Sunday, Oct. 26th. Last evening and to-day was spent in Concord, and we had another of our interesting meetings. The old soldiers of the cross say they have not seen the cause of Christ in so prosperous a state in C. for many years as it has been for the last few months. Their prayer meetings, we learn, are very heavenly seasons.

We had an interesting talk with a young Shaker lady. She has just broken loose, in part, from that Satanic delusion, which is only another phase of Spiritualism. She has been with them since she was two years of age. She is intelligent, and anxiously inquiring for the way of truth. She says it is very difficult for her to get rid of the views she has received among the Shakers. After being taught so fully that the Bible is to be understood spiritually, she hardly dare believe it means what it says; or, in other words, is to be taken literally; but she begins to "see men as trees walking," and we trust will yet see clearly.

Wednesday, Oct. 29. At 7 1-2 o'clock, A. M., we left Boston, en route for the Tuftonborough Conference, via the Boston and Maine R. R. to Dover, thence by the Cocheco R. R. to Alton Bay on Lake Winnipiseogee, thence by the steamer Dover to Wolfborough, where we were met by Bro. Richard B. Neal, who took us to his pilgrim home, where we found a hearty welcome. Our conference commenced the next day, at 10 1-2 o'clock, and continued four days. The meeting was a glorious success. We began with a few, and ended with a great crowd. It is a thinly settled community, several miles from any village; yet it was estimated that between four and five hundred were present the last day; who gave the best of attention, as we spoke on the signs of the times, and the necessary preparation to meet the Lord.

We met some noble hearted brethren and sisters at this meeting; among them Bro. and Sr. T. W. Piper, who reside in the place. He preaches here once in four weeks, and the Lord has blessed his labors. Bro. A. W. Sibley, from Wakefield, was also present. Bro. Couch was not able to be with us as expected. It fell to our lot to preach three times a day during the conference, and attend as many social meetings; and yet we felt as fresh as new through the entire meeting. We could say, we were renewed day by day, so that at its close, we were all ready for another conflict with the enemy. Praise the Lord for his goodness to his children. How blessed it is to trust in him.

About a dozen backsliders were reclaimed during the conference, sinners were deeply convicted, and the saints had a rich feast of blessings from the Lord, causing them to shout aloud his praises in the great congregation. In our love-feast, sixty spoke in fifty minutes. It was a feast indeed.

We closed our excellent conference around the table of the Lord, where we had a heavenly season of weeping and rejoicing. The scene will be long remembered by those present. After we had got through, a weeping soul came trembling, who had just been reclaimed from a backslidden state, and said, "I am not worthy to sit down with you, but 'the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table.'" She received a rich blessing, and went on her way rejoicing. When this one had partaken, another came, an aged one, who had been in a backslidden state for a long time, and gave herself to Jesus, and partook of the sacrament, receiving sweet comfort. After this several soul-stirring testimonies were given, and the Lord gave us a shower of blessings at our parting scene. Thus closed our very interesting and profitable conference. To the Lord be all the glory.

Exposition of 1 Cor. 5: 5.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you give us through the Crisis (if you think proper) an exposition of the last clause of 1 Cor. 5: 5.

Yours in hope, BLAISDEL KENT.

The verse in question reads as follows:—"To deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

This passage is a little obscure as it now reads. It will be observed that the salvation is "in the day of the Lord Jesus," not at death. The day of the Lord is yet future; hence the scripture gives no countenance to the popular idea, that the spirit is the man, who goes to his reward as soon as he dies, or is conscious between death and the resurrection. Instead of "destruction of the flesh," Wakefield's version reads, "punishment of the flesh," which is evidently the correct meaning. Mace renders the same as follows:—"to suffer corporeal punishment." In the Syriac version, the latter clause reads:—"That in spirit he may have life."

The obvious idea contained in the passage is this: that the individual should be chastised, that his unsubdued passions and evil propensities may be brought in subjection to the principles of christianity, that in principles, feelings, or motives, he may be in harmony with the spirit of Christ, so that he "may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

Belsham says, "The Latin fathers and Beza thought that . . . by the 'destruction of the flesh' was meant the destruction of the offender's pride, lust and fleshly passions." Beza says:—"By this means"—excommunication—"his flesh may be tamed, that he may learn to live to the Spirit."—Beza's N. S.

Unquenchable fire.

BRO. GRANT:—Please explain the meaning of "everlasting fire," spoken of in Matt. 25: 41, and of the unquenchable fire mentioned in Mark 9: 43–48.

Coos, N. H. WM. H. WRIGHT.

It will be observed it does not say they shall burn everlastingly; or that they shall take fire, and never be burnt up; on the contrary, we read that Christ will "gather his wheat into the garner; but he will BURN UP the chaff with unquenchable fire." The fact that the fire is unquenchable is positive proof that the wicked, who are cast into it, must be burned up, as a matter of necessity, if the fire has any effect upon them. We never heard that objects were put into the fire to preserve them, but for their destruction. The Bible informs us that "the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." When they are burnt up, root and branch, are they still alive, and acting? Then we cannot depend upon the language of the Bible! Let us believe it, and rejoice in the truth.

We are thankful that God has decided that none but the righteous shall live eternally; that sin and misery shall come to a perpetual end. We have great reason to praise the Lord for the light that shines from his word on this subject. Let us all escape "the second death" by becoming Jesus' disciples.

Light from the Tombs.

We learn from the Oberlin Evangelist that Prof. Jules Delassney has been visiting the Catacombs of Rome, lying underneath that city. He says "the seven mountains, on which Rome stands, are volcanic. The mass of ashes and other volcanic remains, lying from forty to one hundred feet below the surface, was long ago found to make an admirable cement, and immense excavations have been consequently made in obtaining it." In the days of Nero they were extensive; and christians, in the middle of the first century, resorted to these subterranean passes for protection from the power of the persecutor. Mr. Delassney thinks these passages would reach in one direct line as many as one hundred miles. Many of the christians were buried in these excavations. He says,

"The inscriptions on their tombs are brief and simple, bearing a most impressive testimony to the great points of their faith in Jesus. The word death is not there. They all 'sleep' in Jesus—in hope of the resurrection when God wills. One verb for sleeping, and one other for rising again, complete the vocabulary of verbs in the literature of the catacombs. Their creed is in five words, 'Jesus Christ, God's Son, Savior.' The epitaph over one of the youthful ones of those times is expressive: 'Here sleeps—ten years old—God's little lamb.'"

We have no proof that the christians of the first century said any thing about dying and going to glory, or being alive between death and the resurrection. When they died, they expected to sleep till Jesus comes to raise the dead. They had learned no other doctrine from Jesus and his apostles. Let us "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

A New Government.

A communication has been published in the Banner of Light, purporting to come from the spirit of John C. Calhoun. It is through a medium in New Orleans, Lou., dated Sept. 27th, 1862. In reply to the inquiry, "Do you think the present form of government will be superceded by another and more exalted one, before these troubles are fully ended," he answered,

"Yes, there will be a new and more complete superstructure—a government that will stand upon the broad basis of Human Liberty, and under its beautiful and beneficent columns, the people of every part of America will unite anew, and move on majestically toward the goal of a blissful harmony." [In what year will this new order of things take place?] "We, in the spirit, are endeavoring to consummate this great work of reconstruction upon this new and more beautiful basis, about the year 1864; but much will yet have to be gone through with ere that period shall arrive; there will be many bloody battles fought before that day shall send forth its blessings to a distracted and sorrowing people; and when the hour comes to propose this new fabric, many will say nay. But the edifice will be reared, and those who would stand in the way of its successful construction, will mock at their own folly and want of wisdom when it shall become a living reality."

We are rejoicing in the glorious truth that the time is at hand when Christ shall "set up a kingdom" that "shall stand for ever," and "shall not be left to other people."

New Style of Marriage.

The following is from the New Republic published in Cleaveland, O. These are strange times! Each one is becoming his own law-maker.

"MARRIED: On the 16th inst., in Chester Co., Pa., Orson S. Murray, of Warren Co., O., and Lydia P. Jacobs, of the former place. The ceremony consisted principally of the following announcement, made by the parties concerned, in the presence of congratulatory friends collected on the occasion:

'We make known to these, our friends, that we, Orson S. Murray and Lydia P. Jacobs, have chosen each other for conjugal companionship—in prosperity and adversity, in life and till death. We ask no license. We submit to no dictation. We bow to no authority. We recognize no God nor Almighty power to guide or to guard us. Our promises are to ourselves and each other, and not to others, but in ourselves and each other.'"

The above needs no comment. We expect to hear of more of the same kind of marriages.

Covetous Ministers.

It is evident that covetousness is not confined to laymen in these last days; but it seems doubly strange that it should lead professed ministers of Jesus to seek a position on the bloody battle field, where every thing is opposed to the Spirit of Christ. But so it is, as the following will show. The communication is from a New York correspondent of the Boston Journal, dated Oct. 21st, '62.

"One would hardly think of a rivalry among men for the post of chaplain. Yet there is not any other position in a regiment for which there is more canvassing or caucusing. The salaries in this State are small. To get the post of chaplain—to draw $1800 in ready money—to have little or nothing to do, is quite a temptation; and the Governor of the State is annoyed and tried and taxed in almost every way to decide among contending candidates. Friends, politicians, sects send in petitions, and make the trouble more perplexing."

THE TIME CHANGED.—The conference in Poland, Me., will commence Dec. 11th, instead of Nov. 20th, as before noticed, by order of J. A. Libby.

Our Tract Column.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names towards raising ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS, as a TRACT FUND, to aid the Christian Publication Society in the issue and gratuitous distribution of such Tracts and other publications as the times in which we live demand; and our subscriptions shall be paid at the call of the Treasurer of the Society as soon as the whole amount is subscribed.

The Thousand Dollar Tract Fund.

NUMBER THREE.

WE EXPECT TO RAISE ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR THE TRACT FUND. The reason why we expect to have it is, because we want it; and we can use it; not to pay big salaries to hired agents, but to scatter tracts in great quantities through all parts of the land. Calls for them are constantly coming in. Bro. B. writes from R. I.:—

"BRO. HASTINGS:—I want to beg from the Tract Fund for myself and for another; not for selfish purposes, but for God's cause. I have been in the habit of distributing tracts for years at my own expense; now my circumstances are changed. I have been out of work for some time, and have no job if I were well. I have been sick, have had two doctors, and am nearly well now. My wife is under the doctor's care. But enough of this. Pray for us.

At W—— there is an influential member of the Baptist church. Please send him tracts as follows. When I get to work, if the Lord will, I will try and make the Tract Fund good. If you send them, say so in the Crisis. Bro. W. has become interested through the tracts I have given him. He wrote me for more."

We have sent the tracts as directed by this brother, whom we have long known as a faithful and efficient tract distributor. Such brethren shall not be deprived of the privilege of distributing tracts, even though sick and poor. Other brethren who have not time to distribute tracts, have the money to pay for them, and they are willing to give it.

A sister writes from C., Oct. 1st:—

"I got some tracts at the Crisis office, which I have distributed to the best of my ability. I have put them into the hands of persons who were entirely ignorant of our views, and in every case they have seemed pleased with them, and told me they would read them. One lady who lives in ——, to whom I sent the Crisis until she sent me word not to send it any more, has written and says she is much obliged, and promises she will read the tracts. So I feel encouraged. My object in writing is to ascertain if I can have more. I have a grand chance to send some to New Jersey, to a person who will distribute them faithfully. Can you furnish me with some? Please send me word, and I will call for them to-morrow.

Yours in the hope of the gospel, H."

This sister has been supplied with tracts, according to her request, and there are more left for others who may need them. And while we are sending out, let our brethren keep sending in the means to publish more. This work cannot, must not, shall not stop, while the Lord is pleased to give us strength to push the battle to the gate. May he be with us now and evermore.

Here is a letter from Michigan. Sister J. H. C. writes:—

BRO. HASTINGS:—Seeing your offer in the Expositor to send tracts to the poor if they would send the postage, my little girls wished me to write for them, and they would send what money they had to pay the postage, so as to have them to give to some that are not able in these times to even pay the postage, but are famishing for the truth. Send as many as you think best."

The tracts were sent, directed to the little girls, according to order.

S. V. M., of Illinois, writes:—

"I was so glad when I saw the heading in the Crisis—'Tracts for Free Distribution,'—that my whole soul was full of praise to God for his goodness in raising up a class of men and women in these last days who are willing to help those who cannot help themselves, in the free distribution of tracts. Brn. G. and L. have been preaching in this region, and have left a good impression; many are inquiring for the truth, and some have embraced it. Praise the Lord. Now, brethren, since the Lord has opened the way, I would just say this is a new ground. I do not know of any place where more good could be done, for some seven villages within four and ten miles have seemingly been neglected. Nothing would seem to do us so much good as to have quite a number of tracts to give to our preaching brethren, to distribute where they think they will do the most good. The Lord willing, we think we can send you something after awhile, but cannot do so now. May the Lord bless you in your good work."

Some tracts have been sent in answer to this call; others may be sent hereafter.

Bro. B. writes from New York:—

"The tracts are received. I enclose the postage in this letter. I only wish there were five hundred instead of fifty. I could send them all on a mission of good. The world is starving and dying for want of the truth, and the professed church withhold it. It makes me sad to think of it. God give us strength to do something."

Bro. J. S. H., from Illinois, writes:—

"I send you a dollar for tracts. I want them to give away. We are alone in this part of the country; have no brethren to meet with. But we have the Bible and the World's Crisis, and I am doing what I can, by the help of God, to warn my neighbors to prepare for the coming of the Lord, and that soon. I intend taking a larger circuit around the country, holding meetings where opportunity presents, and if possible persuade some to come in. I think if I had some tracts I might distribute them to good advantage."

We have sent books and tracts to this brother, and trust they are profitably distributed. A physician writes, from Indiana:—

"I see the advertisement of a work entitled 'Pauline Theology,' by yourself, and a series of tracts on 'Prophecy.' Please send me some of them,—such ones as would most interest an anxious inquirer. I am hunting for the 'old paths.' Paul's theology has put me to thinking. S. R."

Such are some of the indications which we receive almost daily, of an interest in the work which the Christian Publication Society has marked out for itself to perform. Let us go forward in this work with prayerfulness and zeal, being confident that God will bless all honest endeavors for the spread of his truth. While our brethren aid us in the work pecuniarily, let them pray without ceasing that he who giveth the increase, and without which Paul may plant and Apollos water in vain, may cause his truth to flourish, and thus multiply the seed sown, and cause thanksgiving to rise from many hearts that have long been in darkness and the shadow of death.

Friends who wish for tracts will send their orders as usual to Miles Grant, to whom all remittances should also be directed.

H. L. HASTINGS.

For the Crisis.

Anonymous Writers.

Brethren, give us your names. It helps us to get acquainted with faces we never have seen. It helps to draw closer the bands of christian fellowship and a common brotherhood. It helps to make the Crisis more useful and interesting. It makes us to know the saints scattered abroad, strengthens the hope that is within us, and cheers the pilgrims on their way toward their eternal rest. Come, friends, we want to be able to call you by name when we meet all the children in our glorious home.

LEWIS ANDREWS.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Benj. Spaulding.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to acknowledge, with heartfelt gratitude, the reception of a large bundle of tracts, which I received at the Crisis office; another bundle from unknown givers; a donation in money from Sister P. C. Chandler; and another donation from Sister Betsey Newton—all of which I received through the Crisis office. The good Lord bless the donors with the best of Heaven's blessings. While they have watered others, may their own souls be watered, until they become like a well watered garden, or like the chariot of Aminadab. Such deeds encourage my heart; they show me plainly that I have some who sympathize with me, and pray for me, and hold up my hands while I labor.

These donors might, in imagination, see me, serious but not sad, with a light step and a light heart, a staff in one hand and a large bundle of tracts and children's papers in the other, praying as I go, "O Lord, give me strength of body and force of mind; give me wisdom and boldness, faithfulness and tenderness; give me the spirit of discernment, and access to minds; open the doors, the ears, the hearts, and let the truth take effect." I rap; admittance is given. "I have tracts, madam, religious tracts; would you like some?" "O, I can't pay for them." "Well, I give them away."

And thus many receive the tracts and children's papers. In every instance, I add a word of exhortation or instruction, as the case may require; then pray, and retire to the next house. I aim to lead their minds to the great truths of the gospel—the coming of Jesus, the resurrection, the state of the dead, the final destiny of the wicked, and the restitution of the earth to its primitive state. These subjects are interesting to such as are not prejudiced; and when I find a spirit of inquiry awakened, I present tracts on those subjects. Thus I labor, day after day. My health and spirits are good, and I enjoy the work.

Called on the brethren at Wareham, and found them firm in the faith. The truth is taking effect there, and I feel encouraged about that place. I am now at Mattapoisett, where I find devoted friends to the Advent cause. Here I propose to hold a few meetings, and then go to Cape Cod. I would say to the brethren there, they may expect me to visit the length and breadth of the Cape; calling upon all, exhorting, reproving, rebuking, comforting and instructing, as opportunity offers; giving lectures in any place where the doors are opened to me, and tracts to all who are willing to read. Brethren are requested to make some effort to get doors open in new neighborhoods.

Now, brethren, what we do must be done quickly. Time is short. Soon He who is to come, will come, and will not tarry. Events transpiring proclaim him near. We have already come down to the day spoken of by Zephaniah:—"A day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, a day of the trumpet and alarm, "when men are pouring out their blood as dust, and their flesh as dung, upon the earth. "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly!" Soon, very soon, will the slain be from one end of the earth to the other, not lamented nor buried; and the cities will be left without inhabitant, and the houses without a man.

Open your eyes, brethren, to the signs of the times, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. Pray for me, that I may be humble, and have wisdom, grace and strength. B. SPAULDING.

Wareham, Mass., Nov. 3d, '62.

From J. Carr.

BRO. GRANT:—I am very much interested in the great work of saving sinners. It is a privilege to be laborers together with God in this great and good work. Oh! that each brother and sister, looking for the speedy return of the blessed Redeemer to set up his everlasting kingdom, might feel the importance of being more heartily engaged in the work of saving sinners from that awful destruction which will soon overtake them.

I thought while reading Bro. Hastings' article on the Christian Publication Society, how easy one or even two thousand dollars might be raised to be expended in publishing tracts, etc.; by each subscriber to the Crisis paying one third of a dollar, and each reader ten cents. Brethren and sisters, we should never miss the amount of money we paid to accomplish this object. Now will we take hold of the matter in earnest? I feel, for one, I will.

Time is short. What we do must be done soon, or not at all. For myself, I feel willing to do what I can, with a shattered constitution. I have felt sometimes that wo is me if I preach not the gospel. I made a great many excuses to the Lord about leaving my home to try to save sinners. Have had many whippings, but I thank the Lord he has borne with me, and I am in the work doing what I can. I have felt the need of tracts to give away, but was not able to buy but very few; and as I did not feel free to ask for them without pay, I have done without, except what few I could pay for. I feel that I have given all for Christ, and although at present I am obliged to work in my shop six days in a week, to pay my honest debts, I do hope before long to be able to spend about all my time in the glorious work of proclaiming the good news of the kingdom at hand. Come, brethren and sisters, now let us make the very small effort, and send in the amount needed, so that all can have tracts to scatter wherever they will do good. Just save a little of that change which you pay for candy, etc., for the little ones. Tell them why you do it, and thus teach them to do good; and before this month is gone, there may be plenty of money in the Lord's treasury to publish the little messengers so much needed in these perilous times. Our work is almost done. If we do not let the Lord have our money, the devil will have it soon. May the Lord give us wisdom to direct in all things. Enclosed is one third of a dollar for myself. Yours in the blessed hope.

North Albion, Me., Oct., 1862.

From Mary F. Athorne.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—"Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ"; for I cannot longer hold my peace, but will praise God for what he has done for me and mine. Through the influence of the blessed Spirit, we have been enabled to join the army of the Lord. It has been five years since we commenced the pilgrim's life, but not without first counting the cost. Therefore we know that tribulation must come with the "hundred fold in this life," but the promise is, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." The past year of our experience has been one of severe trial. Death has entered our family circle. For the first time have we been called to drink of the bitter cup of affliction. He has taken a dear sister; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. She, being reconciled to the will of God, now sleeps in Jesus. We thank God for the christian's hope—the hope of soon seeing the King in his beauty to awake the sleeping saints and change the righteous living, and establish his kingdom under the whole heavens.

I had a foretaste of the good things in store for God's dear children, in meeting with them at Camp Wilbraham. I was greatly strengthened and encouraged, for upon that mountain was "a feast of fat things; a feast of wines on the lees." From that time to this has been the brightest of my pilgrimage, and I will "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

Our privileges are limited. We stand alone. Every word of God is pure. He is a shield unto them that put their trust in him. Occasionally has some one of our preaching brethren visited us, and endeavored to preach the words of life to small but interesting congregations; and as this is a new field and requires much labor, we hope to be still remembered by them and others, knowing their labor will not be in vain in the Lord; and in God's own good time we expect to see a people prepared here for his coming and kingdom. But let us remember that what we do must be done quickly; "for the night is far spent, the day is at hand." Let us therefore "cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light."

We frequently meet with the dear saints in Portsmouth, N. H., and have enjoyed many precious seasons together. The Lord reward them for their acts of love. There are many pilgrims who years ago expected to see the King in his beauty, but were disappointed. They are still enduring hardness as good soldiers, watching and praying, and "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Our hearts have been sad many times within a few years, for death has laid many of the loved ones low. A few Sabbaths ago we saw our dear Bro. Flagg carried to his resting place, to await the "voice of the archangel and the trump of God." But we were comforted with a discourse delivered by Bro. J. Couch, on the "hope of the resurrection." How blessed to know that our loved ones shall come forth from the land of the enemy; and if we are faithful to the end, we shall be with them, and share the glories of the new earth through the merits of our blessed Redeemer.

Elliott, Me., Nov. 3d, '62.

From O. G. Trundy.

DEAR BRN.:—I embraced the Advent views in '54. Although I have had my ups and downs, I feel that the Lord is good. I have been trying to live according to the word of God. It is heart cheering to read your testimonies about contending for and living the truth. Keep up good courage. We soon shall rest if faithful. I will go with you even to prison, if need be, for the truth's sake, and finally share with you in the glory that shall be revealed when Jesus comes.

A short time ago my mind was directed to 1 Pet. 4: 12. It seems to me that this Scripture has direct application to the time in which we live,—the "hour of temptation," which should come "on all the world to try them." Dear brethren, let us see to it that we suffer as christians, and then we shall not be ashamed.

My heart says, thank God for his great and abounding goodness to me. I love to think on words like these—"seek for those things which make for peace," because it brings peace. We have sung,

"I'll suffer now, I'll triumph then,
I'll die for Jesus here." etc.

We may possibly come to that, but if we trust in God it will be well with us.

Brethren and sisters, perhaps the privilege of writing again never will be granted me. I'll try and meet you in the kingdom. I sigh and cry for the abominations done in the land, but, thank God, we shall soon be delivered from them.

Dover, Me.

From Geo. W. Thomas.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I take the Crisis, and find much comfort in reading the letters of the tried and faithful ones who are trying to serve God, by preaching and living upon the glad news of the kingdom of God at hand. Perhaps it may do me good to try, at least, to cheer others, by letting them know that in Holden, dry as it seems to be, there is now and then a green spot, which was watered a few weeks since by a visit from Bro. Grant, who gave a few discourses in his clear and impressive manner, being backed up by the Spirit of truth. The attendance, though small at first, increased each meeting, till the hall was full. Much good was done. Some rose for prayers. The children were much comforted—prejudice was removed from some. Many say they never heard the Bible explained so clearly before. At the close (Sunday eve), the Lord's table was spread, and all who hoped in the Lord were invited to come and partake of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord. About twenty partook. O how solemn! The words of cheer and comfort from our dear Bro. Grant made it the happiest communion I ever attended. Truly the more we try to imitate Jesus, the more we enjoy, for God loves those who are like his Son. I regret Bro. G. could not have tarried longer—hope he will remember and visit us again.

"O how I long to see the day
When all the saints shall stand
On Zion's mount, in bright array,
Redeemed from every land."

Holden, Nov. 2d, 1862.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Fitchburg, Mass., Oct. 25th, 1862, of diphtheria, SARAH, wife of Bro. William Newton, aged twenty-five years, four months and thirteen days.

Thus has Bro. Newton been called to part with one of earth's dearest jewels, and to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate companion. Although her sufferings were very severe, she bore them with that christian integrity which is a true characteristic of the examples of her Savior. About four years ago she experienced religion; and from that time up to the hour of her death, she was one of those that looked forward to the time when He who is her life should appear, and obtain deliverance through a "better resurrection." She was conscious to the last, and thought she should recover until a few hours before her death; when she called her husband to her bedside, as she was fast filling up, and told him she had given up all hope of recovery. She then requested that her two little girls and boy should be brought, that she might for the last time gaze with a mother's affection upon those whom she loved. Her last hours were very happy. She said if it was the Lord's will that she should sleep for a little season, she was fully reconciled to go. And among her last desires were, "Tell mother, weep not for me," and bade her brother and sister prepare a little from this to meet her on the other river shore. Thus with a parting kiss to her husband and children, she bade them farewell, and gently fell asleep in death's embrace.

Her remains were conveyed to Vernon, Vt., where the funeral took place at the residence of the deceased. Eld. Geo. Champlain addressed a large concourse of people on the occasion, and administered comfort and consolation to such as "mourn not as those without hope," from the words of Isa. 25: 8. May God sanctify this affliction to the good of those that mourn, and may her last request to her dear brother and sister be granted her, and the large circle of acquaintances and friends who so deeply lament her loss follow her example, and prepare one and all to meet her in that glad morning,

"Where all is fair," where death no more shall come, and "tears be wiped from all faces."

"Dearest sister, thou hast left us;
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us;
He can all our sorrows heal.
Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When mortality is fled;
Then in heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed."

Northfield, Mass. L. W. COMBS.

Died, Aug. 30th, after an illness of some months, a federal prisoner at Macon, Ga., OLIVER F. STONE, of Manchester, Mass., aged nineteen years.

Our beloved brother was looking for the return of Jesus his Life Giver. He eagerly embraced the truth as it was presented to him, and manifested a corresponding sanctification of life.

About a year since, after a severe mental struggle, he decided to enter the navy. But he had not long been in his new position before his old convictions returned, and he saw the sad mistake he had committed. In his letters he expressed the bitter repentance he felt for his sin. "If Jesus should come and find him bearing carnal weapons, how could he stand before him?" But by the help of God, he was determined not to fight, and his prayer constantly was, "that he might be delivered." His petition was heard; he was taken prisoner, and thus kept from the shedding of blood. Truly the Lord is good to such as trust in him!

Our young brother was "an example of the believers." He sought to order all his life according to the principles of the gospel. Like his blessed Master whose return he so joyously anticipated, he "went about doing good." May we meet him in the resurrection morn, when the crown of life shall be given to all them that love the Savior's appearing. E. A. ANNABLE.

Died, Oct. 12th, 1862, Bro. EDWARD BEALS, of Plainfield, Mass., aged thirty-four years and ten months.

Bro. Beals was a member of the church at Plainfield Pond. By his death we have lost a brother and faithful laborer in Christ. We feel and mourn his loss. We have laid him in his grave, there to wait the resurrection.

A short time before his death he took my hand in his, and after a few moments said, "I want you should preach my funeral sermon. Preach a practical discourse—no doctrine, no doctrine." Then added, "I should be glad to converse with you, but I cannot." Bro. Beals now sleeps in Jesus. He leaves a wife and little son to mourn his loss. Pray God the mantle of Elijah may fall on some Elijah here.

Discourse by the writer, from Jer. 8: 20.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Steamer Gladiator, at Liverpool, from Bermuda, brought sundry reports as to the hostile intentions of Commodore Wilkes, one statement going so far as to say that he blockaded the ports and refused to withdraw his ships on the request of the Governor. He sent boats to the Gladiator and ordered the captain to go on board his vessel. The captain refused going at the time as he was under the protection of the British man-of-war, which ran out her guns and got ready for action. The Gladiator was then allowed to proceed. The matter attracted much attention in England. It is said that orders were issued for the immediate reinforcement of the West India Squadron.

The Army and Navy Gazette infers that Lord Lyons takes a message of some importance. It urges a recognition, and a representation that there is a possibility of an armed intervention on the part of Europe. It thinks neutrality, upon which the government prides itself, is the greatest cruelty to both parties.

The Daily News thinks the Federal cause has never before looked so like success in its essential features. The South is almost at the last stage of exhaustion, while the North is nearly untouched in all its resources. All that European nations have to do is to wait the event, which must be decided by other influences than theirs.

Numerous members of Parliament have been addressing public meetings, referring to America, but they generally refrain from urging a recognition of the South.

There was a revolution in Western Greece. The revolted towns have organized a provisional government. Troops were sent to the scene of the insurrection. Eastern Greece was tranquil.

King Otho of Greece has abdicated the throne in favor of his brother.

ITALY.

Alarming accounts of Garibaldi's health continued. It was even rumored in Paris that he was dead. A Turin telegram of the 22d, however, says he had been removed to Spezzia and bore the removal well.

The 22d, being the anniversary of the union of the Southern provinces to Italy, was celebrated by fetes in all the principal towns. Various popular rejoicings took place, but perfect order was maintained.

Garibaldi has declared that he will publish a manifesto to Europe, containing important revelations.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Nov. 5. A New Orleans letter to the Herald states that Gen. Weitzel's Brigade landed at Donaldsonville on the 25th, and proceeded thence to Thibodeaux, where they had a slight engagement, capturing 200 rebels. Another force was sent to attack the rebels in the rear, under Col. Thomas, and two iron-clad and two gunboats under Capt. Buchanan to Atchafalaya with the 21st Indiana regiment, which he landed at Brashear City, while the gunboats go to destroy the gunboats said to be there. The rebels destroyed all the produce at Donaldsonville prior to the arrival of Gen. Weitzel.

A letter from the steamer Norwich, off Georgetown, S. C., states that the rebel fort was destroyed, and seven rebels killed. Contrabands state that a good deal of sickness prevails at Georgetown, and that a six-gun floating battery was being built at Charleston, S. C.

A ten inch thick iron clad, and also four large cotton laden steamers, were at Charleston, waiting to run the blockade.

The army of the Potomac seems to be progressing very finely in the work of flanking the rebels, but no general engagement is to be expected from the present movements. The enemy will be compelled, as the result, to evacuate the Shenandoah valley, and will probably retire behind the Rappahannock. Whether he can be reached and a blow struck upon his chosen line of defense before winter sets in and the roads become impassable is a problem to be solved.

The Times' Washington special contains the following:

Dispatches of the greatest importance, and which may affect a change in the whole aspect of the war, were to-day submitted by the French Legation to the Secretary of State. An informal Cabinet meeting was held to-day, and an adjournment had to this evening, when it will reassemble at 8 o'clock—Gen. Halleck being present on special invitation of the President. It is believed that decisions of more ultimate importance than any yet made in the course of the war have been arrived at, and will be announced before the end of the week.

The air is pregnant with rumors of military and Cabinet changes. Military changes are positive, and it is believed that certain Cabinet ministers regard these changes as a condemnation, giving them no alternative but to resign.

Washington. Nov. 6. Information from the front this morning is to the effect that Col. Windham, of Bayard's cavalry, had a spirited engagement yesterday at New Baltimore, with the cavalry and four pieces of artillery of the rebel force at Warrenton. Their numbers were about equal to his at the time—say 1500 strong. After a stout resistance he drove the enemy off in the direction of the main army at Warrenton.

Nov. 6—10 P. M. As the particulars of the fight yesterday at Barbers become known, the more brilliant the victory is found to have been.

The battle was fought by cavalry alone, and between the best disciplined troops either can produce. The rebels were under the command of Gen. Stuart, and the Federals under the command of Gen. Pleasanton.

The final result shows that the rebels left 36 dead on the field, and their wounded must have been numerous. Our loss was five killed and ten wounded.

Gen. Pleasanton to-day reports that Stonewall Jackson occupies Chester Gap with his command.

The town of Warrenton was occupied by our troops at three o'clock this afternoon.

Nov. 9. Gen. Pleasanton yesterday in a skirmish with Stuart captured three pieces of artillery, also a Captain, Lieutenant, and five privates.

The Newbern (N. C.) Progress says the story about the rebels at Wilmington organizing negro regiments is untrue, that the distrust of the negro is so great they will not arm them.

The army correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer anticipates a great battle near Winchester. He remarks:

"The Confederate army is supposed to be massed near Winchester, and as its Generals have had six weeks for preparation to meet us, they will unquestionably give us a sanguinary baptism. They were seen in brigades and divisions from the Gap yesterday, and last night their camp fires could be seen for miles and miles away. Our pickets and signal corps have possession of the mountains here, while Gen. Burnside holds Ashby's Gap, ten miles ahead of us. Heavy cannonading in that direction was heard at intervals all day yesterday. The dread note of preparation goes on on both sides, and before many days your corresponding staff may have to chronicle the great and decisive battle of the war. Let the great heart of the North have faith and confidence—its grand army will do its duty, while God directs the storm."

The United States transport steamer Oriole, at New York from Newbern, brings intelligence that an expedition, consisting of 12,000 men, with cavalry and heavy artillery, left Newbern on Wednesday, the 29th ult., partly by land and partly on schooners. This expedition, which is said to be under command of Gen. Foster, comprises all the new Massachusetts regiments, recently sent to North Carolina. The destination of this army was said to be somewhere on Albemarle sound, which seems to be confirmed by the circumstance that a small schooner, which was spoken by the Oriole, in Pamlico sound, on Saturday morning, heard heavy cannonading to the north of Roanoke island. The gunboats Sentinel and Hussar, each armed with two heavy Parott guns, accompanied the expedition.

A recent report relative to clothing states that over a million dollars worth of worthless clothing has been rejected by the examining officers of the army appointed by Gen. McClellan.

There are over 100,000 sick and wounded soldiers in the several hospitals in the country. In New York and neighborhood the number is 20,000.

It now appears that the barque Lauretta, seized and burned by the pirate Semmes, had on board not only British but Italian and Portuguese property protected by consular seals, but which were treated with contempt by the Confederate rover. . . .

These facts will be brought to the notice of the governments interested, and it was reported in New-York yesterday that the British Consul had telegraphed to Halifax to Admiral Milne, who dispatched three British war vessels to look after the Alabama; but the latter part of the report was denied at the Consulate. No action has been taken by the Admiral as yet.

Mr. Seward writes to the New York Chamber of Commerce that the circumstances attending the fitting out of the pirate Alabama in England will be brought to the notice of the English Government.

The field of the last Bull Run battle presents a most sickening scene. The fields are strewn with dismantled gun carriages, caissons, clothing, shot, shell, and the dried mummy like remains of slaughtered horses which appear on every hand. The limbs of the half buried dead are seen protruding from the earth; arms and legs are frequently found upon the surface of the ground, with the muskets and portions of the flesh still adhering to the bones.

New York, Nov. 9. The Herald's special Washington dispatch says Gen. Burnside has been appointed to the position occupied by Gen. McClellan, and Gen. Hooker takes his place. The removal of Gen. McClellan caused great excitement at Washington.

A dispatch from Rockport, Mass., states that the British schooner Boston, from Cornwallis, N. S., for New York, went ashore during the storm last night on Straitsmouth Island, Cape Ann, and went to pieces. All the crew perished.

Rectortown, Va., Nov. 7. A heavy snow storm set in this morning about 9 o'clock, with every prospect of continuing. The weather is cold.

Canadian papers say that in a few months there will be six large tobacco factories in operation in Montreal.

The recent snow storm will delay military operations in Virginia, it is said, for two or three days.

The Wisconsin Conference

Will be held at Sumpter, Sauk Co., Wis., six miles from Sauk city, and nine miles from Baraboo, in the "Pockett," beginning on Wednesday evening, Dec. 3d, and holding over Lord's day following. Eld. J. V. Himes of Boston will be present to aid in preaching. Let us have a rally, and let all come at the beginning. Friends in the surrounding townships are requested to bring a few blankets, as so many may come from a great distance that our beds may possibly be more than filled. Let no excuse keep a single preacher in Wisconsin at home. Let friends come from other States also. The Lord is certainly at hand. We must arouse!

It is expected that Bro. Himes will do the most of the preaching. Churches who have a standing with the conference will send their delegates, and churches who wish to unite, will do the same. Isolated brethren, who wish the sympathy and aid of preachers in the conference may send an epistle to W. Sheldon, Merrimack, Wis. I intend to have an assortment of our best books at the meeting; and Bro. Himes will have a quantity of the "Voice" bound, the Lyre, and other valuable productions. Come with praying hearts. ## O! 'twas Love.

AIR—"Let me kiss him for his mother."

O! 'twas love for me when dying,
And thorns had crowned thy suffering brow,
And in agony when dying,
'Twas love that moved thee now.
The Roman guard there keeping,
In anger pierced thy side,
Close by thy friends stood weeping
When Christ our Savior died.

REFRAIN.

Sleep, Savior, sleep, thy suffering now is over,
Kind friends in silence weep,
Thou hast loved me as none other.

Hear him speak unto his mother—
"Woman, behold thy dying son!"
Then he suffered as none other
When this sad deed was done.
On the cross behold him bleeding,
Kind angels watch around,
The saints are round him weeping,
O! take him gently down.

Then take down the Man of sorrow,
Once poor and lonely stranger here;
Behold on the third day morrow
Again he will appear.
Then for the grave prepare him,
Take from his brow that crown;
To Joseph's tomb then bear him,
And lay him gently down.

Let me look with joy and wonder—
Behold! he comes a conquering one;
Now the Roman seal is sundered,
The mighty conquest's won.
Let me praise him and forever,
With the angels join to sing,
In those bright realms forever
Adore the mighty King.
O! come, Jesus, come; we long to see thy glory
In immortality,
And cast our crowns before thee.

Sketches by the Wayside.—No. 4.

Do you believe in dreams? I must confess that as for myself I place but very little confidence in the sights and sounds of dream-land, yet they are sometimes, I doubt not, given for the purpose of warning, instruction and encouragement. The following is very remarkable, taken from the memoir of Dr. Bond. It might more properly be termed a vision. "Your young men shall see visions." Joel 2: 28.

"About this time occurred a very extraordinary incident in the life of Dr. Bond, which we narrate with great doubt as to the propriety of the publication. He very rarely mentioned it, and never ventured to designate or explain it. Its truth is, however, beyond question. The circumstances forbid the supposition of optical illusion or temporary hallucination. There are those living who testify to such of the facts as were subject to observation, and the memorials of the transaction are yet distinctly preserved in the religious character of sons and daughters of some who were immediately affected by it.

Being on a visit to his father, he was deeply grieved to find the church, which he had left in a state of prosperous activity, languishing, lukewarm, and weak. His thoughts were much occupied with the subject, and of course it was the matter of earnest and frequent prayer. In this state of mind, one morning he was walking over the fields to a neighboring house, when suddenly he seemed to be in a room where a number of people were assembled, apparently for worship. The room he recognized as an apartment in the house of a neighbor, where a prayer meeting was to be held in the evening of that day. Had he stood in the midst of it, he could not have been more conscious of the scene. There was nothing of the dim, or shadowy, or dreamy about it. He recognized the people, noticed where they sat and stood; remarked his father near the table, at which a preacher was rising to give out a hymn, and near the middle of the congregation he saw a man named C., for whose salvation he felt considerable anxiety, standing with his son beside him. While gazing with astonishment upon the scene, he heard the words, 'Go and tell C. that he has an offer of salvation for the last time.' Naturally supposing that the great concentration of mind upon one subject had induced some hallucination of the senses, Dr. Bond fell upon his knees, and besought God to preserve his reason. The scene however continued; it would not disappear or change in any of its particulars. In vain he struggled to dispel it; the voice yet repeated with indubitable distinctness, 'Go and tell C. that he has an offer of salvation for the last time.' Yet how would he dare to deliver so awful a message! For a great length of time he struggled for deliverance from what he considered an illusion.

At length an expedient occurred to him, which he adopted. He had never been in the room in which he was apparently present, when it was used for a public religious meeting. He of course did not know how it was commonly prepared for such occasions. He therefore noted with great care the particulars of the scene. He saw where the table for the preacher, the benches and chairs for the people were placed. He noticed his acquaintance, and where they sat and stood; and when he was satisfied that he had possessed himself of all these details, he said, 'I will go to the meeting, and if I find all things there to correspond with what I now see, it shall be a sign from the Lord, and I will deliver the message.' Immediately the scene vanished, and he was alone in the green fields. With a spirit indescribably agitated he returned home, where he found ladies who required him to escort them a long distance, and it was somewhat past the hour fixed for the meeting when he reached the awful place.

During the day he had freely indulged the hope that on his entrance into the room, his trouble would disappear. He thought he had been the subject of an illusion, the fruit of an excited brain, and that a want of correspondence immediately to be detected between the real scene and the one presented to his disordered fancy, would at once satisfy him as to the morbid character of his morning vision, and release him from the obligation of delivering the terrible message with which he was conditionally charged. When he opened the door, however, he saw again in all its minuteness of detail the morning scene. In vain he searched the room for a variant particular. There sat his father in the designated place; the preacher at the table was rising to give out the hymn. In the midst of the room stood C., with his son beside him. Everything demanded that the message should be given. After the preliminary exercises, he rose and related the circumstances as we have related them, and then going to C., he laid his hand upon him, and repeated the words he had heard. The effect was indescribable. C. and his son fell down together, and called upon God. An awful solemnity rested upon all present. Many cried for mercy, and from that time began a revival, which spread far and wide, the fruits of which are yet seen after many days." M. D. W.

Immateriality.

If the soul is independent and not subject to the material organism, but independent in its acts, how then shall we account for the fact of its always being dependent nevertheless? Now if we reason after the manner of some, and claim relationship with God, by saying that there is a principle in man acting in all cases independent of the organism, and by its nature incapable of improvement because it is divine, and not subject to death; then I would ask, how shall we account for this immaterial soul undergoing such mighty changes under various circumstances? When the man is in full enjoyment of health it is quite active, and may reason out many wondrous things; but as soon as the organism is in an enfeebled state, the soul is equally feeble. And if the soul is divine, it appears to me it should be supernaturally intelligent, and cause the house or organism in which it abides to sparkle and shine like the diamond.

When man comes into this earthly existence, it is found necessary to instruct him in all things: and in proportion to the tuition which he may obtain, is a man intelligent and happy. It is said that the particles of which a man is composed change every seven years. It may be so; but during this continual changing of the organism, always secreting and excreting to provide for supply and waste, why do we always recognize one person by the same means through life? Simply because the form and general appearance is the same. Now in the matter of intelligence, man, when he makes his advent into this life, is entirely destitute of all knowledge concerning his own existence, and for a continuance of life is dependent on others for it. It seems to me if men could be caused to see the entire dependence of the reasoning faculty,—how weak it will become by reason of disease of the body, they would not claim its immortality, but would be led to seek for glory and immortality in a better and more enduring state. And were it true that man did now possess an immortal soul, and at death it separated from the body and went to its reward, then what need of a resurrection of the dead? judgment is already passed upon them, and consequently there need be no judgment day.

Dear brethren, let us hold fast the teachings of the Bible, and ever believe God; and by that means we shall be kept from roving in those fields of Swedenborgian mysticism, or into that fatal garden of Spiritualism, in which is gendered every unclean thing, and where men give loose rein to their passions. But let us seek for glory and honor and immortality, by serving Him who died for us and was raised for our justification and sanctification. Finally, brethren, let us endure the scoffing of this world, knowing that when Christ our elder Brother comes again to earth, we shall be like him. S. F. MATHEWS.

A Word to the Wise.

"And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy. . . . And also upon my servants and upon my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit, and they shall prophecy."

"And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak . . . as the Spirit gave them utterance. Then Peter said unto them, repent . . . and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

We see from the foregoing Scripture that the promise of the Spirit in great power in the last days, was not to man alone, but also to woman; that that promise commenced to be fulfilled at Pentecost; that it was not to be complete in its fulfillment until the Lord should cease to call man to repentance, and that the effects of this pouring out of the Spirit was, "they spake"—"prophesied."

We find also, by consulting the after record of the apostolic church, that woman shared with her lord in the great and glorious privilege of proclaiming the gospel of peace, the glad tidings to all men, as it had been promised she should do; though prohibited indeed from engaging in a certain order of unprofitable disputations, and "usurping authority over the man." And I would ask those who would have this prohibition to make of none effect all the plain testimony (and this is not small in amount) of the word in favor of woman's speaking as the Spirit giveth utterance, in public, etc., according to what rule they do it, and also if they would be consistent in the matter if they should not also enforce that ancient Scriptural requirement, that no woman should appear in public (praying or prophesying with her head uncovered), except she were veiled or muffled?

Sisters in Christ, we behold our privilege, our duty. Let us seek first to be indeed "filled with the Spirit"; then see to it that we "quench not the Spirit," by failing to speak as it would give us utterance. Few comparatively may be called to the "sacred desk;" all may preach. As mothers, sisters, daughters, friend or neighbor, by example, by precept, let us proclaim those truths that are to save all. The time is short at the longest, and now what motives for action, with the end of all things looming up to view, and all the "perils" of that end around us! Let us be entreated by the word of truth, by all the necessity of the times, to "lay aside every weight," whether it be found in the tempers of our mind, or the work of our hand, preparing aught unnecessary for food or raiment; putting away every impediment, that we may glorify God in body and spirit, filling up every hour to him, else it should fail to be said of us in a soon coming day, "She hath done what she could." Your Sister, seeking to know and do the will of God. CAROLINE HILL.

Harmony of the Gospel.

The article of J. Parry, in the Crisis of Oct. 28th, accords so fully with my own views, that I earnestly recommend the re-reading of it. In the closing paraph he says (in effect), harmony in the essential doctrine of the gospel, is all that can be expected in this world.

This is the ground I take, precisely. The Lord enabled me to see this twenty years ago, when (to the praise of his glorious grace let me speak it) I just learned the truth respecting his second coming, and kindred doctrines. Acting on this principle, I have preached these glorious truths to thousands, who otherwise might have never heard them. But for this I should not now have been in the eleventh year of my present pastorate.

I remember well, a few years ago, how some of my brethren, who had swallowed the book whole, were tried with me because I preached as though the people generally could not do that same thing.

Truly I have learned much in eleven years. One thing I will mention. Truths spoken dryly, and coming from a cold heart, are oftentimes rejected; whereas, when preached with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven, are gladly received.

New Hampshire State Conference.

The ninth session of the New Hampshire State Conference was holden at Louden Ridge, Oct. 17th and 19th, 1862. According to previous notice, conference convened at the meeting-house, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and opened by singing the 513th hymn in the Lyre, and prayer by Eld. J. V. Himes. Enjoyed a refreshing season in social worship during the A. M. session. Eleven ministers present. Adj. till one o'clock, P. M. At one o'clock, conference met according to adjournment, but concluded to have preaching rather than a meeting of business; and the ministers' conference was adjourned till the close of the meeting of worship. At the close of public worship, ministers' conference convened according to previous notice. After prayer by Eld. Morse, called for and heard read the minutes of the last ministers' conference. Those present who were called on to report were Elds. T. M. Preble, L. Allen, J. Harvey, E. J. Brown, D. F. Leavitt, S. S. Mooney, J. H. Clark, I. K. Shipman, B. Locke, J. Morse. Eld. John Couch being present, was voted in as a member of conference. Voted to open the State conference of business at 8 1-2 o'clock tomorrow morning. Voted to adjourn to the call of the Moderator.

Saturday morning, Oct. 18th, at 8 1-2 o'clock, State conference met as per vote of ministers' conference, and after prayer, proceeded to business by the re-election of Eld. J. Morse, Moderator; T. M. Preble, Clerk; O. G. Smith, Assistant Clerk; B. Locke, Treasurer. Voted that visiting brethren be invited to a seat, to take part in our deliberations. Called for and heard read the report of the last session. Was accepted. Heard the report of the Treasurer. Was accepted. A committee of three were appointed to prepare business for the conference, viz: I. H. Shipman, O. G. Smith, J. Harvey. Voted to adjourn to the close of the afternoon meeting of worship.

At 10 o'cloc , A. M., another session of the ministers' conference was called by the moderator, to meet at Sr. Harriet Moore's. Opened by prayer by Elds. B. Locke and O. G. Smith. Elds. O. G. Smith, M. Glidden, J. Knowles, and T. W. Piper, not being present yesterday, were now called on to report themselves. Bro. J. Harvey reported C. H. N. Green, J. Morrill, and I. Edgerly, as they were not present to report themselves. Bro. S. Goodhue not being present, was reported by the clerk, he having seen Bro. G. at the Wilbraham camp-meeting. The clerk also received a letter from Bro. G. just after the conference closed, in which he reported himself; but the letter did not reach the conference, it being an hour too late. Bro. B. P. Manning was reported by Bro. Locke; Bro. C. S. Emerson by S. S. Mooney; Wm. H. Eastman by I. H. Shipman. Voted to adjourn to the call of the moderator. Preaching at the meeting-house by Bro. A. Simpson, and in the afternoon by Bro. J. Couch.

After the close of the meeting of worship, conference met, as per adjournment, and after prayer by Bro. Himes, the committee on business reported that they would recommend that the ministerial committee be increased to five, instead of three; and the following Elders were appointed for the ensuing year, viz.: J. Harvey, T. M. Preble, I. H. Shipman, J. Couch, and O. G. Smith. The following request, presented by Eld. J. H. Clark, was read to the conference; after which it was voted that Bro. C.'s request be granted. The following is a copy of the request:—

"To the members of the N. H. State Conference of Adventists:—Brethren, having been a member of your body since its organization, I now wish to be relieved from my obligations as a member of the N. H. State Conference, for the purpose of renewing as soon as convenient more pleasant and beneficial relations with some other religious body, or otherwise, as circumstances require. J. H. CLARK.

Loudon Ridge, Oct. 18th, '62.

Voted, that the time of holding our next session of the State Conference be changed, so as to commence on the second Thursday in September, at 2 o'clock, P. M. Voted, that the minutes of the conference be published in the Crisis and Herald. Voted to adjourn to the call of the clerk. Preaching in the evening by Eld. Himes.

Sunday morning, Oct. 19th, met at 9 o'clock for prayer and conference meeting. Good season. Preaching in the forenoon by Eld. Himes, on the "seven last plagues." The closing part of his address was most deeply solemn and impressive. The speaker and many of his hearers were affected to tears, the house being literally filled with an attentive audience. In the afternoon Eld. J. Couch delivered a very stirring and interesting discourse, founded on Luke 21: 26, 27. In the evening he gave another interesting discourse on the subject of "salvation." Our aged father in the ministry, Eld. Peter Clark of Gilmanton, past his fourscore years, was at our meeting on the Sabbath, took a seat with the brethren in the pulpit, and offered the concluding prayer at the close of the afternoon services. We think during all our meetings of business more than usual harmony and good feeling prevailed, and the meetings of worship were such as to warrant the hope that some good fruit may be gathered in the coming kingdom.

The conference not commencing till Friday at this session, we had no time to attend to hearing reports from the several churches, as at former sessions. May the Lord bless and revive his people throughout New Hampshire, and elsewhere, and prepare us for the coming and kingdom of his dear Son our Savior, Jesus.

"O happy day when wars shall cease,
And ransomed earth be filled with peace;
When sin and death no more shall reign,
And Eden bloom on earth again."

JOHN MORSE, Moderator.

Correspondence.

From P. H. Wait.

DEARLY BELOVED BRN.:—How thankful we should feel for the light which we have from God's sacred word in these eventful times! While the dark clouds of error are yet hanging thickly over the church and world, how carefully and prayerfully should we read, how diligently should we search to understand each sentence, and more especially the sayings of our Lord while teaching the way of life.

"For all they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword." This text has ever seemed a hard saying, and to me an almost irreconcileable one. To-day while reading it over the light burst forth upon my mind in true sublimity. I have ever had the impression that its sense was this: all they that take the sword shall be slain with the sword; and doubtless thousands have held similar views of it. In fact the doctrine of the "immortality of the soul" admits of no other view. Facts teach to the contrary, and show a contradiction of the statement. Very few who take the sword, even on the battle-field, fall by it. Yet contradictions are of little account to a man who claims that man has an immortal soul. You meet him with a "Thus saith the Lord,"—that man is mortal and must perish without a hope in Christ,—and he will try to show you that it is denied in another place; and the one statement only balances the other.

But he who "trembleth at His word" seeks for harmony, nor will he give over until it is found. He who said, "Though heaven and earth shall pass away, my word shall not pass away," hath made no errors.

"Shall perish with the sword." To perish is not to die; even if it was, it would not imply in this case that death shall be caused by the sword. If I say, "He shall die with his friend," it does not prove that his friend shall kill him, but that they should die together. "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Peter says (2 Pet. 3: 10, 12), "The elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." So the sword shall be dissolved and cease to be a sword, and the ungodly man shall be destroyed in that great and awful day. 2 Thess. 1: 8, 9. And all earthly things will perish together. O! let us who have the light walk in the light, so that we shall be counted worthy to escape in that day.

Let him who thinks this text of little or no importance, who is ready to slay his fellow man, reflect calmly on the subject, and see if he can expect to escape divine justice, should he fall in the act.

How beautiful is truth! How sublime are those truths that fall from our dear Savior's lips! The many errors which have crept into our translation, and the thick web of superstition which has been drawn so closely around them, serve only to make them the more beautiful when this veil is removed. They are there,—those immortal truths, immovable as God himself. Let us search diligently for them. "Buy the truth and sell it not."

Baker's Falls, N. Y.

From L. P. Hastings.

"Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong, for I have heard from the Lord God of Hosts a consumption even determined upon the whole earth."

DEAR BRN.:—They tell us the time is at hand when one who will believe the Bible will appear as ridiculous as one would at the present day dressed in the costume of our grandfathers and grandmothers. Well, be it so: the word of God is fulfilled even in the authors of such sentiments. Ah! how strikingly is the picture drawn by the prophets, apostles and Jesus, being filled. It looks sad, yet we can but rejoice, knowing the prophecy is sure, and that word will never fail. It shows we are among the shoals and quicksands along the coast, and soon the "Gospel ship" will land her crew safely on the immortal shore.

I rejoice, but with trembling, when I see some of the old tried sailors leaving the ship, and, casting themselves into the sea, are trying to swim to some fog bank, deceiving themselves with the vain idea that it is the long looked for land which they have so much desired to reach. O! let us abide in the ship, piloted by our unfailing Guide, who knows all the dangers along the coast; and soon

"The land, the land ahead,
Their waiting eyes descry."

Still we send out the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us!" We would gladly hear some of the Lord's watchmen blow the trumpet in this place. We are four and a half miles from Galesburgh, Kalamazoo Co, on the Michigan Central Railroad.

From Sr. S. H. Dennett.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been with the sick for ten months. When the war first broke out, I had a desire to go and take care of the brave volunteers. I prayed Father if it was his will for me to go, to open the way, if not, to hedge it up. I got an appointment to St. Louis. I was there five months. Feeling weary, I went home. But there was more for me to do. Our worthy Governor sent me an appointment, requesting me to go to Evansville, and here I have been five months more. In passing through the hospital, I think the harvest surely is great. I am alone here, or nearly so. I am the only female nurse. I often think, am I subject to like ills as those around me? The patients look for me to attend to their wants, to cheer and comfort them. The surgeon relies on me to attend to his most critical patients. I must be able to make a full report of every minutia. I must dress wounds, blister, cup, bathe, sponge, dress, and finally, every thing I must do, or see that it is done.

But I have other work to do. I have to talk to them of Jesus. Some hear the truth gladly, while others turn a deaf ear. I try to do what I can in my feeble way. Dear brothers and sisters, do not forget me in your prayers. I often say to the doctor, I think the prayers of my venerable father do me more good than any thing else.

While I write this I am sitting by a sick bed, and have to drop my pen every few moments.

From Celia.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—If we are looking for Christ to come in the clouds of heaven soon, can we say with Paul, "I am crucified to the world and the world to me," so that we are ready to meet him? Or are we living at loose ends, scarcely trying to keep our hearts with all diligence as we are exhorted to do? This is a question that should be answered candidly and carefully. What does it avail us to say, I believe Christ is soon coming, if our lamps are not trimmed and burning; if we are not made holy and pure, our sins all forgiven, and we abiding in Christ as the branch abides in the vine, so that we are joint heirs with Christ to that inheritance? Is it possible to be saved under any other circumstances? Then I do not rightly understand the word of God. Is there one among all the pilgrims who can stand in these awfully perilous times without every part of the armor on and buckled on closely, too? It seems to me it will not answer to have any part left off, or any joints in the harness either. We must look out for the fiery darts, or we shall as surely fall as our men in front of the cannon's mouth on the battle-field. O! if it requires only a small amount of grace to stand in these last days, I am mistaken.

But how are we to become crucified to the world? Can a smooth, easy time of it do it? nothing to cross our path to trouble us? Was any one ever crucified in that way? O! but says one, any other trial I could better bear than this. Why do I have so much more trouble than any one else? Why is it? Perhaps some are more easily crucified than others. Perhaps some of us require the furnace to be heated seven times hotter than others. Our Father knows best. If we put ourselves as clay in the hands of the potter, we must look out about giving directions about the process. But, says one, if I only had faith to claim the promises, I could stand it; how can I get it? In no other way than doing as Jude says, "Contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." It does not mean, sit right down and give up to temptation—our easy besetments; no, indeed; it means, set about it in earnest, be determined to conquer or die, just as they are at the seat of war. If we follow our Captain's orders, it is certain victory; all the powers of darkness combined cannot destroy us. But we must keep near enough to the Good Shepherd to hear his voice when he speaks to us, and we are safe.

Perhaps such thoughts as these enter our minds,—it has been some years since it has been said, Behold, the Bridegroom cometh. He may not come for some years hence. Suppose he does not? We may be in our graves before next week, our accounts sealed up to the great day of reckoning. O! let us be careful about this half way of living. A name to live and be dead will avail us nothing in that day when He comes to make up his jewels. May we all be ready, is the prayer of an unworthy sister.

From M. J. Baldwin.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I am still waiting for the Lord Jesus, and expect when he comes to see you all in the kingdom, if we are faithful, for his promise is sure. Paul says, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Now Paul had no expectation of getting his crown at death, for he says, he "shall give me at that day." What day does he mean? At death? No, but at his appearing; at the same time that he gives crowns to all "that love his appearing." Then all that love his appearing will get the reward at the same time.

Now the question is, do we love his appearing? do we long for the appointed time to come when the trump shall sound, and the righteous dead shall be raised, the living changed, the earth with all the works therein be burned up? Let us remember that our works will show; that if we love him we shall keep his commandments. I know there is a large class of christians who tell us that the time of Christ's coming is of no importance. Now with me it is of great importance. All my hopes are centred on his coming. I can find no promise of eternal life only through Christ, at his coming; and they that teach that we shall go to heaven at death, do so without proof from the Scriptures. We are told in Rev. 22: 12, that his reward is with him, and he will give to every man according as his work shall be. We find abundance of proof that the reward is at Christ's coming. Then it is of great importance to us when he comes. O! then let us still pray, "Thy kingdom come." He will come and not tarry; then we shall receive the crown of righteousness, together with Paul and all that love his appearing. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Amen.

How to Forgive.

"Good-bye, grandmother," said young Stanley; "I am going to the market-town, and shall not come home until day after to-morrow."

"The Lord go with you, my dear lad," said the aged grandmother; "but before you go I want to know if you have settled the quarrel with Ned Brooks."

"I have settled it that I shall have nothing more to do with him. He has treated me very badly. I do not intend to treat him badly in return, but I do not intend to have any thing to do with him?"

"Have you forgiven him?"

"I do not intend to do him any harm."

"Remember what the Lord says: 'When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any; for if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.' We are allowed to ask forgiveness for ourselves only as we forgive others. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' It is not safe for us to live a single day without being forgiven; we must forgive others."

"Well, grandmother, I will try to do my duty. Good bye."

The young man went to the market-town. He was busy during the day, and thought but little of what he said to his grandmother. At night, when he came to lie down on his bed, he thought of what she had said. He thought of Ned Brooks and he became angry. He thought of his own sins, and then he felt his need of pardon. He thought of the words of his Lord, "if ye forgive not men their trespasses." He felt that he must forgive Ned Brooks, even though he did not turn and say, I repent. He tried to do it and failed. He then knelt in prayer, and asked for a forgiving spirit, and continued asking till he felt that he could forgive all who had done any wrong to him.

Are you angry with any one? Begin at once to show a forgiving spirit, if you hope to be forgiven of God.—Ex.

The Happy Land.

A PARODY.

Yes, in a happy land,
Not far away,
Soon will our waiting band
Shine bright as day:
Then shall we sweetly sing,
Worthy is our Savior King,
Loud let his praises ring,
Praise, praise for aye.

Earth then a happy land,
Where Christ holds sway;
Now his saints waiting stand
To hail that day.
Oh! we shall happy be,
When from sin and sorrow free.
Lord, we shall live with thee,
Blest, blest for aye.

Bright in that happy land
Beams every eye;
Kept by a Father's hand,
Love cannot die.
Oh! then to glory run,
Be a crown and kingdom won,
And bright above the sun
We reign for aye.

A Bad Temper Overcome.

Edward Norton was usually gentle in his manner, but he had one great fault; he soon lost his temper.

Edward liked to read stories about the great conquerors of the world. His mother thought that he should know the meaning of King Solomon's words, "He that ruleth his spirit, is better than he that taketh a city." So she made him repeat the verse every morning for a week.

One day, as he played with some little boys, a dispute arose among them, and one of them began to laugh at him. Edward grew very red in the face, and his eyes gleamed with anger, and he was about to speak in an angry way, when he suddenly stopped. He thought of King Solomon's words. He had to try hard to keep down his arm, and not speak the angry words he felt.

Edward could not play any longer, but went home, and ran to his mother, saying, "I did it, mother—I did it!" and burst into tears.

If you have such a temper, you may not perhaps do so well as Edward did the first time, but "try again;" and if you sincerely seek help from the Savior, he will assist you by his Holy Spirit. God helped him to overcome his temper, and he will help you if you truly seek his aid.—Reaper.

A Prayer.

When for some little insult given,
My angry passions rise,
I'll think how Jesus came from heaven,
And bore his injuries.

Dear Savior, may I learn of thee
My temper to amend;
And, walking in humility,
May peace my steps attend.

May never falsehood in my heart,
Nor in my words abide;
But may I act the truthful part,
Whatever may betide.

Street Education; Its Fruits.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS AND GREAT FOLKS.

Parents, will you read it? Little folks will you?

A city missionary in an eastern city, visited a man in jail waiting his trial.

"Sir," said the prisoner, tears running down his cheeks, "I had a good home education; it was my STREET education that ruined me. I used to slip out of the house and go off with the boys in the street. In the street I learned to lounge; in the street I learned to swear; in the street I learned to smoke; in the street I learned to gamble; and in the street I learned to pilfer. Oh, sir, it is in the street the devil lurks to work the ruin of the young!"

"Yes, that's it. In the street! Some boys are always in the street. They sleep and eat at home but they live on the street; they seek amusement on the street; they do all the work they have on the street; they get their education on the street; they enter society on the street; and the devil finds and enlists them in his service on the street. Oh, parents, keep your sons off the street! All the means in the world cannot save them if they go much on the street.—Golden Rule.

O! 'twas Love.

AIR.—"Let me kiss him for his mother."

O! 'twas love for me when dying,
And thorns had crowned thy suffering brow,
And in agony when dying,
'Twas love that moved thee now.
The Roman guard there keeping,
In anger pierced thy side,
Close by thy friends stood weeping
When Christ our Savior died.

REFRAIN.

Sleep, Savior, sleep, thy suffering now is over,
Kind friends in silence weep,
Thou hast loved me as none other.

Hear him speak unto his mother—
"Woman, behold thy dying son!"
Then he suffered as none other
When this sad deed was done.
On the cross behold him bleeding,
Kind angels watch around,
The saints are round him weeping,
O! take him gently down.

Then take down the Man of sorrow,
Once poor and lonely stranger here;
Behold on the third day morrow
Again he will appear.
Then for the grave prepare him,
Take from his brow that crown;
To Joseph's tomb then bear him,
And lay him gently down.

Let me look with joy and wonder—
Behold! he comes a conquering one;
Now the Roman seal is sundered,
The mighty conquest's won.
Let me praise him and forever,
With the angels join to sing,
In those bright realms forever
Adore the mighty King.
O! come, Jesus, come; we long to see thy glory
In immortality,
And cast our crowns before thee.

Sketches by the Wayside.—No. 4.

Do you believe in dreams? I must confess that as for myself I place but very little confidence in the sights and sounds of dream-land, yet they are sometimes, I doubt not, given for the purpose of warning, instruction and encouragement. The following is very remarkable, taken from the memoir of Dr. Bond. It might more properly be termed a vision. "Your young men shall see visions." Joel 2: 28.

"About this time occurred a very extraordinary incident in the life of Dr. Bond, which we narrate with great doubt as to the propriety of the publication. He very rarely mentioned it, and never ventured to designate or explain it. Its truth is, however, beyond question. The circumstances forbid the supposition of optical illusion or temporary hallucination. There are those living who testify to such of the facts as were subject to observation, and the memorials of the transaction are yet distinctly preserved in the religious character of sons and daughters of some who were immediately affected by it.

Being on a visit to his father, he was deeply grieved to find the church, which he had left in a state of prosperous activity, languishing, lukewarm, and weak. His thoughts were much occupied with the subject, and of course it was the matter of earnest and frequent prayer. In this state of mind, one morning he was walking over the fields to a neighboring house, when suddenly he seemed to be in a room where a number of people were assembled, apparently for worship. The room he recognized as an apartment in the house of a neighbor, where a prayer meeting was to be held in the evening of that day. Had he stood in the midst of it, he could not have been more conscious of the scene. There was nothing of the dim, or shadowy, or dreamy about it. He recognized the people, noticed where they sat and stood; remarked his father near the table, at which a preacher was rising to give out a hymn, and near the middle of the congregation he saw a man named C., for whose salvation he felt considerable anxiety, standing with his son beside him. While gazing with astonishment upon the scene, he heard the words, 'Go and tell C. that he has an offer of salvation for the last time.' Naturally supposing that the great concentration of mind upon one subject had induced some hallucination of the senses, Dr. Bond fell upon his knees, and besought God to preserve his reason. The scene however continued; it would not disappear or change in any of its particulars. In vain he struggled to dispel it; the voice yet repeated with indubitable distinctness, 'Go and tell C. that he has an offer of salvation for the last time.' Yet how would he dare to deliver so awful a message! For a great length of time he struggled for deliverance from what he considered an illusion.

At length an expedient occurred to him, which he adopted. He had never been in the room in which he was apparently present, when it was used for a public religious meeting. He of course did not know how it was commonly prepared for such occasions. He therefore noted with great care the particulars of the scene. He saw where the table for the preacher, the benches and chairs for the people were placed. He noticed his acquaintance, and where they sat and stood; and when he was satisfied that he had possessed himself of all these details, he said, 'I will go to the meeting, and if I find all things there to correspond with what I now see, it shall be a sign from the Lord, and I will deliver the message.' Immediately the scene vanished, and he was alone in the green fields. With a spirit indescribably agitated he returned home, where he found ladies who required him to escort them a long distance, and it was somewhat past the hour fixed for the meeting when he reached the awful place.

During the day he had freely indulged the hope that on his entrance into the room, his trouble would disappear. He thought he had been the subject of an illusion, the fruit of an excited brain, and that a want of correspondence immediately to be detected between the real scene and the one presented to his disordered fancy, would at once satisfy him as to the morbid character of his morning vision, and release him from the obligation of delivering the terrible message with which he was conditionally charged. When he opened the door, however, he saw again in all its minuteness of detail the morning scene. In vain he searched the room for a variant particular. There sat his father in the designated place; the preacher at the table was rising to give out the hymn. In the midst of the room stood C., with his son beside him. Everything demanded that the message should be given. After the preliminary exercises, he rose and related the circumstances as we have related them, and then going to C., he laid his hand upon him, and repeated the words he had heard. The effect was indescribable. C. and his son fell down together, and called upon God. An awful solemnity rested upon all present. Many cried for mercy, and from that time began a revival, which spread far and wide, the fruits of which are yet seen after many days."

Immateriality.

If the soul is independent and not subject to the material organism, but independent in its acts, how then shall we account for the fact of its always being dependent nevertheless? Now if we reason after the manner of some, and claim relationship with God, by saying that there is a principle in man acting in all cases independent of the organism, and by its nature incapable of improvement because it is divine, and not subject to death; then I would ask, how shall we account for this immaterial soul undergoing such mighty changes under various circumstances? When the man is in full enjoyment of health it is quite active, and may reason out many wondrous things; but as soon as the organism is in an enfeebled state, the soul is equally feeble. And if the soul is divine, it appears to me it should be supernaturally intelligent, and cause the house or organism in which it abides to sparkle and shine like the diamond.

When man comes into this earthly existence, it is found necessary to instruct him in all things: and in proportion to the tuition which he may obtain, is a man intelligent and happy. It is said that the particles of which a man is composed change every seven years. It may be so; but during this continual changing of the organism, always secreting and excreting to provide for supply and waste, why do we always recognize one person by the same means through life? Simply because the form and general appearance is the same. Now in the matter of intelligence, man, when he makes his advent into this life, is entirely destitute of all knowledge concerning his own existence, and for a continuance of life is dependent on others for it. It seems to me if men could be caused to see the entire dependence of the reasoning faculty,—how weak it will become by reason of disease of the body, they would not claim its immortality, but would be led to seek for glory and immortality in a better and more enduring state. And were it true that man did now possess an immortal soul, and at death it separated from the body and went to its reward, then what need of a resurrection of the dead? judgment is already passed upon them, and consequently there need be no judgment day.

Dear brethren, let us hold fast the teachings of the Bible, and ever believe God; and by that means we shall be kept from roving in those fields of Swedenborgian mysticism, or into that fatal garden of Spiritualism, in which is gendered every unclean thing, and where men give loose rein to their passions. But let us seek for glory and honor and immortality, by serving Him who died for us and was raised for our justification and sanctification. Finally, brethren, let us endure the scoffing of this world, knowing that when Christ our elder Brother comes again to earth, we shall be like him.

A Word to the Wise.

"And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy. . . . And also upon my servants and upon my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit, and they shall prophecy."

"And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak . . . as the Spirit gave them utterance. Then Peter said unto them, repent . . . and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

We see from the foregoing Scripture that the promise of the Spirit in great power in the last days, was not to man alone, but also to woman; that that promise commenced to be fulfilled at Pentecost; that it was not to be complete in its fulfillment until the Lord should cease to call man to repentance, and that the effects of this pouring out of the Spirit was, "they spake"—"prophesied."

We find also, by consulting the after record of the apostolic church, that woman shared with her lord in the great and glorious privilege of proclaiming the gospel of peace, the glad tidings to all men, as it had been promised she should do; though prohibited indeed from engaging in a certain order of unprofitable disputations, and "usurping authority over the man." And I would ask those who would have this prohibition to make of none effect all the plain testimony (and this is not small in amount) of the word in favor of woman's speaking as the Spirit giveth utterance, in public, etc., according to what rule they do it, and also if they would be consistent in the matter if they should not also enforce that ancient Scriptural requirement, that no woman should appear in public (praying or prophesying with her head uncovered), except she were veiled or muffled?

Sisters in Christ, we behold our privilege, our duty. Let us seek first to be indeed "filled with the Spirit"; then see to it that we "quench not the Spirit," by failing to speak as it would give us utterance. Few comparatively may be called to the "sacred desk;" all may preach. As mothers, sisters, daughters, friend or neighbor, by example, by precept, let us proclaim those truths that are to save all. The time is short at the longest, and now what motives for action, with the end of all things looming up to view, and all the "perils" of that end around us! Let us be entreated by the word of truth, by all the necessity of the times, to "lay aside every weight," whether it be found in the tempers of our mind, or the work of our hand, preparing aught unnecessary for food or raiment; putting away every impediment, that we may glorify God in body and spirit, filling up every hour to him, else it should fail to be said of us in a soon coming day, "She hath done what she could." Your Sister, seeking to know and do the will of God.

Harmony of the Gospel.

The article of J. Parry, in the Crisis of Oct. 28th, accords so fully with my own views, that I earnestly recommend the re-reading of it. In the closing parapraph he says (in effect), harmony in the essential doctrine of the gospel, is all that can be expected in this world.

This is the ground I take, precisely. The Lord enabled me to see this twenty years ago, when (to the praise of his glorious grace let me speak it) I just learned the truth respecting his second coming, and kindred doctrines. Acting on this principle, I have preached these glorious truths to thousands, who otherwise might have never heard them. But for this I should not now have been in the eleventh year of my present pastorate.

I remember well, a few years ago, how some of my brethren, who had swallowed the book whole, were tried with me because I preached as though the people generally could not do that same thing.

Truly I have learned much in eleven years. One thing I will mention. Truths spoken dryly, and coming from a cold heart, are oftentimes rejected; whereas, when preached with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven, are gladly received.

New Hampshire State Conference.

The ninth session of the New Hampshire State Conference was holden at Loudon Ridge, Oct. 17th and 19th, 1862. According to previous notice, conference convened at the meeting-house, at 10 o'clock, A. The clerk also received a letter from Bro. G. just after the conference closed, in which he reported himself; but the letter did not reach the conference, it being an hour too late. Bro. B. P. Manning was reported by Bro. Locke; Bro. C. S. Emerson by S. S. Mooney; Wm. H. Eastman by I. H. Shipman. Voted to adjourn to the call of the moderator. Preaching at the meeting-house by Bro. A. "To the members of the N. H. State Conference of Adventists:—Brethren, having been a member of your body since its organization, I now wish to be relieved from my obligations as a member of the N. H. State Conference, for the purpose of renewing as soon as convenient more pleasant and beneficial relations with some other religious body, or otherwise, as circumstances require. J. H. CLARK.

Loudon Ridge, Oct. 18th, '62.

Voted, that the time of holding our next session of the State Conference be changed, so as to commence on the second Thursday in September, at 2 o'clock, P. M. Voted, that the minutes of the conference be published in the Crisis and Herald. Voted to adjourn to the call of the clerk. Preaching in the evening by Eld. Himes.

Sunday morning, Oct. 19th, met at 9 o'clock for prayer and conference meeting. Good season. Preaching in the forenoon by Eld. Himes, on the "seven last plagues." The closing part of his address was most deeply solemn and impressive. The speaker and many of his hearers were affected to tears, the house being literally filled with an attentive audience. In the afternoon Eld. J. Couch delivered a very stirring and interesting discourse, founded on Luke 21: 26, 27. In the evening he gave another interesting discourse on the subject of "salvation." Our aged father in the ministry, Eld. Peter Clark of Gilmanton, past his fourscore years, was at our meeting on the Sabbath, took a seat with the brethren in the pulpit, and offered the concluding prayer at the close of the afternoon services. We think during all our meetings of business more than usual harmony and good feeling prevailed, and the meetings of worship were such as to warrant the hope that some good fruit may be gathered in the coming kingdom.

The conference not commencing till Friday at this session, we had no time to attend to hearing reports from the several churches, as at former sessions. May the Lord bless and revive his people throughout New Hampshire, and elsewhere, and prepare us for the coming and kingdom of his dear Son our Savior, Jesus.

"O happy day when wars shall cease,
And ransomed earth be filled with peace;
When sin and death no more shall reign,
And Eden bloom on earth again."

JOHN MORSE, Moderator.

From P. H. Wait.

DEARLY BELOVED BRN.:—How thankful we should feel for the light which we have from God's sacred word in these eventful times! While the dark clouds of error are yet hanging thickly over the church and world, how carefully and prayerfully should we read, how diligently should we search to understand each sentence, and more especially the sayings of our Lord while teaching the way of life.

"For all they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword." This text has ever seemed a hard saying, and to me an almost irreconcileable one. To-day while reading it over the light burst forth upon my mind in true sublimity. I have ever had the impression that its sense was this: all they that take the sword shall be slain with the sword; and doubtless thousands have held similar views of it. In fact the doctrine of the "immortality of the soul" admits of no other view. Facts teach to the contrary, and show a contradiction of the statement. Very few who take the sword, even on the battle-field, fall by it. Yet contradictions are of little account to a man who claims that man has an immortal soul. You meet him with a "Thus saith the Lord,"—that man is mortal and must perish without a hope in Christ,—and he will try to show you that it is denied in another place; and the one statement only balances the other.

But he who "trembleth at His word" seeks for harmony, nor will he give over until it is found. He who said, "Though heaven and earth shall pass away, my word shall not pass away," hath made no errors.

"Shall perish with the sword." To perish is not to die; even if it was, it would not imply in this case that death shall be caused by the sword. If I say, "He shall die with his friend," it does not prove that his friend shall kill him, but that they should die together. "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Peter says (2 Pet. 3: 10, 12), "The elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." So the sword shall be dissolved and cease to be a sword, and the ungodly man shall be destroyed in that great and awful day. 2 Thess. 1: 8, 9. And all earthly things will perish together. O! let us who have the light walk in the light, so that we shall be counted worthy to escape in that day.

Let him who thinks this text of little or no importance, who is ready to slay his fellow man, reflect calmly on the subject, and see if he can expect to escape divine justice, should he fall in the act.

How beautiful is truth! How sublime are those truths that fall from our dear Savior's lips! The many errors which have crept into our translation, and the thick web of superstition which has been drawn so closely around them, serve only to make them the more beautiful when this veil is removed. They are there,—those immortal truths, immovable as God himself. Let us search diligently for them. "Buy the truth and sell it not."

From L. P. Hastings.

"Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong, for I have heard from the Lord God of Hosts a consumption even determined upon the whole earth."

DEAR BRN.:—They tell us the time is at hand when one who will believe the Bible will appear as ridiculous as one would at the present day dressed in the costume of our grandfathers and grandmothers. Well, be it so: the word of God is fulfilled even in the authors of such sentiments. Ah! how strikingly is the picture drawn by the prophets, apostles and Jesus, being filled. It looks sad, yet we can but rejoice, knowing the prophecy is sure, and that word will never fail. It shows we are among the shoals and quicksands along the coast, and soon the "Gospel ship" will land her crew safely on the immortal shore.

I rejoice, but with trembling, when I see some of the old tried sailors leaving the ship, and, casting themselves into the sea, are trying to swim to some fog bank, deceiving themselves with the vain idea that it is the long looked for land which they have so much desired to reach. O! let us abide in the ship, piloted by our unfailing Guide, who knows all the dangers along the coast; and soon

"The land, the land ahead,
Their waiting eyes descry."

Still we send out the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us!" We would gladly hear some of the Lord's watchmen blow the trumpet in this place. We are four and a half miles from Galesburgh, Kalamazoo Co, on the Michigan Central Railroad.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been with the sick for ten months. When the war first broke out, I had a desire to go and take care of the brave volunteers. I prayed Father if it was his will for me to go, to open the way, if not, to hedge it up. I got an appointment to St. Louis. I was there five months. Feeling weary, I went home. But there was more for me to do. Our worthy Governor sent me an appointment, requesting me to go to Evansville, and here I have been five months more. In passing through the hospital, I think the harvest surely is great. I am alone here, or nearly so. I am the only female nurse. I often think, am I subject to like ills as those around me? The patients look for me to attend to their wants, to cheer and comfort them. The surgeon relies on me to attend to his most critical patients. I must be able to make a full report of every minutia. I must dress wounds, blister, cup, bathe, sponge, dress, and finally, every thing I must do, or see that it is done.

But I have other work to do. I have to talk to them of Jesus. Some hear the truth gladly, while others turn a deaf ear. I try to do what I can in my feeble way. Dear brothers and sisters, do not forget me in your prayers. I often say to the doctor, I think the prayers of my venerable father do me more good than any thing else.

While I write this I am sitting by a sick bed, and have to drop my pen every few moments.

From Celia.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—If we are looking for Christ to come in the clouds of heaven soon, can we say with Paul, "I am crucified to the world and the world to me," so that we are ready to meet him? Or are we living at loose ends, scarcely trying to keep our hearts with all diligence as we are exhorted to do? This is a question that should be answered candidly and carefully. What does it avail us to say, I believe Christ is soon coming, if our lamps are not trimmed and burning; if we are not made holy and pure, our sins all forgiven, and we abiding in Christ as the branch abides in the vine, so that we are joint heirs with Christ to that inheritance? Is it possible to be saved under any other circumstances? Then I do not rightly understand the word of God. Is there one among all the pilgrims who can stand in these awfully perilous times without every part of the armor on and buckled on closely, too? It seems to me it will not answer to have any part left off, or any joints in the harness either. We must look out for the fiery darts, or we shall as surely fall as our men in front of the cannon's mouth on the battle-field. O! if it requires only a small amount of grace to stand in these last days, I am mistaken.

But how are we to become crucified to the world? Can a smooth, easy time of it do it? nothing to cross our path to trouble us? Was any one ever crucified in that way? O! but says one, any other trial I could better bear than this. Why do I have so much more trouble than any one else? Why is it? Perhaps some are more easily crucified than others. Perhaps some of us require the furnace to be heated seven times hotter than others. Our Father knows best. If we put ourselves as clay in the hands of the potter, we must look out about giving directions about the process. But, says one, if I only had faith to claim the promises, I could stand it; how can I get it? In no other way than doing as Jude says, "Contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." It does not mean, sit right down and give up to temptation—our easy besetments; no, indeed; it means, set about it in earnest, be determined to conquer or die, just as they are at the seat of war. If we follow our Captain's orders, it is certain victory; all the powers of darkness combined cannot destroy us. But we must keep near enough to the Good Shepherd to hear his voice when he speaks to us, and we are safe.

Perhaps such thoughts as these enter our minds,—it has been some years since it has been said, Behold, the Bridegroom cometh. He may not come for some years hence. Suppose he does not? We may be in our graves before next week, our accounts sealed up to the great day of reckoning. O! let us be careful about this half way of living. A name to live and be dead will avail us nothing in that day when He comes to make up his jewels. May we all be ready, is the prayer of an unworthy sister.

From M. J. Baldwin.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I am still waiting for the Lord Jesus, and expect when he comes to see you all in the kingdom, if we are faithful, for his promise is sure. Paul says, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Now Paul had no expectation of getting his crown at death, for he says, he "shall give me at that day." What day does he mean? At death? No, but at his appearing; at the same time that he gives crowns to all "that love his appearing." Then all that love his appearing will get the reward at the same time.

Now the question is, do we love his appearing? do we long for the appointed time to come when the trump shall sound, and the righteous dead shall be raised, the living changed, the earth with all the works therein be burned up? Let us remember that our works will show; that if we love him we shall keep his commandments. I know there is a large class of christians who tell us that the time of Christ's coming is of no importance. Now with me it is of great importance. All my hopes are centred on his coming. I can find no promise of eternal life only through Christ, at his coming; and they that teach that we shall go to heaven at death, do so without proof from the Scriptures. We are told in Rev. 22: 12, that his reward is with him, and he will give to every man according as his work shall be. We find abundance of proof that the reward is at Christ's coming. Then it is of great importance to us when he comes. O! then let us still pray, "Thy kingdom come." He will come and not tarry; then we shall receive the crown of righteousness, together with Paul and all that love his appearing. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Amen.

How to Forgive.

"Good-bye, grandmother," said young Stanley; "I am going to the market-town, and shall not come home until day after to-morrow."

"The Lord go with you, my dear lad," said the aged grandmother; "but before you go I want to know if you have settled the quarrel with Ned Brooks."

"I have settled it that I shall have nothing more to do with him. He has treated me very badly. I do not intend to treat him badly in return, but I do not intend to have any thing to do with him?"

"Have you forgiven him?"

"I do not intend to do him any harm."

"Remember what the Lord says: 'When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any; for if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.' We are allowed to ask forgiveness for ourselves only as we forgive others. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' It is not safe for us to live a single day without being forgiven; we must forgive others."

"Well, grandmother, I will try to do my duty. Good bye."

The young man went to the market-town. He was busy during the day, and thought but little of what he said to his grandmother. At night, when he came to lie down on his bed, he thought of what she had said. He thought of Ned Brooks and he became angry. He thought of his own sins, and then he felt his need of pardon. He thought of the words of his Lord, "if ye forgive not men their trespasses." He felt that he must forgive Ned Brooks, even though he did not turn and say, I repent. He tried to do it and failed. He then knelt in prayer, and asked for a forgiving spirit, and continued asking till he felt that he could forgive all who had done any wrong to him.

Are you angry with any one? Begin at once to show a forgiving spirit, if you hope to be forgiven of God.—Ex.

The Happy Land.

A PARODY.

Yes, in a happy land,
Not far away,
Soon will our waiting band
Shine bright as day:
Then shall we sweetly sing,
Worthy is our Savior King,
Loud let his praises ring,
Praise, praise for aye.

Earth then a happy land,
Where Christ holds sway;
Now his saints waiting stand
To hail that day.
Oh! we shall happy be,
When from sin and sorrow free.
Lord, we shall live with thee,
Blest, blest for aye.

Bright in that happy land
Beams every eye;
Kept by a Father's hand,
Love cannot die.
Oh! then to glory run,
Be a crown and kingdom won,
And bright above the sun
We reign for aye.

A Bad Temper Overcome.

Edward Norton was usually gentle in his manner, but he had one great fault; he soon lost his temper.

Edward liked to read stories about great conquerors of the world. His mother thought that he should know the meaning of King Solomon's words, "He that ruleth his spirit, is better than he that taketh a city." So she made him repeat the verse every morning for a week.

One day, as he played with some little boys, a dispute arose among them, and one of them began to laugh at him. Edward grew very red in the face, and his eyes gleamed with anger, and he was about to speak in an angry way, when he suddenly stopped. He thought of King Solomon's words. He had to try hard to keep down his arm, and not speak the angry words he felt.

Edward could not play any longer, but went home, and ran to his mother, saying, "I did it, mother—I did it!" and burst into tears.

If you have such a temper, you may not perhaps do so well as Edward did the first time, but "try again;" and if you sincerely seek help from the Savior, he will assist you by his Holy Spirit. God helped him to overcome his temper, and he will help you if you truly seek his aid.—Reaper.

A Prayer.

When for some little insult given,
My angry passions rise,
I'll think how Jesus came from heaven,
And bore his injuries.

Dear Savior, may I learn of thee
My temper to amend;
And, walking in humility,
May peace my steps attend.

May never falsehood in my heart,
Nor in my words abide;
But may I act the truthful part,
Whatever may betide.

Street Education; Its Fruits.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS AND GREAT FOLKS.

Parents, will you read it? Little folks will you?

A city missionary in an eastern city, visited a man in jail waiting his trial.

"Sir," said the prisoner, tears running down his cheeks, "I had a good home education; it was my STREET education that ruined me. I used to slip out of the house and go off with the boys in the street. In the street I learned to lounge; in the street I learned to swear; in the street I learned to smoke; in the street I learned to gamble; and in the street I learned to pilfer. Oh, sir, it is in the street the devil lurks to work the ruin of the young!"

"Yes, that's it. In the street! Some boys are always in the street. They sleep and eat at home but they live on the street; they seek amusement on the street; they do all the work they have on the street; they get their education on the street; they enter society on the street; and the devil finds and enlists them in his service on the street. Oh, parents, keep your sons off the street! All the means in the world cannot save them if they go much on the street.—Golden Rule.

We'll Rest from our Labors.

We'll rest from our labors when Jesus shall come,
When the kingdom's restored, and the saints all get home;
When patriarchs and prophets are raised from the tomb,
And Eden's fair bowers immortally bloom.

We'll rest from our labors when the tumult is stilled,
And the earth with the glory of God shall be filled—
When war and oppression forever shall cease,
And the earth shall be ruled by the great Prince of peace.

We'll rest from our labors soon, soon we shall rest
In the city of Zion, the home of the blest;
Secure from temptation, from sorrow and care,
No sickness, no pain, and no death shall be there.

The Mystery of the Gospel.—No. 3.

"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."—Rom. 1: 16.

The gospel was not all enshrouded in mystery, until revealed to the apostles by the Spirit; but the gospel contained the mystery which when revealed became an important part of the gospel. The gospel consists of the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Christ promised by the prophets. This is evident from the preaching of Jesus and the apostles. Matthew testifies that "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Matt. 4: 23, 9: 35. Mark says, "after that John was put into prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God."—Mark 1: 14. Luke says, "he went throughout every city and village, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God."—Luke 8: 1. Christ says, "I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also, for therefore am I sent."—Luke 4: 43. "He called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases, and he sent them to preach the kingdom of God"; and they went and preached the gospel. Luke 9: 1, 2, 6. The apostles preached the gospel before they understood the mystery; therefore, the gospel comprehends things not contained in the mystery. The apostles preached the gospel before they understood the death, burial and resurrection of Christ; therefore the three facts of the death, burial and resurrection of Christ, do not constitute the gospel. Jesus declared, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations."—24: 14. After his resurrection, he was with his disciples forty days, "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God"; expounding "unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." Acts 1: 3. Luke 24: 27, 44.

The apostle Paul preached the same gospel that the others did, and he preached the kingdom foretold by the prophets. At Ephesus, "he went into the synagogue and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God."—Acts 19: 8. He afterward said to the elders of the Ephesian church, "Now, behold, I know that you all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more."—Acts 20: 25. Before Felix he said, "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets."—Acts 24: 14. Before Agrippa, he used this language: "Now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers." And, "I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come."—Acts 26: 6, 22. At Rome, he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening." Acts 28: 23. Finally, in his letter to the Romans, he uses these words:—"Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God, (which he had promised afore by his prophets in the Holy Scriptures,) concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, who was made of the seed of David according to the flesh." Rom. 1: 1–3.

These testimonies, with others that might be presented, clearly prove that the kingdom of God promised in the scriptures of the prophets, and the revealed mystery concerning the heirship of the kingdom, are the two grand subjects of the gospel, or word of God, proclaimed by the apostles. The prophets foretold the things concerning the kingdom of God; the apostles explained whatever was dark or obscure in those prophecies. If we would therefore understand "the truth as it is in Jesus," we must study the promises of God concerning the kingdom of Christ, contained in the prophets; and then receive with teachable minds the explanation of those promises as given by the apostles; and this we should do regardless of the speculations and glosses of modern commentators. Pursuing this course, we will now consider the promises of the inheritance made unto Abraham.

"Unto thy seed will I give this land."—Gen. 12: 7. "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth; so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land, in the length of it and the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee."—Gen. 13: 14–17. "The same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates."—Gen. 15: 17. "And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger; all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God."—Gen. 17: 8. These are the promises. Now we will let the apostle Paul explain them; bearing in mind that Stephen said, just before his death, that God gave Abraham "none inheritance" in the land, "no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child."—Acts 7: 5. Paul testifies plainly, in the third chapter of his letter to the Galatians, that the promises were made "to Abraham and his seed"; not "to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." "And this I say," he says, "that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect; for if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise, but God gave it to Abraham by promise." The law "was added because of transgression till the seed should come to whom the promise was made";—"a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ." "But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus; for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. 3: 16–29. In Romans 15: 18, Paul says that Christ was a "minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers." And we learn by the letter to the Hebrews, that Christ was "the mediator of the new testament," or covenant, which he confirmed by his death. 9: 15–17. Now as Christ did not confirm two different or separate testaments, it follows that the promises made to Abraham are what Paul calls the new testament,—called so in relation to the law, which being made old by the death of Christ, was ready to vanish away, and because of its being newly brought into force. Heb. 8: 13, Eph. 2: 15, Col. 2: 14. Paul, in his explanation, said not a word about the land of promise being typical of heaven above the skies; nor is any such explanation given in the writings of any of the apostles, or the record of their preaching. There was, therefore, no such mystery concealed in the promises to be revealed; and he who gives such an explanation, adds to the word of the Lord, and perverts the gospel of Christ.

It is evident, then, that when God promised to Abraham and his seed the land in which he was a stranger, he meant precisely what he said; and as Paul testifies that Christ, with all baptized into him, is the seed, it follows that all the land lying between the river of Egypt and the river Euphrates will, in the world, or age to come, be given to Abraham, Christ and the saints, for an everlasting possession, and will constitute the territory of the kingdom of God. So let it be. In the next, we will consider the promise concerning the throne of David. J. W. Niles.

What is our Estimate?

What will we labor for? That which we prize or value. What will we suffer for? That which we love and appreciate. Yes, we often see men and women laboring assiduously, early and late, month in and out, scarcely allowing themselves proper time for sleep, in order to gain what they prize or value. But, say some, we are obliged to be thus diligent, in order to secure comfortable food and raiment. Then you prize comfortable food and raiment? But I must have these in order to sustain this life. Yes, because you value this life; and this is right. But will not a truly great mind value things which are of the most consequence? Great minds estimate little things. And what earthly blessing can compare with eternal life? Think, if you can, of a comparison. I must confess myself unable to find one. A second says, I exert every nerve and sinew to benefit my children, frequently doing violence to myself physically to advantage them; and oftentimes these children manifest weaknesses and follies incident to human nature, which pains me sorely; but I struggle on and on, throwing the largest mantle of charity over them I can possibly make of their good qualities, hoping they may be constrained by the blessed Spirit, in answer to earnest and agonizing prayer, to "overcome evil with good."

But why all this extreme physical exertion and mental anguish, endured perhaps without a murmur or complaint? Because you love, you value, you set a high estimate upon your children. And thus it is with all which we highly prize. We put forth efforts while hope remains of securing the same, whether it be palatable food, agreeable clothing, a pleasant home, our children's interest, or whatever we really appreciate; we shall find our efforts are in the direction of what we value. Now if we are desirous of knowing where our heart's deepest interest lies, we may know in a great measure by our own efforts. What are we willing to labor and suffer for? Is it for Christ and his cause? If so, we love it. Says one, the providences of God have so circumstanced me, I have no choice; incessant physical labor is mine, whether I will or not; consequently my time is very limited for devotional exercises and outward assistance to the cause of Christ. Very well. Says one, "he is great who does the best he can under the circumstances."

You recollect inspiration compares the church to a human body; and do you not know there are some organs quite as necessary to vitality which are not as conspicuous as others? How long would a man live without heart and lungs? Well, you may be to the church, with your one talent, in your adverse circumstances, what the heart and lungs are to the man! Do you not know that the richest avenue to spiritual prosperity is prayer? An avenue impossible to close only by one's own hands. Do you know that a human being can live just as well without heart and lungs as a church can without prayer—deep, agonizing prayer? It is true human wisdom can use the arts and sciences to preserve the dead body unoffensive, and even cover and adorn it with the clothes and jewels worn in life! Yet there is no life—the vital has fled. So with a church. They may have a magnificent house for worship, most gorgeously furnished—an educated ministry—silvery toned music; indeed, all the paraphernalia kings could ask, without a particle of spiritual life. And is it not to be feared the professed religious world are fast approximating this state of things; maintaining a splendid form without the power? But to the point.

Have we a right estimate of heavenly blessedness? Just as soon as we lose this appreciation, we cease to labor as formerly, and of course backslide. The nearer we approach Heaven, the more clear and lucid our views will be of what is promised to those who walk uprightly. Well, says one, I am conscious of not appreciating these things as formerly, and I do not feel like laboring for that I cannot appreciate; but I desire to be saved, and what is to be done? Something you have left undone, and self-examination must convince you what that is. We may learn many important spiritual lessons by a consideration of temporal ones. Have you never had some articles purchased for your use which you did not really know how to appreciate; and some friend who was well acquainted with the same had proved its utility and durability for years, explained and talked it over until you were encouraged to appreciate it also, and in due time proved this friend's testimony true, much to your own convenience and satisfaction? If inspiration uses a tiny insect to teach us lessons in spiritual things, why may we not use our experience in temporal affairs for the same purpose?

I do not know of more efficient means to regain this appreciation, than by associating much with those who do properly appreciate them, and hear them talk about the goodly land, redeemed from the curse, bringing forth its verdure and beauties spontaneously—the New Jerusalem,

"Illuminated by the Lamb"—

its streets of sparkling gold—the health of its inhabitants—a company so numerous as to exceed the numerical calculations of humanity; all entertaining the highest emotions of love and heavenly friendship for each other, never think of uttering a complaint against each other, or impugning each other's motives. Yes, go where you can, hear what estimate is put upon these things by those who are having the most experience in them, and thus be induced to learn and love their value.

I presume you are "sleepy," for I doubt not we are nearing the fourth watch, where our Savior forewarned us relative to spiritual lethargy. Then let us beware!

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER SEVEN.

X.—Mortals in the Kingdom of God.

Those who conjecture that mortals, as well as immortals, are to dwell in the kingdom of God, do greatly err, for inspiration has put its veto on this theory.

1st. If mortals enter the kingdom of God, they must be unholy mortals, for all the holy mortals are to be changed to immortality at the resurrection.

2nd. Christ said, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God; . . . he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John 3: 3, 5. If this birth signifies conversion, unconverted mortals cannot dwell in the kingdom of God. If it signifies a birth to immortality, it excludes all mortals from the kingdom. Without this birth to holiness, or to immortality, none can enjoy the kingdom. With a birth to holiness, we shall be entitled to a birth to immortality at the coming of Christ;—so no holy mortals can enter there in a mortal state.

3rd. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God."—1 Cor. 15: 50. That is, mortal flesh; otherwise it would exclude even Christ. Paul is here contrasting mortality with immortality, and is simply affirming that mortality "cannot inherit the kingdom." This excludes all mortals. To evade the force of this argument, it is said that mortals can dwell in the kingdom without inheriting it; yet the same theologians locate a class of prophecies in the kingdom which represent Israelites and Gentiles as inheriting the land, as in Ezek. 47: 13–23.—"Ye shall inherit the land, . . . ye shall inherit it, . . . and this land shall fall unto you for inheritance. . . . Ye shall divide it by lot for an inheritance . . . they shall have inheritance . . . ye shall give him his inheritance." Thus error blindly clips its own wings; in trying to destroy this argument, it results in destroying the location of their chosen prophecies.

Again, it is said that "flesh and blood" signify the carnal nature. Well, let us try this: if carnal nature cannot inherit the kingdom of God, it must be disposed of before entering there; and if disposed of before entering, immortality will be given at the Advent to all who have overcome carnal nature. Thus it is like "jumping out of the frying pan into the fire" to attempt an evasion of the declaration that mortality "cannot inherit the kingdom of God." We read, "Thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book" (Dan. 12: 1); and "whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 15. The whole human family are here included,—all of those whose names are enrolled, will be "delivered," while all others will be destroyed, leaving no undelivered mortals.

There is no third class. Our names are all either written or are not written in the book of life—there are no unwritten ones left. W. Sheldon.

Habits.—Like flakes of snow that fall unperceived upon the earth, seemingly unimportant events of life succeed each other. As the snow gathers together, so are our habits formed. No single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change. But as the tempest hurls the avalanche down the mountain and overwhelms the inhabitant, so pernicious habits, brought together by imperceptible accumulation, may overthrow the edifice of truth and virtue.

The Duty of Christians in the Present Crisis.

The following, from the pen of H. Grattan Guinness, was furnished us by G. C. Colson. It was published in "The Herald of the Kingdom and Age to Come."—Ed.

(Concluded.)

Before concluding these remarks on the practice of our Lord and his apostles, I must notice the objection which some would raise here to the effect that our Lord in the case of the Centurion, and Peter in the case of Cornelius, did not condemn the warlike character of their profession. The whole weight of this argument rests not on any approval manifested by our Lord and his apostles, but simply on their silence in these cases. Can we argue that Christ and his apostle approved of every thing they did not by words condemn? Can we argue that they approved offensive warfare (which was the principal character of that waged by the Roman army in which Cornelius and the centurion served), from the fact of their silence on these occasions, when on other occasions they so emphatically condemn even the resistance of evil in self-defense? Surely not. Perhaps it will be said that Cornelius continued in the Roman army after his conversion. But this cannot be proved. The Scriptures are silent on the matter.

Perhaps the case of John the Baptist, and the soldiers who came to him, occurs to you as an objection. I would remind you that even if it could be shown that John approved of the profession of these soldiers (which cannot be), his conduct can be no example in this particular for christian imitation, seeing he was under the law. I may add that it was not until the church became utterly corrupt that she relinquished the position maintained by our Lord and the apostles with respect to war. The primitive christians refused to fight with human enemies. The testimonies against war borne by Polycarp, Maximilian, Marcellus, Justin Martyr, Tatian, Clemens of Alexandria, Origin, Tertullian and others, might be quoted in proof of this. There is not a record to be found in writings sacred or profane of the existence of a christian soldier during the first two hundred years of the church's history. Subsequently to this, however, with the introduction and increase of flagrant corruptions in christianity, the profession of arms among christians so called became by no means uncommon, and has continued so to this day.

Hollow therefore is the argument for human bloodshed, which some adduce from the practice of warfare by certain christians at the present day. We have already learned from history how and when the practice commenced among the professors of the name of Jesus. It is simply a part of the general declension of early love and piety long openly manifested by the church of Christ. And what does the argument amount to? Merely this. Good men fight. Therefore good men may fight. As well might one argue—good men sin. Therefore good men may sin.

The characters of Colonel Gardiner and Headly Vicars, can no more justify the christian in engaging in war than the character of Pascal or Fenelon can justify a christian being a member of the church of Rome. Surely there is no need to say more against such an argument. One thing, however, ought to be noticed in connection with this: that our Lord's words concerning the experience of those who take the sword have been strikingly fulfilled in many of the cases often quoted. How perished Colonel Gardiner? With the sword. And how Headly Vicars? With the sword. And so with thousands of other christians, so called, who have dyed their hands in the blood of human enemies on the field of battle; and oh! how such will wonder and blush at themselves on entering the perfectly peaceful presence of that blessed One, who, being full of grace, acted towards his enemies in infinite mercy; on entering that presence stained with the surging strife and burning passions of the scene of human carnage. Many a martyr has departed from scenes of bloodshed, to be with Christ at his coming; but the dying moments of such have been characterized by the endurance from their enemies of injury and death. They have died not in the fearful struggle with their foes, but like their Master, and like Stephen, praying for their murderers: "Father, forgive them!" "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." They fell asleep at peace with God and man. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace";—in the deepest sense,—peace.

In conclusion, I beg you, dear brethren, to remember two things especially, which I have shown in this letter.

1st. That submission to the powers that be, which the Lord requires from his people, does not include active co-operation with these powers, much less the obligation to draw the sword in their defense. If it does, the apostles themselves yielded not this submission. Did they actively co-operate with the Roman government? Did they draw or would they have drawn the sword in its defense? It is no use to argue that the obligation is changed by the superiority of the government under which we live to that under which the apostles lived; for the word of God says nothing about the obligation of christians to defend human government in such cases. It requires from the christian in every case (without any regard to the character of the government) neither more nor less than simple submission. And

2d. That while the Lord requires from his followers obedience to magistrates, he also requires disobedience to them in cases in which their commands are directly contrary to his own, which I have shown to be the present case; for while earthly rulers command you to take up arms against your fellow men, the Lord commands you to love your enemies, to refrain from strife, to follow peace with all men, to be meek, merciful and gentle toward all men, not even to resist evil treatment from any man, to be a peacemaker, and, in short, to deal with others in the gracious way in which God has dealt with you.

On this last point, viz., that of dealing with all others in grace, on the ground that God has so dealt with you, let me entreat you to weigh carefully and well our Lord's words in the parable of the wicked servant (Matt. 18: 23–35);—"O thou wicked servant, shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow servant, even as I had pity on thee?" Do not, I again entreat you, hide yourself from the clear and searching light of the divine commands, under the wretched shelter of arguments drawn from mere expediency. Do not say, what will become of us, if we so act, or, what will become of the country if christians act so? Obey God, and he will take care of the results. Do not bring forth, as multitudes do as an argument for defensive warfare, the statement that the first law of nature is self-defense. Remember there are two kinds of self-defense. The kind which never does any injury to your fellow man, and another kind, which does him injury. The latter is forbidden to the christian, and that defensive warfare being of the latter kind is thus prohibited. Do not say, other nations will never act on these principles of love and peace; if ours were to try and do so, it would become a prey in the attempt. I know that other nations will never act so, nor will yours; no matter what is their profession of national christianity,—it will continue to act as the world of which it forms a part acts, until the millennial coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Till then wars and rumors of wars will continue. Not till then will nations beat their swords into ploughshares and learn war no more. But this does not abolish or either alter your individual responsibility to carry out the principles of love and peace. Every one of us shall give an account of himself to God.

Do not say it is impossible to live according to these principles in such a world as this. God commands it. Our Lord and his apostles and thousands following in their steps have done it, and so should you, dear brethren, no matter to what shame, inconvenience or suffering such a course might subject you. Do not say, no man who loves his country could refrain from arming in its defense when it is attacked. Say rather, no christian who loves his Lord would for the sake of his country or anything else disobey his Lord's commands by drawing the sword, when he bids him sheathe it,—by going to war, when he bids him walk in love, grace and mercy towards all men; and do not excuse yourself from obedience to these precepts on the ground that they are part of the higher christian morality; this being the strongest reason why you should obey them. No doubt christian morality is higher than mere natural or even Jewish morality. "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5: 20. But the highest christian morality is that which is binding on every christian.

If any objection which I have not here mentioned should occur to you, I refer you to the word of God for its answer. O! how deep a need has the professor at the present time of a better acquaintance with that word. Surely a clearer understanding of it would have kept multitudes of them from the warlike, carnal course they are at present pursuing; especially should those of them who are teachers of that word more closely and prayerfully study it, that they may not, while professing to preach the gospel of peace, violate its principles by preaching war and advocating the christian's engaging in the work of human slaughter. Fearful is the position taken by the professed ambassador for Christ, who thus publicly defends destroying men's lives. Let such consider what spirit they are of, and for the future conform their conduct more to the principles, precepts and practices of Him who came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them.

And now, my dear brethren, that I have as I believe laid before you God's truth upon the subject of the christian's duty in the coming crisis, not to draw the sword or in any way advocate the cause of war, but rather to bear testimony by word and deed for the gracious and peaceful principles of the religion of Jesus, I conclude, leaving this matter to be settled between your own soul and God. "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." James 4: 17. Yours faithfully and affectionately in the Lord,

H. Grattan Guinness.

"One Thing Thou Lackest."

"I know I ought to be a christian." Well, what is to hinder? "O, I can't be baptized: and right here, too, where every body knows me! What would people think who know me, if I should take such a step? And I don't believe it would benefit anybody besides myself, if I did."

Thus spoke one, some time since, who was doubting and trembling at the threshold of mercy, yet unwilling to comply with this one requisition. Duty was plain, yet eternal life was sacrificed rather than take up this cross nobly and cheerfully, and go forward;—eternal happiness risked to avoid a momentary pang;—listening to the Savior's mild but sad reproof, "One thing thou lackest," and then going away sorrowful.

There are many who do thus, and lose their right to the tree of life as a consequence. Those who seek life must agonize to enter in at the strait gate. Life is worth everything, and everything must be hazarded to obtain it. Those who are willing to pay so much, and no more, will lose everything. God will save none but those who are in earnest. The agonies of Christ in Gethsemane, and on Calvary, must not be lightly esteemed. Was our salvation bought with the travail of his soul? and shall we be listless and indolent, and trust to his mercy to save us? Shall the Man of Sorrows give his life for us, and we not show our gratitude by a cheerful compliance with all his wishes? That bloody sweat, that crown of thorns, that purple robe, that bitter cross, those awful hours on Calvary, that cry of anguish, which went up from the suffering One, those silent hours in Joseph's new tomb,—all this, and more, should leave no hesitancy in the minds of those who know their duty. If this is not enough, who will bring salvation?

God will try every one in his own way. There will be some test; and no excuse will exempt us, no artifice will turn it aside. It is all staked upon that, and we can not as we choose. And why should we fear the test? Why shrink from declaring what great things God has done for us? What is the use of indecision? We know it must be done; why not do it? Suppose we are unworthy, and people know it. Suppose they have no confidence in our professions. What then? Does that affect our duty? And are we sure that we shall benefit nobody? We are to plant and water; God will give the increase. O, you poor, trembling one, if you could just once give up all, and go forward, without fear, you would never offer such an excuse again. Listen to the experience of one who, six months ago, was without hope, wandering on the dark mountains of doubt; and who, when God gave light, for a long time hesitated on this very point; who could do anything else, but be baptized—never; but who at last said, "Just as I am, O Savior: lead thou, and I will follow." Read it, and remember, this is the experience of every christian, and may be yours.

"Those sacrifices look infinitely smaller than they did a month ago, when I promised to make every sacrifice Christ required. This morning, when I awoke, it seemed as though I had none to make. O, how much happier I am than at that time! And I fully believe the time may come when the rifices are no more sacrifices, but deep, *un*utterable joys. Already I am beginning to see how small the ills of life look when viewed from Calvary."

Would you have this experience? Would you know that joy which the world cannot give, and cannot take away? Arise, then, and follow the great Leader, though it be unto death. May God help you who are halting between two opinions to choose the better part, even life eternal.

Maine Quarterly Conference.

Met at Wayne, Oct. 30th, at 2 o'clock, P. M. Good interest. Jesus is with his people. Eve., preaching by H. B. Sevey, from Mark 14: 8,—"She hath done what she could." Good interest. Friday morning met for prayer and conference. The Spirit of the living God is with us. Afternoon, preaching by Bro. Abbot, from Job 19: 25, 26. Eve., preaching by Bro. Howard, from 2 Tim. 4: 8. An interesting and profitable discourse; showing how Paul had fought a good fight, and kept his faith; while many fight bad fights, and thereby lose their faith. Saturday morning, met at 8 o'clock to hear the reports of the preaching Brn. Opened with prayer by Bro. Sevey. In the absence of the Sec., appointed G. W. Bailey Sec. pro. tem. Preaching Brn. present—York, Read, Sevey, Howard, Hanscomb, Wight, Abbot, Kennedy, Oaks, Dudley, and Haggett.

Bro. York made some remarks in regard to the mission cause. Felt it to be a great work before him; should do what he could; prospect good. Bro. Read reported from South Gardiner and Richmond—prospect good—one converted—backsliders returning. Bro. Abbot, Hartford, went to Franklin—large attendance—truth on the gain. Bro. Howard, Rome—large congregations. North Albany, Bryant's Pond, visited some old and some new places; a few brethren good. Starks, a few brethren in the spirit of Christ. Madison, quite an interest; on the whole an earnest feeling to hear the truth. Bro. Wight, Augusta; interest has about died out the last two years, but they begin to be more interested. Bro. Kennedy, Hallowell; sick, and doing nothing in the vineyard of the Lord. Bro. Hanscomb reports a better state of things in Augusta. Health good—able to work all the time. Bro. Oaks reports being in new fields mostly; the mass have turned away their ears from the truth, and are turned unto fables.

Met at 9 1-2 o'clock for prayer and conference; some testimonies; a good meeting. At the close two rose for prayers; backsliders came home to Father's house; one made a clean breast of it; cleared all the old rubbish out of the way; had been believing and fighting the truth for a long time. Met again at 1 o'clock; preaching by Bro. Reed, from Jer. 8: 20, showing the seed time and harvest. The good seed sown when the bad was sown—in the beginning; hoeing time under the law; harvest at the close of the gospel dispensation. Related some of his own experience. Interesting discourse and good attention. Met at 6 1-2 o'clock. Preaching by Bro. York, from Ezek. 33: 6. A stirring discourse, well suited to the times in which we live, full of instruction and comfort, in prospect of speedy deliverance.

Sunday morning, met at 8 1-2 o'clock; had some heart-cheering testimonies. At 10 o'clock preaching by Bro. Howard, from Jer. 30: 7. Jacob's trouble. 1. There is to be a day of tremendous trouble. 2. Jerusalem the sample. Preaching at 1 o'clock by Bro. Howard, from Matt. 24: 30. 1. Compares Matt. 24 with Luke 20, and challenges the man to harmonize them, if they refer both exclusively to the fall of Jerusalem. 2. The nature of those signs. 3. The nature of the sign of the Son of man. Num. 24: 17. A star the sign of his first, the sceptre of his second advent. Met at 6 1-2. Preaching by Bro. York, from 1 Tim. 4: 10. A discourse upon immortality only through Christ, followed by remarks at some length from Bro. Howard, and others.

Thus closed the conference with the hope of soon meeting upon the earth made new, where partings will be known and feared no more.

Maine Mission—Books—Tracts.

To correct any misapprehension, and to quiet the fears of those who might think the ministry to be engaged in speculation on books and tracts, it may be duty to give a word of explanation. We buy such books and tracts as we think most proper to circulate, put them into the hands of our missionaries, to sell at the same rates they are sold in the same amounts at the offices where they are published. We buy them at wholesale, as low as we can. All money received for them by the missionaries is credited by them to the mission, and all money paid out is charged to the mission. If any profit arises out of it, then it helps pay for tracts given to the poor, and the indifferent, which our missionaries give according to their discretion. Thus all our preachers, and all others interested in the circulation of tracts, can be supplied whenever they come in contact with the missionary, at the lowest rates; so they may circulate them as cheaply as possible, and at the same time aid the mission in giving tracts where the people have not enough interest to buy them, and circulate many books where they would not take the trouble to send for them. In this way, we can do the most with the least means, and keep the work moving; while those fearful that Advent ministers will speculate on such publications, may spend their money for fancy goods and trinkets, until they learn the better way.

The Discussion.

Our discussion with Eld. I. R. Gates, in the City Hall at Concord, has been one of much interest and profit to the saints and the people generally. We commenced Wednesday evening, Nov. 5th, and continued ten successive evenings; each session occupying two hours, each speech twenty minutes. Large, attentive, orderly and intelligent audiences were present to listen, and many were convinced we have the truth, and are now rejoicing in the light. They were astonished at the clearness and simplicity of the truth, and wondered they had not seen it before. The saints were greatly strengthened and comforted. The following were the questions debated:—

1. "Do the Scriptures teach that man is wholly mortal?"

2. "Do the Scriptures teach that the wicked will suffer eternal misery?"

Seven evenings, or fourteen hours, were spent in the examination of the first question, and three evenings, or six hours, on the second. We shall not be able to give this week the various points examined, but will notice some of the sayings of our opponent.

The following points were admitted:—"Man was made of dust." "A spirit has a form." "The breath in man and beast are the same." "God may have a form." "I believe man died for his sins." "Death is a decomposition of the component parts of a man." "Man dies when the spirit leaves the body." "The name includes the whole man." "The spirit cannot act without an organism." "I admit man is mortal." "I admit the accountable being comes out of death and hades." "When the spirit is out of man he can't breathe." "I admit Christ is the Son of God." "The spirit is not organic." "The spirit is a part of the man." "God raised Jesus." "The spirit cannot be perfectly happy out of the body." "Death is a decomposition of the being." "I admit it takes soul, body, and spirit to make a whole man." "I admit a part of man is mortal." "Man is an animal." "By Adam's fall, he lost the continuity of life." "If the spirit is out of man, he is dead." "I do not say the spirit is absolutely immortal."

"The wicked sinned in body as well as spirit." "The penalty is not executed till the day of judgment." "Physical death is the result of moral death." "The jail physical and moral evil, and the devil, are to be swept into the lake of fire." "The wicked will die, soul and body, in the lake of fire." "Physical death is the consequence of sin." "God in mercy sent Adam from the tree of life." "The last day fires will sweep all the sinners from the world, as did the flood." "All the wicked die the second death with the devil." "The spirit is unclothed between death and the resurrection." "The angels are pneuma." "If I hurt a man, I hurt his body." "The sinner's wages is the second death."

Assertions made—but not proved.

"Good people go to the New Jerusalem at death." "Angels were cast down to hades." "Man's spirit is born of God." "Demons are the spirits of men." "The spirit goes where the Savior is." "Paul is in the New Jerusalem." "The spirit is not organic." "Tartarus is the grave." "The wicked spirits of men are where the fallen angels are." "Man has an immortal spirit in him." "The lake of fire is now in existence." "The spirit in man is an intelligent entity." "Jesus says he raised himself." "Satan will not burn up, because he is an Angel,—immaterial." "The spirits of the wicked are in hades." "The spirit is finer than electricity." "Immortal is defined to mean happiness and eternal existence." "God made a soul within you." "Wind is a metaphor, when from ruach." "The spirit is conscious in hades." "If man has a spirit he is not all mortal." "Satan uses the spirits of wicked men in Spiritualism." "The only way to meet Spiritualism is to show that they are the spirits of wicked men." "Wicked spirits go to sheol." "God made a spirit and put it into man." "The spirit Jesus commended to his Father went, and preached to the spirits in prison." "Christ's spirit went to paradise." "The soul has the feeling." "The spirit has taste." "Tophet represents the endless suffering of the wicked." "The spirit being immaterial, it must continue eternally." "The angels that sinned were cast down to the infernal regions." "The wicked will live eternally because their resurrected bodies are made out of the new earth." "The wicked are raised after the earth melts." "Death means conscious suffering." "The undying worm represents the conscience." "Death means perpetual conscious existence." "Tartarus, sheol and hades are all one." "The wicked will be cast into the infernal regions, after the thousand years." "Death in no instance means unconscious existence." "The lake of fire is a chasm." "Hades gives up the spirits." "Death is not an extinction of life." "The spirit is immortal in the sense of continued existence." "Angels were cast down to sheol." "The spirit is the real inner man,—the ruach, or pneuma." "We are at home in the body, means the spirit." "If eternally condemned, must live eternally." "Death is not cessation of existence in any sense." "Spirits of wicked men go to hades." "There is fire in sheol." "Paradise is in the unseen world." "Zoe life means happy life." "Continued conscious being in the lake of fire is the punishment of the wicked."

The following are some, among many, relative to ourself and the doctrine we advocate:—"Eely," "quibbler," "chameleon." "slimy," "deceive the people," "unfair," "obtuse soul," "blind as a bat," "poor creature," "modern Sadducee," "slimy gauze," "poor, little, materialistic creature," "Jesuitical trickery," "terrible man," "kill or convert him," "abominable system," "miserable, stupid theory," "miserable stuff," "moral stench" "God, frown on that God-forsaken doctrine," "the most ridiculous thing Satan ever concocted," "abominable stuff," "stupid delusion," "makes Diabolus laugh all over his hellish face," "not got as much wisdom as the old heathen, who believe in heathen gods," etc., etc. We leave the reader to make his own comments.

Another Discussion.

We have arranged to hold another discussion with Eld. I. R. Gates, commencing Monday evening, Nov. 17th, 7 o'clock, at the Meionaon (Tremont Temple), Boston, and to continue on the evenings of the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 24th, 25th, and 26th. Questions. 1. "Do the Scriptures teach that man has a spirit that will be eternally conscious?"

2. "Do the Scriptures teach the entire and endless extinction of the conscious being of the wicked?"

Eld. Gates stated publicly, when referring to ourself, "I will either kill or convert him." We can say that after a ten days' trial under his tuition, at Concord, we are further than ever from being converted, and so far as we could learn, the same is true of all our brethren and sisters in C., while a goodly number, who believed with Eld. Gates at the commencement of the debate, are now satisfied that he is wrong, and that our position is in harmony with the Bible. He says he is called to sweep "materialism" from the churches in New England, and to make them believe in the doctrine of eternal misery. We apprehend that his is not an easy task.

The New Revelation.

This is certainly an age of new things—"new government," "new religion," "new laws," "new revelation," new Lord and new theology, new Bible, and new every thing. The enemy of all righteousness knows full well that "the end of all things is at hand;" hence he is trying to divert the minds of the people from the real, personal coming of Christ, to a spiritual appearing, in order that they may be unprepared for his advent. He is working with great success at the present time, through various mediums; some of the best of whom are professors of religion.

The following is from a discourse on the "New Catholic Church," by E. B. Freeland, delivered in New York city, Oct. 19th '62. When speaking of the New Religion, he says:—

"This law of Analogy is now, for the first time, unfolded by the Science of Universology, which has grasped the principles that underlie all sciences and all realms of thought and action, and demonstrated the method by which they are repeated in all departments of the universe. Prior to this discovery, owing to the uncertain nature of the intuitional word of God or revelation through the intuition, the real meaning of the Bible could not be obtained, with any degree of certitude. . . . Into this confusion comes a New Revelation, proclaiming a New Word of God, a sure guide to the people out of the darkness which encompasses them. A revelation which uncovers the secrets of the universe, and lays open the very mind and thought of God. A Word which interprets, so plainly that they cannot be misunderstood, the hieroglyphs of the universe, the laws of order and of harmony existant in creation, and points to man the method of securing in his own creations, in government, in social arrangements, in religious organizations, in commercial systems, in all organic institutions, the same harmony which exists in the works of nature around him. In this revelation he grasps the key of his own destiny, and stands the arbiter of his own fate. It puts him in God's stead, and bids him to a higher work than the Lord of the past has achieved—the upbuilding of a divinely beautiful Social Order, in which the clash of opinion shall flee before the light of scientific knowledge, and humanity shall advance in perfect unison to the glories of a life in which poverty shall be unknown, disease abolished, contention stifled, death vanquished; and to whose enjoyments endless ages shall minister."

This "New Revelation" comes from the demons, and is to be the standard of truth in the New Government, about to arise. This supersedes the Bible, being, in their estimation, a great improvement on that old Book. This new way is claimed to be the only one by which men can be saved. Read the following:—

"It is in our power to lay hold on the hidden secrets of the Infinite, and lift this sorrow-stricken world, which, from the beginning until now, groaneth and travaileth in pain, to bliss beyond conception and unspeakable joy. But there is no way known under heaven, whereby men can be saved except through the New Revelation, the Word of God, as revealed through the Science of Universology. . . . So comes to them now the New Revelation, the latest and last Word of God, and his complete scheme of order and harmony. . . . We establish thus a New Religion, based on a New Gospel, made known through a New Revelation—the inspired Word of God, his Will, as promulgated in his laws, existing everywhere in the creation, and now through the Medium of Universology. This Revelation opened to, and discovered by, the last developed and crowning faculties of the mind, is the culminating and final announcement of the will of God concerning man. The wide universe holds no secret which will not open to its knock; the heart pants after nothing which this will not grant to him that searcheth diligently. The purpose of man's creation and his destiny stand clearly unfolded before him in this final communication, which God gives as his guide in the magnificent and endless career which stretches before him. The instruments of the Creator are placed in his grasp. His plans are laid to open man's eyes, and he is bidden forth to the establishment of those harmonic institutions in human society, which are in consonance with the principles of divine order, as displayed in the universe around him.

In obedience to this mandate, in compliance with this Revelation, the New Catholic Church is inaugurated, to promulgate the New Gospel; the gospel of plenty to the poor; of healing to the sick; of comfort to those who mourn; of release to the afflicted in body, or in spirit; of resurrection to the dead; of life to the living; and of an endless eternity of bliss, upon this beautified and glorified earth, to the pure in heart, the devoted seekers after truth, for truth's sake and humanity's."

Men are now well prepared to adopt this last great delusion. The popular religion of the day is so unlike what Jesus taught, and what the apostles preached and lived, that the world have lost all confidence in it. It is so proud, selfish, covetous, and worldly, that Satan finds no difficulty in getting up a system of religion in which he advocates better things than are practiced by a large proportion of the professed followers of Christ. He weaves in many of the rich truths of the Bible, promising great blessings to those who embrace the "New Religion." As there are thousands upon thousands almost starved for something better than what war ministers and fashionable church members exhibit, they become easy dupes of Satan's last system of beguiling. May the Lord keep you, dear reader, from all the wiles of the adversary.

Distress and Perplexity.

The last signs to be seen before the coming of Christ are crowding in upon us. How can people be indifferent, when so near the great day of the Lord. How faithfully has our Savior warned our world of his approaching advent. Sign after sign has appeared in successive order, as laid down in the Scriptures, till we have come to the last waymarks before the great event foretold by the prophets—the setting up of God's everlasting kingdom. He who sleeps now does it at the risk of losing eternal life. Blessed are those who are found watching. Dear reader, will you be one to receive the blessing?

The following shows that the waves of "distress and perplexity" have struck the continent of Europe. Says a correspondent of the London Times, Oct. 25th, when writing from the cotton districts:—

"During the month which has passed since my last letter, the distress has gone on widening and deepening in a steadily increasing ratio, nor are there any signs at present of that worst point being reached when we may look for a hand. Every day, as stocks of cotton are exhausted, mills are closed and new hundreds are reduced to destitution, and each week new relief committees spring up in all parts of the district and cry for assistance.

It is not very easy to make an exact estimate, but, as far as I can ascertain, there are at the present moment some 150,000 operatives in the distressed districts entirely out of work, and 130,000 on short time; in other words, we may say that the duty which the Boards of Guardians and relief committees are at present endeavoring to perform, or at least were last week, and it daily grows greater, is to supply the wages of 215,000 factory workers and their families, amounting, according to the usual calculation, to £117,000 which is now totally lost. This, of course, is exclusive of the various tradesmen and handicraftsmen dependent on the cotton manufacture who are now beginning to make their appearance on the books in large numbers. Probably it is an under estimate to say that the 215,000 hands would represent 430,000 persons."

With regard to the future, the correspondent says:—

"But when we come to look at the additional calls which are likely to be made on them, the necessity for increased subscriptions becomes more striking still. It is impossible at present to calculate these exactly. Of the 400,000 operatives engaged in the cotton manufacture, perhaps 100,000 may continue to find employment during the winter, but at the very least we must look forward to seeing 300,000 hands, or 600,000 persons, entirely dependent on charity for subsistence, and that, too, in a very short time. I believe this is a very low estimate, but I wish to steer clear of anything like exaggeration, and I take no account of the mechanics and others who depend entirely on the mills, and who are thrown out of employment along with the hands, still less of the calico printers, colliers, and other such callings who are affected by the stagnation of trade, and if it continues much longer may become applicants for relief."

Mr. Cobden said in a late speech at Manchester, England:

"We are now suffering from the operation of a commercial blockade—suffering in a way which could not be matched by any other calamity conceivable in the course of nature or the revolutions of men. I cannot conceive anything that could have befallen Lancashire so calamitous, so unmanageable, so utterly beyond the power of remedy or the possibility of being guarded against, as that which has happened in the case of the present commercial blockades. Here is a case which cannot be dealt with; it is unmanageable; it is so grave, so alarming, and presents itself to those who reflect upon what may be the state of things six months hence in such a hideous aspect, that it is apt to beget thoughts of some violent remedy."

Says the New York Independent:—

"A glance all round the world to-day shows us a singularly extended state of war, rebellion, disorganization, distress, and uneasiness. Nor can any satisfactory conjecture be made of any road through all these troubles to a peace beyond."

This looks like the approach of "distress of nations with perplexity."

The Thousand Dollar Tract Fund.

Number Four.

A brother wrote from Indiana some little time ago:—

"The books and tracts you sent to me to sell and pay for, have been all sold or given away; but as yet I have not received for them $5.00, all told, of the brethren to whom I sold them. Times have been so very hard, most of them have been unable to pay for them. With some I think there is a lack of energy to try to pay, that seems to pervade this section of the country. But we do not expect any thing else of that class of people in these last days. I am sorry this is so, for you certainly need your money to live, and if I had wealth, I surely would have paid for them out of my own pocket long before this. Just as soon as times get better, and the war closes, I will try to get the money to send to you. But at present it is out of the question, for we have many poor families to support, whose fathers have gone to the war. Your books here have done much good. They have opened the eyes of many. May the brethren who have the means, assist you to publish more of them."

This letter is but a sample of many, and illustrates to some extent the condition of the preaching brethren in the west. I suppose I have hundreds of dollars worth of books scattered over the country in this way. I have, however, one consolation amid it all,—the books have done good, and that was the object had in view when they were published. Another thing I am able to thank God for, the books are paid for, and the printer has not been cheated out of his earnings. And so I take all this loss joyfully, knowing that with God's blessing nothing will be lost. A brother writes me: "You say your books, sold on credit, have done good. May be they have, but it cannot be to those they were sold to." Not so fast, brother; there are plenty of brethren who have bought books, whose will to pay is as good as yours, but how to perform they find not. But I am glad to see your name standing on the list of liberal donors to the Tract Fund, for this will relieve some preacher from the unpleasing necessity of going without books and tracts, or feeling that he is in debt and cannot pay for them.

One great object of the efforts of the Christian Publication Society is, to equalize these burdens somewhat for the future, and thus enable preachers to have books and tracts to scatter freely, without becoming indebted. We wish to give them books and tracts, and let them do all the good they can with them, and then they can refund all they are able to collect, and so purchase more. Bro. E. F. R. wrote awhile ago:—

"I received two of your tracts from a friend of mine. They treated of the final resurrection. After I got through reading them, there were some of the members of the W—— church who wished to read them. I let them take them. Their father, who was a minister, got hold of them and burned them up. * * * I am very poor at present, but I feel that your tracts ought to be sowed pretty thick. If you wish to see the truth prevail over the land, I wish you would send a pretty good package of your tracts out here. By so doing you will greatly oblige your most humble servant."

Some tracts were sent in response to this call, from the tract fund of H. L. H., and it is to be hoped some of them will escape the flames, and do good to those who read them. A preacher writes from New Jersey:—

"I could have distributed thousands of pages of tracts, with the prospect of doing great good. I have never known sectarian tracts to do what these always do,—open the way for religious conversation. I have seen good fruit from the seed already sown; and here in this place I could circulate your tracts with great success, especially those twenty-four page tracts, written by yourself and D. T. Taylor; also any referring to the second coming of Christ. 'The Ancient Landmarks,' 'Olive Leaves' and 'Important Questions,' are worth their weight in gold. I wish I had twenty thousand of them."

Tracts were sent to the writer. Bro. G. writes from Vermont:—

"There are but very few in this town who are looking for the second coming of our Lord, and fewer still who dare speak it boldly. We are among various churches, and if we go to meeting we are not permitted to speak of the signs of the times, or the coming of our Lord. We are poor mechanics, and want to do something for the cause of our Master and the good of our fellow men; and what to do we know not. We are poor and unlearned men, not of high birth, but we do want to know what we should do, as we are all living here in this little village. We feel as though there was something we might do, if nothing but distribute tracts. If you will send some tracts, we will find readers. You know what little preachers we want better than I do. Send such as you think best."

Some of the "little preachers" have been sent, and we trust they are doing their work. Sister F. E. H. writes from Connecticut:—

"Dear Christian Friend:—Having seen your kind offer to furnish tracts free to those unable to buy, I have taken the liberty to send for a few to distribute among those who shall call to see me. I have been an invalid for nearly four years; am confined to my bed, with no prospect of recovery, or ever being any better than I am now. Deprived as I am of the precious privilege of laboring in the vineyard of the Savior, I have thought I might, through your kindness, scatter a few seeds by the wayside, which may by the blessing of God prove instrumental in calling souls to Jesus. His love has been so great, his dealings so kind, his promises so precious, I wish to add my humble offering, to cast my feeble mite into his treasury. I would send some more money for the tracts, but it is all I have, and I am not able to earn anything. Please send what you can spare; and may He who has said even a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple shall not go unrewarded, bless and reward you for this kindness to his suffering child."

Thus have letters been pouring in and piling up ever since the regular publication in the "Tract Column" was discontinued. And there are scores of them on hand, and still they come. Letters written by the trembling hand of old age, and by those feeble and debilitated, prostrate on the bed of pain; letters written by the ignorant and poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom; letters from those who are alone, far from any of like precious faith; from preachers who go forth weeping, bearing precious seed, burdened with the word of God; and from all these sources comes up one cry for light, MORE LIGHT; bread from heaven, water from the living fountain of truth, tidings of the kingdom that is to come, some light that shall guide their feet through the dark and perilous scenes of time's concluding days. Shall these beseechings be in vain?

"Shall we whose souls are lighted
  With wisdom from on high,
Shall we to men benighted
  The lamp of life deny?"

No, this must not be so. Let us then be diligent, and work with a will while time yet remains, and soon the dim tapers with which we cheer the darkness of earth's gloomy night, shall pale their rays before the gushing splendors of that eternal day which shall burst on all the sky. In that day, when the Sun of righteousness shall rise with healing on his wings, may we find that those who have sown in tears shall reap in joy; and that the bread thus cast upon the waters, shall be found again after many days.

Notes by the Way.

After attending three campmeetings, I thought I would accept some of the invitations to visit certain of the little camps of the brethren, and help them in their manual exercises, which are so necessary for a soldier to practice, to understand the best way of defense. First camp was Savoy. Found them holding on, but much confused, having been taught by some unskillful young officers certain exercises that profit but little, and leaving the weightier matters. This, like some other places, has got too many officers for so few soldiers; and not being well disciplined, strife for the mastery has led to a confusion of tongues, without an interpreter. But all classes came out to hear, and but few wild ejaculations to what I have witnessed eighteen to twenty years ago. When we switch off the main track, we are led by another influence and spirit, which is not easily entreated, but is boisterous, censorious, and full of denouncing, judging others by their half crazy brains. This I have been familiar with, and was able to give some of the brethren some good advice in treating such cases. Let it as nearly alone as possible. It will have its run.

North Adams. Found the brethren recovering after a stampede caused by a confusion of ideas some time ago. Some of the old wounds begin to heal, after being dressed properly by Dr. Fox. Had a good time preaching. Quite a number shouldered their arms. I think Satan will have his match there yet.

Pownal, Vt., for the first time. Found a few ready to endure and hold on to the dispensational truth taught them by Bro. Batcheldor for a number of years; but since he went to Rutland, the popular opposers have had an influence to draw in another direction. I preached once; had good attention, and was kindly treated by the intended Pastor, another Bro. Batcheldor, a fine young man, educated in the science of this age, and inquiring after truth. God bless him!

Hoosic. Found this company united, ready to work when they knew what to do. We commenced immediately. The first round shelled out some of the civilians, who took exceptions to our careless shots, and thought we did it on purpose to hit them; but we could not stop to apologize for hitting those in our range. We had brought along Bro. Daniel's long ranger, that aimed directly at the kingdoms of this world; and we knew if it was fired off as he had cited it, it would hit every kingdom this side of the kingdom of God, and the ball would stop there and not short; and those sympathizing with the leading influences of this world would growl at any careless shooting. But we knew we were on the old marked line of the prophets, for we saw the stakes they had set up. We went back to the Temple, and took our Savior's line of prophecy, and found the desolating power that Daniel spake of, and Jesus told them to look out for it as being near. Run the line down, and found that Jesus came out at the same point—the kingdom of God. This gave the company of soldiers new courage to fortify still stronger here, and a good number commenced anew to work, throwing up breastworks, and became quite bold. After four days' work, some acknowledged their backwardness in the good cause, asked for mercy at the hand of the government of heaven, and commenced using their weapons of warfare again. Others rose for prayers, wanting to enlist. Some wanted to be baptized. The battle got fairly under way, and I had to leave for Hebron on Saturday, very reluctantly.

Found a good congregation. Had a blessed time tumbling whole loaves into the camp, which were acceptable and devoured by most of the congregation. Some grumbled, of course, who had been fed on milk from their youth up, and wondered how these soldiers could eat so heartily of such solid, coarse food; but they could eat better than they could work, on account of two officers having a contention, which always will prevent the soldiers from doing duty.

On Monday, a letter came to me stating that the good work of enlistment was still going on at Hoosic, and I was wanted back there immediately; I had an impression not to accept of the invitation offered for the following week, and was all ready to comply with the request. On returning found the interest had increased, and much of that bitter opposition had caved in.

Saturday, Peter's command was obeyed (Acts 2: 38), and I baptized eleven, some who had opposed immersion. Many came out on Sunday to hear things they never heard before. The Lord sent the truth home to many old hopers' hearts, and some sinners. The young soldiers worked well. One had to confess her awful state of mind since the Wilbraham campmeeting. She went over a hundred miles to try to get religion; got into a tent as a seeker, when some one commenced jabbering; she did not know what he said or meant; and such an awful feeling came over her she had to leave the tent, confused, and has remained so ever since, until Saturday, Oct. 11th, when she publicly told the above story, which was impressed on her mind to do every time she attempted to speak. The singular appearance of Mary caused alarm in the family when she confessed the above facts. God gave her a blessing, and she was free to tell me about it and wanted my opinion. I told her it was the spirit of mesmerism, which was opposite to God's Spirit, and they cannot go together; and she had tried it once, and I hoped she would ever shun it, after this. I was aware that was the leading power in one or two tents, and thought of exposing it, but hoped it wouldn't spread. This is the third case of the kind I have met with since the campmeeting. These worshiping gifts, tongues, etc., have generally ended in the flesh, or spiritualism. Many are ignorant of this fact who are honest; but I have had an experience in these same strange, wild, mesmeric groans, that will make a christian shudder with cold chills. If these gifts are down here, most of them are spurious. By their fruits they can be known and felt, as in the present case; but this child is out clear, thank God, and in her right mind, and spoke in meeting last evening and all rejoiced to see the change.

I have hesitated about telling the brethren publicly where God's work is going on, for fear some tare sown will take advantage of the notice and start with some message or gift and put a wild gourd into the pot, and the children will cry out, "Death in the pot." Cannot something be done to muzzle these sharks that live on others' hard earnings? as one brother said, he dare not publish much that would be encouraging to the church on this account. Have we got into Egypt among this devilish, miraculous spirit, that it has become necessary to hide our babies? If so, the second

Moses will soon appear. I hope to put this Jannes and Jambres spirit to death forever. Paul tells us it would come in the last days, and here it is among us.

The brethren in Hoosic wish me to say they choose to invite such as they want to come among them. The devil has been chased into the woods, and they don't want him baited out again.

Factory Point. Found Bro. Gleason all alone in his faith, four sons in the war, and the whole community down on him. Poor old shoemaker! he needs a kindred spirit occasionally. I am the second preacher that ever called on him. I preached to a few in the town hall Tuesday eve., just as well as I could. They looked wild. Some ran out—a few ate heartily. Two rappers appeared sick at their stomach. I gave another appointment for the next evening, telling them I did not want professors of religion to come out, but they might invite the rabble and outsiders, which had the effect to get a meeting house open a short distance. This is a place given to idolatrous sectarianism, and needs bombarding. It is thirty miles south from Rutland, on the Western Vt. R. R. Bro. Gleason wishes the preachers to call on him as they pass that way. They will find a good home and a place to preach, if he is notified. Direct to Alonson Gleason, Factory Point, Vt.

Rutland. Found the soldiers weak and but little armor on. They have suffered from treacherous opposers, and some now from ten cent men that are worth their thousands. While a few get up an interest, these pretended loyalists seem interested until there is a call for help to pay expenses. For a week's effort, the $20.000 men pay 50 cts; the $6.000 pay 10 cts.; the $1.000 pay $1.00,—the poor laborer pays the rest. Can God save such stingy hypocrites and idolaters? Such are dead lumber, acting as church emperors or dictators. Many churches have this curse to drag along.

Low Hampton, at Father Miller's old homestead. Had a good time preaching. Some good warm-hearted christians there. Here, too, are some civilians that steal their preaching, worth from ten to twenty-five thousand dollars, and pay from ten to twenty-five cents once a month, when they are dunned. God pity them! they are having their treasure here only.

Poultney. Had a blessed time. Some ten to fifteen new ones started. Bro. Burnham had been laboring there eight or ten days, clearing the fish place, and caught a few; but had to leave, and I had a better chance to swing the net. Bro. Carpenter is competent to take care of the little ones. He is among brethren that put their shoulders to the wheel and help in every way they can.

Rutland again—with Bro. Edwin. Had a good time preaching upon faith that has works to stand upon. Bro. Burnham backed it up, giving out his appointments for two or three weeks on condition of the co-operation of the church, which looked more favorable than the week previous while I was trying to clear the fish place for his long seine. I expect to hear he has cast the net on the right side and got a great haul.

Springfield. Had a good time in the new little chapel with Bro. Cook's people. The truth took effect as in Hoosic. Sunday eve., over twenty rose to start anew for the kingdom, and some sinners that never had started. The signs of our times took a deep hold of many. Bro. Cook feels well this morning going to his day's work to earn something to support the cause. He preaches for nothing, and pays more to support the meetings than any other Bro. in the church. But few here help support the cause they profess to love. Some are poor, others have small souls, as in other places; with a great farm, two or three hundred sheep and other stock, but can't pay a dollar a month for preaching. But we must be as patient as possible a little longer. We shall not be troubled with them in the kingdom, if God's word is true. Blessed are the poor, for ours is the kingdom of heaven.

Another New Tract, by Eld. S. S. Brewer.

"THE TWO-HORNED BEAST."—This is an excellent tract for distribution at this time, when so many are interested in the examination of Rev. 13th. Much has been said and written about the "two-horned beast." What is it? is the general inquiry. I have long wished to write a tract on this subject, but found no time. Bro. Brewer has done it in a neat tract of 24 pages. I wish he had made it 36 pages, so as to contain a greater amount of historical testimony, although this gives much. I regard this, in the main, the true exposition, and calculated to aid many who do not know the truth on this point. I think he errs in confounding the woman with the beast, on page 9. Also, that where he ascribes power to the Pope, it should read Popedom. The several typographical errors will doubtless be corrected in the next issue. Let us circulate this tract, brethren.

I. C. WELLCOME.

THE MARK OF THE BEAST.

The following is taken from a Roman Catholic called "The Child's Catholic Piety, a manual of devotion," under the signature of † JOHN, Archbishop of New York, page 357:—

"Then the Bishop, making the sign of the cross on the forehead of each of those who are to be confirmed with holy chrism, * and calling him by the name he has chosen, says:—

'[N.] I sign thee with the sign of the cross, and confirm thee with the chrism of salvation in the name of the Father ✠ and of the Son ✠ and of the Holy ✠ Ghost.'

After which he gives the person confirmed a slight stroke on the cheek, saying at the same time, 'Peace be with thee.'"

Please read the above extract in connection with the 13th page of my tract on Rev. 13. S. S. BREWER.

* Chrism is an admixture of oil and balsam, used by Roman Bishops and priests in confirmation, baptism, ordination, and extreme unction. S. S. B.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in West Poland, Me., Sept. 3d, of diphtheria, EMMA L., daughter of John M. and Cordelia A. Allen, aged five years, eight months.

Emma was a very interesting child, full of life and beauty, therefore she had won the affection of all with whom she was connected. Her parents deeply feel their loss, but the words of promise in Jer. 31: 16–17, prove to them a source of consolation.

The following lines were composed for the mother:—

I had a little rose-bud given me;
I nursed it daily, carefully, and well;
I thought to keep it long, but suddenly
Untimely frosts swept o'er it, and it fell.

Five golden summers came and went away,
Winters succeeding rolled their courses round;
Five years I kept my rose-bud from decay,—
Death snatched it then, and laid it in the ground

O cruel death! I saw thee come by night
And steal my darling from a mother's arms;
Thou art a tyrant, thus my child to smite—
For me thou hast no pity and no charms.

But yet know this, thou canst not always hold
My little Emma in thy cold embrace;
Again I shall mine arms around her fold,
Again I shall behold her face to face.

JAS. A. LIBBY.

Died, in Augusta, Me., Saturday, Oct. 4th, 1862, Miss SUSAN A. RAY;—and, Oct. 18th, Mrs JANE RAY, wife and daughter of Bro. Benjamin Ray.

Thus, in the space of two weeks, our brother has been bereft of his wife and one of his daughters. Sister Ray was one of the church's brightest jewels, always conspicuous for her attention and care for the needy and distressed, as many can testify. Both wife and daughter left indubitable evidence of their acceptance with the Savior. Hence our Bro., and other friends of the deceased, are not left to mourn as those that have no hope.

The writer attended the funeral of the wife, and endeavored to comfort the surviving friends with the hope of the gospel.

ISAAC WIGHT.

Died, at Ship Island, July 26th, 1862, WILLIAM R. HARRIS, of Ashfield, Mass., aged twenty-three years.

William enlisted in the 31st Reg. Mass., Vols., was taken sick at the South, and died of consumption. He was the only hope of his widowed mother. In his last moments he sent word to his mother to put her trust in the Lord. The writer strove to improve the occasion in a discourse from 1 Thess. 4: 13, 14, to an attentive audience on Christian Hill, in Colerain, Mass. May the good Lord bless the mother. J. K. BELLOWS.

Died, in Plymouth, of diphtheria, August 13th, 1862, SARAH E., aged twenty-three years; and, August 7th, GEORGE W., aged eight months,—wife and child of Asiel Bennett. Also, August 8th, HANNAH M., aged nineteen years; August 15th, JOSEPH E., aged seven years; August 22d, CHARLEY P., aged nine years, and August 25th VESTA A., aged sixteen years,—children and grand-children of Chester and Cynthia Gray.

Was it our heavenly Father's will
To call them home so soon?
Then will we love that Father still,
And meet beyond the tomb.

Died, in Canterbury, N. H., Nov. 2d, of diphtheria, CITANA A., aged seven years; and Nov. 7th JONATHAN F., aged nine years, youngest children of Ebenezer and Citana C. Hutchins.

The writer tried to comfort the family on the occasion from the words of the apostle, Acts 26: 6–8, and 1 Cor. 15: 16.

ANDREW SIMPSON.

Married.

In Lynn, Mass., on Wednesday evening, Nov. 5, 1862, by Eld. Rufus Wendell, of Salem, Bro. S. ALBERT GREENE, son of Bro. James Greene, to Miss ELIZA MARIA BARRETT, daughter of Bro. Charles H. Barrett, all of the former city.

FOREIGN NEWS.

[Advices of the 29th ult.]

REVOLUTION IN GREECE.—The Liverpool Mercury says: "The insurrection in Greece has been followed by either the despotism or abdication of King Otho. One account states that the Provisional government, which was appointed under the presidency of M. Mavrocordato, had decreed the despotism of the reigning dynasty; that a national assembly had been convoked; that the public peace had not been disturbed; and that the greatest enthusiasm prevailed among the people. Another account states that the King has abdicated in favor of his brother. Otho 1, King of Greece, is brother to Maximilian II, King of Bavaria. He was born on the 1st of June, 1815, was elected to the throne of the newly constituted kingdom of Greece at the age of seventeen. He ascended the throne in June, 1835."

GARIBALDI'S WOUND.—A dispatch from Spezzia, dated Oct. 29, says:

"At the consultation held to-day respecting the state of Garibaldi's wound, seventeen physicians were present. The examinations made with the finger and probe, although incomplete, caused suffering to the patient. It was impossible to find the ball, but, in the opinion of the physicians, it is still in the wound. A repetition of the examination will be requisite to establish the exact position of the projectile, and allow of its extraction being proceeded with, if possible, without serious injury to the patient. Garibaldi's general state of health is satisfactory, and it is believed that no important surgical operation will be required."

The Steamship Etna brings news from Liverpool to the 5th inst., Queenstown the 6th.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Great Exhibition was closed without any ceremony. The attendance and total receipts both exceed that of 1851.

Parliament is further prorogued until the 15th of January.

ITALY.

A collision took place on the frontier between some Italian and Austrian soldiers. After a short contest quiet was restored. Each side charges the other with being the aggressor.

GREECE.

Affairs remain unchanged. Nothing has been decided as to the future ruler of Greece. It is reported that Garibaldi has been sounded as to his acceptance of the crown.

The National Assembly would meet in about a week. It is reported that it would tender the crown to Prince Alfred of England.

It is said that an understanding has been arrived at between France, England and Russia, by which Grecian affairs will be deprived of their importance for Europe.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

A Gainesville letter of the 10th says:

"The armies of Sigel and McClellan are closely pressing upon the enemy. Hardly a day passes but one or more of their strongholds fall into our possession. They are either driven out or compelled to retreat before us. The rebels had placed Rappahannock Station in a defiant attitude; but on Friday afternoon our troops entered, the secesh having just cleverly vacated. To them this was rather humiliating, and accordingly they thought they would drive the Unionists out. They brought up a force infinitely larger than ours, and commenced an artillery fire. The superiority of numbers did not intimidate our men, and they replied from their guns. The effect of the fire was evidently unhealthy, as the rebels retired without accomplishing their purpose. We still hold the place, and will continue to do so as our army moves forward to Richmond, which it is undoubtedly doing with success.

It, at present, looks as though the rebels will make a temporary stand at Gordonsville, but they fear us too much now, and to make one last struggle for their illegitimate cause, they will fall back to the Confederate capital, and it then will, in turn, fall back upon them.

The people of Virginia are getting tired of the war. Many who a year ago were violent secessionists, now acknowledge that they would be glad if their State would return to their allegiance. Even in the Confederate army and among the citizens there is as much antagonism as between the self-constituted rulers who govern the people. This is made more manifest every day; the interests of this State clash with the States of the extreme South. The confessions of many who have served in the rebel army, and many who are still there, are candid. They confess that they are tired of the despotic sway which has controlled them since the commencement of the war. A brighter day will soon dawn. The oppressed of the South will soon have their rights in common with the loyal men of the North, who have battled so nobly to sustain the supremacy of the laws."

Washington, Nov. 11. The prominent army correspondents are in town to-day—even those of the Associated Press. This is good evidence that no battle is expected within a few days. It is believed that the great battle of the fall campaign will be fought near Gordonsville, and that the rebels will not remain at Culpepper Court House after they shall have been hard pressed. The main part of the rebel army of Virginia is below the Rapidan.

It is said by some of the friends of Gen. Halleck here, that his plans for the fall and winter campaign are comprehensive and brilliant, and involve much heavy marching and fighting, and the attack of the enemy at many unexpected points. Of course, if this be so, it is of the utmost importance to keep the details a secret, though the general announcement that Gen. Halleck purposes an active campaign in November and December can do no harm, and will accomplish some good by encouraging the people. Gen. Burnside is known to favor active operations before winter sets in, and he will carry out the plans of the military chief with zeal as well as with all the ability at his command."

New York, Nov. 11. The Herald has news from Richmond 8th inst: Lee arrived there two weeks ago and is said to be still there acting as Commander-in-Chief and military adviser to the War Department. The active command of the enemy's forces in the field devolves upon Gen. Johnston, who has his headquarters at Culpepper.

Merrimac No. 2 is completed and now lies below Fort Darling ready for mischief at the mouth of the James river.

Stonewall Jackson's corps has been increased to 50,000.

Officers in the rebel service have been detached by the Richmond War Department to carry on the contraband trade between Baltimore and Richmond. Fifteen hundred pounds of quinine, one hundred pounds of fulminating powder, and two million percussion caps lately run the blockade of the Potomac in possession of some of these parties.

Jackson, Miss., Nov. 5. To-day a large amount of powder stored in a building used as a cartridge manufactory, exploded with a fearful concussion. Of the occupants of the building, boys, girls and young ladies, not one escaped. There were not less than thirty, and may far overreach that number. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

The Richmond Enquirer of the 10th says "Significant movements are progressing along the entire line of Gen. Lee's army. Stirring, perhaps startling, events seem to be rapidly approaching, promising in reality a sharp and decisive winter's campaign. It was reported that Gen. Jackson was yesterday upon the verge of battle in the Shenandoah Valley with greatly superior forces of the enemy. In a few days a considerable change will probably take place in the present inactive state of affairs."

The Washington correspondent of the New York Post writes:

"An editorial article appears in the Washington Chronicle, which is understood here to be authorized by the War Department, giving the principle reasons for the removal of Gen McClellan. The article takes the ground that his removal was a military necessity if the war is to be prosecuted energetically. Gen. Halleck is responsible for the removel. Some of McClellan's friends here are very angry, and talk of open rebellion against the act of the Commander-in-Chief."

Fortress Monroe, Nov. 14. The gunboat Connecticut has arrived from the Gulf. The officers report the entire coast of Texas in possession of the Federal forces.

The Macon (Georgia) Telegraph of the 8th has a long article on peace. It says: "We are so anxious for peace that the earnest longing for it is never out of the mind of man, woman or child, and the war distresses us a thousand times more than the North." It, however, sees nothing but ruin, except a peace is based on Southern independence.

The Vicksburg Whig says an extensive Abolition society has been discovered in Northern Texas. Their object is to resist the conscription and co-operate with the Federal army.

According to the last Navy Register, the government has three iron-clad steamers for ocean service, and nine for use on the western rivers completed. It also has twenty-three iron clad ocean steamers and fifteen river steamers building. Total of iron-clad vessels forty.

It is understood that Gen. Burnside will carry out the programme of Gen. Lincoln to the letter.

A Warrenton letter states that trains run regularly to Washington, and also that Professor Lowe is arranging for aerial observations.

A special dispatch from Washington says that military men believe that Gen. Burnside will soon be attacked by the rebels.

Advices from New Orleans report that an expedition under Gen. Weitzel met the enemy at Gabadierville, and defeated them after a brisk fight. Upward of 200 of the enemy were killed, wounded and taken prisoners, and one piece of artillery was captured. The rebels were pursued toward Berwick Bay, where Governor Moore was supposed to be. Our forces engaged were the 8th New Hampshire, 13th Connecticut, 12th do., 76th New York, and 1st Louisiana regiments, with Carruth's and Thompson's batteries. Our loss was 18 killed and 74 wounded.

The Times' Washington dispatch says the French Government has demanded full and immediate indemnity for all injuries inflicted on French citizens by Gen. Butler. Our State Department says there will be no difficulties, and merely informs the French Minister that the Government is ready to back down to any extent from Gen. Butler's acts.

The Herald's dispatch intimates that Gen. Butler's removal is probable.

The Times' dispatch also says the Spanish Minister demands an apology for burning the steamer Blanche, by one of Farragut's vessels, in Spanish waters.

The Lynchburg Republican states that the number of rebel desertions is startling, and that the rebel government is enforcing the death penalty in all cases.

New York, Nov. 13. The Herald has a letter dated Hamilton, N. C., 4th, which says: We have just arrived at this place, taking it with a grand cavalry charge and combined gunboat movement. Our land forces left Williamston yesterday afternoon, and encamped for the night six miles from the town, and moved forward this morning at daylight.

The enemy is in strong force, and has retreated to Tarboro. We shall seek the earliest opportunity to afford him a fight. The people are greatly alarmed at our approach, and flee from their homes and property.

Gen. Foster's command had a severe engagement Sunday night with 3000 rebel infantry, at a breastwork supported by six pieces of artillery. We killed and wounded 60 of the enemy. Our loss was ten.

New York, Nov. 17. A Harper's Ferry letter says Jackson's main force is at Stevenson's Station, fifteen miles this side of Winchester. It is variously stated at from 40,000 to 70,000. Jackson never left the valley, but moved down the west side of the Blue Ridge, while our army advanced along the east side. His advance extends as far as Bath. Jackson's headquarters are at Bunker Hill.

Washington, Nov. 17. A draft has been ordered in Massachusetts to fill up the quota, arising from the revision of the enrollment lists, of nearly two thousand.

All accounts agree that the President has been fully aroused to the necessity for the most vigorous prosecution of the war. Many prominent members of Congress, who have visited him within a week, testify to his earnestness and determination to infuse new energy into our army and navy.

☞ The Postmaster General has given orders for the redemption of postage stamps which have been used as currency.

It is stated that 9,309 applications have been made for pensions under the act of July last—9,049 in the army, and 260 in the navy.

Notice.

The lost things which I found on the camp ground and brought home and advertised, must be called for, or sent for. I have done my duty, without sending them to the owners, as some have requested. I am gone from home nearly all the time. Some write letters of inquiry, and send the letter to Chicopee, which costs me three cents, and then want me to answer it and pay three cents more, and I shall not do it. You may as well pay three or six cents each for your carelessness, as for me to do it. To hunt up your things, and to advertise them, and to write letters and pay two postages, too, is more than a duty or a privilege.

H. MUNGER.

P. S. If any wish their things sent by express or mail, send word which and how, and send the pay, and I will attend to it, or my wife will when I am gone. Recollect, I live in Chicopee FALLS. Will you remember it? H. M.

Notice.

As the signs of the near approach of the King that is to reign in righteousness are thickening around us, and so few are prepared to meet him, I propose, the Lord willing, to take a trip into Ohio the last of Dec., and stay a part of the winter, and preach where my humble labors may, by the assistance of our Heavenly Father, arouse some to be prepared to meet him and have a part in his kingdom. I shall stay a few days in a place, as duty may demand. I shall have an assortment of books and tracts with me to scatter. Those wishing my labors, write me as soon as possible.

JOHN T. ONGLEY, Evangelist.
Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Pa.

Conference.

The Lord will, there will be a conference in Rensselaer, Jasper Co., Ind., to commence Wednesday evening, Dec. 3d, and continue over the following Sabbath. Brn. A. N. Servis and George Moyer are expected to be present and assist in preaching the word of God. Those coming from the south on the New Albany and Salem R. R., on the same day of meeting, will stop at Bradford, and find conveyance to the meeting. Those coming from the north will stop at the above named station also. We hope to see a general gathering of our brethren at this meeting. Come one and all, let us work while the day lasts. D. R. & M. S. MANSFIELD.

Notice.

BRO. GRANT:—I am requested by Eld. N. F. Nason to say that he has unfortunately cut his hand very severely, and his health is otherwise very poor, which will prevent him from fulfilling his appointments for some four or five weeks. Brethren expecting him to preach will receive this as the cause of his not attending his appointments.

Yours truly, WALTER NICHOLS.

The Wisconsin Conference

Will be held at Sumpter, Sauk Co., Wis., six miles from Sauk city, and nine miles from Baraboo, in the "Pockett," beginning on Wednesday evening, Dec. 3d, and holding over Lord's day following. Eld. J. V. Himes of Boston will be present to aid in preaching. Let us have a rally, and let all come at the beginning. Friends in the surrounding townships are requested to bring a few blankets, as so many may come from a great distance that our beds may possibly be more than filled. Let no excuse keep a single preacher in Wisconsin at home. Let friends come from other States also. The Lord is certainly at hand. We must arouse!

It is expected that Bro. Himes will do the most of the preaching. Churches who have a standing with the conference will send their delegates, and churches who wish to unite, will do the same. Isolated brethren, who wish the sympathy and aid of preachers in the conference, may send an epistle to W. Sheldon, Merrimack, Wis. I intend to have an assortment of our best books at the meeting; and Bro. Himes will have a quantity of the "Voice" bound, the Lyre, and other valuable productions. Come with praying hearts. Elders Barnes, Turner, Shears, Gibson, and others will please exert themselves to secure a general attendance.

W. SHELDON.

Christ Cometh.

Listen! poor aching hearts,
That pine with moanings;
Listen, ye weary ones,
'Neath the burden groaning;
The goal is almost won,
Your work is almost done,
Christ cometh.

Though darkness robes the sky,
The dawn doth brighten;
Though clouds obscure the stars,
Their fringes whiten;
Look up, poor stricken one,
Behold the rising sun,
Christ cometh.

Now Afric's burdened sons,
With long oppression,
Hear their relentless foe
Make dread confession;
God will that foe despoil,
For unrequited toil,
Christ cometh.

Martyrs in prison cells,
Who sadly linger,
And trace with pensive smile
God's writing finger;
See! threat'nings on the wall;
Hark! kingdoms crash and fall,
Christ cometh.

Fond mothers' yearning prayers
O'er infants sleeping,
Pale mothers over graves
Of dear ones weeping;
Seemeth this truth surprising,
That wings bud for their rising?
Christ cometh.

How precious is the sleeping
Of human dust!
Long its prophetic keeping
In holy trust;
But now the dead arise,
And angels crowd the skies,—
Christ cometh.

Oh! ye who upward gaze
With expectation,
Nor quail as ye behold
Each reeling nation;
Echo from earth and air,
The voice that bids "Prepare
Christ cometh!"

My Journal.

Advent Conference in Waterbury, Vt.

Tuesday, Oct 7th. Attended the opening session of the conference, and heard the address of the chairman, Eld. J. Pearson, Jun. And as the Secretaries will give a report of the meetings, I will not go into details. I will notice one point, viz., the reference in the address to the definite time. If I understood the speaker, he condemned the preaching of definite time among Adventists as schismatical! And he attempted to prove that Father Miller did not originally mean to be definite; but only to teach that the Lord would come "about 1843," which covers an indefinite period.

Now as I am an advocate and a proclaimer of the definite time, and as I believe the article on the time, passed by the Albany Conference, in 1845, enjoins the duty of showing the emphatical nearness of the Advent by the prophetic periods and the signs, I regard it my duty to give all the light I have on these points; and shall, without the fear or favor of men, give it the widest extent in my power, that the people of God may be ready for that day, and sinners may be converted and have part in the kingdom of God.

I do not like the chairman's exposition of the word "about 1843," as well as I do Father Miller's; who, I suppose, is a much better judge in the case.

I know of no clearer expression of his view than the following, contained in an address he sent to me to read in the Advent Conference in Portland, Me., Oct. 12th, 1841. It is due to the dead that he have the privilege to be heard on a point of such vital interest to the cause to which he devoted his life. So hear Father Miller:

"The time of his coming.

On this part of our subject, many are willing to admit that it is near, yet are not willing to tell how near. A few are of the opinion that the year is defined in Scripture, and those who believe in the time vary only about twenty-three years. The writer of this letter, in common with a large majority of those who believe in the time, in America, has been forced by the Scriptures to fix on the year 1843. As a matter of course, nearly all the calumny of the scoffers has been thrown upon them. Those who have fixed on the year 1847 have received less abuse from the clergy, editors, and scoffers than their brethren who believe in the earlier date; while those writers who have fixed the time as late as 1866 have received little or no obloquy or notice from these babblers and complainers. Why is this so? you may inquire; for each class of these writers try to prove one important point in the theory, that is, that the time is actually revealed in the Bible; for this must first be established before either class of these expositors could be credited a moment by a well-balanced mind. And if this objection were all these men had against the 'Miller doctrine,' they would as soon complain of the believers in 1866, as of Miller, and others, who believe in any earlier dates. But this is not the case; it is only used as a subterfuge to parry off the force of the argument of the time itself. They know in their consciences that time is revealed, and they are not able to confute it. Therefore, what cannot be put down by fair means, must be by ridicule or persecution; for they are not willing to have it true. The professed ministers of Christ know, if it is true, they are under the most serious, solemn and awful obligation to preach it, and warn and entreat the people to be ready for the event. But not possessing faith enough to risk their character on the word of God, or courage enough to meet the opposition this doctrine would of necessity raise; they will, as a matter of course, do all they can to keep their people ignorant, and cry out against excitements, even after they have been for years trying to excite their people to support the popular institutions of the day. No wonder then, brethren, you meet with so much opposition from this source. Yet we ought to be thankful that there are, even at this time, many of the ministers of Christ who are willing to be called fools for Christ's sake, and are examining this important subject; a great number of whom are satisfied that their former views of a temporal or spiritual millennium was but a tradition of men, and are preaching the kingdom of God at hand. Numbers of these are now satisfied that it is at the door, and a few of these believe in the time, 1843. Thus far, then, my dear brethren, we have reason to be thankful to God, and take courage. We ought to do all we can to get our ministers to look at this subject.

The Editors. This class of men among us are capable of doing much good or much hurt. They are instruments to convey light, or lull the community to sleep, and communicate darkness. With these we have been less fortunate than with the priesthood. And the reason is obvious; they are more worldly, if possible, and are catering more for popular applause, and are more depraved by the fashionable and vain taste of public sentiment. Yet the same motives operate upon their minds as upon the minds of the opposition among the clergy, a want of faith, and a lack of courage. Therefore the scurrilous paragraphs which abound in many of our religious publications, which serve to keep the world in ignorance and darkness on this important subject. I believe every newspaper paragraph, that I have seen, which is opposed to the doctrine that we advocate, has been based upon some foolish story, or vile misrepresentation of our views or conduct. And this shows plainly, to every man of sense, the weakness of their side of the question, or their ignorance of the question itself. Yet in this thing we have much reason for gratitude to God; for three years since, but two or three editors could be found in the United States that would publish anything from us, or correct any misrepresentation which they or others had made concerning our views; now, we can number more than a score of friendly or honest editors. Some are with us heart and hand; others are willing to do us justice. Let us then take courage, brethren. 'If God be for us, who can be against us?'

There is another class of our fellow-men, whom we should do all in our power to enlighten, and to whom we should cry night and day with tears, if possible that we might be instrumental in saving them from ruin—I mean the unbelieving world. They are enemies to the coming of Christ, from a natural cause. They are enemies to God by wicked works. They love the present evil world, and have no faith in the future. They hate the light, and will not come to it lest their deeds reprove them. They are strangers to the covenant of promise, and have no inheritance with the household of faith. They know that they are unprepared to meet God; therefore, they are opposed to the second advent. But, brethren, we have reason to rejoice, for many hundreds, if not thousands of these characters, by the preaching of the things of the kingdom, and that kingdom at hand, have been brought to repent and believe, and are now 'looking for the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ.' If angels in heaven rejoice over one sinner that repenteth, surely we have reason for much joy when thousands have been converted to Christ, and that too by preaching and teaching a doctrine which our enemies ridicule and misrepresent. Go on then, brethren; your cause is the cause of God and the truth. Have faith, have courage, have works, and the Lord Jesus will bruise Satan under your feet shortly. I know some, who have received the light, and for a season seemed to run well, and gave evidence that they rejoiced in it, have fallen away, and given our enemies occasion to exult over us. Let us pray that such may be delivered from the snares and temptations into which they are fallen. And let us desire mercies of the God of all grace, that we may stand fast in the faith, not giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils.

But to the time;—there are some who tell us that God has nowhere revealed the time of Christ's second coming, or of the 'end of the world'; and by their sceptical mode of reasoning destroy the faith of some. We are told by Solomon, 'A wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment; because to every purpose there is time and judgment.' Daniel says, 'The wise shall understand,' that is, the time of the end and the resurrection. Peter tells us that the prophets did prophesy of the grace that should come unto us, and that they did diligently search into the time and manner; and that the spirit of Christ, which was in them, did testify beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow; unto whom it was revealed that not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into. Wherefore, gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ.' 1 Peter 1: 10–13. I consider the words of the wise man, of Daniel, and Peter, of more force than all the sceptics and scoffers of our age. These three, Solomon, Daniel, and Peter, have been tried and found true; while those murmurers and complainers of the opposition are walking after their own lusts; while their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men's persons in admiration because of advantage, etc. See Jude 14–21.

That God has revealed the time, if not the hour or day, is certainly proved by these three witnesses which I have quoted. And Christ himself has told us that we may know when it is near, even at the door. But, says the scoffer, he has not told us anywhere in the New Testament when the end will come.

Well, suppose he has not; do you not believe Moses and the prophets? It would be proof enough for me to find it in either of the Testaments.

Time is revealed in both the Old and New Testaments in the most plain and simple manner, in the same way that Christ's first coming, or any other part of the gospel, was revealed."

There are important calculations now before the public that reach to 1866 and 1868. Also others of less interest, that reach to 1870, 1873, and 1880. But those who adopt the earlier dates, now receive the calumny and scoffs of the opposition, just as in 1840 and onward, for the calculation of 1843; while those who point to 1870, to 1880, are not even noticed. The calculation of Father Miller has been tried; and although its internal harmony and strength and probable truth appeared clear to him before the trial, and justified him and those who adopted his view in taking the position they did; yet his view is no longer to be considered in connection with the more generally received and more conclusive calculations of the future. Now should the fact that the earlier calculation proved incorrect, be regarded as an objection to the later one? I have no doubt that if Father Miller were now alive, he would yield his most hearty assent and co-operation in the publication of this later view. He looked to this later view to the day of his death. And though he did not get the satisfactory light which we now possess, yet he believed more light would be given, and all would be clear on the time before the end should come. And he fairly and fully expected that true believers in the Lord's coming would receive and walk in such light.

Father Miller was neither a Jesuit nor a trifler in his treatment of the word of God. If any one trait of his character was more prominent than another, it was that he always distinguished the true man of God—sincerity and consistency in the profession and publication of his faith. He believed the word of God had a meaning, and that it was to be used in accordance with what it taught. And he believed its meaning could be determined. "If this is not what it means, tell me what it does mean," he said to all. On the question of time, he occupied common ground essentially with a large class of professed christians. It was common ground in principle, and in its application there was a difference of only about twenty-three years. If it was inconsistent in this class to desert or oppose him for preaching the time, it would be inconsistent in us to stand aloof from those who have sufficient sincerity and courage to proclaim to the world their faith in 1866 or 1868.

Brethren of the Advent faith, shall we be consistent or not? I know, as keenly as any of you, the effects of our disappointment. But we are not to be disappointed forever. "He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." Brethren of the old forlorn hope, call to remembrance the former days. The same great and glorious interests are at stake now as then. Lift up your heads; look up. Listen to the cry from all quarters, and from those we should hardly expect. Behold, the "Bridegroom cometh." Dr. Tyng, of New York, lately said in the Protestant Churchman:—

"The wisest of Scriptural expositors, and the almost universal consent of those who study the Lord's testimonies with seriousness and discrimination, have concurred in the time of their fulfillment. These processions of years include the seven times, or twenty-five hundred and twenty years of Israel's chastisement and Gentile supremacy, called by our Lord 'The times of the Gentiles'; the twenty-three hundred years of the destruction and pollution of the temple of God; the twelve hundred and sixty years of Papal usurpation, and the appointed revelation of the infidel Anti-Christ; and the various intermediate smaller events in their course. All these Scriptural periods have a common termination about the year 1868 of the Christian era."

Dear brethren, we are nearing the last great landmarks of the voyage. Let us review our chart, and take our bearings anew; spread our sails, that are wafting the storm-beaten voyagers into the haven of rest and blessedness.

Christ Precious.

With inspired testimony before me, and some experience as to what it is to be a christian, I hesitate not in saying, that you who have received the sincere milk of the word, and are desiring it, and have tasted that the Lord is good; you can but agree with me in the confession, and with the apostle Peter say, "Unto you, therefore, which believe, he (Christ) is precious," and "he that believeth on him shall not be confounded."

The preciousness of Jehovah's Anointed was manifested when "God raised him from the dead," thus fulfilling the prophecy for Christ as found in the second Psalm. Had the enemy death retained his hold on the dead Christ, then he would have died in vain; for saith the apostle Paul, "And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain; yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up if so be that the dead rise not." Now as God is stronger than death, and as the Holy Spirit stood as a witness for the resurrection of Christ, it was not possible that he should be holden of death, for God cannot lie; neither will he allow his pre-determined purposes to be at all thwarted; for "known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." Inasmuch as it was necessary for God to justify his word, and make known his power in the resurrection of Christ, even so it is of the same necessity that all who are in Christ should be raised from the dead.

Christ precious! How true this is! How clearly shines this truth in all the book of God. Christ precious! The reflection does good to those who are upright in heart, and who tremble at God's word. It is a comforting thought, and one we cannot too long dwell upon. I often think if the preciousness of Christ was more dwelt upon, it would save many an angry feeling and disposition to wrangle about what is clearly of no consequence: and while I am in for the maintainance of truth—the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—I at the same time do not see it to be my duty at all times, and under all circumstances, to insist on being heard. We are fallible creatures and prone to change. We make paths of our own, and are constantly calling upon others to follow in them. This is an evil, and one we must get rid of if we desire above ALL things to follow Christ; for he is the "good Shepherd," and we must follow him if in "his day" we expect him to be precious to us. All who honor God, honor him; and it is therefore with the full assurance of hope we are admonished to hold fast our begun confidence firm unto the end.

May He who is the chief corner stone, elect and precious, keep, guide, and at last receive unto himself those who love him and keep his commandments.

New York. G. W. Young.

A Dialogue.

"I am sick, sick, heartsick," was language uttered by one in declining health.

J. "Why are you heartsick? Are you not at peace with God, an heir of his kingdom?"

D. "Yes, but poor sister A. has long been sick, and oft becomes discouraged. If I could go talk and pray with her,—it seems to encourage her so much. And young Sister B., just commencing a christian life, entirely inexperienced, surrounded by the giddy, worldly throng; who will admonish her of the dangers, and point out the way of escape? O, my Father! protect the unsuspecting lamb. And that poor family yonder, without hope in Christ, have buried an almost idolized son. If I could only point them to the land where loved ones are restored, never to be separated, and to the Lamb of God sufficiently able to give them a home there! And beside these, how many long confined with care and toil, who only need their minds stirred by way of remembrance in order to 'hope in the mercy of God'; but my aspirations are crushed for lack of strength."

J. "I think you do wrong in allowing your mind to dwell upon these classes. The Lord is able to comfort, protect, and arouse."

D. "I would not for a moment question this power, but he uses human instruments."

J. "Are there not others beside you? are you the only christian in all this region?"

D. "No. There are multitudes."

J. "Well, some of them will distribute the blessings you so much desire to."

"D. "I wish they might. Some are so much more competent than I. But while some have both hearts and hands full, I inquire of others concerning these; but alas! the burden resting upon me does not rest upon them; if it did, they would make an effort."

J. "What harm of their making an effort, if the burden rests not upon them, providing it rests upon one unable to bear it? Is it not written, 'Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ'? Have they forgotten the unspeakable privilege it is ours to enjoy, to be like-minded with Christ? Can they expect to partake of the blessings of the gospel, and not extend sympathy to their suffering fellow beings? Frail creatures of an hour, why so selfish, why so unlike our Master?"

D. "I cannot think it so much selfishness as thoughtlessness."

J. "When I see lack of thought where self is interested, I will admit it is not selfishness. I am reminded of a sister I called upon. Shortly after becoming seated, I inquired, 'How do you prosper in spiritual things?' She replied, 'I have not given up yet, but I hardly know my whereabouts?' Very soon I asked, 'Have you visited that poor woman across the street? She has been sick some time, and they are quite poor, are they not?' She replied, 'Yes, but I thought I would finish that garment,' pointing to an embroidered piece of work, 'and get that out of the way first.' 'I suppose you felt the need of it as the cold approaches?' 'No, indeed! I may not wear it in a year.' 'In a year! your flesh may be food for the worms ere that time expires.' O heartless sister! (if sisterly emotions have not become extinct), must that poor woman's suffering be increased by viewing her little ones' scanty clothing, as the cold increases, when you might have relieved her? How many plain little garments you might have finished while embroidering that one! how many sighs saved that mother as she has looked upon her shivering offspring! Have you done by her as you would wish her to do by you under like circumstances? Will you have no responsibility to meet at the judgment?"

I pray that we may consider well our ways, and ascertain whether we are living for self, and its gratification, or for God and those of his care, even those created in his own image. Jennie D. Roberts.

Sketches by the Wayside.—No. 5.

"Your old men shall dream dreams."—Joel 2: 28.

The following is taken from the "Autobiography of Rev. James B. Finley":—

"It was in the summer of 1842. Worn down with fatigue, I was completing my last round of quarterly meetings, and winding up the labors of a very toilsome year. I had scarcely finished my work till I was most violently attacked with bilious fever, and it was with great difficulty I reached home. The disease had taken so violent a hold on my system, that I sank rapidly under its power. Every thing that kind attention and medical skill could impart was resorted to to arrest its ravages; but all was in vain, and my life was despaired of. On the seventh night, in a state of entire insensibility to all around me, when the last ray of hope had departed, and my weeping friends were standing around my couch, waiting to see me breathe my last, it seemed to me that a heavenly messenger came to my side; and in the softest and most silvery tones, which fell like rich music on my ear, it said: 'I have come to conduct you to another state and place of existence.' In an instant I seemed to rise, and gently borne by my angel guide, I floated out upon the ambient air. Soon earth was lost in the distance, and around me on every side were worlds of light and glory.

"On, on, away, away from worlds to luminous worlds afar, we sped with the velocity of thought. At length we reached the gates of Paradise, and oh, the transporting scenes that fell upon my vision as the emerald portals, wide and high, rolled back upon their golden hinges! Then, in its fullest extent, did I realize the invocation of the poet:—

'Burst, ye emerald gates, and bring
To my raptured vision,
All the ecstatic joys that spring
Round the bright Elysium!'

"Language, however, is inadequate to describe what then with unveiled eyes I saw. The vision is indelibly pictured on my heart. Before me, spread out in beauty, was a broad sheet of water, clear as crystal, not a single ripple on its surface, and its purity and clearness indescribable. On each side of this lake or river rose up the most tall and beautiful trees, covered with all manner of fruits and flowers, the brilliant hues of which were reflected in the bosom of the placid river. While I stood gazing with joy and rapture at the scene, a convoy of angels was seen floating in the pure ether of that world. They all had long wings, and, although they went with the greatest rapidity, yet their wings were closely folded by their side. While I gazed I asked my guide who they were, and what their mission. To this he responded, 'They are angels dispatched to the world from whence you came, on errands of mercy.' I could hear strains of the most entrancing melody all around me, but no one was discoverable but my guide. At length I said, 'Will it be possible for me to have a sight of some of the just made perfect in glory?'

"Just then there came before us three persons; one had the appearance of a male, the other a female, and the third an infant. The appearance of the first two was somewhat similar to the angels I saw, with the exception that they had crowns upon their heads of the purest yellow, and harps in their hands. Their robes, which were full and flowing, were of the purest white. Their countenances were lighted up with a heavenly radiance, and they smiled upon me with ineffable sweetness. There was nothing with which the blessed babe or child could be compared. It seemed to be about three feet high. Its wings, which were long and most beautiful, were tinged with all the colors of the rainbow. Its dress seemed to be of the whitest silk, covered with the softest white down. The driven snow could not exceed it for whiteness or purity. The face was all radiant with glory,—its very smile now plays around my heart. I gazed and gazed with wonder upon this heavenly child. At length I said, 'If I have to return to earth from whence I came, I should love to take this child with me, and show it to the weeping mothers of earth. Methinks when they see it, they will never shed another tear over their children when they die.'

"So anxious was I to carry out the desire of my heart, that I made a grasp at the bright and beautiful one, desiring to clasp it in my arms, but it eluded my grasp, and plunged into the river of life. Soon it rose from the water, and as the drops fell from its expanding wings, they seemed like diamonds, so brightly did they sparkle. Directing its course to the other shore, it flew up to one of the topmost branches of one of life's fair trees. With a look of most seraphic sweetness it gazed upon me, and then commenced singing in heaven's own strains, 'To Him that hath loved me, and washed me from my sins in his own blood, to him be glory, both now and forever. Amen.' At that moment the power of God came upon me, and I began to shout, and dropping my hands, I sprang from my bed, and was healed as instantly as the lame man in the beautiful porch of the temple, who went walking, and leaping, and praising God! Overwhelmed with the glory I saw and felt, I could not cease praising God."

The dream or vision here recorded, corresponds very much with the Bible description of the future home and glory of the redeemed. M. D. W.

"A Silver Lining to every Cloud."

If I remember aright, a poor woman, long a daughter of affliction, unknown to fame, originated the beautiful idea of the cloud with a silver lining. Now the expression is familiar as household words to us all, and conveys comfort and trust in Him "who holds the clouds in the hollow of his hand," and appoints to each our share of shade and brightness, as will most conduce to our heavenward path. If too much of the lining were revealed, we should be unmindful of that city yet to come, "whose builder and maker is God." Even with our daily experience of earth's vanity, and the perishing nature of her best gifts, are we not conscious of the attractions of time and sense?

When the child of God is overwhelmed by sudden and unexpected trials, the "silver lining" in the dark cloud is not discerned. The death or desertion of friends, sickness, poverty, loss of our reputation,—these are some of the clouds, whose "name is legion," that encompass our pilgrim path. To each of these belongs "a silver lining," seen only by the eye of faith. Even the dark cloud of national calamity now enveloping our country, and sending desolation in its track, has also "a silver lining."

Some of our national sins are pride, self-sufficiency and self-indulgence. These sins called down God's judgment upon Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, till he learned "that the Most High ruleth, and doeth his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth." Then was the "silver lining" of the cloud revealed. Have we not been too boastful in our prosperity, regarding "this whole unbounded continent as ours;" "by the might of our power and wisdom" forgetful of the Giver of all our blessings, of whom one of the greatest of earth's rulers testified, "that those who walk in pride, He is able to abase"?

This experience is already ours. May we, before it is too late, "turn to Him that smiteth," "and kiss the rod," lest "the day of the Lord" overtake us unprepared. To the sinner we are told "that day shall be very dark, and no brightness in it" (Amos 5: 20); but to Christ's little flock who love his appearing, "at eventide it shall be light." The hope and expectation of the speedy coming of our Savior is indeed found to be "a silver lining" to the dark cloud now overhanging the nations of the earth. Amy.

Marvels of Man.

While the gastric juice has a mild, bland, sweetish taste, it possesses the power of dissolving the hardest food that can be swallowed; it has no influence whatever on the soft and delicate fibers of the living stomach, nor upon the living hand, but, at the moment of death, it begins to eat them away with the power of the strongest acids.

There is dust on sea, on land; in the valley, and on the mountain-top; there is dust always and everywhere; the atmosphere is full of it; it penetrates the noisome dungeon, and visits the deepest, darkest caves of the earth; no palace door can shut it out, no drawer so secret as to escape its presence; every breath of wind dashes it upon the open eye, and yet that eye is not blinded, because there is a fountain of the blandest fluid in nature incessantly emptying itself under the eyelid, which spreads it over the surface of the ball at every winking, and washes every atom of dust away. But this liquid, so mild, and so well adapted to the eye itself, has some acridity, which, under certain circumstances, becomes so decided as to be scalding to the skin, and would rot away the eyelids were it not that along the edges of them there are little oil manufactories, which spread over their surface a coating as impervious to the liquids necessary for keeping the eye-ball washed clean, as the best varnish is impervious to water.

The breath which leaves the lungs has been so perfectly divested of its life-giving properties, that to rebreathe it, unmixed with other air, the moment it escapes from the mouth, would cause immediate death by suffocation; while if it hovered about us, a more or less destructive influence over health and life would be occasioned; but it is made of a nature so much lighter than the common air, that the instant it escapes the lips and nostrils, it ascends to the higher regions, above the breathing point, there to be rectified, renovated, and sent back again, replete with purity and life. How rapidly it ascends, is beautifully exhibited any frosty morning.

But foul and deadly as the expired air is, nature, wisely economical in all her works and ways, turns it to good account in its outward passage through the organs of voice, and makes of it the whisper of love, the soft words of affection, the tender tones of human sympathy, the sweetest strains of ravishing music, the persuasive eloquence of the finished orator.

If a well-made man be extended on the ground, his arms at right angles with the body, a circle, making the navel its centre, will just take in the head, the finger-ends, and feet.

The distance from "top to toe" is precisely the same as that between the tips of the fingers when the arms are extended.

The length of the body is just six times that of the foot; while the distance from the edge of the hair on the forehead, to the end of the chin is one tenth the length of the whole stature.—Ibid.

Wearing Rubber Shoes.

The tendency of India-rubber shoes is to make the feet cold, and in such proportion endanger health; hence, they are useful only in walking when the ground is muddy or sloshy with melting snow—in these cases they are invaluable, and there is no equal substitute. Two rules should be observed whenever it is possible: when rubbers are on the feet persons should keep moving, and remove them on entering the house, if it is intended to remain over a few minutes. If the rubbers have been on the feet several hours, both shoes and stockings are necessarily damp by the condensation and confinement of the perspiration, therefore all should be removed, and the naked foot held to the fire until warm and dry in every part; if then a pair of dry stockings are put on, and a pair of warmed and loose slippers or shoes, there will be a feeling of comfort for the remainder of the day, which will more than compensate for the trouble taken, to say nothing of the ailments averted. But it must not be forgotten that as India-rubber shoes are impervious to water from without, and ought not to be worn except in muddy weather, and only then while the wearer is in motion, so leather shoes, rendered impervious to water, by blacking or by any other means, should be used like India-rubbers, temporarily, and when walking in mud or slosh. For common purposes the old-fashioned leather boots and shoes are best, if kept well blacked, with several renewals of dry socks during the day if the feet perspire profusely. As cold and damp feet are the avenues of death to multitudes every year, a systematic attention to the above suggestions would save many a valuable life.—Journal of Health.

The Panacea.

The great cure-all, the catholicon for the removal of untold human ills, physical, and mental, which will make of life a summer sky, which will replace the darkest clouds with the gladdest sunshine, which will put a budding rose where erst flourished the ragged thorn, is the blessed habit of an implicit reliance on the wisdom and the love of Providence in every occurrence of life; of humble gratitude if it is gladsome; of uncomplaining resignation if it is adverse; abiding in the firm faith that if it is dark to-day, it will be bright to-morrow, saying and feeling of every dispensation: "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt." This is the balm of Gilead; this is perennial health; it is happiness, it is bliss.

Chilblains.—To cure chilblains, simply bathe the parts affected in the liquor in which potatoes have been boiled, at as high a temperature as can be borne. On the first appearance of ailment, this bath affords almost immediate relief. In the advanced stages, repetition prevents breaking out, followed by a certain cure; and an occasional adoption will operate against the return, even during the severest frost.

Bare Neck and Arms.—There is, perhaps, not an eminent physician in any system of practice, who will not declare, with a distinguished medical practitioner, now deceased: "I believe, that during the twenty-six years I have followed my profession in this city, twenty thousand children have been carried to the cemeteries, a sacrifice to the absurd custom of exposing their arms naked."

Deleteriousness of Tobacco.—John Quincy Adams asserted that the abandonment of tobacco would add five years to the average age of human life. The Indians formerly poisoned their arrows with a decoction of tobacco, and soldiers in the United States army shirk duty by wearing tobacco under their arms, thus causing symptoms of illness.

Neuralgia.—As neuralgia and toothache are both nervous diseases, we thought the remedy for the one would be likely to cure the other, so we made the application of horseradish, bruised, and applied where the disease was seated; it gave almost instant relief.—Ex.

Haste Thee, Pilgrim.

AIR—"Speed Away."

Haste thee on, haste thee on, in thy mission of love,
Lay up now thy treasure in heaven above;
For the Savior comes quickly deliverance to bring,
And banish forever death, sorrow and sin,—
To give life eternal to those who have won;
Haste thee on! haste thee on! haste thee on!

O haste! go thou quickly the wanderers to bring,
Who're now held in bondage, in doubt and in sin;
Go tell them there's power in Jesus' name,
And power to break even the tempter's strong chain.
Go call them home now ere probation is gone,—
Haste thee on! haste thee on! haste thee on!

Come then, ye freed prisoner, fetterless now,
Stoop not again to the foul tempter's blow;
But haste away o'er rock, river and glen,
And seek the poor sinner till Christ comes again.
Up! onward! till the morning doth dawn,—
Haste thee on! haste thee on! haste thee on!

The Mystery of the Gospel.—No. 3.

NUMBER FOUR.

"And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke 1: 32, 33.

"The sure mercies of David" now demand our attention. "I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant, thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations." "My mercy will I keep for him forevermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven."—Ps. 89: 3, 4, 28, 29. "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it: Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon the throne."—Ps. 132: 11. This covenant is recorded at length in 2 Sam. 7: 12–17, 1 Chron. 17: 11–15. Isaiah thus writes: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and establish it with judgment and justice, from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."—Isa. 9: 6, 7. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely. And this is his name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness."—Jer. 23: 5, 6. "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old; that they may possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen, which are called by my name, saith the Lord that doeth this. . . . . And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build again the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."—Amos 9: 11–15.

Ezekiel, speaking of the kingdom, says, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."—21: 27. Many other passages might be quoted, but these are sufficient. The question now arises, how did the apostles explain "The sure mercies of David," or the covenant concerning his kingdom and throne? for if there was any hidden or mystical meaning contained in the promise, the apostles did certainly reveal it. If they brought out no such hidden meaning, then the promise must be literally understood. Jesus revealed the mystery to them, as we have already seen, in those forty days after his resurrection; when, "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God," he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." After listening to his exposition of Moses and the prophets, they made this inquiry, "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" This question shows that his explanations left upon their minds the conviction that he would restore the kingdom of Israel. His answer was not such as would be likely to remove that belief, but rather to establish it: "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power."—Acts 1: 6, 7.

We will now pass on to Peter's preaching on the day of Pentecost, and subsequently. After quoting rom the sixteenth Psalm the words, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption," he says, "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. . . . . For David is not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool. Therefore, let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ."—Acts 2: 27–36. Not a word here respecting a spiritual throne. But the matter is made still plainer in the third chapter. "And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts 3: 20, 21. In harmony with this, is the testimony of James before the council at Jerusalem. "Men and brethren, hearken unto me. Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, that is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up; that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, who doeth all these things."—Acts 15: 13–17. From these explanations of Peter and James, we learn,

1. That Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the seed of David, spoken of in the "Everlasting Covenant," or "sure mercies of David." Acts 13: 34, Isa. 55: 3.

2. That according to the oath of Jehovah, he was raised up from the dead to sit on David's throne.

3. That he ascended to heaven, and now sits at his Father's right hand, expecting till his foes shall be made his footstool.

4. That he is taking from among the nations a people for his name; who, according to other scriptures, are joint heirs with him of his kingdom and glory.

5. That he is to remain in heaven until "the times of restitution of all things" foretold by the prophets.

6. That he will then *re*turn and *re*build the fallen tabernacle of his father David.

7. That this is to be done, that the residue of men may seek after God, and all the nations upon whom his name shall be called; that is, that all the nations may be blessed in him, according to the gospel preached unto Abraham. Gal. 3: 8, Gen. 12: 3.

Modern "divines," who say that the church is the kingdom of Christ, should give plain apostolic testimony for their assertions; and be careful that they do not undertake to reveal a mystery which the apostles never made known. Let them show, if they can, Bible authority for the spiritual millennium which they teach, and pray for the triumph and reign of the church a thousand years previous to the second appearing of Christ. They can find it neither in the prophecies of Messiah's glorious reign; nor in the apostolic explanation of those prophecies. The declaration of Jesus, "My kingdom is not of this world," will not help them; for the word there rendered world, is not ge, earth, but kosmos, which signifies "order," "arrangement," "regular disposition." The "order" of Christ's kingdom belongs to the world, or age to come, an age in which "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Isa. 11: 9.

Having learned from the preaching of the apostles the revealers of the mystery concealed in the prophetic writings, that the prophecies concerning Messiah's kingdom are to be literally interpreted, it becomes an easy matter to understand the gospel. Thank God! We have found an immovable rock, on which to build our hope; and all the speculations of modern spiritualizers and allegorizers cannot shake our faith. Here we will stand looking for Jesus to come and "restore the kingdom again to Israel." What is justifying faith? is the next question. J. W. NILES.

An Open Door.

"I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it."—REV. 3: 8.

This language was written "to the church in Philadelphia." Whether this church was intended to represent the christian church in these "last days," is a question of some discussion. Not now attempting to decide on this, I shall claim the point, that the declaration of Christ in the address, "Thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name," applies to the faithful christians of these "last days," who continue unto the end; and the statement, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it," applies to the same. The promise of the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom to all nations (Matt. 24: 14); the invitation to the supper (Luke 14); the sealing of God's servants (Rev. 7); each represent the same idea,—"an open door" for God's faithful servants in the last days, to proclaim the glorious message of the coming of Christ in his kingdom, however much they have been deprived of such liberties in earlier times, when the "man of sin" ruled all the church, and when the "lamb-dragon-beast" caused "that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name."

Such times of oppression, and of shutting the door have existed. But God, who promised to "consume" the strength of that "man of sin," and to set before his faithful ones "an open door," has been faithful to his promise. Blessed be his name! And will he not be as faithful in preventing any man,—even the "man of sin," or the dragon beast,—from shutting it? Most assuredly he will. Let us then, my brethren, plant our feet upon this precious promise, standing behind this almighty breastwork, fortified by a covenant-keeping God on the right hand, and on the left with past history as our rear guard, in meekness and firmness push the battle by "the sword of the Spirit" to the very entrance of the city of our God.

The devil will do his best to gather his scattered hosts, and rally his dismayed and wounded generals, to combine his shattered systems of rebellion and obstruction; but the day of unity is past with him. His formidable systematic combinations have had their day of strength and unity. It is now a day of dissolution, anarchy, and self-destruction. Confusion is seen in all his ranks. Though the cry, "Confederacy, confederacy," is the chief sound among the officers of Church and of State, yet they cannot hold themselves together. Selfishness and jealousy ruin all their strength. It is true that "the beast" of Rev. 17, and "the ten kings" will agree for a time,—long enough to make one strategic effort to outflank the Lamb; but he will bag them and secure them in Fort hades (Isa. 24: 22), until the time of "the lake of fire and brimstone (Rev. 21: 8), to receive "the second death."

With this view of things, I have no ghost of any combined power before me or the church to prevent us from the free exercise of our christian faith and action. No fears of any prowling "beast" that can lay his civil paw on the church of Christ, and put "his mark" on her, or hinder from her work by closing the door of utterance of the "certain sound" she is to give the trumpet in the day of separation. The beast will growl, scratch and bite some, but the tables are turned upon him, and God will keep him in check.

I doubt not guerrilla warfare will be carried on unto the end, and with many brisk attacks. The devil will flatter, boast, threaten, offer to buy up the saints, send spies among them, make traitors of some, send rebels to join their army, who will take the oath of allegiance. He will try to crush them. Perhaps some of us may be imprisoned,—may be killed, by squads of his servants; but I think we do not well to keep before us the idea of an awful power which is yet to crush us, and stop our work, and kill us, unless, indeed, it is a clearly revealed fact that such is to come. It greatly disheartens many, and intimidates most who really think it, causing them to slacken their hand for fear of consequences. Let us remember that in the times of the flood, of Jerusalem's overthrow, and of the future time of trouble (Dan. 12: 1–3), God did not allow the enemy to take away the liberties of his people. These are the three great revolutions in this world's history. Yours in the war.

Yarmouth, Me. I. C. WELLCOME.

Our Earthly House.

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."—2 Cor. 5: 1.

The first ten verses of this chapter is the summing up or conclusion of the subject introduced in the preceding one. The "earthern vessels" (4: 7,) are the ministers of Christ. "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body. For we which live (for Jesus' sake) are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh."—Verses 10. 11. Paul is certainly speaking of the mortal human body which is subject to dissolution. This dissolution must precede the resurrection spoken of in verse 14,—"Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you." Christ, therefore, is the building of of God. His risen body is the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens;" "from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."—Phil. 3: 20, 21. When our mortal bodies are thus fashioned after the similitude of Christ's glorious body, we shall be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven.

What then does Paul mean by being "absent from the body, and present with the Lord?" He is speaking of the living principle or spirit of life in man. While that spirit is in the body—this mortal flesh—it cannot at the same time be present with the Lord in heaven. But when it goes out of the body of the true christian, it is received by the Lord Jesus, else the prayer of dying Stephen was not answered. —Acts 7: 59. Jesus when dying commended his spirit into the hand of his Father.—Luke 23: 46. Paul had a desire to depart, and to be with Christ.—Phil. 1: 23. He speaks of himself as living in the flesh; hence the body is the tabernacle; and Peter, speaking of his decease, calls it putting off his tabernacle.—2 Pet. 1: 14, 15. Paul, addressing the churches in Galatia, says, "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ" (Gal. 3: 27;) then using the same figure as that employed in the text. To put on Christ is to be clothed upon with Christ. He exhorts the Romans to put on the Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. 13: 14;) and the Ephesians to put off the old man, and put on the new, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. Eph. 4: 13, 24. To the believing Colossians he writes, "ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." All these figures are borrowed from the change which will literally take place at the resurrection, when believers will put on the new man fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body, or be clothed upon with our house which will then come from heaven.

Now if believers may properly be said to put on Christ by a symbolical resurrection in baptism, with strict propriety may the change at the real resurrection be so denominated. When Paul speaks of being absent from the body, he speaks of the spirit of life; and although that spirit returns to God who gave it, yet Paul by a figure has clearly taught that it is hid. "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3: 3, 4. Those whom Paul addressed were not then literally dead; but unless their life would be literally hid with Christ from death until he shall appear, there would be no propriety in using such a figure. Therefore there can be no such thing as disembodied spirits recognizing each other in a disembodied state. Hence when Paul expressed a desire to depart, and to be with Christ, he spake of being with him in death as to his mortal body, while his life or spirit would be hid with him until the day of his appearing. The life is the principle part of man, and therefore Paul speaks of it as he himself. Christ teaches the same. Matt. 10: 28. "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Paul speaks of being dead with Christ, (Rom. 6: 8; 2 Tim. 2: 11;) of suffering with him (Rom. 8: 17; 2 Tim. 2: 12;) of being planted together in the likeness of his death (Rom. 5: 5. Hence the likeness or similitude is what the apostle means by being dead with Christ, and suffering with him. Living with him, and and reigning with him, are spoken of in the same connection, neither of which is promised until Christ who is our life shall appear.

Therefore Paul no more expected to be happy with Christ in heaven than he expected to suffer with him there. But death would relieve him from his sufferings which he endured for the elect's sake; hence his desire to depart, while at the same time he knew it was more needful for the Philippians and others that he should abide in the flesh and hence he desired to remain; and betwixt these two desires he was in a strait. ## Land of Glory.

There is a land of peaceful rest,
There the christian will be blessed;
All is fair, all is bright,
Land of glory, land of light.

There no storms arise,
There no tempests rend the sky;
All is spotless, all is white,
Land of glory, land of light.

Living splendor reigneth there,
Sweet perfumes fill the air;
Shining rivers, sparkling bright,
Land of glory, land of light.

Sinner, will you seek that land to-day?
Christ now calls, do not delay;
Its gilded towers are now in sight,—
Land of glory, land of light.

Come, now give me your hand,
And meet me in that heavenly land,
And with dear friends enjoy the sight,—
Land of glory, land of light.

Connubial.

Why this lack of conjugal happiness, and alarming increase of conjugal infidelity? If we can believe historic and statistic statements, we must conclude that this bane of society is greatly on the increase; and again we ask, why is it so? Why such an increase of petitions to our State Legislature for divorce? There is always a cause for every effect. Where there is an increase of wrong, there exists a sin of omission, or commission, against the divine law. If people would only adhere to the rules prescribed by the great Lawgiver, they would be far happier, parentally, filially, and conjugally. Do some think it beneath our Creator to prescribe rules in order to secure domestic happiness? It seems thus; and desiring information on the point, they seek books on the subject, whose authors rank among the first for literary merit. And this is all very well, to learn what they can of each other. These authors may amplify upon the principles laid down in Holy Writ; carrying out the same into the minutia of life, making a truthful and interesting book. But submitting all human authority, let us inquire of "Him who hath made and fashioned us together"; for surely He who made the sexes knows better what principles must be observed to facilitate their happiness than frail mortals.

The Creator says man is the head. 1 Cor. 11: 3. Now let us look a little longer into the gospel mirror, and I think we shall have a correct view of the basis on which conjugal happiness rests. The God of the Bible has positively declared that man is the head of the woman, and then gives her this very special charge—"And the wife see that she reverence her husband"! Question. Is it not wrong for one to put themselves where it is impossible to obey this command? The remark of a celebrated writer is true, that "we can never REVERENCE downwards." We can, and quite as often do perhaps, love inferiors, but we cannot reverence them. Inspiration commends Sarah, Abraham's wife, as the mother of all those daughters which "do well"; and let it be noticed that reverence to her husband is the reason assigned for such commendation! 1 Pet. 3: 6. There is, then, a principle, element or organ in the nature of man—his Creator has so formed him, and fully recognizes the same—that reverence is necessary on the part of the wife, to secure to him conjugal happiness.

We now come to the other side of the question, to inquire what principle, element or organ the Creator beholds in the nature of woman, requisite to be observed, in order to render her happy in the conjugal relation? Perhaps there is no language so pertinent as that of the apostle to the Ephesians 5: 25. "Husbands, LOVE your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." What comparison could be used equalling this? High as heaven! Deep as Divinity itself! Can anything make Christ forget to care for his church? Can anything cool the ardor of his affection towards his beloved, while she remains true, and does not seek other lovers? Never. Hear him declare—"I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Neither should the husband grow cold in his affection towards the wife of his bosom, or be so engrossed as to appear neglectful. If disposed ever thus to do, read this comparison, then take your reference Bible and turn and read the many others of similar import, and believe the God of heaven made woman to be loved, or he would not have given you such positive commands upon the subject. And if the wife be tempted to irreverence and usurpation, let her turn and read Eph. 5: 33, and remember meantime if she give way to this temptation she ceases to "do well," and thus cannot longer be recognized as Sarah's daughter. 1 Pet. 3: 6.

It is apparent from the very first that man's affectionate interest in his wife should exceed all other affection, so far as humanity is concerned. Yes, he who made the first happy pair would have them forsake father and mother and cleave to each other.

Perhaps there are very few who ever read the Crisis that need anything of this kind; but "all Scripture . . given by inspiration of God . . is profitable, . . . that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished." This is one piece of God's furniture, and belongs to Heaven's set: and if there seems to be no place in your temple it will fit, just convey it with all christian kindness to the one you suspect has need of it.

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER EIGHT.

XI.—PROBATION IN THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

That theory which carries probation into the world to come, is subversive of Divine testimony. If the ten virgins could procure "oil" after the coming of the Bridegroom, as well as before, what propriety in saying, "The Bridegroom came, and they that were READY went in . . . and the "door was shut." Matt. 25: 10. "Shut" against the unready. No more getting ready! The Revelator, in presenting the state of affairs in connection with the Savior's coming, remarks: "He which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still." Rev. 22: 11. No change of character then,—the filthy will "be filthy still"! Again, the Revelator portrays the dawn of the vengeful day, and adds: "The great day of his WRATH has come; and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. 6: 17. A day of "wrath"—not of probation; "and who shall be able to stand" —not who will accept probation.

Christ represents the sowing of only two kinds of seed,—wheat and tares,—and the harvest will be for the ingathering of the crop of wheat, and the destruction of the crop of tares; and as no third kind of seed is sown, no third crop is to be gathered, or left for probation. Paul informs us that Christ "shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God."—2 Thess. 1: 7, 8. Surely, "taking vengeance" is not offering probation! Christ, in bringing to view the second advent, tells us that "one shall be taken [to meet the Lord] and the other left"; but never intimates that they are left to enjoy another season of probation, but rather to "weep and wail"! John the Baptist tells us that "he will THOROUGHLY purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. 3: 12. Then everything but the wheat will be destroyed,—no changing of "chaff" into "wheat," through a new probation! Nothing left on the "floor" to mature into a subsequent wheat crop, but the purging work will be "thoroughly" done, and will not need to be repeated.

All men will be found in a state of condemnation or approbation, (to a greater or less degree,) at the advent, not excepting heathen or infants. In the absence of a superior law, conscience "accuses or excuses"; and those who sin without law must be judged without law. All who are condemned by the perfect law of God, or the imperfect law of conscience, will be destroyed; while those who receive their approbation will be saved. How large a proportion of the heathen will in this manner be condemned, I cannot say; but heathen living at the Advent will fare no better than heathen of preceding centuries,—no more probation for one than the other class.

His Coming.

"As the days of Noah were: so also shall the coming of the Son of man be."—MATT. 24: 37.

From the fall of man to the time of the flood, God had prophets to preach to the people righteousness. Some followed the teachings of his prophets, but mostly they waxed worse and worse, until "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." When their cup of iniquity was nearly full, God sent Noah, a preacher of righteousness, to warn them; but they believed him not.

But the ark was being prepared; this was the day of God's preparation, while Noah urged repentance upon them. But finally the day of grace closed; the ark was prepared, and they that were ready went in; the door was shut! And now the anger of God begins to be manifest in the blackness of the clouds, in the fierce howling winds, in the storm which sweeps over the face of the earth with impetuosity! The rain pours down in torrents. Time passes on, rain continues to fall; no sun has been seen for several days; no star is seen by night; nothing but the blackness of the darkness of despair remains to reflect upon the ghastly countenances of this desperate people. Ah! they run to and fro in amazement, asking counsel of their wise ones, but their wise ones are confounded; they find no help. Perhaps they run to the ark, but the master has risen up and shut to the door. There is no entering there. They might have entered; but, alas! the day of grace is past. So the vengeance of God swept them from off the earth. Now as those days were, so shall the coming of the Son of man be. Those days were, we notice, 1, Days of grace. 2, They had the preaching of the gospel of repentance. 3, They rejected this preaching. 4, God swept them all away in his wrath.

Now we know this to be the day of the Lord's preparation, because Nahum says so. And we know it is to be as the days of Noah were, because Jesus says so.

1. Is this a day of grace? Is God willing to receive penitent sinners? Is the door of mercy open? Is the ark of safety, Jesus Christ, in readiness to receive all who will come unto him? Does God desire the salvation of all mankind? Did God so love the world, "that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life?"

2. Noah preached repentance and forgiveness of sins through Christ who should come. Are there any preachers of righteousness in this day? Are the people urged to repentance, having the destruction of the world presented as inducement, as Noah preached, then by water, but now by fire, according to the word of the Lord; that the day of grace will cease? "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and great earthquakes shall be in diverse places, and famines, and pestilence; and fearful sights, and great signs shall there be from heaven. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear; and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Not then an Advocate with the Father. Not then to plead with sinners, nor for sinners, but as Judge. "For the Father judgeth no man, (John 5: 22), but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." As Jude tells us, "The Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all." "Who can stand before his indignation? and who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him. The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burned at his presence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein." "Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap."

John saw this day, and says: "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man, hid themselves in dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" But the rocks refuse to fall on them; the mountains cannot hide them, for the day of his wrath is come. And as in the days of Noah the ungodly were all swept off the earth by water, so in the coming of the Son of man, shall all the ungodly be swept off the earth by fire. Then, all who are not in Christ, the ark, will perish. We should learn from this,

1. As Noah ceased not to preach during the space of one hundred and twenty years, and that without evidence of success, or signs of repentance, so must we preach, whether men will hear or will forbear, that in the judgment men have no excuse, and leave the event with God.

2. That all who believe will be found in the ark, in safety.

3. That unbelievers must perish without remedy.

How important then that believers, who see the storm coming, should earnestly snatch sinners as brands from the burning!

The Faith of the Church.

NUMBER ONE.

"The faith which was once delivered unto the saints."—Jude vers. 3, 4.

The fact that there are traitors to God and his truth,—corrupters and perverters of his word, the apostle urges as an incentive upon the New Testament church to "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints." This class of men have always existed from the beginning, and in all ages of the world. They existed in the early days of christianity (1 John 2: 18), but were greatly to multiply and increase in numbers as we approximate the end of time, and the church and world more and more recede and apostatize from God. 1 Tim. 4: 1, 2; 2 Tim. 3d and 4th chapters.

The faith alluded to in the above quotation of Scripture is not that principle or christian grace by which we believe in God and credit what the Almighty saith in his Word; but that body of truth,—those great cardinal doctrines, which make up and embody the great leading truths of Divine Revelation. It is true we are to contend for faith as a christian principle and grace which should adorn every christian disciple. "The just shall live by faith"—"justified by faith," and other scriptural declarations, show the importance of faith. We should be men and women of faith; especially in these days when the fires of faith and hope are dying out in the christian church at large, of which the Savior has admonished us:—"Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" And truly, "The godly man ceaseth, and the faithful fail from among the children of men." But while we do this, we are more particularly to contend for that system of doctrines which constitute "the faith" delivered the church from on high, and which we are to receive and earnestly maintain against all encroachments of error and false doctrine that should prevail in a corrupt church and unbelieving world in the last times.

Beza says, "Great is the emphasis of the adverb 'once delivered'—which can never be afterward changed, and which being once lost there will remain no other hope of salvation." The curse of God is to fall on those who substitute any other gospel for the gospel of God, or add to, or subtract from, the words of the divine record. Gal. 1, Rev. 22: 18, 19. What shall we say then to that bold and defiant infidelity in this our day that dares to utter the following language:—"The orthodox doctrine that the portals of heaven were forever closed at the moment when the last sentence of the Apocalypse was written, is put into an endless sleep by the unfolding light of the nineteenth century. The doctrine proclaimed every Sabbath day that all necessary revelation is behind us, and that we must repose like unreasonable and confiding babes upon the bosom of patriarchal and biblical authority, is overthrown by the thousands of equally as good revelations made to us."

The fact that there are men who thus boldly advocate their infidel notions in all parts of our world and in our Zion, too, (for the church of God is not exempt from this class; nay, they seek to be considered christians, and choose often spiritual places the better to promulgate their errors, "and turn the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and deny the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ,") shows the necessity of our heeding the instruction of the apostle to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints."

In a few short articles, in the future, I design to point out some of the particular doctrines which make up the faith God has seen fit to reveal to his church, and which we are to embrace and faithfully maintain against error and infidelity to the end.

The Church in Buchanan, Mich.

BRO. GRANT:—The opinion may be entertained in some localities that the church of Adventists in this place has changed pastors; that Bro. and Sr. Mansfield have been discharged, and that others are laboring in their stead. With this impression many are inquiring what is the trouble? why the change so sudden? To such we would say, the church has made no such change. There is a church of believers in the speedy coming of Christ in this place, numbering one hundred and five members, in good standing. Harmony and love seem to be the prevailing element among all. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield have acted as pastors for us nearly six years, and are engaged until next Spring. They preach for the church in this place half the time; the remainder of the time they spend in destitute localities. The cause generally is prospering where they labor.

As a church we have at various times suffered much from the agitation of the peculiar views of some who teach "no spirit" but "the word," "probation in the age to come," and "remersion into the things concerning the kingdom." Notwithstanding all this, the church remains steadfast—holding two prayer meetings each week—meet for conference on the second Saturday, and breaking of bread the second Sabbath of each month.

We make these statements that there may be no misunderstanding in relation to the church in this place, of which Bro. and Sr. Mansfield are pastors, and are very highly esteemed for their work's sake.

The Boston Discussion.

Our debate in Boston with Eld. Gates commenced at the Meionaon, Monday evening, Nov. 17th, where it continued till Thursday evening, when we moved to the Chapel at the corner of Causeway and Lowell streets, where it was held till concluded. The debate has served to confirm the wavering, and settle their minds in the belief that no part of man is alive between death and the resurrection, and that God will literally destroy all the wicked, and give the whole earth to the saints. We call Eld. Gates our "Bishop," as he is "confirming" those who had before been unsettled in the important truth that man is mortal, and unconscious from death to the resurrection. Many were not aware of the strength of the proof in favor of this view, till they heard both sides presented. They now see clearly that the Bible is all on one side, and harmonious in its teachings.

The following are some of the assertions of our opponent:—

"God formed a spirit and put it into the angels." "Nero is alive." "The word pneuma is not applied to angels." "The bad angels are in the infernal regions." "Moses was in a disembodied state on the mount." "Jesus says Moses' spirit was on the mount." "Paradise is in sheol." "The spirits of the good are there." "Paradise is above."

He admitted that "Moses died and God buried him"; that "the devil uses fallen angels to carry on his work." He claimed that the spirits of wicked men are the ones who are operating by means of Spiritualism. We are led to inquire how they got out of sheol, where Eld. Gates says they are being punished at the present time. It seems as difficult to make error look plausible as to make "an empty bag stand upright." When all is so clear to our own mind on this subject, it seems strange that every one cannot see it. We feel as well satisfied on these points as we do that Jesus is our Savior, or that man will have any future existence.

During our debate the following points were examined:—Thief on the cross—rich man and Lazarus—transfiguration—Eccl. 12: 7—Paul's desire to depart—souls under the altar—spirits in prison—Matt. 10: 28—1 Cor. 5: 5—soul departing—new birth—receive my spirit—1 Pet. 3, 4—1 Kin. 17: 21, 22—death of Christ—Luke 8: 55—Zech. 12: 1—James 2: 6—Rom. 8: 16—Job 32: 8—2 Cor. 12: 1-4—Luke 24: 39—1 Cor. 14: 14—John 3: 5-8—2 Tim. 4: 22—Gal. 6: 18—1 Pet. 4: 6—1 Cor. 5: 3—Matt. 22: 32—inner man—Heb. 12: 22, 23.

On future punishment the following were examined:—Dan. 12: 2—Matt. 23: 14, Luke 20: 49—Matt. 25: 30—Matt. 25: 41, 46—unquenchable fire—smoke of their torment—second death.

"The Final Conflict."

Men, who have hitherto been indifferent to the evidences that indicate the immediate coming of Jesus, are beginning to awake to the solemn fact that his coming is now at the doors, when his children should stand ready to open to him at once. The scenes of this world are fast drawing to a close. The grand event about which the prophets and apostles wrote, and for which the saints have all been looking, is soon to be witnessed. But how few stand ready for the day. Every week gives additional evidence that the world generally, and the mass of professors, are as they were in the days of Noah and Lot. They seem utterly indifferent to all the signs of Christ's coming, and are as the foolish virgins in the parable. No effort, no exhortation, seems to produce any effect on their minds. They are spell-bound by the spirit and manners of the world, and rushing headlong to perdition. He who would admonish them is called a "croaker," and shunned for his supposed folly in sounding an alarm when there is no danger. The people will listen to him who will cry "peace and safety," as did the church anciently to the false prophets. They love smooth things, for which they will pay liberally, while they spurn the humble servant of the Most High, who is sent to sound the last warning note. Let us not be "weary in well doing." The reaping time is at hand.

We copy the following from the Circular, published in Oneida, N. Y.

"The final conflict for the possession of this world has begun. The kingdom of hell with the devil and his angels at its head, is making its last struggle for foothold and dominion on this earth. Satan is loosed from the bottomless pit and has gone forth to gather the nations, Gog and Magog, to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. That battle can be fought on no low issues of political expediency."

"These are the days in which the God of Heaven hath declared he will set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; a kingdom which shall not be left to other people, but which shall break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms and shall stand forever. To those who look below the surface of things, that kingdom is not far off, and the way for its complete manifestation in this world is rapidly preparing. Let all those who believe in it draw near to it in heart, and lift up the standard of the Sovereignty of Jesus Christ."

Foreign Intervention.

A dark cloud is rising from the eastern continent, which is evidently moving in the direction of the American shores. The time appears to be near at hand, when revolutions will be piled up upon our planet. No encouraging aspect can be seen from any quarter. All is gloomy darkness. Men are trembling at the approach of coming events.

A correspondent of the Boston Journal, under date of Nov. 8th, writes:—

"The feeling in Europe is described by Mr. Cameron as strongly savoring of intervention, and this feeling is strongly increasing in consequence of the continued inactivity of the Federal arms. In England it is thought that no active intervention will take place until Parliament meets. The success or failure of the present campaign will probably decide the matter, and only decided victories on our side will dispel the idea, in his opinion. It is generally understood in England that a rebel naval attack on our Atlantic cities is in preparation. Three immense iron-clad steam rams, the most powerful ever constructed, are building in English ship yards, and with these it is supposed that the rebels with attack our Northern cities. They have an especial desire to make a dash at New York, and even if the enterprise were but partially successful, the presence of rebel war vessels in New York harbor, if only for an hour, would have a great effect abroad.

There is a secession club in Liverpool numbering three hundred members, who provide funds to furnish vessels to run our blockade. No individual member of this society is allowed to know what any other member contributes.

The sympathy for the rebels in England is daily increasing, and delay in a Federal advance is interpreted as a tacit admission of our inability to cope with the enemy.

Mr. Cameron thinks that the fortifications of New York should be at once attended to, and is surprised that the danger of an attack on our city is not more fully appreciated here."

State of Things in Europe.

The political aspect of Europe is far from being encouraging. Revolutionary war clouds look more and more threatening. All are preparing for a terrible storm, but each government seems unwilling to begin the bloody scene. It is now the hour of "PREPARTION." All the men of war appear to be awake, and girding on their armor for the bloody conflict. The following is from The Catholic of Nov. 15th, 1862:—

"The elements of disunion, which are at work in Europe, cannot much longer be directed or controlled. A general war seems imminent, in which England will not be on the side of France. This may stay the progress of the revolution, but, we fear, its day of success must come. To use the words of an attentive observer, 'Europe is honeycombed with secret societies.' These are an element whose influence escapes all calculation, and renders nugatory all speculations based on ordinary grounds of policy. God alone can give peace and quiet to perturbed society."

A VALUABLE BOOK.—Have you read "Muller's Life of Trust"? If not, you will be richly paid by a perusal. It is a work of 490 octavo pp., giving an account "of the Lord's dealings with Geo. Muller, written by himself." "The Lord's dealings with Geo. Muller," are, probably, the more remarkable than with any other man living, from the simple fact that his trust is more wonderful. We have a few copies for sale at the Crisis office. Price $1.25, postage 27 cts.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.—The price of books and paper have advanced so much, that we feel under the necessity of asking $1.50 for the Concordance, including postage, or $1.25 without postage. This book was formerly sold for $1.50, but has been down to a low price for the last few years. It is a work that every Bible student should possess.

Hillside Manual Labor School.

We believe we are doing a favor to our readers by giving them some information relative to the "Hillside Manual Labor School," located in Amherst, N. H. The plan adopted just meets our views as to the best manner of getting an education; and as many parents are anxious to send their children where they can pay their expenses by their own labor, we take pleasure in giving them information concerning this institution. The following from their circular, will give some idea of the plan:—

"The special object of this school is to furnish an opportunity for the young of both sexes to educate THEMSELVES. We have therefore endeavored to curtail all unnecessary expense, to furnish work, as far as possible, to faithful students, and to guard the moral influences with the utmost care. At present, students who are earnest and efficient will be provided with work to pay their whole expense—if desired. The past two years' experience has convinced us that students who are in health can earn enough while pursuing their studies to pay their whole expense, without retarding their intellectual progress, and with advantage to their health.

A reasonable charge will be made for cooking, and students will choose the sort of food they prefer—either more or less expensive—and pay its cost. We find that most, after trial, prefer food of such sort that the whole cost of board, room furnishing, wood and lights, will be only about one dollar and thirty cents per week.

Students will find their own tools, and furnish their own sleeping rooms. Each should bring one pair sheets, one pair pillow cases, one comforter, or its equivalent, under bed sack, towels, fork, spoon and napkins. Other articles of furniture can be purchased or hired after arriving, if preferred.

Classes will be formed in Latin, Greek and Mathematics, preparatory to college, Vocal Music and Elocution, Systematic Vocal Drill, Book-Keeping, Penmanship, Phonography, Drawing, Painting, Instrumental Music, and also in the Common Branches. Special attention will be given to those preparing for colle e

H. E. BROWN, Principal.
E. B. HARTSHORN, H. JANE HARTSHORN, } Proprietors.
Amherst, N. H., 1862.

Hillside is on a retired farm between Amherst and Manchester, with which there is a tri-weekly communication by stage. We desire no students but those who delight to overcome difficulties for the sake of preparation for usefulness, and such we love to encourage in every way possible."

The following is from the Manchester American:

"It is the design of the Manual Labor School at Amherst, N. H., to furnish to worthy young men and women—whose means are limited—an opportunity to acquire an extensive education. Those who have no money stand an equal chance with the rich;—for students who labor for their whole expense learn faster, and have better health than those who labor none. For particulars address H. E. Brown, A. B. Principal."

E. B. Hartshorn, one of the proprietors, writes:—"Our great object is to assist the christian students in preparing to work for God. . . . Religion is our greatest end. . . . Our teachers are superior, and are earnest christians."

We wish success to the Hillside school. We are glad to learn that special attention is paid to the diet, thus establishing a sound physical constitution to endure vigorous mental action. May the Lord bless the institution.

Report of the Committee on the Hymn Book.

Having been appointed to consider the propriety of publishing a new hymn book, and as there may be many anxious to hear from us upon the subject, we have concluded—

First, We cannot see the way sufficiently clear to demand the publication of said book at this time. Second, We wish to be discharged from being considered under obligation to take further action upon the said book.

Protracted Meetings.

The time has come to hold protracted meetings; and as many such produce but little effect because the plans were not matured properly, and the preacher then is blamed, or he feels disappointed,—this work must have a plan, and must be done according to the plan.

First. Let the church or people be agreed in the thing, and on the time, place, and preachers. Unless there is agreement in all these things, you will fail.

Second. All must agree to make a sacrifice, and state what they will do to support the meeting. Such a course will secure an understanding and a combined effort, which is a command of the apostles.

Some meetings are spoiled by not having a general understanding, especially where there are one or two persons that think a great deal of being consulted, otherwise they will set backwater and clog the wheel, by finding fault or telling others how they had been slighted, etc.

Third. Let all agree to plan their business so as to come to meeting. Nothing is so discouraging as to have one half or more of the brethren stay away from meeting, and part of the rest come after the meeting begins,—some fifteen to twenty minutes. Such persons I have noticed seldom do anything except to sit and hear, and sometimes sleep. Such hinder instead of helping. First, their coming late confuses the congregation, and that confuses the preacher, and they put the meeting back more than they are belated. So one lazy attendant two minutes behind will take away twenty minutes from each member that had made a sacrifice and was at his post in season. Have a time, and be there at that time, or God will not bless you. This stringing along into meeting until it is half out, kills more meetings than any one thing I know of. Such heedlessness is the first cause of some congregations being always behind in commencing their meetings.

Fourth. Be agreed in coming; be in time in coming. Commence at the time, and all do something, and then all will get something. God pays for doing, not for sitting, seeing and hearing, or sleeping. Some are getting wise above what is written, or been practised in purer ages of the church. They seem to rely more on what they know and believe, than on what they do. They disregard the works of their sires in the church who begat them, by publicly acting, and privately saying, the mourner's bench, or rising for prayers, is of the past. Others, baptism and the communion are mere forms. Such characters are as disagreeable in time of a reformation as sand in bread. God blesses the same simple means of expressing our sincerity and conviction now as when we knew less. Let us go to work on the old plan, such as have a mind to work, and let these lazy, barren speculators die in their own nest. God will and does bless the old means.

"Wayside Gleanings."

Read the testimony of those who have read it. Says one, "I have long been desiring the book I obtained from you; I prize it very highly."

Another. "Let me thank you for the handsomely bound volume of beautiful and highly talented poems you sent me. It is certainly a remarkable production, and an evidence of a refined and cultivated mind. The religious views and feelings are of no ordinary character."

A young lady writes:—"I have been reading it with great interest, and the doctrines there set forth. These views are entirely new to me; but I pray and trust that if they are true, God will lead me into this and all truth. It does seem to me now that it must be true. I would not change the belief that I have held and been taught from my youth rashly, and trust I may consider it carefully, and finally be led to the truth. Whichever way I decide will make no difference with my purposes and life; yet we ought not to rest in doubt when God gives us the light."

It is well calculated to interest young people in the truth and cause of Christ. Send for a copy; read, and lend to others. For sale by J. Parry, Sandy Hill, N. Y., and at the Crisis and Harbinger offices. Price 60 cts., postpaid.

An Allegory.

BRO. GRANT:—Being invited by one of the King's cupbearers to go up to Halifax with him to attend the "Pilgrim Conference," held for the purpose of rebuilding the walls of the Spiritual Jerusalem of the Congregational Churches of the Pilgrim Society; and having a desire to see and hear how the work progressed, I accepted the invitation, and went with the cupbearer on Wednesday, Oct. 22d, 1862.

Quite a large number were convened in the sanctuary; and I was surprised, as well as much amused, to hear in the report of one King of Carver that the work on his division of the walls was much hindered by a band of Millerites in that vicinity. Said the old King—(who has worn the clerical robes for nearly half a century, and whose head is whitened with the snows of eighty winters)—"our work is making no progress; there is in our vicinity a band of Millerites, who hold their meetings regularly on the Sabbath, and I am told these meetings are well attended. These people hold to divers and strange doctrines. 1st. That men have no souls. 2nd. That those who believe in Christ inherit eternal life. 3d. Those who do not embrace Christ will be finally annihilated; and this heresy draws numbers away from the work of building again the walls of our Jerusalem, and the work is going down."

Now Sanballot the Horonite was there, and he laughed. And furthermore said the old King: "One of those Millerites gave me two books to read, upon my promising to read them; but after I had perused them a few minutes, I thought I could not spend my time so foolishly, so I broke my promise to read them. But the effects of their teachings are very deleterious upon the work, and the workmen are falling off." At the close of the old King's report, Sanballot said, "Ye will not come to the light, that ye may believe."

In contemplation of the above facts in regard to the heathenism in Carver, it seems very desirable that something be done to convert those people from their errors. Is it not advisable, Bro. Grant, that missionaries be sent there to teach them? Not, that men have no souls; or, that men have souls; but, that men are souls. I think it would be well to send such missionaries as Bro. McCandis, to whom we listened with pleasure last Sabbath.

Correspondence.

From I. K. Lombard.

BRO. GRANT:—Since I last wrote, I have given up preaching in two places east from here. In the one locality, there could be no place obtained to hold meetings, the Methodists assuming control, and shut us out. In the other, there was some interest, but less appreciation of truth; and as I had to travel fifteen miles on foot, and the same back, to attend the appointment, I could not feel it duty to follow up my attention to that place.

I have one place left in the region east from here, twelve miles distant. This is where I was met in controversy by the Methodist preacher as mentioned in my last. He has since commenced meetings there, to continue once a week. He says he feels it his duty as a servant of God to put down this dangerous doctrine. The principle is a good one, if properly applied, and I will give him credit for more regard for this principle than some of his brethren have. He has been to hear me two discourses since, but declined to comment upon the subject considered. He seemed to aim rather to gain material for discourses against me in my absence, so I gave him three or four tracts. I thought if he would keep up the agitation of the points at issue, the candid and discriminating would learn the truth from him in time, and so save me all the labor of agitation.

I have tried to get the Court house, about three miles from this place, for preaching, and in the place where this preacher lives; but I have failed to obtain it, though I tried my best. The reasons were obvious to all; but as the Lord will open the door where he wants his servants to go, I do not feel that the failure to get the privilege of preaching there, is any disaster to the interests of the cause. They had sent word several times that if I went there to preach, they would ride me on a rail; and though I had no fears of personal violence, I thought such indications of alarm invited my efforts in that direction. However, as I say, the Lord knows best where we should labor, and I am content with the result.

In the region west from here, the interest has been more promising. Have opened a field in four places, and have failed to preach in two others. One of the places I have given up as an unpromising field, and one other does not encourage much attention; but two remain in which the interest is good—one of them very good. This one is Longacoming. The progress of the cause there has been warmly contested by the Methodists and others, but the truth has found a lodgment in the minds of community generally, in spite of their opposition. I have given liberty to ask questions and make objections at the close of my discourses, which has been generally improved, sometimes by preachers, but always for the good of the cause of truth. This controversy has been very valuable to the inquirers, in that it has, as it were, done their thinking for them. They can see the force of truth and the weakness of error, when their claims are fairly arrayed by their respective friends. I am convinced that this mode of dealing with the truth has done more to establish its claims in the minds of that community than my preaching has. When I went there, three months since, I could scarcely find a place to stop. All, or nearly all, listened with idle curiosity, or with a frown. Sometimes the congregations were small, and sometimes none at all. They generally persisted that I was a Universalist, if they relied upon hearsay; and if they came to hear they could hardly muster courage enough to assert their convictions in view of the pressure of public sentiment. But curiosity brought people out, and controversy opened their eyes, while preaching encouraged the impressions; till now the general sentiment of community partakes of a decided partiality for the teachings of the Bible on "the life and death theme." The meetings are now fully attended, and the preaching is listened to with much interest. The class of hearers is better here than in any other locality where I have labored. I now have no difficulty in finding a home while in the place, but have more invitations than I can well answer.

At Williamstown, nine miles from here, I have preached four discourses, making two visits. There was a bitter opposition to me from the Methodists when I went there. They did their best to keep me out of the town hall, a place which is open for political meetings, concerts, and every thing that is going through the country. One of the trustees was a Methodist, who at the first gave permission, and then took it back with unyielding determination to oppose me. The other was no professor, a liquor seller and hotel keeper. He insisted that I should go in and occupy the hall. The first evening, with eight hours notice, I had eighty or ninety hearers. The next about twice as many, with good attention. The first trip there I was left with no other invitation but to stop at a liquor hotel. But the landlord is a kind-hearted man, and I have no doubt the arrangement was from the Lord. I have reason to feel grateful to him for his kindness when friends were few. May the Lord reward him.

The second trip here I had about eighty or more hearers at each meeting, and welcomes to several places. But I can see that a part of the interest arises from political prejudice, and I fear more than half of it, though there are some prompted by a genuine interest in the cause of truth.

I think my way is being hedged up here of the Lord, as I am now reduced to two, or perhaps three places to labor. They are all twelve miles from here, and no nearer than ten miles to each other. This does not afford me places enough to labor in, as I wish to make it my constant business during the winter months. I cannot get any other openings near by, and I am compelled to travel nearly half of each day, which is a poor way to spend my time, and is rather a tax upon my energies.

I am not yet decided where to go, but think I shall go soon. I have a pressing invitation to go to Wisconsin; some expect me to go to Illinois; but it is possible that I shall go to Central Ohio first, yet I know not where, and pray the Lord to direct. I think the Lord will send a servant to Longacoming occasionally from Philadelphia.

Hammonton, N. J.

From Bro. C. W. Smith.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—In my loneliness, I take my pen to address a few lines to you. And oh, how lonely! On the 1st day of Oct., we were called to lay our darling little son in the cold, silent grave. It was hard to yield him up to the demands of the dread destroyer; but we consoled ourselves with the promise that he should "come again from the land of the enemy." Scarcely had this wound in my heart commenced to heal, ere my dear companion was taken suddenly ill, and on the morning of the 23d of the same month, the great enemy claimed her as his victim. O, tell me not that death is a friend! I shall ever look upon him as a friend, who will come and destroy death, and bring again from his cold embrace the loved ones he has taken from me. Asenath was sick only about ten days. During that time she suffered a great deal, but with patient resignation. She felt conscious her work was nearly done, and seemed not at all startled when it became evident that there was no probability of her recovering. O how consoling it was to think that her work of repentance and obedience (which was commenced in very early life, from which time it has been faithfully persevered in), had not been left to be performed on a sick bed, while her body was suffering such severe pain.

On the morning before my companion died, she asked me to sing the first verse of Bro. Hastings' hymn,—

"My Father, let me live when mortal scenes are o'er."

She united with us in singing it. During the day we frequently spoke of the probability of our soon being separated. She seemed to regret leaving me alone to contend with the trials of life; but in view of the troubles which she was satisfied were soon coming on the earth, she seemed to have no desire, on her own part, to recover. She manifested an unwavering confidence in her Savior, saying that the resurrection through Jesus was her only hope. A short time before she expired, I asked her if she feared to go? She replied, "No, I long to be there." Wishing to know if, in her last moments, her mind was fixed at all upon a state of immediate consciousness, I asked her where she longed to be? She replied, "I long to fall asleep in Jesus." She took her leave of the children, and the relatives present, individually; giving to each some appropriate advice; and gave me a parting kiss, and bade me good bye with as much composure as though she were going on a visit to return in a few days. And, dear Bro., we felt that it would be but a short time before we should meet again.

I cannot tell you how deeply I feel this loss. Being personally acquainted with us, and knowing our circumstances as you did, you can form some estimate of my feelings, left as I am with five little ones, between the ages of three and eleven years; and I know your sympathizing heart will feel for me in this severe affliction. I know that it is customary to eulogize the dead; but I feel confident that those who know her best will not accuse me of exaggeration, when I say that in her death I have lost one of the most faithful of companions, devoted of mothers, and virtuous and self-denying of women. [We know this to be true.—Ed.]

Her mother told me, since she died, that she never told Asenath to do a thing twice. United in youth as we were, our minds had matured together,—we seemed to be of one mind,—and it seemed almost impossible that we should be separated.

At her funeral, Eld. Noah Johnson, of Green Garden, Ill., administered to us words of consolation, from 1 Thess. 4: 18; showing faithfully what the comfort was which the word of God affords under such trying circumstances. Fourteen years ago this month, this faithful servant of God united us together in marriage, among the green hills of Vermont. What changes have been brought about in this short period of time! I feel that the word of God warrants me to expect, ere another period of equal length shall have rolled around, to be again reunited with my companion and little one in the kingdom of God. Pray for me, dear Bro., that this severe affliction, which is truly grievous, may be sanctified to me for my good, and bring forth the peaceable fruits of righteousness. Your Bro. in affliction, looking for consolation through Jesus.

Oswego, Ill.

My dear Bro. in the ministry, may God sustain you in your deep affliction, and permit us to meet at the marriage supper of the Lamb, with all your happy family in the heavenly circle. I shall never forget the pleasant hours we spent together at your happy home in Rutland, Vt.; but thank the Lord, there are brighter days to come. Soon the tears will be wiped away, and eternal joy illumine your saddened heart.—Ed.

From F. W. Blanchard.

BRO. AND SRS. IN CHRIST:—I have been thinking some of you perhaps might wish to hear from me, especially those in Hartford, with whom I have formed such pleasant associations. While I am removed far from you, and am obliged to associate with those who are constantly blaspheming the name we love, my mind and interest are with those dear friends with whom I have so often met at Central Hall and Sister Lamb's. I hope the time is not far distant when I can meet with you again, and mingle our prayers together, and talk of the love of a risen Savior. My prayer to God is, that the kingdom that was promised to the faithful may soon be established, and war and everything that mars our happiness may be done away.

I receive the Crisis every week. It is like the "good Samaritan" to me. I deem it one of the best papers ever published. May God give you strength and means, Bro. Grant, and others connected with the publication of the Crisis, to continue in the good work until our Savior shall appear to reward his faithful.

If it were not for the hope I have in the soon coming of my blessed Savior, my heart would fail me for fear of the things that are coming on the earth. The dark clouds are gathering over the world that will soon burst and reveal to us the hope of our salvation. O blessed hope! May that time soon come. Dear friends, pray for me, that I may be found with my lamp trimmed and burning. I have no one here that I can talk with upon this interesting subject. They cannot comprehend it. They are filled with the traditions of men. The light of the soon coming of Jesus is hid from their eyes. The dark mantle of superstition has hid from their eyes the beauty and harmony that is revealed in God's word.

Camp Schenck, Washington, D. C.

From O. D. Woodruff.

BRO. GRANT:—The blessed hope is our all. Faith in the promises is all there is left in these last days to cheer the pilgrim on his journey. We had a prayer meeting last evening, and we could truly say it was a heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus. To-night we go to a school-house in the outskirts of the town to hold a meeting, by request from the people. We feel that if we would enjoy that liberty that the gospel gives, we must work; and the Lord opens the way for us. We find an interest among the people to hear. Last Sunday we held a meeting in the school-house where we have met during the past summer frequently, and the Lord worked. His Spirit was poured out, and a realizing sense of the dangers that threaten the world at the present time was felt. Truly it was good to be there. Two or three gave in their testimony filled with praise to God and the Lamb.

There is indeed joy for the pilgrim who patiently continues on in the narrow way. The world cannot take it from him; but the rest, the crown, the prize, at the end of the journey, even eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ, eclipses all our trials, and we feel to say,

"Hasten, Lord, hasten the glorious day!"

Southington, Ct., Nov. 6th.

From R. Phinney.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say that I am anxious to do what good I can to and for my fellows, and to help, if possible, some to purify themselves through the word and Spirit. I am traveling and preaching all I can, and mostly at my own expense; still I am only doing my duty, and will have my reward when the Lord comes at the last day. This hope of life and inheritance causes me now to deny myself of all but necessaries, that I may the more preach and labor with poor man, whose end I can plainly see by looking into the great mirror, the Bible. It casts no false reflections, but every thing we see there is true. All men can plainly see themselves and their end. God have mercy upon the professors! RALPH PHINNEY.

Cambria Mills, Mich.

Bro. D. T. TAYLOR, Castleton, Vt., writes:—"God is reviving his work in Poultney, Rutland, and Castleton, and we expect greater blessings are yet in store. Pray for us."

Resisting the Draft.

Bro. W. Wendell, of Boltonville, Washington Co., Wis., writes:—"On the 10th inst., the U. S. Commissioners began to draft men in this State for the war. The Germans in this, and Ozaukee counties are determined to resist. Troops have been sent from Milwaukee to Port Washington (the Co. seat of Ozaukee Co.) and to West Bend (the Co. seat of Washington Co.), for the purpose of enforcing the draft. The Germans are holding meetings in different parts of these two counties for the purpose of organizing an armed resistance to the authorities of the U. S. At Port Washington, on the day of drafting, an infuriated mob assembled, did much damage to the Court House and other property, and nearly killed one of the men engaged in drafting. The American population stand in great fear that we are upon the eve of a civil war in its most terrible form. Truly, perilous times have come."

Obituary Notices.

Died, in East Poultney, Vt., Nov. 6th, 1862, of typhoid fever, after a few days severe illness, Bro. A. B. HERRICK, aged 46 years.

The loss of our brother so unexpectedly inflicted upon us is severely felt, not only by a sorely stricken family, but also by a church that loved him well, and by the entire community in which he lived. A quiet and industrious man, a faithful citizen, a devoted husband, a wise parent, a kind and obliging neighbor, conscientiously upright in all his dealings, an ardent lover of those Bible truths which make peculiar the people of his choice, his sudden departure from our midst has cast a gloom upon all to whom he was known, and left a beloved wife and three affectionate sons to mourn his death, with a large circle of more distant relatives.

God seems to be choosing our dear sister H. "in the furnace of affliction." A mother, a son, sacrificed upon the altar of his country, and now a husband, have been torn from her, one after another, death's visits granting her pierced heart scarce time to heal ere freshly rent with sorrow. May hers be the faith

"That will not murmur nor complain
Beneath the chastening rod,
But, in the hour of grief and pain
Can lean upon its God."

From the prayer of the Psalmist, "Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am" (Ps. 39: 4), suggested by the suddenness of death's approach upon its strong and unsuspecting victim, the writer addressed some practical thoughts to those assembled at his burial, and some words of comfort to the afflicted. H. F. C.

Died, in Lockport, N. Y., Oct. 23d, of consumption, ELLA FINN, daughter of Uriah Finn, in the 19th year of her age.

For three years past, Ella professed to love Jesus; and now, we trust, she sleeps in his embrace. She was truly a lovely child, and the most pleasant corpse I think I ever saw. When He who is our life shall appear, we hope with her to share his glory. May we, and all her dear friends and relatives, live with this blessed end constantly in view. Amen. The funeral was attended by the writer, Oct. 25th, 1862. The text was Hosea 6: 1–3.

LINES ON THE DEATH OF ELLA.

Dear Ella is no more!
Her eyes are closed in death;
Her breast, that heaved but yesterday,
Has yielded up its breath.

Yet there's a smile upon her brow,
That looks most dear to me;
Oh, must I part with her so soon!
My God, how can it be!

Oh! Lord, my heart has long
Been clinging to this chi[ld];
She was so very kind to me,
So very meek and mild.

Her gentle voice I loved,
Her wants were all my own;
It was a pleasure to relieve,
Whene'er she made them known.

But, ah! there was a foe
Too strong for me to face;
Death holds his victim now,
She's cold in his embrace.

• • • •

But death will be destroyed,
His work forever cease;
And those he's held so long
Be freed from his embrace.

• • • •

And then the earth renewed
Will be our blest abode;
With Jesus for our King,
We'll ever be with God.

Lockport, N. Y. U. FINN.

[Harbinger, please copy.

Died, Oct. 24th, 1862, Dr. ARASTUS DOOLITTLE, of New York, aged 68 years.

Our brother was one of the first in this city who embraced the doctrine of the Advent, preached here by Bro. Miller and others, as well as the doctrine of life only through Christ, by a resurrection from the dead; and firmly adhered to these precious truths, and zealously advocated them on all occasions when an opportunity presented itself. Our brother has been called to pass through scenes of great affliction and trial, and many times his faith has been put to the test. But he wavered not. His sole trust was in that God whom he never found to fail him in time of need. His hand and heart were always open to sustain the truth, as far as he had it in his power; and many of our preachers can testify to his kindness. His last affliction was severe, but he felt the kind hand of his heavenly Father to sustain him and bear him up.

When the writer visited him on the day before he died, and said to him, "Dear Bro., you will not have to sleep long." He said, "Oh, no!" And when I said, "Dear Bro., I hope soon to meet you in the kingdom with all the ransomed hosts;" his countenance brightened up and he said, "Oh, yes!" and his heart was full of joy at the thought, which caused him to weep for joy. He now sleeps in Jesus, relying upon the precious promise of his Master, whom he has served for many years,—"I will raise him up at the last day."

Our dear Bro. George Storrs preached on the funeral occasion, at his residence, to a number of friends and acquaintances, from the encouraging words of Paul in 1 Cor. 15: 26,—"The last enemy, death, shall be destroyed." From which he showed that death was an enemy, and not a friend, as is generally supposed by the Orthodox ministry, to introduce the soul through the gate to endless joy and a blessed immortality. Our Bro. expected to sleep for a little while, until the trump of God should wake him from his slumbers, as Bro. Storrs showed he could not be holden of death; for Jesus says, "He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." The prayer of the writer is that we may all follow Jesus, and be found of him in peace when he comes.

FRANCE.

An advance in the rate of discount by the Bank of France was anticipated on the day the steamer sailed.

It is reported that the discussions in the French Cabinet regarding the Roman questions are warmer than ever. It is also stated that a majority of the Ministers are quite disposed to resign unless the Emperor resolves to give Rome to the Italians.

LATER.

The Paris correspondent of the Times gives a rumor that France has made overtures to Russia in favor of the great powers making a move toward mediation or the recognition of the Confederates.

The Morning Herald learns that the proposal of France for joint intervention to recommend the suspension of hostilities, has been laid before the governments of Russia and England, and agreed to, by the former.

Garibaldi has been removed to Pisa, by the advice of his physicians.

The King of Prussia has a private treasure of his own of more than $12,000,000. During the last three years he has added to it about $2,400,000. No wonder the people are poor.

During the past thirty years, over one hundred christian churches have been organized in Africa, embracing more than 15,000 hopeful converts. Connected with them are nearly 200 schools, embracing 16,000 native youth, receiving a christian education.

The Viceroy of Egypt has lately presented to the American Mission at Cairo a valuable building for their especial use. He is very kindly disposed toward the missionaries, and lends them the aid of his countenance and friendship.

A late Hindoo paper, in advocating the introduction of the Bible into Government schools, says:—"As every joint of the sugar cane from the root to the top is full of sweetness, so every page of the Bible is fraught with the most precious instructions. A portion of that book would yield to you more of sound morality than a thousand other treatises on the same subject."

The translation of the whole Bible into the Chinese language was completed at Shanghai on the 27th of March, 1862. The work was commenced March 17, 1851, by a committee of five, of whom the late Dr. Bridgman was one, and was finished by Rev. M. S. Culbertson, D. D. The translation of the Word of God into a language spoken by three or four hundred millions of people is a great event.

LATER.

Liverpool, Nov. 15th, Queenstown, 16th.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The English Government has dissented from the French proposal for mediation in America.

There have been dreadful political murders in Japan.

A rifled six hundred pounder gun is rapidly approaching completion at Elswick, England. Its weight when finished will be 22 1-2 tons, and its length 14 feet 4 inches at the breech, and 1 foot 9 1-2 inches at the muzzle.

The dynasty of Otho, as far as the Greek people are concerned, is gone forever. Even his officers and the men employed about his person did all that they could to further the revolution. He has not left behind, it is said, a solitary partisan.

There have been various rumors about attempted assassinations of the Emperor Louis Napoleon. It is a common belief that if the Emperor persists in preventing the unity of Italy there are members of the Carbonari Society, to which he formerly belonged, who are sworn to kill him.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

The State authorities of New York have decided not to enforce the draft until after the meeting of Congress, when they will endeavor to be relieved from it entirely.

A special dispatch from Washington to the Post says it is believed that an attack on Charleston, S. C., will not long be postponed, and one or more iron-clads will participate. The rebels are making great preparations to defend it. The proposed attack seems to suit the wishes of both the army and navy, as it is considered just the treasonable city that should be destroyed.

The Indians have recommenced hostilities along the upper Missouri. A short time ago a boat containing a number of settlers from the neighborhood of Fort Benton were attacked about one hundred and fifty miles below Fort Berthold, by a large band of "Yanctons" and "Medicine Beards," and five persons were wounded. It is considered unsafe to venture down the Missouri river in an open boat.

The stealing of Indian children and selling them for slaves is becoming quite a business in California. About one hundred have been taken through Lake county the present season.

The New York Times thus summarizes a part of the last military news from Mexico:

"It appears that during the preceding fortnight, French forces, infantry, cavalry and artillery, numbering altogether 13,800 men, landed at Vera Cruz. This force, added to that previously in the country, gives the French an army of 20,000 men. From the best data that can be obtained, there is reason to believe that from 5000 to 10,000 French troops will be landed during the present month, to complete the Emperor Napoleon's invading force. This army of invasion, numbering from 25,000 to 30,000 well equipped and efficient soldiers—some of the best in the Emperor's army—we learn from French sources, is expected to move from Orizaba, its base of operations, upon the City of Mexico, some time during the coming month of December."

To meet this force the Mexicans are rallying with remarkable unanimity. Nearly all the partisan leaders are co-operating with the Juarez Government, and it is said that a well-officered and effective army of about 50,000 men is now ready for the field. We may, therefore, expect rather exciting news from Mexico by the opening of the new year.

A well known planter living not far from New Orleans, wrote last spring that four of his slaves, who had run away to the Yankees, had returned. "They have had enough of liberty and were glad to come back." But in his next letter to the North he told a different tale. The four had run away again, and had taken with them two hundred more.

Fernando Wood, who claims to be the originator of the "conservative reaction" which has arrayed several States against the administration, reiterated his treasonable threat of a change of measures or a change of men, at a speech made to the Democracy in Mozart Hall on Tuesday evening. He said, as reported in the New York Tribune:

"The people had set their seal of condemnation upon the unconstitutional and imbecile Administration who now ruled over us; and he would now say, as he had said last spring—when he started the ball in motion which had culminated in this great civil, constitutional revolution, we must have 'a change of measures or a change of men.' 'If there was not a change of policy, the great civil revolution would be followed by another revolution, which would hurl from power and place the corrupt and imbecile Administration which now usurped the government." (Great cheering.)

Washington, Nov 20. The property of Timothy Shugerne in this city, valued at from $40,000 to $60,000, has been confiscated by the Provost Marshal. Mr. Shugerne is now in Dixie.

Philadelphia, Nov. 22. The Washington Star says an impression prevailed here yesterday that Gen. Early's and Gen. Mackall's divisions of Jackson's corps were advancing upon Washington. We, however, state that if Jackson comes in this direction with less than 100,000 men, that Gen. Heintzelman will hardly let him get back to the mountains.

The Rev. Mr. Manning, in the course of a recent speech at Boston Tremont Temple, said:—"When the curtain rises in Heaven to reveal the purest saint, we shall see John C. Fremont, Gen. Hunter, Henry Ward Beecher, Wendell Phillips and Lloyd Garrison, as the purest saints in Heaven."

PAPER RAGS. When pedlers paid a cent and a half a pound, and that too in tin ware, for paper rags, there was little inducement for the housekeeper to save her scraps of cloth. But the times have changed, and rags are now worth at least five times as much in cash. Every prudent housekeeper should now save her rags, and even old newspapers which have heretofore been used for kindling. The latter will readily sell for four cents and a half a pound.

The ninety-eighth Ohio regiment comprises four Methodist preachers, and a large supply of class-leaders, stewards, exhorters, and Sunday-school superintendents. Out of one hundred members in company E, sixty are members of our church.

Rev. Dr. Loomis, President of Lewisburg University, Pa., formerly a Professor at Waterville, Me., went into the ranks of the Union army as a private, at the commencement of the war, and is still serving in that capacity, though a commission has been urged upon him.

Notices, &c.

Western Notice.

Friends coming to the Wisconsin Conference by cars from the West, will come by the way of La Cross to Kilburn City, thence by stage to Baraboo, and thence to Sumpter, formerly called Kingston. Those coming from the East, by the way of Milwaukee, will also stop at Kilburn, and come as above. Those living further south-west can come by the way of Prairie Du Chien to Mazomanie, and take the stage to Prairie Du Lac, six miles from the meeting. Those living south-east can make the same point. Inquire for Bro. Knapp, or Bush. W. SHELDON.

Illinois Conference.

The meeting of the Illinois Conference of Adventists will be held at Deer Park, Lesalle Co., in the Vermillionville Meeting-house, commencing Wednesday, Dec. 17th, and continuing over the Sabbath. Deer Park is eight miles from Ottawa, on the Rock Island R. R., and the same from Tonica, on the Illinois Central. Eld. J. V. Himes will be with us to preach the word. Dear brethren and friends, let us make it a point to be there.

H. G. McCULLOCK, Secretary.

Notice.

There will be an Advent meeting at the house of L. R. Barber, in Harwinton, Conn., commencing Dec. 11th, and continuing one week. Brethren from abroad are invited to attend. Bro R. Williams will give a course of lectures during the week. L. R. BARBER.

Conference.

The Lord will, there will be a conference in Rensselaer, Jasper Co., Ind., to commence Wednesday evening, Dec 3d, and continue over the following Sabbath. Brn. A. N. Servis and George Moyer are expected to be present and assist in preaching the word of God. Those coming from the south on the New Albany and Salem R. R., on the same day of meeting, will stop at Bradford, and find conveyance to the meeting. Those coming from the north will stop at the above named station also. We hope to see a general gathering of our brethren at this meeting. Come one and all, let us work while the day lasts. D. R. & M. S. MANSFIELD.

The Wisconsin Conference

Will be held at Sumpter, Sauk Co., Wis., six miles from Sauk city, and nine miles from Baraboo, in the "Pockett," beginning on Wednesday evening, Dec. 3d, and holding over Lord's day following. Eld. J. V. Himes of Boston will be present to aid in preaching. Let us have a rally, and let all come at the beginning. Friends in the surrounding townships are requested to bring a few blankets, as so many may come from a great distance that our beds may possibly be more than filled. Let no excuse keep a single preacher in Wisconsin at home. Let friends come from other States also. The Lord is certainly at hand. We must arouse!

It is expected that Bro. Himes will do the most of the preaching. Churches who have a standing with the conference will send their delegates, and churches who wish to unite, will do the same. Isolated brethren, who wish the sympathy and aid of preachers in the conference may send an epistle to W. Sheldon, Merrimack, Wis. I intend to have an assortment of our best books at the meeting; and Bro. Himes will have a quantity of the "Voice" bound, the Lyre, and other valuable productions. Come with praying hearts. Elders Barnes, Turner, Shears, Gibson, and others will please exert themselves to secure a general attendance.

W. SHELDON.

Conference at Poland, Me.

We purpose to have the next session of the Maine Western Quarterly Conference at West Poland, commencing Dec. 11th, at 7 o'clock P. M. We solicit the attendance of the brethren and sisters generally, and shall expect that none of our ministering brethren will fail to be present. We expect Bro. Couch will be with us to help in preaching the word. For the brethren, J. A. LIBBY.

Notice.

As the signs of the near approach of the King that is to reign in righteousness are thickening around us, and so few are prepared to meet him, I propose, the Lord willing, to take a trip into Ohio the last of Dec., and stay a part of the winter, and preach where my humble labors may, by the assistance of our Heavenly Father, arouse some to be prepared to meet him and have a part in his kingdom. I shall stay a few days in a place, as duty may demand. I shall have an assortment of books and tracts with me to scatter. Those wishing my labors, write me as soon as possible.

JOHN T. ONGLEY, Evangelist.

Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Pa.

The Cross.

Greater the cross, the nearer heaven,
Godless, to whom no cross is given!
The noisy world in masquerade
Forgets the grave, the worm, the shade;
Blest is you dearer child of God,
On whom he lays the cross, the rod.

Blest, by whom most of the cross is known;
God whets us on his grinding-stone;
Full many a garden's dressed in vain,
Where tears of sorrow never rain.
In fiercest flames the gold is tried,
In griefs the christian's purified.

Midst crosses, Faith her triumph knows;
The palm-tree pressed more vigorous grows;
Go, tread the grapes beneath thy feet—
The stream that flows is full and sweet;
In trouble, virtues grow and shine,
Like pearls beneath the ocean brine.

Crosses abound; love seeks the skies;
Blow the rough winds, the flames arise;
When hopeless gloom the welkin shrouds,
The sun comes laughing through the clouds;
The cross makes pure affection glow,
Like oil that on the fire we throw.

Who wears the cross prays oft and well;
Bruised herbs send forth the sweetest smell;
Were ships ne'er tossed by stormy wind,
The Pole-star who would care to find?
Had David spent no darksome hours,
His sweetest song had ne'er been ours.

From trouble springs the longing hope;
From the deep vale we mount the slope;
Who treads the desert's dreariest way,
For Canaan most will long and pray;
Here finds the trembling dove no rest,
Flies to the ark and builds her nest.

Heavy the cross, e'en death is dear,
The sufferer sings—his end is near;
From sin and pain he bursts away;
Trouble shall die that very day.
The cross, yon silent grave adorning,
Bespeaks a bright, triumphant morning.

Dear Lamb of God, enhance thy cross
More and yet more; all else is dross;
Let ne'er a murmur mar my rest,
Plant thy own patience in my breast;
To guard me, faith, hope, love combine,
Until the glorious crown be mine.

My Journal.

ADVENT CONFERENCE IN WATERBURY, VT.

Friday, Oct. 10. Bro. Litch gave us a discourse on the prophetic periods and their use. It was a very singular discourse, and well calculated to confuse the minds of inquirers, and confirm those who adhere to the old landmarks. "For no man after he has drank old wine, straightway desireth the new. For he saith the old is better." I should like to see it published, and would be glad to circulate it in my journeys among the people to whom I give lectures on the prophetic periods. At 10 P. M., took leave of many dear friends in Waterbury, and left in the night train for Boston, in company with Elds. Osler, Cunningham, and Bro. Parady, arriving at 8 o'clock Saturday morning.

Sabbath, Oct. 12. Heard Eld. Hastings at 10 A. M., in Lowell St. Chapel, on the resurrection of the dead. It was a clear, strong and sound argument as I have seen against the non-resurrection of the wicked. I trust it will be published. In the P. M. met with the Advent church on Hudson St., to hear Bro. Fassett, our new and acceptable Pastor, but he would make me preach although I was too full for utterance. My heart was full of joy and peace, and at the same time was deeply impressed with the scenes of judgment just upon us. I spoke of the coming of Jesus, and the connected events as given in the four gospels, and from the testimony of man. In the evening met with the church in conference. We had a precious season. The church is prospering under the labors of Eld. Fassett. Praise the Lord.

Monday, Oct. 13. Preached and arranged the matter for the first number of the fourth volume of the "Voice of the Prophets."

Wednesday, Oct. 15. Preached to the Advent church in Lowell. Had a good audience and a good time on the two witnesses. Rev. 11: 3. Eld. Gunner (the pastor) made some eloquent remarks sustaining the views I had presented as the protestant views, and the events of the French Revolution as being the harbingers of the near approach of Christ. Bro. G. has "set things in order in the church," and I pray God's blessing may attend them and give them prosperity.

Thursday, Oct. 16. Went to Concord, N. H. Eld. Preble met me at the depot and took me to his very hospitable home. It is truly refreshing to the traveler and laborer to find such welcomes, with a supply of all needed good. I spoke in the evening on "Peace," and was followed by Elds. Preble, Lock, and many others. It was a time of peace and love.

Friday, Oct. 17. After a season of prayer and song, in which we were greatly blessed at the family altar, we started for the State Conference at Loudon Ridge, some fifteen miles, and arrived in season for the opening. I was warmly greeted by the Elders and brethren, with whom I had not met in conference for several years, and was invited to preach the opening sermon. In the P. M. I spoke on Dan. 12: 12, 13. "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way, till the end be; for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." The Elders and brethren gave me a candid hearing, and most of them expressed to me their wish that the calculation of 1867–8, might be true, though they hoped "Jesus" might come before that time. I joined in that wish, as I could do so consistently with the calculation. For Daniel is to stand in his lot, or inheritance, in the end of the days. But our Savior may come before that to prepare the "lot" or inheritance for him to stand in. So we should look and watch and wait now, and always, till he comes. In turning to the Bible for a reference at this moment, I am pleased to find a note in Dan. 12: 11–13, that interested me very much. This Bible was published by the American Tract Society, with notes on the text, in 1857.

NOTE. The numbers mentioned in this and the following verse seem to include 'time times and a half,' verse 7, and to extend beyond it, the former thirty days, the latter seventy-five days. Thus understood, they intimate that the overthrow of Anti-Christ and the delivery of God's people, will be accomplished by three successive interpositions, verse 13. Go thou thy way till the end; the angel dismisses Daniel with the intimation that he must wait till the time of the end for a clear understanding of the vision. Shalt rest; with God after his departure from this life, in thy lot; in the possession of thy heavenly inheritance. Compare verse 3d. At the end of the days; at the time referred to in verse 2d, when they must sleep in the dust shall awake to everlasting life."

We have the opinion of the American Tract Society's publishing committee that the 1260, 1290 and 1335 days begin together. That the days extend to the resurrection of the just, and the days must be years. This is sound doctrine, and sustains my view.

Sabbath, Oct. 19. Spoke before the conference in the A. M. on the "last plagues" of Rev. 16. The audience was very large and gave breathless attention for an hour and twenty minutes. A deep impression was made, I trust, for good. There was a large number of God's ministers present, from whom I received words of sympathy and good cheer in my mission. In the P. M., Eld. John Couch gave an able discourse on the 21st of Luke, and spoke of the present shaking of nations and other events in church and state as indicative of the end being nigh.

At the close of the P. M. service, by request I accompanied Eld. Preble to Concord, and spoke in the evening. Here I met a large audience, and addressed them on the "vials" by request. I had a good reception, and the word took effect on many hearts. Eld. Grant was present, who had preached during the day; also Eld. Preble, Locke, Simpson, and others of the servants of God. Eld. Grant has been laboring here in the Advent church, in connection with Eld. Preble, with much success. The house is filled. May peace and prosperity attend them.

Monday, Oct. 20. Bro. Preble waked me before the dawn of day, and kindly took me to the depot, where, in company with Eld. M. Grant, I took the cars for Boston.

Wednesday, Oct. 23. Met with the Advent church in Hudson street, to take my leave of them in view of my western tour. It was a season of blessed interest to me, and I trust to all present. I addressed the church on the importance of personal religious enjoyment,—to live in peace with God and all men as much as in us lieth, and as faithful servants to have our loins girded and be ready for the Master when he shall come. I leave the flock in Boston in good hands, and shall rest assured of their safety and prosperity while Eld. Fassett shall have health and strength for the discharge of his responsible duties.

Thursday, Oct. 23. Took leave of my family and left for New York, on my tour west. Arrived in the city at an early hour Friday morning, and went directly to the "Water Cure," No. 15 Laight street, where I was received and warmly greeted by Dr. Jones and Miller, Dr. Trall being absent in Europe to attend a Health Convention. God bless him in his mission. Dr. Jones has my gratitude for special attention and favors, which I learn are not partial, but bestowed alike on all who visit the house. He is the right man in the right place.

This "Cure" is one of the oldest of the kind in this country, and is under the care of Dr. Trall as Physician-in-chief, and is celebrated for its cures. They spread a good table with the bounties of earth; and many in the city board with them who prefer a vegetable diet. May God multiply such institutions. I visited during the day a number of old friends, and in the afternoon took the cars, in company with Bro. Willard Ide, for Rahway, N. J. Called at Elizabeth, N. J., on the way, to see Mother Price, who like Anna of old waits for redemption. I spoke a word of good cheer, and prayed with her and her family, then went on my way, arriving at Bro. Ide's at nightfall. Here I met Bro. Brown and family. He for the present is laid up with the "fever and ague." I found the family famishing for the word of life. As Bro. Ide remarked, "We are almost starved out." They get no food in the churches which they attend, so I opened my Bible and preached to the family the word of God. The subject was the "two witnesses," Rev. 11: 3. We had as good a time as though hundreds had been present. I thought of a remark of Luther in his sermon on the signs of the kingdom nigh, that the time would come when the preaching of the gospel would be confined to the four square walls of the private dwellings of the people of God. It has not come to that yet, but it may.

Bro. Ide and family are Adventists. For a long time they bore the burden and heat of the day in the Advent cause in New York city. They now regret that they did not open a meeting in Rahway when they first came here, instead of hiding their light in the churches where they have been occasionally edified with the account of "ascension robes," and other slanders from the pulpit on an honest belief and a faithful people, who look for the speedy coming of the Lord.

Saturday, Oct. 25. Rose early, and bid friends adieu, and came to Philadelphia to fulfill my next appointment. Here I had an old fashion Millerite reception from Father and Mother Lye, Dr. Wardle, H. Boyen and others. And to-morrow I am to speak once more to the people of Philadelphia, where I have addressed thousands in years past on the coming of the Lord. I do not know what reception I shall have by the public, or those who have professed the Advent faith. I only know there are a few, a precious remnant of faithful ones, whose sympathies and prayers are with me. Thank God for this! JOSHUA V. HIMES.

Brief Journal.—No. 5.

I am now slowly returning to my western field of labor. Have once more said "Farewell" to eastern friends. Perhaps I shall greet them no more till we are summoned by the solemn judgment trump to give an account of our stewardship. O, awful day for unfaithful ones! Terrible day for ease-loving and pleasure-seeking ministers! Shall I be classed with the company who have been willing to even lay down their lives for Christ and his gospel? Let me be separated from friends here, to preach the gospel of Christ to perishing mortals, for eternity will be long enough to enjoy the society of loved ones, while we have but a moment of time to sound the note of solemn warning in the ears of sinners. Can we be dilatory? Can we stop to gratify our own relish for ease or comfort, when the scenes of the judgment are about to be unfolded to a slumbering world? O! God, help us to labor for men while we can.

On the 4th October I took the stage for Brimfield, Mass., where I preached twice on the 5th, on the gratuitous list. Called on Bro. Ainsworth, who has recently buried his companion. Death holds her in his cold arms; but soon the Master's commanding voice will rebuke the greedy monster, and he will then relinquish his grasp upon the saints, and flee into the impenetrable shades of black oblivion. Staid over night with Bro. and Sr. Brown, who conveyed us to the Palmer Depot on Monday morning. While waiting for the cars, we had time to pass the compliment with our good Bro. Elder (?) Doctor (?) A. M. Higgins. But cars can't wait for ministers to "chat," so good-by, Bro. Higgins; doctor the sickly theology and sickly religion of the present day, as faithfully as you do your patients. On, on we go, by daylight and by moonlight, "buzzing over mountains, whizzing through the vale," till about $25.00 are consumed, when we make a halt in Chateaugay, N. Y., where I preached on Sunday, Oct. 12th. Found religion low. They need a man of God in this locality to gather up the scattered fragments. Wish Bro. M. Batchelor would hunt up the flock, and feed them, for they are almost starved to death. They can't live on "sour swill," even if some do insist that it is "first rate"; but in order to flourish they must have "pure milk"—the sweet milk of gospel grace. I persuaded Bro. C. R. Percy to subscribe for the Crisis. He and his wife were my schoolmates in our childhood days. May the Crisis feed them.

On the 18th of Oct. we bade friends and relatives adieu, took the cars again, and started for Massena, N. Y., where I stopped a few days, under unfavorable circumstances, the weather being bad, and my lungs being affected by a severe cold. However, I preached seven sermons, and the brethren raised me about $25.00 to help me on my way, $5.00 of the same being given by one generous brother. God bless them all. They are prospering under the faithful labors of our time yoke-fellow, Elder M. Batchelor. Assisted by the firmness of Deacon Danforth, they have kept themselves free from the distracting isms that have shattered so many of our eastern churches. Although men have cursed him for not opening his arms to embrace this new message, or that proclamation, God will bless him. Here lives Bro. Crowley, who feels it his duty to preach the word. Lord, "send forth more laborers." God is calling young men into the field. Let them come filled with meekness, humility, and reliance upon God. Let them come with more religion in their hearts than theory in their heads. Let them come filled with zeal and the Holy Ghost,—and God will bless their labors.

On Monday, Oct. 27th, we left Massena by stage (Bro. Hyde paying our fare), and went eighteen miles through snow ten inches deep to reach the cars. Cars had gone, so, rather than lie over, we took a circuitous route; but even then, twice we broke our connection, obliging us to lie over ten or twelve hours at a time, subjecting us to additional expense. However, after another deduction of about $50,00 from my purse, we reached Galvy, Ill., Oct. 30th, and found that a team had already been sent five times the distance of eight miles to take us to my appointment in Milroy, whither I have come, at the earnest solicitation of Eld. H. A. King, a young man recently from Oberlin school. Hope for a good meeting.

In due time I intend to start for Wisconsin, to attend our conference, where I expect to see Bro. Himes. Come, brethren, be at the meeting in time without fail. Strangers may inquire for O. S. Knapp, or Parley Bush. Come with praying hearts. Come, let the weather be foul or fair.

W. SHELDON.

The Rock of Salvation.

If life's pleasures cheer thee,
Give them not thy heart,
Lest its gifts ensnare thee
From thy God to part;
His praises speak,
His favors seek,
Fix there thy hope's foundation;
Love him, and he Shall ever be
The rock of thy salvation.

If distress befall thee,
Painful though it be,
Let not fear appal thee,
To thy Savior flee:
He ever near,
Thy prayer will hear,
And calm thy perturbation;
The waves of woe
Can ne'er o'erflow
The rock of thy salvation.

Earth shall never harm thee,
Shrink not from his blow,
For thy God shall arm thee,
And victory bestow;
For death shall bring
To thee no sting,
The grave no desolation:
'Tis gain to die,
With Jesus nigh,
The rock of thy salvation.

Carpet-bag Report.

If a self-appointed committee may "report progress," my friends will not refuse to hear again from me. My last account was given, I think, from St. Louis, in June last. I have, since that time, busied myself, with average success, in Bunker Hill, Alton, Carlinville, Springfield, Jacksonville, Decatur, Urbana, and Danville, Ill.; in Attica, Lafayette, Delphi, Logansport, Cicero, Indianapolis, and Richmond, Ind.; and in Dayton, Springfield, Yellow Springs, Xenia, Columbus, Circleville, and Cincinnati, Ohio.

I have seen very little in the way of adventure, excepting the loss of my valise at Indianapolis, for the recovery whereof, "especially the parchments," I would pay handsomely. It may be at any depot in Indiana or Ohio, and the broken lock will not prevent the proof of property. Also, for adventure, a three days' detention at Richmond for a pass, in the days of preparation for draft, and a tax for peddling, levied by the careful law of the same town, at the rate of a dollar per diem.

At St. Louis I received, from Messrs. B. Westermann & Co., of New York, eleven copies of Dr. Schultz's work, from which Bro. Reimer has made his valuable translations for the Crisis. These are all sold, to German scholars, preachers, or priests; the last four in Cincinnati, in two days' time. They cost me $11, and I received for them about $8. But I deem it a good investment, good even in pelf, after a while. My chief success has been in Cincinnati. I spent here about six weeks. During the first two weeks I did not attempt or expect much. But the third week I did handsomely, and very encouragingly thereafter. Sold 39 copies of "Debt and Grace," and other books in proportion, amounting in all to about $100. This success is partly due to acquaintance which I had formed in the city and vicinity, during two years spent at Lane Theological Seminary, in 1845–47, and near two years in collecting materials for my book, 1853–55. To the "theologues," twenty-five in number, I sold about $10. One of these I saw in New Haven, in February '61, when he took three tracts. These he showed me at Lane, and bought all my books, $2.35. One minister in the city recollected me eight years ago and knew what I was then about. He had thought of me occasionally since, and of my doctrine, but he had not seen my books. He bought them all, and more. He has thought of the perishing of the wicked as a possible conclusion of his theological reasonings, and he is not afraid of it. And those who know him say he is not afraid of saying and preaching what he believes. If I knew he had any such fear, I should not publish him thus, even anonymously. The doctrine of eternal evil makes men cowards; and when men begin to get delivered from its terror, they should be allowed ample time to muster courage, even to believe that the truth is safe.

It was very pleasant to find that with all my heresies I had lost none of the personal regard which my friends had for me. Whether this was large or small, it was part and parcel of my late success; as it ever should and must be the chief power of the christian. Men may be convinced by the arguments of unworthy men; but, ten chances to one, their minds only will be enlightened, and their hearts will be unmoved.

I have a list, as the friends know, of ministers in orthodox connexion who hold no life out of Christ. I have added two or three names to this since my last report, and it now counts over forty. One is a Lutheran, and I think a good and strong man, very highly regarded in his denomination. He will not preach with a padlock on his lips, and if he can not find freedom among his own people, he will leave them. He knows another Lutheran minister holding the same faith. And he has letters from Drs. Schmucker and Kurtz, leading men, saying that though this is not their own faith, it is not to be called a heresy.

I write at the house of Bro. J. P. Weethee, who is teaching a select or normal school, and bearing his testimony for Christ, as the life and hope of the world, as he finds opportunity. I design to be at Marietta in about two weeks, then to Pittsburg, Philadelphia (say in six weeks), and Bostonward. C. F. H.

Something for Christian Sisters.

We wish to offer a few thoughts for the reflection of our christian sisters, on the subject of their own personal responsibility in giving or contributing to the cause of God, in its various departments, the Bible, Missionary, or any other effort in that class that may come up before them. It is a fact which we have learned by observation in the world, that many noble minded, good women, who doubtless love the cause of their divine Master, seem willing to contribute to its support so far as they do any thing by proxy, or through the medium of their husbands, if married; if unmarried, their father or brothers. Now this is the mistake which we wish if possible to correct, and also to direct the attention of our sisters to their own obligation in this matter, as well as any other duty obligatory upon them in the sacred word. Our sisters would doubtless shrink from the very idea of their husbands or fathers doing all their praying, Bible reading, or exercises in any way in the service of God, thus depriving them the pleasure and privilege of renewing their strength by waiting upon the Lord. But this, revolting as it may appear, we think would be fully as reasonable as to decline all personal aid in the support of the gospel, by throwing the responsibility upon another to act for us.

We have called upon sisters when the minister was to be paid, missionary aid required, or the gospel sent to destitute portions of our country, and have been met with the reply, "my husband always gives for me and him both;" apparently satisfied with that, not knowing perhaps how much their husbands gave, or in that case whether he gave at all or not. Again, there are sisters whose husbands are not professors of religion, and hence they are not much interested in the burdens of Zion, and the good wife, from the habit of depending upon her husband to do most of her business for her, is very apt to neglect the duty by the way of contributing to benevolent objects.

We very much wish our sisters would wake up on this subject, and commence at once a more vigorous and systematic course of benevolence. As enjoined by the apostle, "upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him;" or, in other words, make it a rule that of all money or available property coming into your possession, a certain portion of it shall be dedicated to the Lord. We remember to have read an incident to the point just here. A lady who had fully consecrated herself to the service of God, vowed that through life she would devote to the cause of Christ a tenth of all that should come into her possession. Upon the decease of a relative, she was bequeathed ten thousand dollars. On receiving it, her first expression was, "Let me hasten to give my thousand." This, my dear sisters, is just as we should do with the little that may become ours. It is only according to the ability that our divine Master demands our services in any thing required at our hands. Then let us improve every opportunity for usefulness; be prompt with our prayers and words of godly edifying at the prayer meeting; swift to administer comfort by the sick bed, or in the home of the poor, every where as we go scattering seeds of light and sunshine, so that the world may be the better for our having lived in it, and also that our heavenly Father may be able to say of us relative to every duty, "She hath done what she could."

We have endeavored to suggest a few thoughts to our dear sisters, in order to prompt them to a more energetic system of benevolence, and we would here also say, if our brethren, who may think worth while to read what we have written, feel that they have come behind in the grace of giving, we trust they will feel at perfect liberty to appropriate the above humble remarks to themselves, and from henceforth as good stewards of their Master's goods, hasten to lay upon the altar of sacrifice according as God shall prosper them, that in the day of final reward they too may have it said by the Master, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

KINDNESS.—Kindness makes sunshine wherever it goes; it finds its way into the hidden treasures of the heart, and brings forth treasures of gold; harshness, on the contrary, seals them up forever.

One Word for the Watchmen.

Of all the trials, griefs and sorrows with which our lonely path is beset in these dark days of peril and confusion, none are quite so discouraging, so disheartening and distressing to the trembling, way-worn pilgrim, as to see the watchmen at variance with each other. Nothing so weakens our hands and strengthens those of our enemies. Therefore, dear brethren, as you love the cause of our Redeemer, do love each other, and treat all with kindness. Shall we who have tasted the bitter cup at the hands of the churches, so soon be found administering the same to our brethren who love Jesus and his appearing, because they do not see with our eyes? May God forbid!

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, HEREBY PLEDGE OURSELVES TO ABSTAIN FROM TEA, COFFEE, TOBACCO, AND ALL INTOXICATING DRINKS AS A BEVERAGE.

Names to Pledge.

Hannah C. Jordan sends her name to the pledge. She answered questions correctly. Jennie F. Munroe also sent correct and neatly written replies to questions to enigma and puzzle of Oct. 28th. Also answers to questions and the puzzle from Charlie H. Wellcome. Mary T. Carpenter, Ottawa, Ill., also sends correct answers to questions in the Crisis for Oct. 28th.

Children's Tract Society.

DEAR TRY COMPANY:—I was thinking about you this morning, and the plan of a Tract Society came into my mind. It is this: each member and friend of the Try Company is to lay by one cent every month for six months. Any that are able, and so disposed, can give more than this amount. May be your parents or older brothers and sisters will help us a little; but if not, we will do our best alone. Supposing that one hundred children save one cent every month, in six months it would amount to just six dollars! Dear children, only think what a heap of tracts that would pay for! Let's see. Bro. Hastings sells eighteen pages for one cent. Six dollars would purchase ten thousand and eight hundred pages! All these bought by a few children giving in six cents in one half year. Why, boys and girls, its so strange to think how much good a little money may do, that I'm laughing now at the prospect for you to work in this way. Likely as not, some little reader is saying, "Why, you friend up there in Canada, what in the world can we do with such a pile of tracts? We can't read them all." But, my good child, this is a missionary work. We want the tracts sent off to those who can not get them unless somebody sends them where they live. We can send them to the poor soldiers. Yes; there is Sr. N. M. Henry ready and willing to take them right into the hospital. Then there is dear Bro. B. Spaulding, going from house to house on those islands on the coast of Maine. He wants tracts, and will give them right into the hands of those who will be real glad to read them. And there is Eld. T. W. Smith, away out West, where the "Prairie Flower" lived, you know. Well, he finds grey-headed men and women that would be glad to look through their spectacles to read a tract sent them by a little child in the East. Who knows how much good might be done in this way? Send in your pledges; let's try, and so make this Try Company a successful company.

Come, Willie, Henry, George, James, Mary, Mattie, Jane, and all of you—come, enter, into this work in earnest. Thanksgiving day is coming soon, and New Year's, and Christmas too. I dare say you will get a little "spending money" about that time. Now don't spend it for candies. They are not healthy. When you eat them they are gone, and so is your money. But if you save it, and send all you can spare to Bro. Grant, next April he will give you some tracts; and if they are sent out among the people, they may be the means of gathering in some weary ones into the Lord's fold, and of saving them in that blessed kingdom we read about.

I don't care if I am twenty-two years old; I'm going to join the TRY COMPANY, and be among those little children that are willing to sacrifice for the Lord. Children, I am with you, heart and soul. I am Maria, your sister, interested in your plans and labors. I call on you to work with me. Will you? Will you begin now? The Lord help you. I shall begin to-day. I have three cents, Eva has two, and here they go, my prayers with them, on the

The Christian's Rest.

"There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."—Heb. 4: 9.

There is a rest remaineth for his own,
Not in this world of change, where all is sear,
nly the pledge and earnest in the heart,
Can reach the longings of God's children here.
A spark of hope undying from the fount,
A fadeless ray from the Almighty's throne,
A glimpse we borrow from beyond the vale,
To keep us anchored while away from home.

Not here a rest—for now we often faint,
Our eyes grow dim, and ears forget to hear;
We miss the promise through unconsciousness,
While each new sorrow wakes a trembling fear.
Our harps upon the willows oft we hang,
Unheed the songs provided for the night;
In our impatience, cry out, "Oh! how long"
Ere we may ground our arms, and cease to fight?

There is a rest, but 'tis beyond the vale;
Here we're required to bear our burdens well,
To welcome every cross that mocks our hope,
Assured each trial future bliss will swell.
'Tis here we plant, but there the fruit is found,
Here we toil, but there from labors cease;
Here often weep, but there our tears are dried,
All sufferings here—there will our joys increase.

There is a rest, but 'tis not on this side
Of that dark river, that must soon be crossed;
The other side but reached, then shall we care
How oft our barks by sorrow's waves were tossed?
If trials here have been most keen and sharp,
Then there the rest will be tenfold more dear,
And every gem that radiates in our crown,
Show how rich grace can triumph over fear.

Rev. 17.—"Seven Kings."—No. 1.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Dearly Beloved:—I have ever since my conversion to christianity felt a deep interest in all the doctrines of the blessed Bible. The older I grow, and the nearer I approach the consummation of my glorious hope, my mind and heart take a deeper and broader range in all its precious truths. No one is dearer to me than another. I reverence its author, and desire a more close communion with the Savior, and daily pray and seek for light upon the prophetic word.

The seventeenth chapter of Revelation has deeply interested my mind for a long time. I wish to submit a brief exposition of the "seven kings." In so doing, it will involve a reference to the entire chapter. In my opinion, both Pagan and Papal Rome are embodied in the vision presented to John. This will appear in proper time.

First, I must admit that John is giving us a revelation from the wilderness state of the church. This is evident from the following:—"So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns." In the commencement of the chapter the angel informs John that he is about to make known God's judgments upon the great Harlot, "drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

Second, it will be our object to show the agents that God will employ to accomplish this work. The leading one being an eighth form of an antecedent beast;—Pagan Rome. But it has been urged as an objection to this idea, that Pagan Rome passed through eleven changes. It did; and to this fact agree, so far as I am acquainted, all historians. But bear in mind this fact in those changes: there are only seven forms of government. What is the testimony of historians? Amid the changes of administration, you find Tribunes twice, and Dictators thrice. Now count each one, instead of two and three, making five, and the result will be thus:—Kings, one; Consuls, two; Dictators, three; Tribunes, four; Decemvirs, five; Triumvirs, six; Imperial, seven. Now, then, let this stand for the "seven heads" of Dragonic Rome, seen by John, as described in chapter 12: 3. My object is not to identify those seven heads with the seven kings mentioned in the tenth verse—of which it is written, "five are fallen and one is",—with my present view of the subject, I think that erroneous. I only aim at the harmony of revelation.

Third, the Dragonic power of Rome doubtless ceased with the seventh imperial head, and then "it is not;" not longer a ruling power, it lingered for some time under petty rulers after it was broken into fragments by the Huns and Bulgarians; and finally Paganism was coerced into subjection by Charlemange; or, in Scripture terms, went into the "bottomless pit." Pagan Rome had been one of the most cruel persecutors of christianity. It put our Lord, his apostles, and millions of christians to death. It detested the Holy Scriptures, and those that professed to believe them. Now mark, dear reader, we will show in future that this same power which detested God and his word, and only desisted in its cruel opposition to the same, ceased by compulsory measures on the part of Papal Rome, which professed to believe the Scriptures; and this fact is evident to every one who is familiar with history, that the same spirit was manifest in France during the "Reign of Terror," that commenced 1790, which I shall endeavor to show was in all probability the eighth head; and commenced the same work that Pagan Rome was compelled to desist from by the arms of Papacy. Hence, as soon as it ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, it makes war on the Scriptures and Papacy. This last power having shed the blood of saints, God at the rise of the eighth head of the Dragon gives them blood to drink. "And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the matryrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration." Wakefield reads,—"with great astonishment." The Syriac,—"great amazement." "And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads, and ten horns." Wherefore art thou amazed? I will tell thee the mystery "of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads, and ten horns." Now mark this fact. The beast that was carrying the woman had seven heads and ten horns.

These seven heads and ten horns are doubtless those seen by John in the 13th, and of which we shall speak in due time; and the ten horns are those who have been rigid Romanists, until they revolt from Papacy and receive power; or, as it is rendered by some translators, authority, with the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit. And shall hate—make desolate—naked, and burn the harlot with fire. The 17th verse implies that they would possess an affinity with Papacy for a specified period. "For God has put it in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God are fulfilled." My impression concerning this verse is, that reference is had to the words of God spoken by Dan. 7: 25;—"And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they SHALL BE GIVEN INTO HIS HAND, UNTIL A TIME AND TIMES AND THE DIVIDING OF TIME." The above prophecy declares the saints should be given into the power of Papacy during that period those ten kings were rigid Papists. But the next verse declares they would take away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end. "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it unto the end." That work was commenced by France in A. D. 1779, as the eighth head. And in the memorable revolution of 1848 the ten kings commenced the work of hatred, desolation, and making her naked; of which we shall speak hereafter.

I will now invite your attention, in the fourth place, to the scarlet-colored beast, full of names of blasphemy. Sawyer reads, "Blasphemous names." I understand this as applicable to the Popes—and to them alone. First, the prophet Daniel, when speaking of the popes, uses the masculine gender—the horn—he—him—and declares he should "speak great words against the Most High." This implies, in part, his assumption of blasphemous titles, such as "our Lord God, the Pope"—"God on earth," "Most Holy, and Father in Christ." Pope Martin wrote—"The most holy and most happy, who is arbiter of heaven and Lord of the earth; the successor of St. Peter; the anointed of the Lord; the master of the universe; the father of kings; the light of the world," etc. etc. Those are names of blasphemy. (Please see my tract on the two-horned beast of Rev. 13.)

Fifth,—The Woman. The church carried by the influence of the popes to every part of creation, he claiming to be the successor of St. Peter; and the only true representative of the apostolic succession has sent his myriads of Bishops and Priests, his Franciscan, Dominican, Augustin, black, white, and gray Friars, Jesuits and Nuns, into all the world; and in the apoclyptic language she now sitteth on the "many waters, peoples and multitudes, and nations and tongues."

I shall in my next endeavor to show that it is the eighth head that inflicts judgment on this blood-crimsoned harlot.

The Mystery of the Gospel.—No. 5.

"The just shall live by faith."—Rom. 1: 17.
"Faith is the substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen."—Heb. 11: 1.
"Without faith it is impossible to please him."
"Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Rom. 10: 17.
"There is one faith."—Eph. 4: 5.

In former articles it has been shown, by plain Scripture testimony, that a mystery concerning the salvation of souls was hidden in the writings of the prophets; that it was revealed by the Spirit to the apostles; that the apostles, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made it known to all nations for the obedience of faith, commencing at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost; that in making it known, they commanded repentance and baptism upon the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. It has also been shown, that the apostles preached "the gospel of the kingdom of God"; and that their manner of preaching it was, to expound what Moses and the prophets had written concerning the kingdom of God and the name of the Anointed One. Thus it has been made apparent, that if we would understand "the truth as it is in Jesus," we must study what the prophets wrote concerning the Christ and his kingdom, and then take, without modification, addition, or subtraction, the exposition given by the apostles. Thus the fog and mist heaped upon the truth by the "blind guides" of Antichristendom have been cleared away, and the immovable foundation of the "one body," "one hope," "one faith" and "one baptism," made to stand out in bold relief; even "the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Eph. 2: 20.

In examining the apostolic exposition of the promises made unto the fathers, we have seen that Abraham, Christ, and all who belong to Christ, are the heirs of the land in which Abraham was a stranger; that Christ, raised from the dead, is the heir of the throne of his father David, which throne he will take when he returns, at the times of restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began; that then all the families of the earth will be blessed in him; that he is now taking out from the nations a people to inherit the kingdom with him as kings and priests unto God. These things, in connection with the death of Jesus for sins, and the terms of reconciliation made known in the revelation of the mystery, constitute the Gospel of God proclaimed by the apostles. Now justifying faith is such a belief of the word of God as leads a man to the obedience of faith. This is evident, because men are justified by faith; and faith is the belief of God's word. Much more might be written concerning what constitutes justifying faith, but this is sufficient for the honest and good of heart, for whose benefit I write. Luke 8: 15.

Remember, Jesus said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." Matt. 7: 21. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." Luke 13: 24. Remember, finally, that Paul says, that men are "alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart." Eph. 4: 18. Sad, indeed, will be the state of that professor who, when the Lord comes, shall be found without the wedding garment on. See to it, then, that you have on the robe of righteousness, that you may not be ashamed before him at his coming; for, that he comes quickly, the signs of the times do loudly proclaim.

Christ Wounded.

"Wounded in the house of my friends."

'Let every professed follower searchingly inquire, "Lord, is it I?" In what way have I inconsiderately wounded that dear friend who gave his life a ransom for me? Alas! who can plead guiltless to the charge? In numberless instances has he been wounded by an ungrateful return for his unspeakable love, a neglect of known duty, or a lukewarm discharge of it; in our proneness to idol worship; our omission of deeds of love to His poor; faithlessness in casting our burdens on the Lord and trusting in his promised help and strength; indulging in a man-fearing spirit; failing to devote all we have and are to our Master's service; overlooking Paul's exhortation to bear the burdens of our fellow christians, and thus "fulfill the law of Christ."

Can it be that among the "little flock" who love His appearing, any can be found to whom the expression is applicable—"Wounds . . with which I was wounded in the house of my friends"? We are compelled to acknowledge it is even so. Do not discordant feelings exist? Is there not a disposition to contend about words to no profit, that gender strife? Have we not been uncharitable in our judgments? Has not a Pharisaical feeling sometimes crept in unawares, implying in actions, "Stand by thyself, for I am holier than thou"? Have we exercised due patience and charity towards those who do not readily embrace our views of gospel truth? Let it be the burden of our prayers, that we may win souls to Christ by love and gentleness, and be kept by divine grace from bringing reproach upon the cause of Christ.

M. Parry.

The Faith of the Church.

NUMBER TWO.

"The faith which was once delivered to the saints."—Jude vers. 3, 4.

We are to show or point out, some of the particular doctrines which make up "the faith once delivered to the saints," and which we are to receive and maintain against the errors that may prevail in the last times. And I would present these mostly in Scriptural language, that they may be more clearly seen and understood by all.

1. "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear."—Heb. 11: 3. According to the faith delivered to the saints in respect to the origin of the universe, we are to receive, maintain, and earnestly contend, that the omnipotent, all-wise and everlasting God, is the Creator of all things. That he first created the materials of the worlds out of nothing, and then wisely framed them into order. This is in opposition to the Pantheistic theory that "the universe created itself," and that "the universe is God." "The ancients assumed that creation from nothing was an impossibility"; the Scriptures aver that "with God all things are possible." "Ah! Lord God! behold thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee." Therefore we conclude that the worlds were created from nothing by the omnific word. "For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast." "And God said, Let there be light: and there was light."

The theory has prevailed too that "mind and matter are uncreated entities." But the Scriptures affirm otherwise. Mind, that is God, is uncreated; but matter is not; it was brought into existence by the Almighty—first cause of all things. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."—Gen. 1: 1, 2. "Lord, thou has been our dwelling-place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting thou art God."—Ps. 90: 1, 2. "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding. Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the corner stone thereof; when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy."

The Jewish church believed and maintained the faith expressed above, as will appear from the following language: "I beseech thee, my son, look upon the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, and consider that God made them of things that were not." 2 Macc. 7: 28." Which clearly expresses productions from, or out of nothing. Therefore the apostle in his Epistle to the Hebrews, says; "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that the things which are seen were not made of things which do appear;" that is, which were not. "Mee ek phainomenon in this place is equivalent unto ouk ex houton in the Maccabees." (Pearson.)

The co-eternity of matter is opposed to both God's independency and omnipotency, and is derogatory to his character as the Deity. This was taught by Aristotle in the following form—"That out of nothing nothing can be produced"; which he pretends to be the opinion of all natural philosophers. Plato and his school taught also the doctrine that the Father of all had matter as an "eternal companion," and that if "the whole world were ever generated, it must have been produced out of some subject, and consequently there must be matter eternally pre-existing. The scholars and teachers of this school of infidelity are still among us, and hence the importance of earnestly contending for the faith which makes the supreme being the author and maker of all things by miracle.

Exposition of Scripture.—No. 2.

"For he must reign till he has placed all ENEMIES under his FEET."—1 Cor. 15: 25. Who is it that reigns till he places all enemies under foot? The Father, surely, not the Son! See verses 27 and 28. "But when he says that all things are subjected, it is manifest [yes, manifest] that He [the Father] is excepted, who HAS SUBJECTED ALL things to him." "And when he shall have subdued all things to him [the Son], then the Son himself will be subject to Him who SUBDUED ALL things to him, that God may be all in all."—Emphatic Diaglott. [The words in brackets are mine.]

The above exposition will agree with the following scriptures:—"The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool."—Ps. 110; 1. "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear. For David is not ascended into the heavens: but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool."—Acts 2: 32–35. "But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?" Heb. 1: 13.

To Mrs. Edwin H. Abbott.

ON THE DEATH OF HER HUSBAND.

Stay not, mourner, to weep!
Why should you, grieving, wait?
Toil up the same rugged steep,
You'll soon at the portal meet;
And together thy joyful feet
Shall enter the golden gate.

Fear not, lone one, to lean
On the Infinite; there's rest
And balm in his love; he'll screen
Thy darling, too, 'neath his wing;
The same arm shall the sleeper bring
To glory with thee at last.

The bird has left the bower,
Fled far from the coming storm;
The music hushed but an hour.
Then haste! for the dark clouds lower,
With him plume thy glad wing to soar,
And in Eden finish the song.

All Truth Profitable.

Why will men, professed teachers of the word of God, throw away the bright jewels of truth as worthless? I am tired of hearing truths, from the rich treasury which God has placed in our hands, condemned as unimportant and useless. How often do we hear the nature and location of the future home of the saints spoken of as a matter of indifference. And what is more astonishing, the great mass of professed christians manifest an utter indifference in regard to the coming of our blessed Lord; or what is worse, steadfastly refuse to hear anything about it. They say we should not search into these things. God did not intend that we should know; and it is of but little consequence to them whether Christ is coming soon or not. There are other truths which they throw away in utter disdain.

God does nothing in vain. He gave the chart to those prophets of old, which extended down to the end of time. And he hung out truths like candles, to light the way Zionward: and I contend that if they were not needed, he never would have placed them there. He saw the perils of these days, and provided just what was needed for the exigency, and nothing more. He pointed out the landmarks, and if we refuse to see them, the fault is all our own. Not one direction is given but what we need, if we would sail over the rough sea of time safely. Every gem of truth that we discover serves to strengthen us. I never loved the Savior so well as since I learned that he has hung out signs to warn the world of his approach. I never enjoyed so well thinking about the kingdom of Christ, and home of the redeemed, as I have since I learned what, and where, that kingdom was to be. And I love him none the less, when I learn that "when he appears, we also shall appear with him in glory," and not before.

We have been taught that

"Death is the gate to endless joy."

How gloomy and forbidding! Shall we rob Christ of his crown, and place it upon the grim monster, the king of terrors? No, no! The royal garments of the Savior have been stolen long enough to deck our deadly foe. Christ is the gate to endless joy; and what a glorious door! How inviting to the weary, heavy laden traveler; and how emblematical of the glory that is within! I believe if the truth could be preached to the people, without being fought against by those who stand in the sacred desk, and honor was ascribed where honor is due, thousands would fall in love with Jesus who are now going the downward road.

Brethren and sisters, let us press for the "Door." It will refuse to open to none who come bearing the impress of love. Riches will not gain admittance through that door; honor and fame are useless there; even learning and talent will not avail. But when a pilgrim approaches with a countenance beaming, and a heart warm with love to God and love to man; then the gate will open wide, and an abundant entrance will be given into the kingdom of our Lord.

"Is he the door? I'll enter in,
The pastures will be large and green;
A paradise, divinely fair,
God's children will have freedom there."

A Prayer for our Nation.

O Lord our God, thou art a God of mercy, truth, and justice, thou rulest in the kingdoms of men and givest them to whomsoever thou wilt, and settest up over them the basest of men. O Lord, let our prayers and our supplications come up before thee at this time. O Lord, we profess as a nation and people to know thee, but in works we deny thee; for by oppression and tyranny, by warring and fighting, by murdering and killing, by robbing and plundering, by lying and cheating, by thieving and stealing, by whoring and gambling, by smoking and chewing, by eating and drinking, by pride and rebellion, we have transgressed every precept and commandment of thy word. O Lord, we have also made a covenant with death and an agreement with hell, saying, that when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come nigh us, for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves; because we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by thee with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. And now, O Lord, notwithstanding all of our acknowledgements of equal rights and blessings which thou hast conferred upon all men, we are a nation of base hypocrites; for millions of our fellow men are held in bondage and servitude; by cruel task masters, our manufacturers, our merchants, our nation and our world have become rich upon the products of their toil; and whilst many of us have professed to be friends to the bondman, praying and working for their deliverance; not a day has passed over our heads, but what the products of his toil, sweat and blood have entered into the composition of our diet and clothing, thereby encouraging, strengthening and perpetuating the accursed system, until its propagators have resolved to overthrow the Government, and make this sum of all villanies a national institution. And now, O Lord, we find that our covenant with death and our agreement with hell does not stand, for the overflowing scourge is even upon us, and we are trodden down by it. From the time that it went forth it hath taken us; for morning by morning hath it passed over, by day and by night, and it is a vexation only to understand the report, for our bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it, and the covering narrower than that he he can wrap himself in it, because thou hast risen up against us. And as thou hast said in thy word that thou wouldst bring distress upon men, that they should walk like blind men, because they have sinned against thee, and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dung, neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to save them in the day of thy wrath. Even so, O Lord, has it happened unto our nation at this time, and also thy word according to thy servant James, is now being literally fulfilled before our eyes; for many of our rich men begin to weep and howl for the miseries that are coming upon them. Their riches are corrupted and their garments are moth-eaten, their gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against them, and shall eat their flesh as it were fire. They have heaped treasures together for the last days. The hire of the laborers who have reaped down their fields which is by them kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, and as thou hast said that thou wouldst give them that are wicked to the sword, so thou hast done by our nation, and now O Lord wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked. For many of thy people, who profess to be peace-makers, and to love and serve thee, and that their kingdom is not of this world, and as their master was not; have taken the sword which he forbid them to take lest they should perish, have entered the field of strife, cutting off heads and limbs, blowing out brains, scattering death and destruction broadcast through our land, drenching its fairest portions with human gore, thereby giving a lie to their professions, and dishonoring their Master whom they pretend to serve. O my God, what a spectacle for men and angels to behold. O Lord we believe this is a just retribution which thou hast permitted to come upon thy people and our nation for their sins; and now O Lord, belongeth unto us shame and confusion of face. O Lord, has mercy clean gone forever? is there no balm in Gilead? is there no physician there? or is thy ear heavy that it cannot hear? or is thine arm short that it cannot save? or our sins so aggravating in thy sight that thou wilt not hear? or is our cup of iniquity brim full, and hast thou determined that we shall drink it to the very dregs, until thou hast swept us from thy footstool with the besom of destruction as thou hast many of the nations before us, who have rebelled against thee? O my God, incline thine ear and hear for thy mercy's sake, and deal not with us according to our just deserts. In the midst of deserved wrath, remember mercy. O Lord, hearken and hear, forgive and defer not, for thine own sake, for thy Son's sake and for our nation's sake, that we may not become a reproach and a by-word in the eyes of all the nations of the earth. O God, grant to give unto us thy people and our nation the spirit of repentance, that we may break off our sins by righteousness and our iniquities by turning to thee, that destruction may not come upon us to the utmost. O Lord, help us to turn unto thee with full purpose of heart so that iniquity shall not be our ruin. O Lord, righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. O Lord, enable us to undo the heavy burdens and let the oppressed go free, and that we brake every yoke, so that it may be said of us, happy is the people whose God is the Lord. And now O Lord we leave our supplications before thee, believing that if we will turn from all of our transgressions thou wilt receive us graciously; but if we refuse and rebel we shall be destroyed by the sword, for thou hast spoken it. O Lord, stay thy hand in judgment, and come in mercy, for thy Son's sake. Amen.

Thoughts beneath Chastisement.

Why am I thus afflicted, O my God, and why thine oft repeated chastenings, Lord? Because, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word;" therefore, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes. The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver." Again, "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him out of thy law; that thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity." Think of this, "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted;" and remember the Lord "doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men." "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby."

So it seems chastenings profit us nothing eventually, unless we are exercised by, or, in other words, disciplined or trained by reason of them. May the Lord help us to be made better by his every chastisement, till we shall "Be . . . perfect, even as (our) Father which is in heaven is perfect."

"More Laborers."

If we have harvesting laborers in this great harvest, they must be sent by the "Lord of the harvest." Some drones have come "on their own hook," but they hinder more than they help. Satan, too, has some who are not drones, but real energetic laborers, and are in the field early and late; but instead of harvesting, they are only scattering the sheaves in wild confusion.

But harvesting laborers are few. Let the cry go up for "more laborers" of the right stamp. Let those who have been once sent into the field, go to work again. If any have been induced by Satan's laborers to help scatter sheaves, desist, repent, and again go to work for God. Time is short. All will soon be over—over forever!

The Christian's Rest.

"There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."—HEB. 4: 9.

There is a rest remaineth for his own,
Not in this world of change, where all is sear,
nly the pledge and earnest in the heart,
Can reach the longings of God's children here.
A spark of hope undying from the fount,
A fadeless ray from the Almighty's throne,
A glimpse we borrow from beyond the vale,
To keep us anchored while away from home.

Not here a rest—for now we often faint,
Our eyes grow dim, and ears forget to hear;
We miss the promise through unconsciousness,
While each new sorrow wakes a trembling fear.
Our harps upon the willows oft we hang,
Unheed the songs provided for the night;
In our impatience, cry out, "Oh! how long"
Ere we may ground our arms, and cease to fight?

There is a rest, but 'tis beyond the vale;
Here we're required to bear our burdens well,
To welcome every cross that mocks our hope,
Assured each trial future bliss will swell.
'Tis here we plant, but there the fruit is found,
Here we toil, but there from labors cease;
Here often weep, but there our tears are dried,
All sufferings here—there will our joys increase.

There is a rest, but 'tis not on this side
Of that dark river, that must soon be crossed;
The other side but reached, then shall we care
How oft our barks by sorrow's waves were tossed?
If trials here have been most keen and sharp,
Then there the rest will be tenfold more dear,
And every gem that radiates in our crown,
Show how rich grace can triumph over fear.

Rev. 17.—"Seven Kings."—No. 1.

BY S. S. BREWER.

DEARLY BELOVED:—I have ever since my conversion to christianity felt a deep interest in all the doctrines of the blessed Bible. The older I grow, and the nearer I approach the consummation of my glorious hope, my mind and heart take a deeper and broader range in all its precious truths. No one is dearer to me than another. I reverence its author, and desire a more close communion with the Savior, and daily pray and seek for light upon the prophetic word.

The seventeenth chapter of Revelation has deeply interested my mind for a long time. I wish to submit a brief exposition of the "seven kings." In so doing, it will involve a reference to the entire chapter. In my opinion, both Pagan and Papal Rome are embodied in the vision presented to John. This will appear in proper time.

First, I must admit that John is giving us a revelation from the wilderness state of the church. This is evident from the following:—"So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns." In the commencement of the chapter the angel informs John that he is about to make known God's judgments upon the great Harlot, "drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

Second, it will be our object to show the agents that God will employ to accomplish this work. The leading one being an eighth form of an antecedent beast;—Pagan Rome. But it has been urged as an objection to this idea, that Pagan Rome passed through eleven changes. It did; and to this fact agree, so far as I am acquainted, all historians. But bear in mind this fact in those changes: there are only seven forms of government. What is the testimony of historians? Amid the changes of administration, you find Tribunes twice, and Dictators thrice. Now count each one, instead of two and three, making five, and the result will be thus:—Kings, one; Consuls, two; Dictators, three; Tribunes, four; Decemvirs, five; Triumvirs, six; Imperial, seven. Now, then, let this stand for the "seven heads" of Dragonic Rome, seen by John, as described in chapter 12: 3. My object is not to identify those seven heads with the seven kings mentioned in the tenth verse—of which it is written, "five are fallen and one is",—with my present view of the subject, I think that erroneous. I only aim at the harmony of revelation.

Third, the Dragonic power of Rome doubtless ceased with the seventh imperial head, and then "it is not;" not longer a ruling power, it lingered for some time under petty rulers after it was broken into fragments by the Huns and Bulgarians; and finally Paganism was coerced into subjection by Charlemange; or, in Scripture terms, went into the "bottomless pit." Pagan Rome had been one of the most cruel persecutors of christianity. It put our Lord, his apostles, and millions of christians to death. It detested the Holy Scriptures, and those that professed to believe them. Now mark, dear reader, we will show in future that this same power which detested God and his word, and only desisted in its cruel opposition to the same, ceased by compulsory measures on the part of Papal Rome, which professed to believe the Scriptures; and this fact is evident to every one who is familiar with history, that the same spirit was manifest in France during the "Reign of Terror," that commenced 1790, which I shall endeavor to show was in all probability the eighth head; and commenced the same work that Pagan Rome was compelled to desist from by the arms of Papacy. Hence, as soon as it ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, it makes war on the Scriptures and Papacy. This last power having shed the blood of saints, God at the rise of the eighth head of the Dragon gives them blood to drink. "And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the matyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration." Wakefield reads,—"with great astonishment." The Syriac,—"great amazement." "And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads, and ten horns." Wherefore art thou amazed? I will tell thee the mystery "of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads, and ten horns." Now mark this fact. The beast that was carrying the woman had seven heads and ten horns.

These seven heads and ten horns are doubtless those seen by John in the 13th, and of which we shall speak in due time; and the ten horns are those who have been rigid Romanists, until they revolt from Papacy and receive power; or, as it is rendered by some translators, authority, with the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit. And shall hate—make desolate—naked, and burn the harlot with fire. The 17th verse implies that they would possess an affinity with Papacy for a specified period. "For God has put it in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God are fulfiled." My impression concerning this verse is, that reference is had to the words of God spoken by Dan. 7: 25;—"And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they SHALL BE GIVEN INTO HIS HAND, UNTIL A TIME AND TIMES, AND THE DIVIDING OF TIME." The above prophecy declares the saints should be given into the power of Papacy during that period those ten kings were rigid Papists. But the next verse declares they would take away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end. "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it unto the end." That work was commenced by France in A. D. 1779, as the eighth head. And in the memorable revolution of 1848 the ten kings commenced the work of hatred, desolation, and making her naked; of which we shall speak hereafter.

I will now invite your attention, in the fourth place, to the scarlet-colored beast, full of names of blasphemy. Sawyer reads, "Blasphemous names." I understand this as applicable to the Popes—and to them alone. First, the prophet Daniel, when speaking of the popes, uses the masculine gender—the horn—he—him—and declares he should "speak great words against the Most High." This implies, in part, his assumption of blasphemous titles, such as "our Lord God, the Pope"—"God on earth," "Most Holy, and Father in Christ." Pope Martin wrote—"The most holy and most happy, who is arbiter of heaven and Lord of the earth; the successor of St. Peter; the anointed of the Lord; the master of the universe; the father of kings; the light of the world," etc. etc. Those are names of blasphemy. (Please see my tract on the two-horned beast of Rev. 13.)

Fifth,—THE WOMAN. The church carried by the influence of the popes to every part of creation, he claiming to be the successor of St. Peter; and the only true representative of the apostolic succession has sent his myriads of Bishops and Priests, his Franciscan, Dominican, Augustin, black, white, and gray Friars, Jesuits and Nuns, into all the world; and in the apoclyptic language she now sitteth on the "many waters, peoples and multitudes, and nations and tongues."

I shall in my next endeavor to show that it is the eighth head that inflicts judgment on this blood-crimsoned harlot.

The Mystery of the Gospel.—No. 5.

"The just shall live by faith."—Rom. 1: 17.
"Faith is the substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen."—Heb. 11: 1.
"Without faith it is impossible to please him."
"Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Rom. 10: 17.
"There is one faith."—Eph. 4: 5.

In former articles it has been shown, by plain Scripture testimony, that a mystery concerning the salvation of souls was hidden in the writings of the prophets; that it was revealed by the Spirit to the apostles; that the apostles, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made it known to all nations for the obedience of faith, commencing at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost; that in making it known, they commanded repentance and baptism upon the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. It has also been shown, that the apostles preached "the gospel of the kingdom of God"; and that their manner of preaching it was, to expound what Moses and the prophets had written concerning the kingdom of God and the name of the Anointed One. Thus it has been made apparent, that if we would understand "the truth as it is in Jesus," we must study what the prophets wrote concerning the Christ and his kingdom, and then take, without modification, addition, or subtraction, the exposition given by the apostles. Thus the fog and mist heaped upon the truth by the "blind guides" of Antichristendom have been cleared away, and the immovable foundation of the "one body," "one hope," "one faith" and "one baptism," made to stand out in bold relief; even "the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Eph. 2: 20.

In examining the apostolic exposition of the promises made unto the fathers, we have seen that Abraham, Christ, and all who belong to Christ, are the heirs of the land in which Abraham was a stranger; that Christ, raised from the dead, is the heir of the throne of his father David, which throne he will take when he returns, at the times of restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began; that then all the families of the earth will be blessed in him; that he is now taking out from the nations a people to inherit the kingdom with him as kings and priests unto God. These things, in connection with the death of Jesus for sins, and the terms of reconciliation made known in the revelation of the mystery, constitute the Gospel of God proclaimed by the apostles. Now justifying faith is such a belief of the word of God as leads a man to the obedience of faith. This is evident, because men are justified by faith; and faith is the belief of God's word. Much more might be written concerning what constitutes justifying faith, but this is sufficient for the honest and good of heart, for whose benefit I write. Luke 8: 15.

Remember, Jesus said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." Matt. 7: 21. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." Luke 13: 24. Remember, finally, that Paul says, that men are "alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart." Eph. 4: 18. Sad, indeed, will be the state of that professor who, when the Lord comes, shall be found without the wedding garment on. See to it, then, that you have on the robe of righteousness, that you may not be ashamed before him at his coming; for, that he comes quickly, the signs of the times do loudly proclaim.

Christ Wounded.

"Wounded in the house of my friends."

Let every professed follower searchingly inquire, "Lord, is it I?" In what way have I inconsiderately wounded that dear friend who gave his life a ransom for me? Alas! who can plead guiltless to the charge? In numberless instances has he been wounded by an ungrateful return for his unspeakable love, a neglect of known duty, or a lukewarm discharge of it; in our proneness to idol worship; our omission of deeds of love to His poor; faithlessness in casting our burdens on the Lord and trusting in his promised help and strength; indulging in a man-fearing spirit; failing to devote all we have and are to our Master's service; overlooking Paul's exhortation to bear the burdens of our fellow christians, and thus "fulfill the law of Christ."

Can it be that among the "little flock" who love His appearing, any can be found to whom the expression is applicable—"Wounds . . . with which I was wounded in the house of my friends"? We are compelled to acknowledge it is even so. Do not discordant feelings exist? Is there not a disposition to contend about words to no profit, that gender strife? Have we not been uncharitable in our judgments? Has not a Pharisaical feeling sometimes crept in unawares, implying in actions, "Stand by thyself, for I am holier than thou"? Have we exercised due patience and charity towards those who do not readily embrace our views of gospel truth? Let it be the burden of our prayers, that we may win souls to Christ by love and gentleness, and be kept by divine grace from bringing reproach upon the cause of Christ.

The Faith of the Church.

NUMBER TWO.

"The faith which was once delivered to the saints."—Jude vers. 3, 4.

We are to show or point out, some of the particular doctrines which make up "the faith once delivered to the saints," and which we are to receive and maintain against the errors that may prevail in the last times. And I would present these mostly in Scriptural language, that they may be more clearly seen and understood by all.

1. "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear."—Heb. 11: 3. According to the faith delivered to the saints in respect to the origin of the universe, we are to receive, maintain, and earnestly contend, that the omnipotent, all-wise and everlasting God, is the Creator of all things. That he first created the materials of the worlds out of nothing, and then wisely framed them into order. This is in opposition to the Pantheistic theory that "the universe created itself," and that "the universe is God." "The ancients assumed that creation from nothing was an impossibility"; the Scriptures aver that "with God all things are possible." "Ah! Lord God! behold thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee." Therefore we conclude that the worlds were created from nothing by the omnific word. "For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast." "And God said, Let there be light: and there was light."

The theory has prevailed too that "mind and matter are uncreated entities." But the Scriptures affirm otherwise. Mind, that is God, is uncreated; but matter is not; it was brought into existence by the Almighty—first cause of all things. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."—Gen. 1: 1, 2. "Lord, thou has been our dwelling-place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting thou art God."—Ps. 90: 1, 2. "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding. Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the corner stone thereof; when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy."

The Jewish church believed and maintained the faith expressed above, as will appear from the following language;—"I beseech thee, my son, look upon the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, and consider that God made them of things that were not." 2 Macc. 7: 28." Which clearly expresses productions from, or out of nothing. Therefore the apostle in his Epistle to the Hebrews, says; "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that the things which are seen were not made of things which do appear;" that is, which were not. "Mee ek phainomenon in this place is equivalent unto ouk ex houton in the Maccabees." (Pearson.)

The co-eternity of matter is opposed to both God's independency and omnipotency, and is derogatory to his character as the Deity. This was taught by Aristotle in the following form—"That out of nothing nothing can be produced"; which he pretends to be the opinion of all natural philosophers. Plato and his school taught also the doctrine that the Father of all had matter as an "eternal companion," and that if "the whole world were ever generated, it must have been produced out of some subject, and consequently there must be matter eternally pre-existing. The scholars and teachers of this school of infidelity are still among us, and hence the importance of earnestly contending for the faith which makes the supreme being the author and maker of all things by miracle.

O. R. FASSETT.

Exposition of Scripture.—No. 2.

"For he must reign till he has placed all ENEMIES under his FEET."—1 Cor. 15: 25. Who is it that reigns till he places all enemies under foot? The Father, surely, not the Son! See verses 27 and 28. "But when he says that all things are subjected, it is manifest [yes, manifest] that HE [the Father] is excepted, who HAS SUBJECTED ALL things to him." "And when he shall have subdued all things to him [the Son], then the Son himself will be subject to HIM who SUBDUED ALL things to him, that GOD may be all in all."—Emphatic Diaglott. [The words in brackets are mine.]

The above exposition will agree with the following scriptures:—"The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool."—Ps. 110; 1. "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear. For David is not ascended into the heavens: but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool."—Acts 2: 32–35. "But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?" Heb. 1: 13.

To Mrs. Edwin H. Abbott.

ON THE DEATH OF HER HUSBAND.

Stay not, mourner, to weep!
Why should you, grieving, wait?
Toil up the same rugged steep,
You'll soon at the portal meet;
And together thy joyful feet
Shall enter the golden gate.

Fear not, lone one, to lean
On the Infinite; there's rest
And balm in his love; he'll screen
Thy darling, too, 'neath his wing;
The same arm shall the sleeper bring
To glory with thee at last.

The bird has left the bower,
Fled far from the coming storm;
The music hushed but an hour.
Then haste! for the dark clouds lower,
With him plume thy glad wing to soar,
And in Eden finish the song.

All Truth Profitable.

Why will men, professed teachers of the word of God, throw away the bright jewels of truth as worthless? I am tired of hearing truths, from the rich treasury which God has placed in our hands, condemned as unimportant and useless. How often do we hear the nature and location of the future home of the saints spoken of as a matter of indifference. And what is more astonishing, the great mass of professed christians manifest an utter indifference in regard to the coming of our blessed Lord; or what is worse, steadfastly refuse to hear anything about it. They say we should not search into these things. God did not intend that we should know; and it is of but little consequence to them whether Christ is coming soon or not. There are other truths which they throw away in utter disdain.

God does nothing in vain. He gave the chart to those prophets of old, which extended down to the end of time. And he hung out truths like candles, to light the way Zionward: and I contend that if they were not needed, he never would have placed them there. He saw the perils of these days, and provided just what was needed for the exigency, and nothing more. He pointed out the landmarks, and if we refuse to see them, the fault is all our own. Not one direction is given but what we need, if we would sail over the rough sea of time safely. Every gem of truth that we discover serves to strengthen us. I never loved the Savior so well as since I learned that he has hung out signs to warn the world of his approach. I never enjoyed so well thinking about the kingdom of Christ, and home of the redeemed, as I have since I learned what, and where, that kingdom was to be. And I love him none the less, when I learn that "when he appears, we also shall appear with him in glory," and not before.

We have been taught that

"Death is the gate to endless joy."

How gloomy and forbidding! Shall we rob Christ of his crown, and place it upon the grim monster, the king of terrors? No, no! The royal garments of the Savior have been stolen long enough to deck our deadly foe. Christ is the gate to endless joy; and what a glorious door! How inviting to the weary, heavy laden traveler; and how emblematical of the glory that is within! I believe if the truth could be preached to the people, without being fought against by those who stand in the sacred desk, and honor was ascribed where honor is due, thousands would fall in love with Jesus who are now going the downward road.

Brethren and sisters, let us press for the "Door." It will refuse to open to none who come bearing the impress of love. Riches will not gain admittance through that door; honor and fame are useless there; even learning and talent will not avail. But when a pilgrim approaches with a countenance beaming, and a heart warm with love to God and love to man; then the gate will open wide, and an abundant entrance will be given into the kingdom of our Lord.

"Is he the door? I'll enter in,
The pastures will be large and green;
A paradise, divinely fair,
God's children will have freedom there."

A Prayer for our Nation.

O Lord our God, thou art a God of mercy, truth, and justice, thou rulest in the kingdoms of men and givest them to whomsoever thou wilt, and settest up over them the basest of men. O Lord, let our prayers and our supplications come up before thee at this time. O Lord, we profess as a nation and people to know thee, but in works we deny thee; for by oppression and tyranny, by warring and fighting, by murdering and killing, by robbing and plundering, by lying and cheating, by thieving and stealing, by whoring and gambling, by smoking and chewing, by eating and drinking, by pride and rebellion, we have transgressed every precept and commandment of thy word. O Lord, we have also made a covenant with death and an agreement with hell, saying, that when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come nigh us, for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves; because we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by thee with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. And now, O Lord, notwithstanding all of our acknowledgements of equal rights and blessings which thou hast conferred upon all men, we are a nation of base hypocrites; for millions of our fellow men are held in bondage and servitude; by cruel task masters, our manufacturers, our merchants, our nation and our world have become rich upon the products of their toil; and whilst many of us have professed to be friends to the bondman, praying and working for their deliverance; not a day has passed over our heads, but what the products of his toil, sweat and blood have entered into the composition of our diet and clothing, thereby encouraging, strengthening and perpetuating the accursed system, until its propagators have resolved to overthrow the Government, and make this sum of all villanies a national institution. And now, O Lord, we find that our covenant with death and our agreement with hell does not stand, for the overflowing scourge is even upon us, and we are trodden down by it. From the time that it went forth it hath taken us; for morning by morning hath it passed over, by day and by night, and it is a vexation only to understand the report, for our bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it, and the covering narrower than that he he can wrap himself in it, because thou hast risen up against us. And as thou hast said in thy word that thou wouldst bring distress upon men, that they should walk like blind men, because they have sinned against thee, and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dung, neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to save them in the day of thy wrath. Even so, O Lord, has it happened unto our nation at this time, and also thy word according to thy servant James, is now being literally fulfilled before our eyes; for many of our rich men begin to weep and howl for the miseries that are coming upon them. Their riches are corrupted and their garments are moth-eaten, their gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against them, and shall eat their flesh as it were fire. They have heaped treasures together for the last days. The hire of the laborers who have reaped down their fields which is by them kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, and as thou hast said that thou wouldst give them that are wicked to the sword, so thou hast done by our nation, and now O Lord wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked. For many of thy people, who profess to be peace-makers, and to love and serve thee, and that their kingdom is not of this world, and as their master was not; have taken the sword, which he forbid them to take lest they should perish, have entered the field of strife, cutting off heads and limbs, blowing out brains, scattering death and destruction broadcast through our land, drenching its fairest portions with human gore, thereby giving a lie to their professions, and dishonoring their Master whom they pretend to serve. O my God, what a spectacle for men and angels to behold. O Lord we believe this is a just retribution which thou hast permitted to come upon thy people and our nation for their sins; and now O Lord, belongeth unto us shame and confusion of face. O Lord, has mercy clean gone forever? is there no balm in Gilead? is there no physician there? or is thy ear heavy that it cannot hear? or is thine arm short that it cannot save? or our sins so aggravating in thy sight that thou wilt not hear? or is our cup of iniquity brim full, and hast thou determined that we shall drink it to the very dregs, until thou hast swept us from thy footstool with the besom of destruction as thou hast many of the nations before us, who have rebelled against thee? O my God, incline thine ear and hear for thy mercy's sake, and deal not with us according to our just deserts. In the midst of deserved wrath, remember mercy. O Lord, hearken and hear, forgive and defer not, for thine own sake, for thy Son's sake and for our nation's sake, that we may not become a reproach and a by-word in the eyes of all the nations of the earth. O God, grant to give unto us thy people and our nation the spirit of repentance, that we may break off our sins by righteousness and our iniquities by turning to thee, that destruction may not come upon us to the utmost. O Lord, help us to turn unto thee with full purpose of heart so that iniquity shall not be our ruin. O Lord, righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. O Lord, enable us to undo the heavy burdens and let the oppressed go free, and that we brake every yoke, so that it may be said of us, happy is the people whose God is the Lord. And now O Lord we leave our supplications before thee, believing that if we will turn from all of our transgressions thou wilt receive us graciously; but if we refuse and rebel we shall be destroyed by the sword, for thou hast spoken it. O Lord, stay thy hand in judgment, and come in mercy, for thy Son's sake. Amen.

Thoughts beneath Chastisement.

Why am I thus afflicted, O my God, and why thine oft repeated chastenings, Lord? Because, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word;" therefore, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes. The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver." Again, "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him out of thy law; that thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity." Think of this, "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted;" and remember the Lord "doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men." "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby."

So it seems chastenings profit us nothing eventually, unless we are exercised; or, in other words, disciplined or trained by reason of them. May the Lord help us to be made better by his every chastisement, till we shall "Be . . . perfect, even as (our) Father which is in heaven is perfect."

"More Laborers."

If we have harvesting laborers in this great harvest, they must be sent by the "Lord of the harvest." Some drones have come "on their own hook," but they hinder more than they help. Satan, too, has some who are not drones, but real energetic laborers, and are in the field early and late; but instead of harvesting, they are only scattering the sheaves in wild confusion.

But harvesting laborers are few. Let the cry go up for "more laborers" of the right stamp. Let those who have been once sent into the field, go to work again. If any have been induced by Satan's laborers to help scatter sheaves, desist, repent, and again go to work for God. Time is short. All will soon be over—over forever!

"Go out into the Highways and Hedges."—Luke 14: 23.

This injunction of our Savior has peculiar force at the present time. Experience and observation confirm us in the belief that if more labor was expended in this direction, a greater number might be rejoicing in the hope of glory at the appearing of Christ. We are aware that labor in this direction involves difficulties which require grace and zeal to overcome; though no greater difficulties than have ever been found in the pathway of reform. A union in spirit, and co-operation in effort, among those of like faith, would tend to forward the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand at a much faster rate than the careless and indifferent spirit that now prevails. There are instrumentalities sufficient in the Advent body, if concentrated, and brought into subservience to the will of God, to send the word of life to every town in the New England States. And can our skirts be clear of the blood of our fellows, without a more thorough effort than has yet been made? There are preachers willing to go, yea, who long to go to the "regions beyond" and carry the startling news that Christ is at hand. But it would seem that the stewards in one department of the church are unmindful of the responsibility resting upon them. I have reference to that large class who suppose their whole duty done when they have paid a small price for what they have eaten themselves. Is this feeding Christ's little ones? Let us hear what Jesus says respecting it:—"Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not. . . Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered? . . . . Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."—Matt. 41: 45.

We are glad some are giving heed to the injunction, and are sounding the word of God in the "regions beyond." We recently had an opportunity to judge of the immediate result of such efforts. Some faithful young brethren in Southington had been going out into the highways and hedges; and we found, in a place where they have held meetings, a large school house full of candid and intelligent people, well indoctrinated, and who see that their religion must exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, if they enter the kingdom of heaven. God has blessed these brethren in trying to feed the little ones, and they have grown in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord. It did our soul good to hear from them. May God help others to follow their noble example.

Labor performed is not always good accomplished. A blow struck in the wrong place results in injury instead of good. Hence it becomes us to know where to strike. We think the parable from which our subject is drawn settles this point. As the last message is sent to the highways and hedges, we see at a glance that to be consistent with our belief that the supper is ready, and the Lord at hand, we must go there to work. May we occupy the right position, and be found with the wedding garment on when the guests are examined.

Reflect your Light.

How? by letting what you receive shine forth to others. As you have freely received, freely give. Why does the mirror, when placed in the sun, shine so brilliantly? Simply because it reflects the light it receives. Would you shine? Then reflect your light. Have you received but little? Make good use of that little, and you will have more. I believe God will give but little light where none is reflected. He will not continue to give his treasures to an ungrateful heart. As you are enlightened, he expects you to enlighten others.

He waters the earth with rain, and it brings forth fruit for man and beast. Will he water your heart with the dews of grace, if you produce no fruit, nothing to benefit your fellow men? If you receive a ray of light, do not rejoice over it in secret until it turns to darkness; but carry it to your brethren, your sisters and your friends. Find some poor dark soul that never saw the blessed light of the Sun of righteousness; let it shine down into that heart and cause it to leap for joy. In this way you will keep your light constantly bright, and continually increasing. Do you say you have no gift for talking? You can talk about the weather, the markets, the war, and the kingdoms of this world—can you say nothing about the kingdom of our Lord?

If you find a jewel in the mine of truth, do not roll it up in a napkin, and lay it away until you forget that you have found it. Bring it to the common storehouse, and share it with the family, the children of your Father. It will enrich them and will not impoverish you. Thank God for the common storehouse, where all is mine, and all is thine. If we are faithful and honest toward God and man, we may all become rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom.

Notice to Subscribers.

In a few weeks, we shall write off our new Subscription Books, and revise our Mailing Blocks. Subscribers, therefore, are particularly requested to notify us immediately of any errors or omissions that may have occurred in the spelling of their names, or otherwise, on the papers addressed to them. If the Miss, or Mrs., or other title, is omitted, inform us, that we may correct it; and don't forget to write every letter in the name and address PLAINLY AND DISTINCTLY.

Please Write.

Some time since, we sent bills to those who were owing us two dollars or more for the Crisis. Many have given a noble response, with kind words to cheer our hearts.—Thank you. There are several others, we suppose, who have not yet been able to pay anything. They have been waiting from week to week in hope of getting some money to send, and have been disappointed in various ways,—some by sickness, others by losses, or extra expenses, till they are almost discouraged, and hardly know what to do. They do not feel as though they could possibly give up the paper, as "it is all the preaching" they have, aside from the Bible; and in these times of peril, they are very anxious to hear from the dear saints scattered abroad, whose letters and communications are to them truly like cool water to a thirsty traveler in a sandy desert. In this situation, they say, "what shall we do?" We would answer, please write to us, and state the facts in the case, and we will do the best we can for you. If this is not done, we shall be under the painful necessity of discontinuing the paper to those to whom we have sent bills.

Come, dear brother, if you are one of this class, and cannot yet pay anything, and wish the paper continued, please sit down now, and drop us a line, stating the fact, and we will do well by you, and you shall have our sympathies. Do not put off writing till next week, but let us hear from you at ONCE, that we may not cut off any who wish the paper continued.

High Prices.

There is a remarkable advance in the prices of many things, as is usually the case in war times. Paper and stationery have risen one hundred per cent. We hope our readers will remember this fact, and get us all the new subscribers they possibly can, so that while others are advancing the price of their papers, we may be able to continue ours at the same price as before. The Boston Daily Journal has advanced one third, and the daily Herald has doubled its price.

We hope all our paying subscribers will be prompt in these times, so that we shall not be obliged to cut off any from the poor list, which numbers between five and six hundred. We should feel sad to be obliged to deprive them of this source of comfort. We earnestly desire that those who are owing for the present and previous volumes would send us the money as early as possible, that we may know our soundings, and not make shipwreck. We feel confident that the Lord is blessing us, but he requires his friends to co-operate in the work.

People are becoming more anxious to hear and read on the great truths which are committed to our trust. Now is a favored time to work. Let every true laborer in the vineyard of the Lord do his best to assist in arousing a guilty world to a sense of its perilous condition. The trumpet that is to awaken the dead is about to sound. Let us be faithful stewards of the Lord. If we have neglected duty in the past, now come up "to the help of the Lord against the mighty," lest we, like Meroz, receive a curse instead of a blessing. The Lord loves the faithful ones, who are ready to improve the talent entrusted to their care. Dear brethren and sisters, arouse for the work. Let us make one mighty effort to spread the light and truth like sunbeams upon those who are groping in moral darkness. Our "labor is not in vain in the Lord."

The Tract Enterprise.

Many are doing nobly in this glorious work. They show that they have true love for the welfare of their fellow men; and we think there is no way by which so much can be accomplished, with so little means, as by scattering tracts, at the low rates furnished by the Christian publication Society. Remember, one cent pays for thirteen pages, post paid, or eighteen pages by express; one dollar, thirteen hundred pages; ten dollars, thirteen thousand; fifty dollars, sixty-five thousand; and one hundred dollars, one hundred and thirty thousand pages. If those, who have contributed to this glorious enterprise, could witness the joy of the poor watchmen who receive them to distribute where they labor, and see the greedy desire of the people to get the tracts, they would say, truly, "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Come, brethren and sisters, let us press this work in good earnest. Remember, we are doing it for the good of others, which is for the glory of Him who has done so much for us. Let us not be sparing in our efforts.

The Boston Discussion.

Eld. Gates holds that man has a spirit—an inward man—the same size, nearly, as the physical man, which goes away at death to the new Jerusalem, to be with Christ; or to sheol—hades—to be with the devil and his angels. He claims that the wicked spirits of men are now visiting this world by spiritual manifestations, through their mediums. He says, God made this spirit and put it into man after he formed the physical organism. To these assumptions, we replied as follows:—

1. This spirit, of which my Bro. speaks, is either the man, or it is not. If it is the conscious entity, then it is the man, because man is a conscious being, and there are not two conscious entities in the same individual.

2. The spirit is either the whole man, or a part of him. It is not claimed to be the whole of him; then it must be either a part, or no part of him. If no part, then it is something foreign to him, and the discussion also. If it is a part of him, then it is not a man by itself, and therefore should never be called man, more than an arm, eye, or foot. To illustrate; the balance wheel is not the watch, the main spring is not the watch; neither the case, the hands, nor any other part constitutes the watch, but the parts combined. So with a human being; neither part is the man. In harmony with this fact, we never find the spirit called man in the Bible; therefore, we conclude it is not the man; consequently, not a conscious entity by itself.

3. If the spirit is a part of man, then it commences with him, and stops when he does, and therefore is not a man by itself.

4. If MAN is mortal, then every part of him must be mortal also; hence it follows, that if the spirit is a part of man, it must be mortal; for what is true of the whole is of all its parts. In Job 4: 17, we read, "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" Here we are taught that man as a whole is mortal; and as we cannot find one passage which teaches that a part of man is immortal, the question seems to be fully settled.

5. If the spirit is a part of man, then it was made when he was. But man was made of dust—no intimation anywhere in the Bible to the contrary. "The Lord God formed MAN of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and MAN became a living soul."—Gen. 2: 7. "God created man upon the earth."—Deut. 4: 32. "The first man is of the earth, earthy."—1 Cor. 15: 47. No intimation that any thing was added to him but the breath [or spirit] of life;" hence nothing else to take away. He is called man before he receives "the breath of life," and after it is taken from him; therefore "the breath of life" does not constitute him a man. As he is a man, complete in all his parts, before he receives "the breath of life," it follows that it is not a component part of him.

6. If the spirit is the man, it is either mortal or immortal. If a part of man, it is mortal, because man is mortal. If it is immortal, it is not a part of him, hence man has no such spirit, as named in the question, that will be "eternally conscious." Man's hand is a part of him; so is his eye, brain, heart, blood, etc.; and all are mortal, because they are parts of a mortal being. The hand severed is not a man by itself; the same is true of every part of him; hence the unavoidable conclusion, that the affirmative of the question is not sustained by the Scriptures.

War News.

The war news for the past week is not important. But little has been accomplished, only by way of talk. We hear every day of startling events just opening, but they have not yet transpired. All seem to be sick of the war, but unwilling to be the first to give up; hence they are making still greater preparation for more bloody onsets. The scales between the North and South seem to be balanced now about the same as they were a year and a half ago. Both are weakened by the loss of much money and blood, and are rapidly approaching the point of exhaustion, when foreign powers may rise up to dictate a conclusion of the matter, without fear of harm from their weakened subjects.

Bonaparte is now pressing an armstice for six months; intimating they may get so cooled off in that time, that they will not wish to renew the bloody strife; but it is to be feared that the parties are too angry to listen to any such proposals. One thing is certain, "the ship of 'state' is sinking, and if not soon rescued, it will go down to rise no more to be sheltered by the proud eagle banners with stars and stripes.

New Subscribers.

"I think a little effort on the part of each preacher would present a new year's present of one hundred new subscribers to the Crisis. It ought to be noticed in every congregation before the first of January."—H. Munger.

Bro. Munger is endeavoring to do his part. Will not all the preachers make an extra effort? We now print weekly three thousand nine hundred and twelve papers. Shall we not have four thousand with which to begin the new year? What do you say, brethren? Is the cause not worthy of a greater effort?

Bibles.—On account of the great advance in the price of books, we had to pay about $80 expenses on $50 worth of Bibles; hence we are under the necessity of asking more for our English Bibles. See book list.

Our Tract Column.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names towards raising ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS, as a TRACT FUND, to aid the Christian Publication Society in the issue and gratuitous distribution of such Tracts and other publications as the times in which we live demand; and our subscriptions shall be paid at the call of the Treasurer of the Society as soon as the whole amount is subscribed.

That Hymn Book.

Something has been said about a new hymn book, and a committee of advice has been chosen. Is it forthcoming or not coming? This is the general inquiry. We have had a variety of hymn books. I have long felt opposed to such a variety and frequent change. But as there are so many complaints of imperfections in all we now have, and so great a demand from the several states for a new and better one, embracing the best of all, and also the late good hymns, well arranged, well adapted to all purposes, well bound, not comprising over 300 or 400 hymns, to bring it at a low price; and as we now have the facilities to make such a book, with the prospect of selling from 5000 to 10,000 copies, I believe it might be serviceable to the general cause to publish it.

First. Because very many excellent hymns are not in the book we now use, and very many now in them the brethren are obliged to buy, but never use them.

Second. A much cheaper and better arranged book can be made, coming much nearer the wants of the mass, and an act of economy, in time.

Third. If the Christian Publishing Society do not publish one, others are arranging to do so, and before the end we are likely to have one, two, or three new hymn books, from parties or persons whose means and facilities cannot make so good and so cheap a book, nor give it half the circulation that the C. P. Society can. I therefore hope the society will publish one at once. Maine would take 1000 copies in two years.

A New Tract.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Allow me to say a word to you through the Crisis in behalf of a pamphlet which our dear Bro. Brewer has ready to publish, as soon as he can get the means. It is a work which I think will do much good, and well calculated to meet the wants of those who are not immediately interested in the soon coming of the Lord, as well as those who are. It is a synopsis of the kingdom of God, from the time that God established it under David, until its overthrow, together with the Scripture view and evidences of its soon being restored and given to the true heirs, who will take it and possess it forever, even forever and ever.

I would say that the church here has heard him present a synopsis of it, and many feel convinced that it is well adapted to meet the wants of many minds. And as Bro. Brewer is poor, and needs some help, the church here raised sixteen dollars for him. Are there not others who want to help him at this time in scattering the light upon this important subject? If so, please send your remittances to him, at South Glastenbury, Ct., and the Lord reward you according to the gift, when he comes to make up his jewels.

Dark Deeds.

The Lewiston Journal of Nov. 1st, 1862, says: "In the 73d Illinois regiment, there are twenty-five Methodist clergymen. One is a Colonel, and seven are Captains." Says the New York Chronicle: "Never was crime more rampant than now. Stabbing, fraud, and every imaginable form of cruelty and murder meet us at every turn; and it has come to pass that a man who walks out at night finds himself surrounded by robber hands, just ready to pounce upon him, with fatal results to limb and life."

The above are dark signs of the times, ominous in their import; but they are true to the very letter of inspiration. Any one, if he will, can read the signs of the times now, even if he runs. It is high time that we wake out of sleep, for the third woe and seventh trumpet cometh quickly.

Who are the Prophets?

On the 25th of Jan., 1850, Mr. Clay offered his memorable plan of compromise. On the 5th of Feb., amidst such a crowd of both sexes as the Senate chamber had never before witnessed, he came forward to speak in its defense. He said:—

"Never before have I risen with feelings of such deep solicitude. I have witnessed many periods of great anxiety, of peril, and of danger to the country; but never before have I risen to address an assembly so oppressed, so appalled, so anxious."

He says, "I attribute the danger of the country to the unprincipled selfishness of party men. At the moment when the White House is on fire, instead of uniting to extinguish the flames, they were contending about who should be its next occupant! While a dreadful crevasse menaced inundation, they were contending the profits of the estate, which was threatened with total submersion! . . . All now is uproar, confusion, and menace to this union. . . . I denounce secession. None have a right to secede. . . . Within the Union I take my stand, and there I mean to stand and die—fighting, if necessary; but no power on earth shall force me out of the Union. There will nothing but ruin spring from the dissolution of the Union. War will be inevitable; and such a war!—so furious, so bloody, so implacable, so exterminating, could not be found upon the pages of history. I entreat the members of this house to pause, to pause on the brink of the precipice, before you take the fearful leap into the yawning abyss. But if that direful event—the dissolution of this Union—must take place, my prayer to heaven is, that I may not survive to behold it."

How prophetic! Ten years pass away—it is fulfilled! His prayer was also answered, for he is no more.

Tour West Continued.

After the conference in Sumpter, Wis., Dec. 3d to the 7th, I shall meet with the conference in Deer Park, Ill., (eight miles from Ottawa), Dec. 17th. The first of Jan., 1863, I shall give lectures and hold a conference in Louisville, Ky., and visit Jeffersonville, Ind. Then return to Michigan, and hold a conference in Buchanan; next in Reading, Mich., and next in Memphis, Mich., and shall return home via Canada West, sometime in March.

Notices will be duly given of the above meetings in the papers, so that those interested may be able to attend. I find it utterly impossible to meet but a small portion of the calls on this great western field in this tour. But if the Lord spares me, and opens the way, I shall see and speak to the tried and faithful flocks who have invited me to their respective fields of labor; as also to new fields, where the midnight cry has not been sounded. Friends will be patient and hopeful. God is good, and will remember his own waiting ones, and those also who sit in darkness, who call for light on the speedy coming of the Son of man. He that is to "come, will come, and will not tarry." The cry of the waiting ones was never more earnest than now,—"Come, Lord Jesus," and "come quickly." The cry from all parts, "Watchman, what of the night?" is earnest and persistent. Many will not receive the answer, No. But we must go; they want to hear, and must hear. And they want the whole truth on the nature and time of the coming kingdom. They are saying,—

"Blow! watchmen, blow a certain sound,
For dark and dangerous is the night";

"let us have the light, that we and our little ones may be ready in the day of His coming." They shall have it by the help of God.

What is Truth?

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN WARS AND FIGHTINGS, AND CORRECTION OR PUNISHMENT.

Let us be calm now, and start fairly; for although I intend to say something abut the rebellion in our country, yet you will not find me an advocate of war, or of fighting! I repudiate both. But if the Lord, in his word to us, has made a distinction between correction, chastisement, or punishment for evil doing, and that of wars and fightings among men, let us be cautious and observe the same distinction. Truth will stand. Now to the inquiry:—

Must all persons, who try to maintain the laws of our land, be sent to perdition? We often hear it said that no person can be a christian and take an active part in defence of the government of this nation or country.

Dangers on the right hand and on the left.

We ought to be exceedingly careful in regard to what we teach in these times of the last day perils. I sometimes think that there are teachers of what they call Bible truth, who see something like the man's horse while crossing a bridge which had no railing on it, and while he beheld what he thought to be danger on the right hand, he was so absorbed in thought in regard to it, that it was impossible to control him; and so he kept his head and eyes constantly turned to his supposed danger on the right, till he was falling from the bridge on the left! The christian's path to life is "strait" and "narrow," and if he keeps his eyes constantly turned to his supposed danger on the right, he may, before he is aware, be falling into danger on the left. Let us be cautious, and turn our eyes to the right and left, and see to it that we are not involved in the perils of the last days. I suppose no christian will deny but what it will be right to observe the same rules of duty, to the very end of this age, which were taught by Christ and the apostles to be observed by christians in their day.

God's law against sinners.

"Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned: from which some having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling; desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm. But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully: knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for menstealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine; according to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust."—1 Tim. 1: 5-11.

For the Crisis.

A Chapter from our Bible Class in New Bedford, Mass.

Question. Have God's people a right to make laws?

Answer. As the majority of mankind are wicked, and would not be willing to be governed by righteous principles, would it not be almost useless to try and make good and righteous laws? And if godly men were fortunate enough to persuade the majority to enact good and just laws, if there is a revolt or rebellion against the laws enacted, which is often the case—and the present rebellion is a good illustration—must not the righteous men that have made the laws enforce them and put down rebellion? If good men make laws and put a man in office to sustain and enforce the laws, should good men sustain him, or must they complain of his unfaithfulness if he (the officer) does not enforce the laws? If he is not sustained by law-abiding men, will he not be overpowered by the mob? Would it be better to have our city governed by moberats than good laws? Does not the present rebellion find a parallel (on a small scale) in a city where a few rummies get together and declare they will have just as many rum shops, and wherever they please, in the city of New Bedford, and if the city government does not grant their request they will secede and set up a new city government in some part of the city of New Bedford? If this is a parallel case, if we can ascertain our relation to our city government, at such a time, can we not ascertain our duty to our national government at this time?

Can we not all see that the sword and the ballot box are brothers? The law is like a man without life unless the sword underlies it: the sword is the life-giver to the law. It is law's foundation. If there is no sword to be used, there can be no law for the lawless. The sword and the law are bound together, and all efforts to separate them must fail. What is the difference then whether we go to law, or go to war? If we go to law, we grasp the handle of the sword, or load our musket; and if we go to war, we shoot it off. If we get our case in law, and the man refuses to leave our premises, then we have war. If he continues to resist, we must either shoot off the gun that we have loaded, or use the sword we have clinched, or cause some one else to do it; and if the man resists unto death, that christian must be responsible for his death who gained his case in law. Then lawing it, is war on a small scale. The principle is clearly involved. And the man that will go to law, and not to war, shows an inconsistency that finds no apology.

An illustration will place the matter in a true light. Suppose an individual, who, in going to law, gives his opponent the assurance that he is non-resistant, and that if he should get his case, he should not feel justified in using any means but moral suasion to enforce his claim. How do you think he would succeed? Did he not exhaust all moral power with his opponent before he went to law, and it was resisted? And when he engaged in law, had he not come to the conclusion that moral suasion was not sufficiently powerful to bring his antagonist to terms? Hence he appeals to some power that will. Moral power will not; that has failed. The next step is law. But law has no life without it has the sword to give it life. Might as well appeal to a dead man, as to appeal to law, unless some law-abiding men enforce it with the sword if necessary. If he get his case, what will it amount to? He has assured his combatant he will not enforce any claim he may receive in his law-suit by the civil arm, for he is non-resistant. Now all can see the result at a glance. The man's gain is all out of pocket. He has spent his thousands, and much valuable time, with all the perplexity to boot, and finds himself just where he started, except the loss and trouble, notwithstanding he got his case.

This shows how inconsistent men are that will go to law, and yet teach, if any christian goes to war he will be damned. It may be true that men will be damned if they go to war, but it would be well for those who teach it to tell us how man is to escape damnation if he goes to law? If they can give us light on that point, we can then advance.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—Since writing before, I have had a lecture about every evening in six different neighborhoods, giving several in each place, and mostly in new fields, where they had not heard the peculiar doctrines connected with the Advent; and I have been well received and hospitably treated; have had good attendance, and a candid hearing in every case. I go a perfect stranger into these new places. My tracts and children's papers introduce me to the families. I visit all, without regard to name or denomination. I converse freely with each person to whom I can get access. They ask me many questions, which open the way to speak of the peculiar truths connected with the Advent. Then I tell them I have a tract on that particular doctrine, which I will give them. Reading the title, I make a few general remarks calculated to engage their minds on that subject, then tell them I shall give a lecture on that subject this evening at such a place. Thus I get out many who would not otherwise come. Quite an interest is excited in several neighborhoods, and I feel greatly encouraged. I intend going the whole length of the Cape in this way. Shall want more tracts, and must have them.

I give my time wholly to this cause. I never encourage any collections or donations, for it looks too much as though money were the object. I could use many of the back numbers of the "World's Crisis," or second hand ones, or tracts which have been read and are lying round useless on the shelves in the houses of our brethren. If they will only send them to the office of the "World's Crisis," they can be forwarded to me by express, and thus be put into the hands of those who need and will read them. This seems to be an economical way of doing good.

O! if brethren could only see the interest which is often waked up by these visits and tracts, they would feel encouraged to put forth more effort. I often find tracts which have been sent to friends by mail, and they show them to me, telling me that they were sent from Boston, or Lowell, or some other place by particular friends, and they go from house to house on their mission, spreading light on the great truths of the Bible. Thus what a great fire is kindled by two or three cents' expense!

Letters are often shown me which I am informed came from a friend at such or such a place, and this letter is filled with burning words from the pen of some retiring but devoted sister or friend, and it has awakened an interest in the receiver. Let the sisters continue to use their pens, as well as their tongues, to glorify God, and enlighten their friends scattered abroad. O! how much good might be done in this way by those who have no money to give. Cast in your mite. Let the fruit of your pens praise God, enlighten the minds of men, and you will have cause to praise him when you shall see the fruit of your labor in "The kingdom of Jesus,

O! I long to be there!"

Yours, B. Spaulding.

From T. W. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—It has been a little over a year since I left kind friends and home associations for a trial of western life. My experience in the work of the ministry has been one of mingled peace, contention, success and failure. I have endeavored to declare the whole counsel of God. Sometimes the word produced joy and gladness, and fell upon willing ears and anxious hearts; and again it occasioned disquietude and irritation, as the errors of sectarianism and popular theology were exposed by the light of the living word. I have not been as busy as I might have been, but still have not been idle. Some one hundred and twenty-five sermons have been preached, and eleven persons immersed. Have met with considerable opposition from sectarians, and also from some who profess to be of the "household of faith." But none of these things move me. I feel more than ever determined to preach "the present truth."

No one who reads the sacred oracles can fail to discern the "signs of the times"; and as the "end of all things is at hand," there is no time to be lost in sounding the alarm. I believe that it is a great privilege to be an advocate of what is called Advent truths. But while we can rejoice in being counted worthy of such honor, is not our position a most responsible one? Upon us devolves the work of presenting the "last message." But few among the leading denominations see the truth, and fewer still have the courage and fortitude to defend it. Our work is truly a mighty one, for beside our object in awakening a slumbering and faithless church to a realization of her true condition, and to the necessity of preparation for the coming Bridegroom, we have to strive for the "old paths" in attacking that gigantic error—immortality of the soul, with all its numerous train of evil consequences. We have to vindicate the truth and justice of God's word from the aspersions of sceptics, and to prevent the intelligent thinkers who may not have searched "the word" from falling into scepticism, of which there is danger, in consequence of another error,—eternal conscious misery. And while we can sympathise with those christian sects which have made more or less advancement in divine truth, and some progress toward "primitive christianity," yet we must feel conscious of our peculiar position and our particular work.

Is it assuming too much to claim that the Advent people are performing a higher and nobler work than any other class of christians? I think not. But ought this fact to stir up a feeling of pride, of arrogance, and lead us to cry, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are we"? or should it cause us to be humble and thankful, and to gird on the armor of God, and with a firm reliance upon our divine Leader, resolve never to betray our high trust, but by patience and determination prove worthy of the confidence of our heavenly Father? And, Bro. Grant, you have a great work, or rather a prominent part of this great work to do, and how needful that you are sustained by the warm sympathies and ardent prayers of brotherhood. May God spare you until the Master comes, and grant you an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom.

I am at present at Carlinville, and have found a pleasant home with Bro. Graley. This is truly a christian family. They are sound in the faith; have held Advent views for a number of years, and to me they are of great benefit in showing light on prophetic themes I have not been enabled to search into. Before I came here I remained a week at Sr. Henry's in Bunker Hill. Sr. H. has not been preaching any for some time. She expects to resume the work ere long. From here I expect to visit Havana, Mason Co., and from thence may go to Amboy and spend a few days with Elds. Clark and McCullock and the good brethren there, and from thence expect to visit Iowa, as Bro. Deyo is anxiously awaiting me. I desire to attend the Wisconsin Conference, but do not think I can. Yours in the truth.

Eld. T. W. Smith.

From E. W. Potter.

Bro. Grant:—I am a subscriber for the World's Crisis. Have received the paper for about twelve months. I like it very much. It has enlightened my mind and caused me to search the Scriptures, wherein I find that I have been bound down by tradition, believing it as taught by our Baptist brethren. I opposed the advent doctrine, believing that it was not according to the teaching of Jesus. My brethren denounced the doctrine as erroneous, therefore I concluded that it was not necessary to look into the Scriptures further than as taught by our minister. I believed in the old tradition that as soon as a christian died his soul went immediately to heaven. What a mistaken idea! O that men would throw away tradition, and believe the Bible! I feel thankful to God that I ever fell in with the Advent tracts—"The Destiny of the Wicked"—"The State of the Dead"—The Coming of Jesus Christ," etc., etc.

Myself and wife are the only ones that have come out from tradition in our little village, but there are many anxious to hear. Bro. Ingham, with Sister Muzzey, have preached a number of times at my house. The Baptist meeting-house and school-house are closed against us, but the Lord has given us a small room to worship him in accordance to his written word. We have seated it, and it can be occupied any time for meeting. Will accommodate sixty or eighty persons. We pray that the Lord will send us a minister who is not afraid to declare the whole counsel of God. Bro. Ingham is the only Advent minister who preaches in the neighborhood, and we pray that the Lord will protect him, that he and family may safely return to Nova Scotia, that we may hear him once again. Yours in hope of eternal life. E. W. Potter.

From J. R. Mitchell.

Dear Bro. Grant:—Verily the history of Rome is nearly complete, and with it the history of the world. Surely the day of the Lord cometh; the night is far spent, and the day is at hand. "Alas for the day! for the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come." The political horizon grows dark; the three unclean spirits are doing their work, of gathering the nations "to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." The stupendous and unprecedented preparations for war, the great waking up of the nations, the increasing distress and perplexity, are sure forerunners of coming judgment. The deep, low mutterings of the gathering storm gives fearful indication of coming wrath. The nations are angry. Let Zion's watchmen blow the trumpet and sound the alarm. The world is asleep. The church is slumbering while the fearful crisis approaches. The harvest is nearly ripe. The Lord will soon descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God. The reaping time will then come. The righteous will be gathered into his garner, and the wicked will be left to inexorable fate, to be cast into the great wine-press of Jehovah's wrath. Verily the kingdoms of this world will soon become the kingdom "of our Lord and of his Christ." How important the injunction of Jesus, "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Your brother in hope of the kingdom,

Albany, N. Y.

From Eld. J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—I find it necessary to call on brethren for help, who have had and sold my works. I think I have good reason to complain in this matter. For instance, a little over three years ago, I gave out $50 in works within the bounds of the six eastern States; $40 had been out years before; and in three years past I have received only six dollars on the whole amount. The west have done but little better, in proportion to the amount due. There have been a few praise-worthy exceptions to these general remarks. As times are now better West, and I think also East, I can but hope more attention will be paid to this call than ones heretofore.

I am yet confined by an affection of the lungs and a bad cough, caused by excessive labor in my last tour, of which I will give an account when better able to write. If saved from consumption, it will be a narrow escape. I can do nothing to obtain means of support this winter, and very much need a reprint of some of my works. "A word to the wise should be sufficient." I never fail to receive money when directed to me at Buffalo, N. Y. J. Blain.

Buffalo, Nov. 27th, 1862.

From Bro. N. F. Fuller.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I suppose you remember that at Tremont campmeeting, quite a number gave up the use of tobacco. Feeling it to be my duty, I gave it up with the rest; and I feel to thank God that he has enabled me to overcome the filthy habit. When I think how much misery and even death it has caused, it leads me to think that it must have originated from him that has the power over death, which is the devil. When I gave my heart to the Lord, I gave up the devil and all his works.

Not only does the Bible teach me that it is not right; but my own conscience tells me that it is one of the devil's great plans to destroy man; and I am determined, by the help of the Lord, never to touch it again.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Danielsonville, Ct., Nov. 9th, 1862, of consumption, after a long illness of eighteen months, Bro. Charles Bennett, aged 28 years. Also in the same place, Nov. 16th, Nellie Brown, last child of Bro. Charles and Eliza Bennett, aged one year.

Death has swayed his dark sceptre most unsparingly over this family for two years past. He has chosen precious victims, but victims over which he will boast not for ever. Nov. 15th, 1860, its gloomy shadow first fell upon their sunny home, as little Charlie left his cradle bed to rest unrocked, yet undisturbed in a little grave. Here, as I bowed over its wasting form, with parents oppressed with grief and dread forbodings, and begged for it a little longer life, if a longer life was best, began my first acquaintance with these, ever since, my dearest friends.

Dec. 18th, 1861, Allie, the light of the household, a daughter of five summers, the picture of health, with a mind far riper than her years, falling suddenly sick, sank like her little brother into death's peaceful slumbers. The father was then sick. Consumption had fixed upon him its haggard look, yet he was without hope. He bowed heavily beneath this stroke. As at her burial, I spoke from the words of God, Isa. 48: 10, "I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction," by divine blessing his heart was touched, and from that time he seemed to feel that God loved him, notwithstanding he suffered him to be afflicted. His first public confession of Christ was Jan. 4th, 1862, at a class meeting, held at his house, which he much enjoyed. His submission, patience and devotion, have been well tested since that time; tested only to be found "unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." God manifested himself often to him in the night watches, when sleep would depart from him, in bright visions of the resurrection and of the glory that shall follow, and his eyes were often dimmed with tears of joy, and his lips found sweet employ in lisping forth praises for the glorious hope of endless life. His exhortations to christians, in whose lives he had detected inconsistencies, when he himself was in sin, and his words to the unconverted, I trust will not soon be forgotten. Anxious to redeem the time to the last, he caused to be engraven upon his coffin plate these words,—"I shall live again," that he might preach the resurrection even when cold in death. He now sleeps. His dear companion yields him up to death in sorrow, but still another stroke awaits her. Nellie B., an infant babe, given her but a year ago to cheer her somewhat amid fiery trials, and which she had fondly hoped would be left her, when her husband should be no more, survived her father but one week. Death has added her, too, to the pale inhabitants of his marble city. A wife, a mother, is left alone, alone! Did that word ever weigh so heavily before? Not to her aching heart; no, never! She fain would say to death, Take me also, and let me rest from all earth's woes beside my loved ones yonder. Yet she has proved too well the faithfulness of her God to murmur or complain. He has never forsaken her through all her long affliction. Are afflictions heavy, she knows that there is "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." "The Lord himself shall descend," and then those precious treasures, over whom death now boasts a victory, shall "awake and sing" an everlasting triumph. This is her hope, with it she can sing,—

"Let cares like a wild deluge come,
And storms of sorrow fall;
So I may safely reach my home
My God, my heaven, my all."

H. F. C.

Died at Long Point, Ill., Sept. 14th, 1862, Bro. Gilman, aged 51 years.

Bro. Gilman leaves a companion and three children to mourn his loss; but they do not mourn as those that have no hope. Though dead, his influence lives. His love for the truth of God was such as to lead him to make large sacrifices for its advancement. His house was always open, and a home for the people of God. In the organization of the church, some three years since, he was chosen one of the deacons, which office he filled faithfully till his death.

He looked forward with much interest to the time when the kingdom of God should be established under the whole heaven. He was strongly opposed to fighting. He said he could not disobey God to obey man. He thought it was wrong for christians to go to the war. He was a man that loved peace, and labored for those things that make for peace. He was permitted to see all of his children baptized and united with the church of which he was a member. His funeral sermon was preached by the writer, from Ps. 71: 20. A. S. Calkins.

FOREIGN NEWS.

[Liverpool 20th, Londonderry 21st.]

It is reported that another craft similar to the Alabama had sailed from Liverpool to capture and destroy any vessels sailing under an American flag.

News unimportant.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Nov. 25. A special dispatch to the Times, from Sigel's headquarters yesterday, says: "Such information has been received at these headquarters this afternoon as leaves no further room to doubt that the entire Northern portion of Virginia has been abandoned by the rebel troops. There are a few of White's guerrillas roaming about Leesburg, Mount Gilead, Martinsburg and vicinity. Jackson has gone toward Richmond."

The city authorities of Savannah are making arrangements to move the non-combatants from that city preparatory to the anticipated attack of the enemy. They have adopted a resolution that Savannah should never be surrendered; that it should be defended until, if taken, the victors' spoils should be a heap of ruins.

Newbern, N. C., Nov. 21, via Fortress Monroe, Nov. 27. On Tuesday some 4000 rebels, under Brig. Gen. Martin, attempted to drive in our pickets and take the city. They advanced on the Trent road for Pollocksville, and succeeded in driving, after a brisk skirmish, the pickets for a short distance. About eight hundred rebels then marched through the woods seven miles to capture two companies of Mass. 27th Regiment, and one company of Mass. 24th, stationed at Bachelor's Creek, on the railroad. The rebels met with a warm reception, and were defeated, falling back in disorder, retreating on the double quick. The rebels thought to take the forces unawares, but Col. John Kurtz, of the 23d Mass., the Provost Marshal, in command of the post, was prepared at all points.

New York, Nov. 29. The Herald has the following from Charlestown, Va., 27th: The 2d Virginia cavalry under Col. Paxton, left Camp Piatt on Monday last, after marching 210 miles in 70 hours. Part of the march was through a pelting snow storm. Col. Paxton came upon the enemy in the vicinity of Frankfort, attacked them with vigor, and after a short fight defeated him, capturing two commissioned officers, 108 non-commissioned officers and privates, 100 horses, between 200 and 300 stand of arms, and burned his camp and all his equipage, his stores and four wagons. Col. Paxton did not lose a man. Major Powell particularly distinguished himself.

Chantilly, Va., Nov. 30. Brig. Gen. Stahl has just returned. He attacked the enemy at Snicker's Ferry, and followed with 300 cavalry into their camps on the other side of the river, near Berryville.

Our men charged splendidly whenever they met the enemy. White's cavalry were driven in all directions. Nearly all their officers were captured and colors taken. White fled and hid himself at a house in Berryville. The 3d, 7th, and 12th Virginia cavalry were also attacked and routed. Forty of their men, with their horses, were taken prisoners, fifty killed and wounded. Eighty cattle and eighty horses were also brought in. Our loss was about fifteen in killed and wounded.

The Effect of the President's Proclamation.—The Washington Morning Chronicle prints the following letter, addressed to Senator Grimes of Iowa, and written by a Brigadier General from that State:

Headquarters District of Corinth,
Corinth, Nov. 18, '62.

Dear Sir: As I believe a mistaken idea is becoming prevalent in the North as to the effect of the President's proclamation in the South, I desire to give you a few items. No doubt I am in a position to know as well, if not better than any one else, of the feeling in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, as from this outpost we have daily information from all these States, and I assure you that the terror it is creating in these States is not and cannot be realized by the North. They of course dread the advance of our armies, and have some hopes of checking it, but as yet they have not discovered any means of checking the widespread insubordination among their slaves that is showing itself. They have taken them from most of the public works, almost entirely from their army, and directly south of us they do not allow them to go to the cities, towns, or near the railroad.

Many planters are leaving their homes with their families for the cities, while others are taking their slaves to other States. As our armies advance, the slaves boldly leave and come to us, and are very uneasy even in the interior of Georgia and Alabama, and, as the planters say, are of not much account to work. If the policy is carried out faithfully, it will demoralize their armies, for the slave owners are clamorous to go to their homes and families. Thousands are leaving without any permits, and in utter defiance of their orders and laws. Slaveholders use every means in their power to keep the proclamation from their slaves.

Trouble in Europe.

The Italian question in Europe seems to be coming to a head. Napoleon's proposed plan of settlement is not received with favor by the Pope or the radicals of Italy. To make the matter worse the Prime Minister of England has, in a very impudent manner, informed Napoleon that the time has arrived for ceasing to meddle in Italian affairs, and that Victor Emmanuel should be allowed to obtain Rome, if he can, his character of a christian Prince being the guarantee that on occupying it, he would pay the greatest respect to the clerical status of the Pope, and promptly endow him and his successors with a sufficient and liberal appanage. This, however, would deprive Pius IX of all temporal power. What answer Napoleon may have given to Palmerston has not transpired. Palmerston's message is threatening, to a certain extent, virtually implying, if you do not help the Italians we shall. On Napoleon's reply, therefore, may hang the momentous question, between France and England. In case of war between these countries, it would be difficult for Austria and Prussia, and even Russia, to keep out of it. To our own country, battling for the great cause of good government and human freedom, this question is mainly of interest from the fact that a war between France and England would so occupy them as to prevent the interference of either in American affairs. We will look with some anxiety for Napoleon's response to Palmerston. It may turn out a match to fire the Continent.—Albany Evening Journal.

A letter from Admiral La Gravierre says that the forward movement of the French army from Orizaba cannot be commenced before the first week in December. He is of the opinion that nothing can prevent the French reaching the city of Mexico in the course of January, although the army may have to fight the enemy once or twice on the way.

It is stated that one of the victims ordered to be executed at Palmyra, Missouri, on the 18th inst., was a man who had a wife and several children dependent altogether upon his daily labor for their support. A young man, knowing the condition of the family, offered himself as a substitute for the husband and father, was accepted, and was one of the ten who were shot.

Strong brown paper is now manufactured at the Salisbury Paper Mills, in Orange county, N. Y., from "cat tails," the product of the wild flag growing in low grounds all over the North. The proprietor, Mr. Oakley, is experimenting with a view of making white paper, also from the same material.

☞ An English physician who visited Garibaldi, by request of his friends, and was absent a fortnight, charged £3,400.

☞ In the second half of the 15th century Russia was but 18,000 square miles in extent. Now it covers 392,000 square miles.

Notice.

As the signs of the near approach of the King that is to reign in righteousness are thickening around us, and so few are prepared to meet him, I propose, the Lord willing, to take a trip into Ohio the last of Dec., and stay a part of the winter, and preach where my humble labors may, by the assistance of our Heavenly Father, arouse some to be prepared to meet him and have a part in his kingdom. ## Looking Forward.

A little while longer and then we'll rest,
With the prophets and martyrs of old;
We'll share in the joy of the holy and blest,
And walk in the city of gold.

Our home will be fair on the ransomed earth,
And the conqueror's song we'll sing;
And the long drear night, with its bitter woe,
Will no darkening shadow bring.

The last-day perils are gathering now,
The nations of earth are stirred;
And the mighty go forth while the battle cry
Through the breadth of the land is heard.

The hearts of the worldlings fail with dismay
At the omens of coming gloom;
What hope is there now for the waiting church,
But the hope that the Lord will come?

We have learned to look for an hour of strife,
Ere Messiah his throne shall take;
And we welcome the storm as a token sure,
That earth's kingdoms he soon will break.

With calmness we wait while the nations rush,
And the words of God are fulfilled;
For beyond the dark cloud there is rest and peace,
When his word the fierce tempest has stilled.

O pilgrim, be holy! cast off every weight,
Leave the world with its follies and pride;
There's no wrinkle or stain on the wedding robe,
When the Bridegroom receives the Bride.

The Seventh and Eighth Kings.

REVELATION 17.

There are but four theories, so far as I know, in regard to the eight kings of the 17th chapter of Revelations; and three of these agree in regarding Napoleon Bonaparte as the seventh, and Louis Napoleon, the present Emperor of France, the eighth. These three theories differ from each other only in reference to the application of the six preceding. What this difference is, and whether any of them are right or not, I shall not now undertake to determine. I shall, however, be able to remonstrate, I think, that they are incorrect, at least so far as the last two are concerned. To do this, it will be necessary to examine the afore mentioned chapter carefully, from the third to the eleventh verse:—"So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: and upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration. And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns. The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is. And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space. And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition."

It will be seen by the third verse, that the angel carried the Revelator forward "in the spirit into the wilderness," that is, within the period of the 1260 years. As he was thus being carried forward, as he informs us, he "saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast," etc. Now, as he was invariably carried forward, in seeing his prophecy, therefore this was evidently the first thing he saw on entering the wilderness state. That John saw the woman, thus seated upon the scarlet colored beast, before his arrival, "in the spirit," as far as the reign of the sixth king, appears very evident from the explanation of the "mystery" given by the angel in the seventh, eighth and tenth verses. In the following, I shall only refer to, or quote so much of, these verses as are necessary to the object in view; as to quote the whole of each verse would rather obscure the sense, so far as my present object is concerned, than otherwise.

In the seventh verse, the angel said to John, "Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her. . . . The beast that thou sawest WAS, and IS NOT; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition. . . . And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come," etc. It will be seen, by the foregoing, that the angel, in explaining the "mystery" to the Revelator, occupied a certain or definite point in the prophetic history; and this point is shown to be no farther down the stream of time than the reign of the sixth king; for he says, that "five ARE fallen, and one IS (the sixth); and the other (the seventh) is not yet come"; but just before he makes this statement, he says, "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit;" showing that the explanation of the "mystery of the beast" took place at the same point in the prophecy as the explanation of the seven kings. [illegible] beast was not [illegible] king was, or [illegible] the bottom[illegible] sixth king that the beast went into the bottomless pit, we are not here informed; but one thing is certain—that the beast was in the bottomless pit during the reign of the sixth and seventh kings. I wish this fact to be particularly remembered, as it will be noticed hereafter as an important particular. What this beast was, or represented, is not my purpose now to demonstrate, as it is not necessary to the object in view.

That this sixth king was not the imperial form of the Roman Government, which existed in the days of the Revelator, A. D. 96, is sufficiently proved from the fact that the spectacle of the woman sitting upon the beast was then not less than four hundred years in the future; and therefore it could not have been pointed to as an event in the past; and yet the angel explained the "mystery of the beast" to John by saying, "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit." If, then, as I have before stated, the time when John saw the woman sit upon the scarlet colored beast was, at the least, four hundred years in the future from the time he lived—about A. D. 96, all must see at a glance, I think, that the explanation of the angel could only be admissible on the ground that he stood at a point in the prophecy still future to where the woman sat upon the beast. But if imperial Rome was the sixth king, then the woman and beast, as John saw them, were in the past in his day. As this was not the fact, therefore all such theories are incorrect; and we are to understand that John was carried forward, as he says, "in the spirit into the wilderness," as far as the sixth king; the first being the Greek empire, from the fall of the Roman empire, A. D. 476, to about 755.

Having shown that the Revelator stood in the reign of the sixth king, at the time the angel explained the mystery of the "beast" and "seven kings," we will next see how the explanation will apply to Napoleon first and third, as being the seventh and eighth king. The sixth king, according to this theory, was Austria, which I will admit for the present, but we shall soon see, however, that this was not the fact. I now ask, on the ground that Napoleon first was the scarlet colored beast, according to the theory that makes him the seventh king, how could the angel stand in the reign of Austria, and point to the reign of Napoleon Bonaparte as an event in the past? "The beast (Napoleon) that thou sawest was, and is not," etc.: most certainly, Napoleon the first, as well as third, was then in the future.

But again. I have shown that the scarlet colored beast "was not"; that is, was in the bottomless pit, at least during the reign of the sixth and seventh kings; therefore, as the beast was to ascend out of the bottomless pit and succeed the seventh, and thus become the eighth, it is very evident that the beast that was, was not the seventh king; notwithstanding many read—"the eighth of the seventh"—while the text reads—"the eighth is of the seven." This will be explained hereafter. Moreover, suppose I admit, for the present, that John stood between Napoleon first and third (seventh and eighth kings) at the time the angel explained to him the "mystery"; what then? Let us quote the text again with this position—"The beast (Napoleon) that thou sawest, was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit," etc. "And there are seven kings; five are fallen"! All must see at once that this view of the case will not work; for, instead of five, there are seven fallen at this point, if Napoleon first was the seventh king or the beast that was. With this view of the case, instead of reading "five are fallen, and one is" (the sixth), we should be under the necessity of reading—seven are fallen, and one is (the eighth), and the other (the ninth) is not yet come; the beast would be the tenth and last king.

It will further be seen, that as John stands at the sixth king, therefore he cannot be made to stand between the seventh and eighth, where there is no king, in order to render the language of the angel admissible, as pointing back to Napoleon first, and forward to Napoleon third, since the sixth king cannot be placed forward of the seventh.

By reference to chapter 11: 7, it will be seen that the beast out of the bottomless pit—the eighth king, was to kill the two witnesses, on the expiration of the 1260 days or years; hence, the importance of a correct understanding of this eighth king. If the present Emperor of France is the eighth king—the beast out of the bottomless pit—then he is the one that is to kill the witnesses; and therefore that event is yet in the future. But I trust I have shown, to the entire satisfaction of the reader, that the Napoleon dynasty, separately considered, cannot be worked into any of the seven kings. As therefore Napoleon third cannot be the eighth king, therefore we must look for the killing of the witnesses in the past. That this wonderful event was fulfilled in the French Revolution, between the years of 1792 and '96, I think there ought not to be a doubt in the minds of any who are familiar with its history. This, then, being true, it proves that France was the eighth king—the beast out of the bottomless pit [illegible]

French army. Counting backward then, and we find Austria to be the seventh king, and Spain the sixth. Spain, then, was where the angel stood and explained the mystery of the beast that was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit."

"And of the seven." France succeeded the Greek empire about 755, in supporting the Catholic Church, and thus became the second king; therefore, when the same power arose again, and succeeded Austria—the seventh "king, it became the eighth," and at the same time was one of the seven—the second one in the line. France, then, without reference to any particular king, has been the eighth king from as far back at least as 1792.

Report of the Iowa and Minnesota Christian Conference.

Met according to appointment. Business was opened Oct. 24th, at 9 o'clock. Conference called to order by the clerk. Voted Eld. Wm. Sweet President, and Eld. Peter S. W. Deyo Clerk. Prayer by Eld. T. K. Allen. Voted that visiting brethren participate in our deliberations.

Reports of Churches. Strawberry Point church, Iowa, reported by letter. Two expelled, one drafted, one death, seventeen added. Present number forty-three. Cleaveland church, Minn., nearly gone down on account of divisions, and destitute of preaching. Floyd, Iowa, was holding their own. Had preaching every two weeks. New Hartford church was prospering. Six recently added. Cascade, Iowa, had been blessed the past year. One expelled, twenty-one added. Present number thirty-three. Castle Rock, Minn., Marble Rock, Iowa, Rock Grove, Iowa, sent no reports.

Reports of Preachers. Those present were Elds. Wm. Sweet, C. L. Page, Peter S. W. Deyo. Bro. Sweet was preaching some, and the cause was on the gain. Bro. Page was to work, and feels even in all circumstances he would do all he could. The rest of the preachers were reported by the clerk.

Bro. Peter S. W. Deyo brought in his report, also statistical account of conference. Traveled 1985 miles with horse and buggy, preached 197 sermons, baptized 27, received $131.67 as free will offering, expenses $55.00, leaving a balance of $76.65, and thinks that the cause is generally on the gain. The conference was organized in 1857, with three preachers and two churches. Had increased up to the special conference of July 4, 1862, to twenty-five preachers, one expelled, and fifteen churches. Two had disbanded. The increase of communicants in five years from 25 to about 400. I will here return thanks to that sister who sent me $2.50 by the way of Bro. Grant. May the Lord bless her for her kindness, although an entire stranger. I hope we shall meet in the kingdom. Be assured the money shall be used in the missionary work to a good purpose.

Voted, that we as a conference advise the different churches to specify the length of time that letters of recommendation shall be good to licensed preachers—not exceeding one year.

Voted, that this conference respectfully request the deacons of the several churches to do all they can to raise means for the support of the ministry in their midst.

Opportunity was given for membership, and Elds. Thomas K. Allen and Philip Ramer of Winona Co., Minn., and Bro. Wm. J. Bursell, Garwood Bursell, and Sr. Ruth Ann Rowell, all of Minn., were duly received, also Winona Christian church, of twelve members.

Whereas the territory of Iowa and Minn. Christian Conference is so large, therefore

Resolved, That the State of Minn. be set off as a conference by itself; and Voted, that Eld. Allen act as clerk of the Minn. Christian Conference.

Voted, that Eld. Sweet be Evangelist.

Voted, that Eld. C. Churchill act as President for Iowa, and Eld. Peter S. W. Deyo their Evangelist.

Voted, that the Evangelists appoint the time and place of their conference.

Voted, that we as a conference heartily approve the re-appointment of Eld. Grant for editor of the World's Crisis.

Voted to adjourn.

WM. SWEET, President.
PETER S. W. DEYO, Clerk.

The meetings connected with the conference were excellent, and left a good impression. First discourse by Bro. Sweet, from 1 Pet. 3: 15. Reason of our hope. Second, by the writer, from 1 John 1: 7. Walking in the light, and urged the necessity of the union of all christians. Third, Bro. Page, from Matt. 24: 45. Meat in due season. Fourth, Bro. Allen, from Ex. 33: 18, on the glory of God.

Sunday morning Sister Rowell preached from Dan. 7. 27, on the kingdom. An able discourse, in a timely place. She was formerly from the Christian order, and will be an ornament to the truth in the West. Afternoon, Bro. Sweet, from John 12: 26, on following Christ. In the evening by the writer, from Dan. 12: 1, 2, in which the 11th of Daniel was examined, bringing out the following men as subjects of prophecy: Bonaparte, and Alexander the Less (v. 27); Spain the king of the South, England the king of the North, (v. 40); Bonaparte (19th verse); Louis Philippe (20); Louis Napoleon (verse 21); also Rev. 13 and 17. Showed the Napoleon dynasty would continue and fight against the Lamb. Rev. 17: 14. The two-horned beast is yet to [illegible] pleasant and harmonious conference with the sacrament. They will soon organize a church of about twenty members. Bro. and Sr. Meeker were there—came 150 miles from the vicinity of St. Peters, and were in the fort a few days, while they were in danger of the Indians.

Our Happy Eden Home.

AIR.—"The Belle of the Mohawk Vale."

O! sweet is the sound that the Savior soon will come,
To gather his jewels all home;
From the east and the west, from the south and the north,
And with singing to Zion they'll come.

CHORUS.

O Savior, Savior, dearest Savior, come!
We sigh for our long sought rest,
And to meet all the loved ones in our Eden home,
With Jesus forever blest.

Our friends who now sleep in death's chill embrace,
Will awake when the last trumpet sounds;
We'll meet them again, while the angels shout Amen!
O the glory! 'tis glory all around.

CHORUS.

When we reach that blest shore, with our harps in our hands,
And the angels are marching around,
Then we'll strike our glad notes with that bright, immortal band,
And all heaven will re-echo with the sound.

CHORUS.

Then our sorrows will be o'er, and all tears wiped away,
In our own Eden home we shall rest;
We shall eat from life's tree in that bright, eternal day,
Beside life's pure river ever blest.

CHORUS.

O! sweeter, dearer, yes, dearer far than all
Earth's glory, or treasures of the sea,
Is our own blest Eden, with the city fair and bright,
Where the glory of God will ever be.

The lion and the lamb will feed together there,
And the children will lead them around;
And the flowers of that land will yield a rich perfume,
And the ransomed will walk that holy ground.

CHORUS.

My Journal.—No. 3.

TOUR WEST.—THE CAUSE IN PHILADELPHIA.

Saturday, Oct. 25. Arrived at noon, and put up, by special invitation, with Henry Lye, one of the fathers of the Advent cause in this city. He, with his family, early embraced the faith under the labors of Brn. Hale and Litch, in 1842; and from that time has been a liberal and earnest supporter of the Advent cause. And I am happy to know, in this hour of my trial, when many are turned against me on account of my loyalty to the true principles of the old Advent faith, that I find in him, and his noble wife, a true christian friendship and a substantial support. They are not "ashamed of the man" that was willing to cut asunder all his relations with his denomination, and devote his time and talents to help "Father Miller" spread the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand. (For I never claimed more or any higher honor than to help that dear man of God in his glorious and godlike work.) This afternoon I called upon Dr. Wardle, Henry Boyer, and others of like precious faith, and was cheered by words of sympathy and confidence. Brn. Wardle and Boyer are officers in the Board of the Advent church in Philadelphia, who informed me that I was invited by the authorities of the church to preach to them, with but one dissenting vote. The most of the members and officers of this church, which is now small, are of the old Millerite stock. They love the truth, and mean to adhere to it to the end. They are anxious to revive their public meetings, and raise the banner once more for the speedy coming of Jesus; and to-morrow we are to hold three services, to see what interest may be manifested by Adventists, and the public, to accomplish this end.

* * * * * *

As said Dr. Litch, a few years since, so I say now:—"We intend, by the Lord's help, to spread the glad tidings of the kingdom of God, until it appears. The arguments which have been presented on the prophetic history and periods, together with the signs of the times, have lost none of their strength; and we purpose to continue presenting them until the Master comes, that we may be found giving his household meat in due season."

Here I stand; and am at work with the same faith and interest in the Advent cause as at first. I believe the signs and the prophetic periods "have lost none of their strength." Far otherwise. The new light reflected on the periods, and the multiplication of the signs, make our position stronger than at any former time. And with these facts before me, "I thank God and take courage." And if others backslide, or turn from the cause, I can only say that I hope for grace and wisdom to continue to the end. And whatever trials await me in finishing my work, I trust, as always, they will only do me good. I have not left my post, or my work. I have no inclination to [illegible]

Oct. 26th. We have a wet, dark, and gloomy day. It rains in torrents. Well, God "sendeth the rain," and when he will. All right. On going to the Assembly Rooms, in Tenth St., (near the place of the "Old Museum," where the thousands used to congregate in 1842, and onward) in the same place also where Brn. Hale and Litch opened the first Advent meeting in 1842 (though the Hall has been rebuilt), I felt that I stood [illegible] surrounded with hallowed associations and [illegible] remembrances [illegible] did I feel happier, or more confidence in the great Advent question, than in this hour. My eyes were greeted with a large morning audience, most of whom were old and tried friends of the cause, with others who came to get light on the near coming of Christ. I spoke on the two witnesses of Rev. 11. In the afternoon, our place was filled mostly with men, as it was too wet for many ladies to get out. I had a good hearing on the fifteenth and sixteenth chapters of Revelation. The interest was much like that we used to have in the Old Museum, in our best days, as Adventists. I felt full as well, and never spoke with more freedom or effect. At the close of the meeting I was besieged to remain longer, or come again. In the evening the storm was more severe than in the day, but we had a good audience. My subject was the time when Daniel will stand in his lot. At the close of the service a vote was passed by the audience inviting me to come and spend more time with them on my return from the West, which I hope to do.

Monday, Oct. 27. Visited the family of Bro. Litch, he being absent in N. E. I had a pleasant interview. Father Barstow, father-in-law of Bro. L., I found very feeble, but happy in God, and ready like Paul to depart to be with Christ. He is one of my oldest friends. I have enjoyed his friendship from the age of ten years. He was then a Methodist; and though an Adventist in faith, is still an honored member of that church. We had a solemn season of prayer together, which may be the last with him till Jesus comes. We parted in hope. I had conversations today with Bro. Grun, Dutcher, Boyer, Lye, Wardle and others, on the subject of the coming kingdom.

Condensed Report

Of the E. N. Y. and W. Mass. and Conn. Second Advent Conference.

Met at Warehouse Point, Nov. 4th. Preaching in the evening by Geo. L. Teeple, from 1 John 3: 7. In the morning of Nov. 5th met for business. Opened with prayer by Bro. Babcock. Examination of preachers taken up and passed. The report of the preachers relative to their labors showed a strong desire on their part to be found doing the will of God. In some places an interest, in others rather cold. There seems to be in some new localities a desire to hear. By the report of the preachers, some have been converted since we last met. Adjourned till half-past one P. M.

Met at half-past one. Opened with prayer by Bro. Wilkins. Voted to proceed to the election of officers. Bro. Wilkins here joined the conference. Bro. S. S. Brewer was elected President. Bro. B. St. John, Vice President. Bro. G. L. Teeple, Secretary and Treasurer. A committee of three was appointed, viz., Brn. Brewer, Munn, and Caufield, to draft a certificate. A committee of three, called an ordination committee, was appointed, viz., Brn. Babcock, Munn, and Caufield. Adjourned to Thursday morning, nine o'clock, A. M. Preaching in the evening by Bro. Caufield, from Eph. 5: 1, 2.

Thursday morning met at nine o'clock. Opened with prayer by Bro. Bellows. After hearing the report of the committee appointed to draft a certificate, and the report being accepted, etc., Voted to adjourn to meet at the call of the Secretary.

Thursday, 2 o'clock, P. M., Bro. Brewer gave a discourse on the seven heads of Rev. 13. In the evening, Bro. Gardner preached from Matt. 25: 23. Friday, A. M., Bro. Brewer gave a lecture on the two-horned beast of Rev. 13. In the afternoon, Bro. Munn a lecture on the 20th of Rev. In the evening, Bro. Wilkins preached from Jas. 1: 14.

Saturday, A. M., conference meeting. At 2 o'clock, P. M., Bro. Teeple preached from 2 Tim. 4: 8; and in the evening Bro. Gardner, from Phil. 3: 16. Sunday, A. M., Bro. Wilkins preached from John 14: 15; at 2 P. M., Bro. St. John, from the same text. In the evening Bro. Munn preached from Matt. 13: 43.

There was a good degree of conviction on the congregation, but how much good was done the future will determine. The Lord was with us by his Spirit, and we trust it was not in vain for us, neither for the cause of God, that we met together at Warehouse Point. We parted, praying God to bless the Conference to the good of the church and others. Number of preachers present, ten. Absent, four.

Idle Watchmen.

The watchmen should "give the trumpet a certain sound." How many are idle, and sound the gospel trumpet but faintly, and rarely. They preach on Sundays only, and perhaps only one sermon then. A healthy minister, with a heart full of religion, can preach from six to nine sermons per week. I do it for months in succession, riding in my own conveyance through all kinds of weather and going; so can you. If you are feeble it may toughen you. Try it. God bids you labor. Preach the preaching God bids you—not all dry theory. [illegible] watchmen, try six to nine sermons per week! Preach to the [illegible] is near. [illegible]

The Feet in Winter.

Sometimes in washing the feet in warm water, a great deal of scurf or whitish soft substance may be scraped from the soles; this is dead skin, dried perspiration, and other accumulations, all resulting from a want of personal cleanliness. These accumulations occur most in winter, when washing the feet is neither as convenient nor agreeable as in summer-time. Many persons suffer from cold feet, simply from a neglect to keep them clean. Few suffer thus in summer-time, one reason for which is that the skin is moist, the pores are open, a free evaporation takes place, and the blood is invited to the surface. In winter the skin is dry, harsh and cold. To keep them constantly warm and comfortable, is indispensable to good health; and to do this, the surface must be brought to the condition of summer; that is, must be soft and somewhat moist, instead of being harsh and dry. This may be soon brought about by soaking the feet in warm water for half an hour at a time daily, using most freely a very stiff brush, with good soap. After the skin has become soft and smooth, a good washing with soap and warm water twice a week during cold weather, will greatly contribute to a healthful condition of the feet as well as to personal comfort. If the feet are kept unexceptionably clean, and are nevertheless inclined to be dry, considerable benefit will be derived by rubbing into the soles every morning a little sweet oil, twenty or thirty drops to each sole, with the palm of the hand, patiently and well, the object being to secure by artificial means, that softness and moistness which is known to favor evaporation and to invite thither the flow of blood. If in addition, the feet were placed in cold water regularly every morning (when not unwell) not over two inches deep, and remaining in not over half a minute in cold weather, then rubbed briskly dry with a coarse cloth, next with the hands, all followed by a brisk walk or stamping for a minute or two, or until they begin to feel comfortably warm after the cold bath, an improvement in the condition of the feet would be secured in a reasonably short time, which would largely compensate for the trouble taken.

The Grape Cure.

The grape cure lasts from three to six weeks. The regular season commences, on an average, about the middle or the first week in September, and lasts to nearly the end of October. Everything depends on the state of ripeness of the grapes. The amount of grapes daily taken by persons undergoing the cure varies from about four and a half to seven or eight pounds; in some cases even as much as nine pounds is eaten. They are taken three times a day, at the same hours at which mineral waters are usually drank in Germany—before breakfast, eleven o'clock in the morning, or two hours before dinner, and at from five to six in the evening. Persons generally commence the cure with from two to three pounds a day, and advance daily in quantity till the larger limit is reached. The skins and the seeds should not be swallowed. The largest portion is usually consumed at eleven o'clock.

Some doctors do not allow their patients to take any other breakfast than the grapes, accompanied by a roll of bread. The usual plan, however, is to permit them to take a breakfast of tea or coffee with bread, but no butter, after the grapes. A strict diet is universally prescribed; all fat, sour or spiced meats and pastry are forbidden; a small quantity of white light wines is permitted, but red wines, beer and milk must be avoided. The evening meal should be a very light one. The system pursued at Durkheim is the same as the one followed at the other places where the grape cure goes on; and the grapes which are used in the cure both at Vevay and Montreux are, as at Durkheim, for the most part the Gutedel and the Austrian varieties.

The disease in which the grape cure is considered by the German doctors to be the most beneficial is in affections of the mucous membrane of the respiratory organs. The secretive powers of this membrane are roused, and it is enabled to throw off obstructions which have assumed a chronic form. Cases of bronchitis and pneumonia are said to have been often, even in patients of a scrofulous constitution; and much benefit is said to have been experienced by persons affected with tubercular consumption in its earlier stages. Where spitting of blood has set in, much caution must be used as to the amount of grapes taken. Persons affected with any of these complaints are in the habit of coming to Durkheim yearly from all parts of Germany.

A well-known grape-grower in New York some years ago put forth a theory of curing disease by the use of grapes, but he never carried his theory into practice beyond the circle of his own family. At Durkheim they do it on a larger scale.

The Teeth.

Natural teeth, clean, sound and perfect, are essential to the comeliness of any human face. Defective teeth mar the handsomest features, and cause us to turn away our gaze with a kind of disgust from a countenance otherwise faultlessly beautiful. Sound teeth not only add to the comfort and personal appearance, but contribute largely to the health of all, hence special and scrupulous attention should be paid to them daily, from early childhood, from the time when the first permanent tooth makes its appearance, about the sixth year.

Whenever it is practicable, every tooth in a child's head should be minutely examined by a careful, conscientious, and skillful dentist every few months, and the great importance of special attention to their cleanliness, the avoidance of cold and hot drinks—of the use of any "picks" harder than wood or quills, and of all dentifrices prepared by unknown hands, should be impressed upon the minds of the young with great assiduity.

Harm has been done by propagating the notion that sugar is injurious to the teeth, by diverting attention from real causes of destruction or decay. The eating of any amount of pure sugar can not injure the teeth directly, because it has no residue, it is wholly dissolved and passes into the stomach. But let it be remembered that the practice of eating sugars or candies or any other sweetmeats largely, will inevitably cause a disorder of the stomach and generate gases there, which will speedily undermine the health of the teeth.

By insisting too much on the fact that sugars and candies destroy the teeth, an impression will grow that if these are mainly avoided, the person so doing will have good teeth, and this leads the mind away from the necessity of keeping the mouth clean and the stomach healthful. If these things are well done, and the teeth are kept plugged in a finished style, teeth naturally or hereditarily "poor," may be kept in a good state of preservation for many years.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Over Eating.

"I am the captive of appetite. I am hungry all the the time, and get up from the table hungry." Thus writes a public man of unusual promise. A great name once said: "I have been hungry for two years." He had a malady which threatened death, if he over-ate. Yet he had the force of will to avoid excesses for a life-time. His name and his works will live in the memory of the good for ages to come. To avoid over-eating requires moral courage; it takes a man to do it; cowards and babies fail every day. An incessant feeling of hunger is a great torment; it is the sign of dyspepsia. A dyspeptic lives on thorns. If he does not satisfy his appetite, there is a ceaseless longing to eat; if he does eat as much as he wants, he either spits it up by piece-meal in the course of hours, or suffers a variety of aches and ails which make of life a burden, and utterly unfits him for enjoyment, or the proper discharge of business or of duty. The very first step towards the cure of any case of dyspepsia, is the heroic resistance to the calls of the stomach. . . . The easiest way to avoid eating too much, is to have, at specified times, that amount of food sent to your room, which observation has shown to be proper for you. If this plan is persevered in, the feeling of gnawing hunger will gradually disappear, and will only be present when the time for eating comes.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Relief of Neuralgia.

As this dreadful disease is becoming more prevalent than formerly, and as the doctors have not discovered any method or medicine that will permanently cure it, we simply state that for some time past a member of our family has suffered most intensely from it, and could find no relief from any remedy applied, until we saw an article which recommended the application of bruised horseradish to the face, for toothache. As neuralgia and toothache are both nervous diseases, we thought the remedy for the one would be likely to cure the other, so we made the application of horseradish, bruised and applied to the side of the body where the disease was seated; it gave almost instant relief to the severe attack of neuralgia. Since then we have made several applications, and all with the same gratifying results. The remedy is simple, cheap, and may be within the reach of every one.—Laurensville Herald.

How to regulate Eating.

Dio Lewis, M. D., gives the following advice: Pardon a word of my own experience. During many years' practice of my profession, I had but little muscular exercise. I ate enormously. An hour's postponement of my dinner was painful. Now I labor very hard several hours a day in my gymnasium. I do not eat more than a third the quantity of former years. Now I can omit a dinner altogether without inconvenience. I have lost twenty pounds in weight, but feel a great deal younger. More than half of the thin people would gain flesh by eating less. I have only one dietetic rule, from which I never depart. This rule, kind reader, I commend to you: Always take on your plate, before you begin, every thing you are to eat. Thus you avoid the dessert, and are pretty sure not to eat too much. This simple rule has been worth thousands to me.

Ventilating Chambers.

When it is considered that pure air is essential to the purification of the blood, and that the food we eat never becomes nutriment until it meets with the air in the lungs, and when it is furthermore remembered that a full third of our entire existence is passed in our sleeping apartments, it must be clear to the commonest understanding that the difference between breathing a pure and impure air while we are asleep is literally incalculable as to the effects upon our happiness and well being. Hall's Journal of Health.

Days Agone.

Bright days agone! bright days agone!
How like the notes of May bird's song;
Ye whisper back the voices low
That once from loving lips did flow.
Ye seem like dreams of Paradise,
As faded scenes before me rise,—
The faded scenes of far gone years,
That ne'er were dimmed with bitter tears.

Those were sweet days that with the light
Of joy and hope were ever bright;
When never o'er the vernal skies
The clouds with coming gloom would rise.
But as the seasons came and went,
Unto the trusting heart were sent
Such joys as ever paved the way
With blissful hope's supernal ray.

Dark days agone! dark days agone!
They, too, have mingled with the throng
Of life's sweet joys and hopes, and cast
A mournful shadow o'er the past,
That filled the heart with voiceless grief,
Cheered only by the sunshine brief,
Which came between the parted clouds,
That filled the sky with gloomy shrouds.

Bright days and dark have come and gone,
Whose deeds of kindness and of wrong
Still linger in the patient heart,
That's known them one by one depart.
Such days have come to one and all,
That served to gladden or appall,
With joys and bliss that now have flown,
Or woes the wounded heart hath known.

But brighter, fairer days shall come,
When, welcomed to his Eden home,
The saint shall never dream of ill,
But joy his heart shall ever thrill.
No darkened days and dim shall frown,
Nor in deep wo his prospects drown;
But through the rolling years of bliss,
His heart shall know but happiness.

Rev. 17.—"Seven Kings."—No. 2.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the BOTTOMLESS PIT, and go into perdition."

"The beast that thou sawest." John had seen a beast in the twelfth chapter. Then it was a ruling power; but it is not now, during the wilderness state. He will ascend out of the bottomless pit at the end of the wilderness state, or at the termination of the "thousand two hundred and threescore days." "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. And when they shall have finished their testimony, THE BEAST THAT ASCENDETH OUT OF THE BOTTOMLESS PIT, SHALL MAKE WAR AGAINST THEM, AND SHALL OVERCOME THEM, AND KILL THEM." So far as I am informed, I am not alone in the belief that the above period terminated at the French Revolution. Expository testimony on this point is harmonious among us as a people. It doubtless was consummated during the French "Reign of Terror." The 13th verse is expressive of that event. I will quote the Syriac:—"And in the same hour there was a great movement (margin), and the tenth part of the city fell; and the persons killed in the earthquake were seven thousand names." In the falling away of the French nation from Papacy, they swept away all those ecclesiastical distinctions or names by legislative enactments. A more literal accomplishment I can never expect. The event indicates the termination and it also proves the ascension of the beast out of the abyss.

The eighth head now commenced WAR on the Scriptures—"the two witnesses"—the old and new covenants. Precisely the same work that its seven-headed predecessor prosecuted with such cruel vigor. More on this hereafter. We will now proceed to notice in the Sixth place, the astonishment or wonder caused among the nations at the rise of this beast from the bottomless pit. "And they that dwell on the earth SHALL WONDER, (whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world,) when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is." I will now refer you to an historical extract relating to the condition of France during the revolution of 1791 and forward.

"ALL EUROPE STOOD IN AMAZEMENT AND PERTURBATION at the events that were passing. The prodigious increase of power by France, and the revolting purposes to which she applied it, began to arouse a UNIVERSAL DREAD for the independence of nations, and the existence of social order or public morality. It was natural that kings and aristocracies should regard even the first outbreak of the revolution with dislike and apprehension now, from the FRIGHTFUL FEATURES IT HAD ASSUMED. This feeling was partaken by the whole world, and prevailed even among the most democratic communities. The enlightened citizens of the United States shared it with the ignorant population of Sarmatia or Romelia."—Redhead's History of France, p. 113.

The above testimony is most definitely corroborative of the fulfillment of the declaration of the Revelator,—"all the world shall wonder,"—when they behold the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit. They did. This brings us to notice the

Seventh point,—the work accomplished by this beast. The reader will bear in mind this fact,—the angel is showing John the JUDGMENT; Wakefield reads "Punishment"; and it is to this point that we now invite your candid attention. The following extracts from history must satisfy any candid mind on this point. The Hon. Gerard Noel says:—"Can the overthrow of the monastic orders, the plunder of the church property, the destruction of religion by legislative enactment, and the massacre of a hundred thousand of her clergy, be consistent with any reasonable estimate of domination and power? Under such a TERRIFIC JUDGMENT upon the persecutor, can we refuse to admit that the period of the 1260 years has terminated its course?"

The above is important in four particulars. First, it goes to prove the 1260 years, or the sackcloth state of the church, had terminated. Second, that the beast had risen from the abyss. Third, it identifies France, in my humble opinion, as the EIGHTH HEAD of the dragon, and in the Fourth place. It proves beyond the possibility of a doubt the Judgment or punishment commenced on the Papal power. The following has the same bearing on the subject:—"At the commencement of the French revolution, the clergy in France were both numerous and wealthy. They amounted to no less than eighteen Archbishops, one hundred and eleven Bishops, and one hundred and fifty thousand Priests, having under their control a revenue of five millions sterling annually, besides three thousand four hundred converts. The clergy and their wealth were now attracted by the Infidel revolutionists, and fell an easy prey. The titles and revenue of the clergy were taken away by a decree of the constituent assembly. The possessions of the church were now declared to be the property of the nation. The religious orders were abolished; the monks and nuns ejected from their convents, and their immense wealth seized for the nation. The revolutionary torrent which was thus set in motion destroyed law, government and religion in France, and laid waste the ROMAN CHURCH, both there and in neighboring countries. Her priests were massacred, her silver shrines and saints were turned into money to pay the troops, her bells were converted into cannons, and her churches and convents into barracks for the soldiers. From the Atlantic to the Adriatic she presented but one appalling spectacle. She had shed the blood of saints and prophets, and now GOD GAVE HER BLOOD TO DRINK."—Goodrich's Church History, pp. 103, 4.

Says Marsh in his Ecclesiastical History, page 300:—"A civil constitution was formed for the clergy, to which all were required to swear on pain of death or banishment. The great body refused, and priest and altar were overturned, and blood once sacred flowed to the horse bridles. Such as could escaped through a thousand dangers, and found an asylum in foreign countries. No tongue can tell the woes of the nation."

Having shown that the judgments of God did commence on Papacy at the French revolution, I will now proceed to show by analogy that France was designed by the Revelator in all probability to be the eighth head of the dragon.

Eighth. In Rev. 13: 3, the dragon is presented with seven heads. Now for the analogy.

Papal Rome, that ruled over the kings of the earth, was an unchangeable iron monarchy, and boasted of its infallibility—that it never changed. Dragonism was the antagonist of Papacy that professed christianity. Marsh, the historian, says on page 198, speaking of the persecution under Julian:—"This was the last persecution of christianity by Pagan Rome. Pagans, however, beyond the bounds of the empire continued to defend their ancient superstitions by arms, and massacred multitudes who bore the christian name. This was particularly the case in Persia, where from the year 330 to 370 a most destructive persecution raged, and an incredible number of christians were put to death."

Mosheim says, page 134, vol. 1:—"To destroy the credit of the gospel and to excite the hatred of the multitude against the christians, the Pagans took occasion, from the calamities and tumults which distracted the empire, to renew the obsolete complaint of their ancestors against christianity as the source of these complicated woes. They alleged that before the coming of Christ, the world was blessed with peace and prosperity, but that since the progress of his religion everywhere, the gods, filled with indignation to see their worship neglected and their altars abandoned, had visited the earth with these plagues. The republicans of France made an openprofession of Atheism, Aug. 26th, 1792. They declared Christ an imposter, God a phantom, the gospel a forgery, and swore to extirpate christianity from the earth. (Thank God it lives!) They assured the public that man when free wants no divinity but himself; that reason dethrones both the kings of earth and the King of heaven. No monarchy above if we wish to preserve our republic below. Every other than a republic of Atheism is a chimera."

Such, dear reader, was the striking correspondence of Dragonic France to Dragonic Pagan Rome under its seven-headed rule. Such were the latent fires of Dragonism held in abeyance during the domination of Papacy, that burst forth in France at the termination of the 1260 years, or sackcloth state of the church. Then the beast once was before Papal domination, but is not during the wilderness state, yet is AN EIGHTH HEAD to inflict the judgment written. Dan. 7: 26;—"The judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion."

Before dismissing this point, I wish to offer a remark concerning Napoleon the First being the beast that was, predicted in Rev. 17. Let us look at some facts. The revolution broke out in France July 16th, 1789. The "Reign of Terror" commenced under Maximilian Robespierre, July 17th, 1791. Napoleon was born at Ajaccio, Aug. 15th, 1769. For the first time he distinguished himself at Toulon, A. D. 1793. He did not become even First Consul until A. D. 1799, Nov. 9th. You cannot fail to see the utter impossibility of his being in person the beast that was, for he never was prior to that time. This most positively ignores the idea of his being the beast "that was." His son could not possibly be the one that is not; and his nephew, Louis Napoleon, the one that is.

From the above facts, I think I have shown by fair argument what the eighth head is. In my next I shall endeavor to show who the seven kings are, of whom five had fallen when John stood in the wilderness state.

The Nature of Man.

IS MAN IMMATERIAL AND IMMORTAL, OR MATERIAL AND MORTAL?

The following was written for the Herald of Gospel Liberty, but was rejected.

This subject is creating more than usual interest; and I believe it deserves the candid and serious reflection of every true christian. But those who have not the love of the truth, that they might be saved; or who reject the commandment of God, that they may keep their own traditions; or who blaspheme the word of God by pretending that the words of inspiration do not mean what they say; I do not expect will candidly examine this subject. In examining this subject, we should consider,

1st. Did the spirit of man exist, live and reason, before it entered into Adam? or did the spirit get its divinity by dwelling in a human body?

2d. As God breathed the breath of life into our first parents only; how can the posterity of Adam and Eve partake of immortality through the human body that was subject to death?

3d. If the spirit of man did pre-exist, live, think and reason, independent of organized matter, before it was breathed into the material Adam; then it would live, think, reason and exist after the body is dead and dissolved. And if man derives his mind and reasoning faculties from the immortal, divine spirit, given through the Lord's breath; and it existed, lived and reasoned from the beginning; then it would follow that man would remember all about the creation of the world, and all the ways of God to man since the creation. But where is the man who can remember before he was born, or organised? And is there any testimony, either human or divine, that the mind, or spirit of man had this pre-existence and knowledge?

4th. If the spirit of man did not pre-exist, live and reason, independent of the organized man, before it was breathed into his nostrils, how can it exist, live and reason after the body is dead and dissolved, except it derives its divinity from the human body?

5th. If man's mind is naturally immortal, can man forget anything he ever knew? or can immortality be taught or instructed? If man's mind does forget, or if it can be taught, does it not prove that his mind is mortal? Can immortality ever change, decay, or forget?

6th. We read in 1 Tim. 6: 16, God "only hath immortality." If man's mind is naturally immortal, it is God, or a part of God; and as God is holy, can man's mind be evil? If our mind is immortal and a part of God, can it change? And why do men differ so much in theology, politics, religion, etc., etc.?

These are questions deserving a candid examination; and may we seek wisdom from the inspired word of God, that we may be sanctified through the truth. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8: 20.

We read in Gen. 2: 7, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." It will be observed that the Lord called the form MAN before he lived; and when the Lord breathed the breath of life into his nostrils, this formed man became a living soul. Does not the plain, literal reading of this passage teach that the formed man became a living soul? And why not believe the Bible? But says the Spiritualist objector, this passage means that the Lord breathed a living soul or spirit into Adam's nostrils. My friend, do you believe in a God that hath not capacity enough, through his inspiration, to tell what he means, and to mean what he says? We read in Dan. 11: 36, and 2 Thess. 2: 4, of a class that "shall exalt himself . . . above every God, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods." Is it not marvellous that man, who pretends to be a christian, dare advocate that the inspiration of God does not mean what it says? And when he pretends to correct the word of inspiration by saying it does not mean what it says, does he not exalt himself above every God, and literally fulfill this prophecy? May the Lord keep me in that humble place where I may believe his word without contradicting it.

But to the subject. My Spiritualist friend says, "God has given all man's intellectual faculties by the Lord's own breath"; that "the Lord has endowed this material Adam with intellectual faculties not composing any part of his material form, but through his spiritual organization." If the Scriptures teach plainly and literally such a doctrine, I will believe it; but there is no where such a passage in the blessed volume as "spiritual organization"; and I would not so earnestly contend against the idea that the spirit of God is all man's intelligence, were it not for the following reasons:—

1st. It makes the man the Lord God formed, that became a living soul, inferior to the beasts and animals; for beasts and animals can think and have knowledge; but the formed man cannot think, and he is a natural idiot, not knowing so much as the beasts, if this position be true.

2d. To advocate such a doctrine impugns the character of God; for man has many evil thoughts, and as man cannot do any rational act without a thought preceding the act, to direct the action of our material body; and if our thoughts all proceed from God's immortal spirit, breathed into man's nostrils, then God is the greatest, if not the only sinner in the universe; and the formed man is not accountable for any of his thoughts, words or deeds, whether good or evil.

This is the logical result of the position that God's immortal spirit is all of man's intelligence; and I am not prepared to thus defame the character of the Almighty. The great Architect of heaven, who formed of the dust of the ground the feet to walk, hands to work, organs of hearing and speaking, organs to smell, to breathe, to masticate and to digest our food,—can he not form organs capable of thinking and reasoning out of the same materials? And has not the Almighty formed a material brain capable of thinking and reasoning? Can God do some things and not do others? Is there any more of God's spirit in man's thinking and reasoning, than in his seeing, hearing, or speaking? or in the exercise of any of the organs of man? Or are all the organs of man distinct, eternal entities, that will live after the body is dead and dissolved? There is no more proof in the word of God, or in philosophy, that our reasoning faculties continue their functions after the body is dead and dissolved, and before it has a resurrection, than any of the other organs of man.

David speaks of man, Ps. 112: 10,—"The desire of the wicked shall perish." Ps. 146: 4,—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." We read in Isa. 26: 14,—"They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Isa. 26: 19,—"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust." Do men's thoughts continue while men dwell in the dust? David says his "thoughts perish." The prophet Jeremiah, in 51: 39, speaks of a class that shall "sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the Lord." Jer. 31: 15, 16, "A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping, Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not. Thus saith the Lord—Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy." The first part of this prophecy was fulfilled when Herod slew the children under two years of age. See Matt. 2: 16–18. If any go to heaven when they die, it certainly must be these little children; but the prophet saith, "they were not,"—"they shall come again from the land of the enemy." Christ says, John 3: 13, "No man hath ascended up to heaven." Where were these little children? If we believe the word of the Lord, and believe they sleep in the ground, in the land the Lord cursed for man's disobedience (Gen. 3: 17), all will harmonize with the Bible. I will add Christ's testimony touching this point, John 5: 28, 29,—"The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." Does not Christ plainly teach that the same persons that are in the graves shall hear and shall come forth? And were they not in the graves? or was Christ mistaken? I would respectfully ask my friend, who so strongly advocates Spiritualism, if all are infidels who believe the testimony of David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Christ, even if this testimony contradicts your own assertion?

The going forth to meet the Bridegroom.

The parable of the ten virgins brings to view but one going forth to meet the Bridegroom on the part of the church. The Savior used a figure to illustrate the future going forth of the church to meet the heavenly Bridegroom, and that figure contains one going forth, and the fact illustrated by the figure contains one going forth. Some have counted two. The one in the figure only foreshadows the one in the reality. Here are the facts presented by Christ:—

1st. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven [one element of it—the church] be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom." This is the figure: ten females once went forth, on a wedding occasion, to meet the bridegroom—an earthly bridegroom.

2nd. Christ now goes back and tells us under what circumstances those females went forth to meet that earthly bridegroom, which going forth he holds up as a figure of the state of the church down near the end. "Five of them [five of those females] were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish [five of those females] took their lamps, and took no oil with them: but the wise [the other five females] took oil in their vessels with their lamps."

3rd. Christ having first referred to the ten that once went forth to meet an earthly bridegroom, and having secondly referred to the circumstances which these females were in preparatory to going forth to meet this bridegroom, he proceeds:—"While the bridegroom tarried [or remained away], they all [ten] slumbered and slept."

4th. In the next place, Christ, after having referred to the ten that once went forth to meet an earthly bridegroom, and after referring to the circumstances under which they went forth, because the bridegroom remained away till so late an hour, proceeds to give the signal which roused them up to go forth, namely:—"And at midnight there was a cry made [to those ten sleeping females]—Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." So in the great fact set forth by this figure, near the end, the church should be roused to go forth to meet the heavenly Bridegroom.

1st. Under what conditions would she go forth? Ans. A part would be wise, and a part would be foolish.

2nd. What state would the church get into while the heavenly Bridegroom should tarry or remain in heaven, before being called to go forth to meet him? Ans. It should get to sleep upon this great question, and lose sight of it.

3rd. What should rouse the church from this sleeping posture, to go forth to meet the heavenly Bridegroom? Ans. A proclamation to the church, Behold, the heavenly Bridegroom is coming.

There is but one going forth here spoken of. In the figure there is simply an announcement of a going forth, and then a rehearsal of the matter to give the circumstances attending and the state of things preceding this going forth, and also the signal that caused it. So in the fact foreshadowed. This agrees with the facts in the history of the church. When Christ went away, the church was all awake upon the subject of his return; but as he remained long in heaven, the church slept on this subject. But during the present generation, the cry has been heard, "The Lord is coming," and that cry is waxing louder. But mistakes are only human appendages to this great cry. This cry includes the sum total of the proclamation of the Advent near, minus of human mistakes, which have honestly been mingled with the proclamation.

The Unequal Yoke.

"Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?"—2 COR. 6: 14, 15.

The command not to be yoked with unbelievers, is just as binding upon us to-day as it was upon the primitive christians. The design of the religion of Jesus is to bring out a people that will delight to love and serve God. There is a principle connected with it that will lead us to love God and godliness. We (as christians) admire the christian virtues wherever we find them. We love the society of the good and holy; love to meet with them to worship God and admonish one another, and "so much the more as (we) see the day approaching." The christian delights in the worship of God: it is his chief joy to do whatever God requires: his whole soul is swallowed up in the will of God: what God loves he loves, and what God hates he hates (or it should be so). This is according to the principle of religion as founded by Jesus upon the law of love. "If ye love me, keep my commandments," says Jesus. And the prayer that he made for his followers was not that they should be taken out of the world, but that they should be kept from the evil that is in the world. But the world would hate them. Why? "Because they are not of the world." The world hated the Master,—it would hate the servant also. "That they may be one, as thou Father art in me and I in thee; that they also may be one in us." What for? "That the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

This then is the object of the religion of Jesus as it should be exemplified in the lives of his humble followers.

1. God is love. He "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

2. Christ partakes of the same nature. He consented to become poor and suffer the scorn and scoffs of the world, and finally gave his life for its redemption. He possessed the same spirit of love with the Father—they are one.

3. The christian must possess the same spirit. "Thou in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." The christian then must have the same character, and if so, the same incentives to action; the motive, the object, and the love for that object, must be the same in kind.

Now if I have taken a correct view of this matter, how can we as christians connect ourselves with any body or institution that is not founded upon the great platform of truth, built upon the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Christ himself being the chief corner stone? I refer now to those called "secret societies" or lodges. Now to say that these societies of the present day are built upon this foundation, to my mind is widely overstepping the mark. To say that they are with us, or Christ, in the great work of reform, and saving men from eternal death, we cannot. To say that they have the same motive, object, and love, we cannot; and I have yet to learn that they are even "moral institutions." I may be deceived. I judge,

1st. From the character of many of their members.

2nd. I see no "moral reform" in that direction.

3d. The divine plan for the reform and salvation of the world is sufficient.

4th. There is no other way by which we may enter into the sheep fold; we cannot climb up any other way. It is a common thing at this day for professors of religion to unite with some one or more of the different lodges; and many of those who are looking for the return of our King are doing the same. This may be right; but if so, I confess I do not understand the principles of the christian religion. To carry on these institutions, it takes time, influence, and money. God requires of us the same to aid in spreading the gospel. Then, I ask, are we not robbing God when we use it in another direction? Are we working with him? By such acts will the world believe that Christ is the sent of God? Do we believe that secret societies can do that which the religion of Jesus cannot do? Yet, we may so by our acts when we unite with them. We confess to the world that Jesus Christ is not the sent of God. We also destroy that union, that oneness of spirit which unites the church to Christ, and to God. If we unite with the world, will the world hate us? No; the world will love its own. So will the christian.

Again. Are we equally yoked? Let us look at the characters that compose these bodies. There are preachers and lay members of all orders and grades. We will set them one side. Who next? Here we find the infidel, Deist, Universalist, Spiritualist, etc., and then we find many open-faced, heaven-daring characters, such as fill this cursed earth in these last days. Now, christian brother and sister, are we equally yoked together with them? Do we pull upon the same traces and at the same object? If so I fear we may share the same fate when our Lord comes—be condemned as unprofitable servants. O, then, let us not be found bound with the tares in bundles for the fire of the last day. Let us be separate—throw off the spurious tackling of the devil, and put on the armor of God—the whole armor, that we may be able to stand.

May God help us as christians to flee every evil way, yoke with Christ, be holy, and then we shall be prepared to meet a holy God in peace. Amen.

The Contrast.

"The American churches, of every name, are one with the government of their country in every measure for the suppression of the rebellion, and foremost in every patriotic service and sacrifice."—N. Y. Independent.

"If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."—John 15: 19.

"My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence."—Jesus Christ.—John 18: 36.

We are nominally a christian nation; the American churches are nominally christian churches; is there no distinction between the government of the nation and of the church? Does the government of the nation interfere with, or take any part in, the goverment of the church? It has not in the past, but it evidently will in the future, if the church connects itself with it. When the church connects itself with the government, it is subject to other laws than those of Jesus Christ, and therefore cannot obey one without disobeying the other. "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you," Matt. 5: 44, does not mean "shoot them." Had the nation obeyed this law of Christ, there would have been no rebellion. Because they disobeyed it, and brought on a war, is the church now bound to connect itself with it in its unhallowed measures to suppress the rebellion? I say unhallowed measures; for Christ never gave permission to his church to kill its subjects, if they refused submission. See Matt. 18: 15–17. Such measures Christ will approve; but the opposite never until he gives us a new law. The law which binds individuals binds churches and nations if they be christian nations. Had this nation adopted Christ's rule for the settlement of the difficulty, how much blood and treasure would have been saved.

If the church may not lawfully kill the rebellious subjects of its own government, by what rule are they justified in killing those of another? If by the law of nations death is the penalty of treason, then the law of nations is at variance with the law of Christ, and therefore christians are bound to take no part in the execution of that penalty; and by no righteous law can they be required to disobey the law of Christ. If the government and the church are one, then the government is as much bound to obey the law of Christ as the church is to obey the law of nations; nay more, unless human authority is greater than divine.

Again. If the church and the government are one, then all the armies of the government are in the church, and consequently are bound by the law of Christ; and hence every ungodly man should be cast out. Will the government consent to this? The armies of Israel could do nothing while Achan was in the camp. Josh. 7; and 22: 20. If we go back to Judaism to get our authority for fighting, we must purify our armies and the government as they did, and have the same evidence that God is with us.

Finally, if it be wrong for christians to fight, it is wrong for them to vote for fighting men to rule, or to hire a substitute to do the fighting. There will be an opportunity for the government to use all the funds which it may lawfully demand of christians in providing for the widows and orphans they are making, without compelling christians to make them. Had the American churches of every name taken an entirely different course in the beginning of the trouble, we should not now have been cursed with this American War.

Days Agone.

Bright days agone! bright days agone!
How like the notes of May bird's song;
Ye whisper back the voices low
That once from loving lips did flow.
Ye seem like dreams of Paradise,
As faded scenes before me rise,—
The faded scenes of far gone years,
That ne'er were dimmed with bitter tears.

Those were sweet days that with the light
Of joy and hope were ever bright;
When never o'er the vernal skies
The clouds with coming gloom would rise.
But as the seasons came and went,
Unto the trusting heart were sent
Such joys as ever paved the way
With blissful hope's supernal ray.

Dark days agone! dark days agone!
They, too, have mingled with the throng
Of life's sweet joys and hopes, and cast
A mournful shadow o'er the past,
That filled the heart with voiceless grief,
Cheered only by the sunshine brief,
Which came between the parted clouds,
That filled the sky with gloomy shrouds.

Bright days and dark have come and gone,
Whose deeds of kindness and of wrong
Still linger in the patient heart,
That's known them one by one depart.
Such days have come to one and all,
That served to gladden or appall,
With joys and bliss that now have flown,
Or woes the wounded heart hath known.

But brighter, fairer days shall come,
When, welcomed to his Eden home,
The saint shall never dream of ill,
But joy his heart shall ever thrill.
No darkened days and dim shall frown,
Nor in deep wo his prospects drown;
But through the rolling years of bliss,
His heart shall know but happiness.

Rev. 17.—"Seven Kings."—No. 2.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the BOTTOMLESS PIT, and go into perdition."

"The beast that thou sawest." John had seen a beast in the twelfth chapter. Then it was a ruling power; but it is not now, during the wilderness state. He will ascend out of the bottomless pit at the end of the wilderness state, or at the termination of the "thousand two hundred and threescore days." "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. And when they shall have finished their testimony, THE BEAST THAT ASCENDETH OUT OF THE BOTTOMLESS PIT, SHALL MAKE WAR AGAINST THEM, AND SHALL OVERCOME THEM, AND KILL THEM." So far as I am informed, I am not alone in the belief that the above period terminated at the French Revolution. Expository testimony on this point is harmonious among us as a people. It doubtless was consummated during the French "Reign of Terror." The 13th verse is expressive of that event. I will quote the Syriac:—"And in the same hour there was a great movement (margin), and the tenth part of the city fell; and the persons killed in the earthquake were seven thousand names." In the falling away of the French nation from Papacy, they swept away all those ecclesiastical distinctions or names by legislative enactments. A more literal accomplishment I can never expect. The event indicates the termination and it also proves the ascension of the beast out of the abyss.

The eighth head now commenced WAR on the Scriptures—"the two witnesses"—the old and new covenants. Precisely the same work that its seven-headed predecessor prosecuted with such cruel vigor. More on this hereafter. We will now proceed to notice in the Sixth place, the astonishment or wonder caused among the nations at the rise of this beast from the bottomless pit. "And they that dwell on the earth SHALL WONDER, (whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world,) when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is." I will now refer you to an historical extract relating to the condition of France during the revolution of 1791 and forward.

"ALL EUROPE STOOD IN AMAZEMENT AND PERTURBATION at the events that were passing. The prodigious increase of power by France, and the revolting purposes to which she applied it, began to arouse a UNIVERSAL DREAD for the independence of nations, and the existence of social order or public morality. It was natural that kings and aristocracies should regard even the first outbreak of the revolution with dislike and apprehension now, from the FRIGHTFUL FEATURES IT HAD ASSUMED. This feeling was partaken by the whole world, and prevailed even among the most democratic communities. The enlightened citizens of the United States shared it with the ignorant population of Sarmatia or Romelia."—Redhead's History of France, p. 113.

The above testimony is most definitely corroborative of the fulfillment of the declaration of the Revelator,—"all the world shall wonder,"—when they behold the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit. They did. This brings us to notice the

Seventh point,—the work accomplished by this beast. The reader will bear in mind this fact,—the angel is showing John the JUDGMENT; Wakefield reads "Punishment"; and it is to this point that we now invite your candid attention. The following extracts from history must satisfy any candid mind on this point. The Hon. Gerard Noel says:—"Can the overthrow of the monastic orders, the plunder of the church property, the destruction of religion by legislative enactment, and the massacre of a hundred thousand of her clergy, be consistent with any reasonable estimate of domination and power? Under such a TERRIFIC JUDGMENT upon the persecutor, can we refuse to admit that the period of the 1260 years has terminated its course?"

The above is important in four particulars. First, it goes to prove the 1260 years, or the sackcloth state of the church, had terminated. Second, that the beast had risen from the abyss. Third, it identifies France, in my humble opinion, as the EIGHTH HEAD of the dragon, and in the Fourth place. It proves beyond the possibility of a doubt the Judgment or punishment commenced on the Papal power. The following has the same bearing on the subject:—"At the commencement of the French revolution, the clergy in France were both numerous and wealthy. They amounted to no less than eighteen Archbishops, one hundred and eleven Bishops, and one hundred and fifty thousand Priests, having under their control a revenue of five millions sterling annually, besides three thousand four hundred converts. The clergy and their wealth were now attracted by the Infidel revolutionists, and fell an easy prey. The titles and revenue of the clergy were taken away by a decree of the constituent assembly. The possessions of the church were now declared to be the property of the nation. The religious orders were abolished; the monks and nuns ejected from their convents, and their immense wealth seized for the nation. The revolutionary torrent which was thus set in motion destroyed law, government and religion in France, and laid waste the ROMAN CHURCH, both there and in neighboring countries. Her priests were massacred, her silver shrines and saints were turned into money to pay the troops, her bells were converted into cannons, and her churches and convents into barracks for the soldiers. From the Atlantic to the Adriatic she presented but one appalling spectacle. She had shed the blood of saints and prophets, and now GOD GAVE HER BLOOD TO DRINK."—Goodrich's Church History, pp. 103, 4.

Says Marsh in his Ecclesiastical History, page 300:—"A civil constitution was formed for the clergy, to which all were required to swear on pain of death or banishment. The great body refused, and priest and altar were overturned, and blood once sacred flowed to the horse bridles. Such as could escaped through a thousand dangers, and found an asylum in foreign countries. No tongue can tell the woes of the nation."

Having shown that the judgments of God did commence on Papacy at the French revolution, I will now proceed to show by analogy that France was designed by the Revelator in all probability to be the eighth head of the dragon.

Eighth. In Rev. 13: 3, the dragon is presented with seven heads. Now for the analogy.

| Dragonic Rome was a persecutor. It hated God, his word, and all that professed to believe in it. It made war on the Scriptures. It was infidel. It worshiped the Goddess Diana. Its government was changeable, sometimes Kingly, Republican and Imperial. It was Atheistic. | Dragonic France was a persecutor. It hated God, his word, and all that professed to believe in it. It made war on the Scriptures. It was infidel. It worshiped the Goddess of Reason. Its government was changeable, sometimes Kingly, Republican and Imperial. It was Atheistic. |

Papal Rome, that ruled over the kings of the earth, was an unchangeable iron monarchy, and boasted of its infallibility—that it never changed. Dragonism was the antagonist of Papacy that professed christianity. Marsh, the historian, says on page 198, speaking of the persecution under Julian:—"This was the last persecution of christianity by Pagan Rome. Pagans, however, beyond the bounds of the empire continued to defend their ancient superstitions by arms, and massacred multitudes who bore the christian name. This was particularly the case in Persia, where from the year 330 to 370 a most destructive persecution raged, and an incredible number of christians were put to death."

Mosheim says, page 134, vol. 1:—"To destroy the credit of the gospel and to excite the hatred of the multitude against the christians, the Pagans took occasion, from the calamities and tumults which distracted the empire, to renew the obsolete complaint of their ancestors against christianity as the source of these complicated woes. They alleged that before the coming of Christ, the world was blessed with peace and prosperity, but that since the progress of his religion everywhere, the gods, filled with indignation to see their worship neglected and their altars abandoned, had visited the earth with these plagues. The republicans of France made an openprofession of Atheism, Aug. 26th, 1792. They declared Christ an imposter, God a phantom, the gospel a forgery, and swore to extirpate christianity from the earth. (Thank God it lives!) They assured the public that man when free wants no divinity but himself; that reason dethrones both the kings of earth and the King of heaven. No monarchy above if we wish to preserve our republic below. Every other than a republic of Atheism is a chimera."

Such, dear reader, was the striking correspondence of Dragonic France to Dragonic Pagan Rome under its seven-headed rule. Such were the latent fires of Dragonism held in abeyance during the domination of Papacy, that burst forth in France at the termination of the 1260 years, or sackcloth state of the church. Then the beast once was before Papal domination, but is not during the wilderness state, yet is an EIGHTH HEAD to inflict the judgment written. Dan. 7: 26;—"The judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion."

Before dismissing this point, I wish to offer a remark concerning Napoleon the First being the beast that was, predicted in Rev. 17. Let us look at some facts. The revolution broke out in France July 16th, 1789. The "Reign of Terror" commenced under Maximilian Robespierre, July 17th, 1791. Napoleon was born at Ajaccio, Aug. 15th, 1769. For the first time he distinguished himself at Toulon, A. D. 1793. He did not become even First Consul until A. D. 1799, Nov. 9th. You cannot fail to see the utter impossibility of his being in person the beast that was, for he never was prior to that time. This most positively ignores the idea of his being the beast "that was." His son could not possibly be the one that is not; and his nephew, Louis Napoleon, the one that is.

From the above facts, I think I have shown by fair argument what the eighth head is. In my next I shall endeavor to show who the seven kings are, of whom five had fallen when John stood in the wilderness state.

The Nature of Man.

IS MAN IMMATERIAL AND IMMORTAL, OR MATERIAL AND MORTAL?

The following was written for the Herald of Gospel Liberty, but was rejected.

This subject is creating more than usual interest; and I believe it deserves the candid and serious reflection of every true christian. But those who have not the love of the truth, that they might be saved; or who reject the commandment of God, that they may keep their own traditions; or who blaspheme the word of God by pretending that the words of inspiration do not mean what they say; I do not expect will candidly examine this subject. In examining this subject, we should consider,

1st. Did the spirit of man exist, live and reason, before it entered into Adam? or did the spirit get its divinity by dwelling in a human body?

2d. As God breathed the breath of life into our first parents only; how can the posterity of Adam and Eve partake of immortality through the human body that was subject to death?

3d. If the spirit of man did pre-exist, live, think and reason, independent of organized matter, before it was breathed into the material Adam; then it would live, think, reason and exist after the body is dead and dissolved. And if man derives his mind and reasoning faculties from the immortal, divine spirit, given through the Lord's breath; and it existed, lived and reasoned from the beginning; then it would follow that man would remember all about the creation of the world, and all the ways of God to man since the creation. But where is the man who can remember before he was born, or organised? And is there any testimony, either human or divine, that the mind, or spirit of man had this pre-existence and knowledge?

4th. If the spirit of man did not pre-exist, live and reason, independent of the organized man, before it was breathed into his nostrils, how can it exist, live and reason after the body is dead and dissolved, except it derives its divinity from the human body?

5th. If man's mind is naturally immortal, can man forget anything he ever knew? or can immortality be taught or instructed? If man's mind does forget, or if it can be taught, does it not prove that his mind is mortal? Can immortality ever change, decay, or forget?

6th. We read in 1 Tim. 6: 16, God "only hath immortality." If man's mind is naturally immortal, it is God, or a part of God; and as God is holy, can man's mind be evil? If our mind is immortal and a part of God, can it change? And why do men differ so much in theology, politics, religion, etc., etc.?

These are questions deserving a candid examination; and may we seek wisdom from the inspired word of God, that we may be sanctified through the truth. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8: 20.

We read in Gen. 2: 7, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." It will be observed that the Lord called the form MAN before he lived; and when the Lord breathed the breath of life into his nostrils, this formed man became a living soul. Does not the plain, literal reading of this passage teach that the formed man became a living soul? And why not believe the Bible? But says the Spiritualist objector, this passage means that the Lord breathed a living soul or spirit into Adam's nostrils. My friend, do you believe in a God that hath not capacity enough, through his inspiration, to tell what he means, and to mean what he says? We read in Dan. 11: 36, and 2 Thess. 2: 4, of a class that "shall exalt himself . . . above every God, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods." Is it not marvellous that man, who pretends to be a christian, dare advocate that the inspiration of God does not mean what it says? And when he pretends to correct the word of inspiration by saying it does not mean what it says, does he not exalt himself above every God, and literally fulfill this prophecy? May the Lord keep me in that humble place where I may believe his word without contradicting it.

But to the subject. My Spiritualist friend says, "God has given all man's intellectual faculties by the Lord's own breath"; that "the Lord has endowed this material Adam with intellectual faculties not composing any part of his material form, but through his spiritual organization." If the Scriptures teach plainly and literally such a doctrine, I will believe it; but there is no where such a passage in the blessed volume as "spiritual organization"; and I would not so earnestly contend against the idea that the spirit of God is all man's intelligence, were it not for the following reasons:—

1st. It makes the man the Lord God formed, that became a living soul, inferior to the beasts and animals; for beasts and animals can think and have knowledge; but the formed man cannot think, and he is a natural idiot, not knowing so much as the beasts, if this position be true.

2d. To advocate such a doctrine impugns the character of God; for man has many evil thoughts, and as man cannot do any rational act without a thought preceding the act, to direct the action of our material body; and if our thoughts all proceed from God's immortal spirit, breathed into man's nostrils, then God is the greatest, if not the only sinner in the universe; and the formed man is not accountable for any of his thoughts, words or deeds, whether good or evil.

This is the logical result of the position that God's immortal spirit is all of man's intelligence; and I am not prepared to thus defame the character of the Almighty. The great Architect of heaven, who formed of the dust of the ground the feet to walk, hands to work, organs of hearing and speaking, organs to smell, to breathe, to masticate and to digest our food,—can he not form organs capable of thinking and reasoning out of the same materials? And has not the Almighty formed a material brain capable of thinking and reasoning? Can God do some things and not do others? Is there any more of God's spirit in man's thinking and reasoning, than in his seeing, hearing, or speaking? or in the exercise of any of the organs of man? Or are all the organs of man distinct, eternal entities, that will live after the body is dead and dissolved? There is no more proof in the word of God, or in philosophy, that our reasoning faculties continue their functions after the body is dead and dissolved, and before it has a resurrection, than any of the other organs of man.

David speaks of man, Ps. 112: 10,—"The desire of the wicked shall perish." Ps. 146: 4,—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." We read in Isa. 26: 14,—"They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Isa. 26: 19,—"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust." Do men's thoughts continue while men dwell in the dust? David says his "thoughts perish." The prophet Jeremiah, in 51: 39, speaks of a class that shall "sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the Lord." Jer. 31: 15, 16, "A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping, Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not. Thus saith the Lord—Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy." The first part of this prophecy was fulfilled when Herod slew the children under two years of age. See Matt. 2: 16–18. If any go to heaven when they die, it certainly must be these little children; but the prophet saith, "they were not,"—"they shall come again from the land of the enemy." Christ says, John 3: 13, "No man hath ascended up to heaven." Where were these little children? If we believe the word of the Lord, and believe they sleep in the ground, in the land the Lord cursed for man's disobedience (Gen. 3: 17), all will harmonize with the Bible. I will add Christ's testimony touching this point, John 5: 28, 29,—"The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." Does not Christ plainly teach that the same persons that are in the graves shall hear and shall come forth? And were they not in the graves? or was Christ mistaken? I would respectfully ask my friend, who so strongly advocates Spiritualism, if all are infidels who believe the testimony of David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Christ, even if this testimony contradicts your own assertion?

For the Crisis

The going forth to meet the Bridegroom.

The parable of the ten virgins brings to view but one going forth to meet the Bridegroom on the part of the church. The Savior used a figure to illustrate the future going forth of the church to meet the heavenly Bridegroom, and that figure contains one going forth, and the fact illustrated by the figure contains one going forth. Some have counted two. The one in the figure only foreshadows the one in the reality. Here are the facts presented by Christ:—

1st. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven [one element of it—the church] be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom." This is the figure: ten females once went forth, on a wedding occasion, to meet the bridegroom—an earthly bridegroom.

2nd. Christ now goes back and tells us under what circumstances those females went forth to meet that earthly bridegroom, which going forth he holds up as a figure of the state of the church down near the end. "Five of them [five of those females] were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish [five of those females] took their lamps, and took no oil with them: but the wise [the other five females] took oil in their vessels with their lamps."

3rd. Christ having first referred to the ten that once went forth to meet an earthly bridegroom, and having secondly referred to the circumstances which these females were in preparatory to going forth to meet this bridegroom, he proceeds:—"While the bridegroom tarried [or remained away], they all [ten] slumbered and slept."

4th. In the next place, Christ, after having referred to the ten that once went forth to meet an earthly bridegroom, and after referring to the circumstances under which they went forth, because the bridegroom remained away till so late an hour, proceeds to give the signal which roused them up to go forth, namely:—"And at midnight there was a cry made [to those ten sleeping females]—Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." So in the great fact set forth by this figure, near the end, the church should be roused to go forth to meet the heavenly Bridegroom.

1st. Under what conditions would she go forth? Ans. A part would be wise, and a part would be foolish.

2nd. What state would the church get into while the heavenly Bridegroom should tarry or remain in heaven, before being called to go forth to meet him? Ans. It should get to sleep upon this great question, and lose sight of it.

3rd. What should rouse the church from this sleeping posture, to go forth to meet the heavenly Bridegroom? Ans. A proclamation to the church, Behold, the heavenly Bridegroom is coming.

There is but one going forth here spoken of. In the figure there is simply an announcement of a going forth, and then a rehearsal of the matter to give the circumstances attending and the state of things preceding this going forth, and also the signal that caused it. So in the fact foreshadowed. This agrees with the facts in the history of the church. When Christ went away, the church was all awake upon the subject of his return; but as he remained long in heaven, the church slept on this subject. But during the present generation, the cry has been heard, "The Lord is coming," and that cry is waxing louder. But mistakes are only human appendages to this great cry. This cry includes the sum total of the proclamation of the Advent near, minus of human mistakes, which have honestly been mingled with the proclamation.

The Unequal Yoke.

"Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?"—2 COR. 6: 14, 15.

The command not to be yoked with unbelievers, is just as binding upon us to-day as it was upon the primitive christians. The design of the religion of Jesus is to bring out a people that will delight to love and serve God. There is a principle connected with it that will lead us to love God and godliness. We (as christians) admire the christian virtues wherever we find them. We love the society of the good and holy; love to meet with them to worship God and admonish one another, and "so much the more as (we) see the day approaching." The christian delights in the worship of God: it is his chief joy to do whatever God requires: his whole soul is swallowed up in the will of God: what God loves he loves, and what God hates he hates (or it should be so). This is according to the principle of religion as founded by Jesus upon the law of love. "If ye love me, keep my commandments," says Jesus. And the prayer that he made for his followers was not that they should be taken out of the world, but that they should be kept from the evil that is in the world. But the world would hate them. Why? "Because they are not of the world." The world hated the Master,—it would hate the servant also. "That they may be one, as thou Father art in me and I in thee; that they also may be one in us." What for? "That the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

This then is the object of the religion of Jesus as it should be exemplified in the lives of his humble followers.

1. God is love. He "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

2. Christ partakes of the same nature. He consented to become poor and suffer the scorn and scoffs of the world, and finally gave his life for its redemption. He possessed the same spirit of love with the Father—they are one.

3. The christian must possess the same spirit. "Thou in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." The christian then must have the same character, and if so, the same incentives to action; the motive, the object, and the love for that object, must be the same in kind.

Now if I have taken a correct view of this matter, how can we as christians connect ourselves with any body or institution that is not founded upon the great platform of truth, built upon the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Christ himself being the chief corner stone? I refer now to those called "secret societies" or lodges. Now to say that these societies of the present day are built upon this foundation, to my mind is widely overstepping the mark. To say that they are with us, or Christ, in the great work of reform, and saving men from eternal death, we cannot. To say that they have the same motive, object, and love, we cannot; and I have yet to learn that they are even "moral institutions." I may be deceived. I judge,

1st. From the character of many of their members.

2nd. I see no "moral reform" in that direction.

3d. The divine plan for the reform and salvation of the world is sufficient.

4th. There is no other way by which we may enter into the sheep fold; we cannot climb up any other way. It is a common thing at this day for professors of religion to unite with some one or more of the different lodges; and many of those who are looking for the return of our King are doing the same. This may be right; but if so, I confess I do not understand he principles of the christian religion. To carry on these institutions, it takes time, influence, and money. God requires of us the same to aid in spreading the gospel. Then, I ask, are we not robbing God when we use it in another direction? Are we working with him? By such acts will the world believe that Christ is the sent of God? Do we believe that secret societies can do that which the religion of Jesus cannot do? Yet we may so by our acts when we unite with them. We confess to the world that Jesus Christ is not the sent of God. We also destroy that union, that oneness of spirit which unites the church to Christ, and to God. If we unite with the world, will the world hate us? No; the world will love its own. So will the christian.

Again. Are we equally yoked? Let us look at the characters that compose these bodies. There are preachers and lay members of all orders and grades. We will set them one side. Who next? Here we find the infidel, Deist, Universalist, Spiritualist, etc., and then we find many open-faced, heaven-daring characters, such as fill this cursed earth in these last days. Now, christian brother and sister, are we equally yoked together with them? Do we pull upon the same traces and at the same object? If so I fear we may share the same fate when our Lord comes—be condemned as unprofitable servants. O, then, let us not be found bound with the tares in bundles for the fire of the last day. Let us be separate—throw off the spurious tackling of the devil, and put on the armor of God—the whole armor, that we may be able to stand.

May God help us as christians to flee every evil way, yoke with Christ, be holy, and then we shall be prepared to meet a holy God in peace. Amen.

The Contrast.

"The American churches, of every name, are one with the government of their country in every measure for the suppression of the rebellion, and foremost in every patriotic service and sacrifice."—N. Y. Independent.

"If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."—John 15: 19.

"My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence."—Jesus Christ.—John 18: 36.

We are nominally a christian nation; the American churches are nominally christian churches; is there no distinction between the government of the nation and of the church? Does the government of the nation interfere with, or take any part in, the goverment of the church? It has not in the past, but it evidently will in the future, if the church connects itself with it. When the church connects itself with the government, it is subject to other laws than those of Jesus Christ, and therefore cannot obey one without disobeying the other. "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you," Matt. 5: 44, does not mean "shoot them." Had the nation obeyed this law of Christ, there would have been no rebellion. Because they disobeyed it, and brought on a war, is the church now bound to connect itself with it in its unhallowed measures to suppress the rebellion? I say unhallowed measures; for Christ never gave permission to his church to kill its subjects, if they refused submission. See Matt. 18: 15–17. Such measures Christ will approve; but the opposite never until he gives us a new law. The law which binds individuals binds churches and nations if they be christian nations. Had this nation adopted Christ's rule for the settlement of the difficulty, how much blood and treasure would have been saved.

If the church may not lawfully kill the rebellious subjects of its own government, by what rule are they justified in killing those of another? If by the law of nations death is the penalty of treason, then the law of nations is at variance with the law of Christ, and therefore christians are bound to take no part in the execution of that penalty; and by no righteous law can they be required to disobey the law of Christ. If the government and the church are one, then the government is as much bound to obey the law of Christ as the church is to obey the law of nations; nay more, unless human authority is greater than divine.

Again. If the church and the government are one, then all the armies of the government are in the church, and consequently are bound by the law of Christ; and hence every ungodly man should be cast out. Will the government consent to this? The armies of Israel could do nothing while Achan was in the camp. Josh. 7; and 22: 20. If we go back to Judaism to get our authority for fighting, we must purify our armies and the government as they did, and have the same evidence that God is with us.

Finally, if it be wrong for christians to fight, it is wrong for them to vote for fighting men to rule, or to hire a substitute to do the fighting. There will be an opportunity for the government to use all the funds which it may lawfully [illegible] of christians in providing for the widows and orphans they are making, without compelling christians to make them. Had the American churches of every name taken an entirely different course in the beginning of the trouble, we should [illegible] have been cursed with this American war.

Has not Christ said, "If a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand"? Mark 3: 24. Had the American churches wisely counselled a settlement of the difficulty by referring it to some friendly foreign nation, if we could not settle it among ourselves without resorting to arms, they would then have pursued the same course in relation to the American government that Christ has marked out for the government of his church; and the church has no right to be governed by any other rule. Christ understood human nature too well to expect union by force; and I venture to predict that military force will never restore the Union.

This nation is now drinking the wine-cup of the Lord's fury for the sin of slavery and the abominable corruptions which have long existed in the government. Slave-holders have been received into the church, and the American churches of the South are one with the Confederacy in every measure to support the rebellion; and if the church is the kingdom of Christ, as the Independent instructs its readers, then Christ's kingdom also is divided with the nation, and therefore must fall with it "For thus saith the Lord, Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I will send among you." Jer. 25: 27.

The Judgment.

A few months since, I passed a tent one evening, where some novel views were being promulgated. Stopping a few moments to listen, I heard it remarked that the friends of the non-revival of the wicked ought to be encouraged by what they had effected, and persevere in publishing their views. That much had been done already. They had driven the Adventists from their; old views of the order of the judgment, to adopt new ones to avoid inconsistent results and the adoption of the non-revival theory. It was stated that many of the leading Advent preachers believed and were now preaching that all men would be raised mortal, and after trial the righteous would be made immortal. Whereas they formerly universally believed that the righteous would be raised immortal, and then come to their trial. But they were obliged to abandon that, because it made the righteous to get their reward before their trial or judgment; and this was so inconsistent, a new theory became desirable.

Now this was all fresh news to me, and I set it down as a false rumor. I know of only one Advent preacher who is preaching the "new view"; and as for "this old and universally believed view," I know of many Advent preachers who never held it, myself for one; and I supposed that all, or nearly all, Advent ministers and people had long ago abandoned such a view, if they ever held it,—that the resurrected were to have a trial after their resurrection. There are some few who do, in common with the churches around us, expect that after the dead are raised, there will be an investigation of character and a decision of cases, similar to a court trial. Some speculations have been indulged in as to the amount of time needed for such an extensive work. But the Scriptures, when carefully examined, do not set forth such a doctrine, although a few texts alone may seem to do so. Let us look into this subject, and if there are those who find trouble in harmonizing the Scriptures with their views, we may see where their difficulty is, and also find the old (Bible) view of

THE JUDGMENT. A careful study of the Bible will show that the term judgment is used in several senses. Sometimes it is put for opinion; again it is used for discernment and for examination, for decision, and also for execution. Whenever the term is used in connection with the second advent of Christ, or the end of this mortal age, or the final doom of man, it is used, we believe, to declare the execution of a previous determination or decision, both in regard to the righteous and the wicked. Examples.—See Dan. 7: 22, 27: "And judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." This signifies reward. In Matt. 5: 21, 22, Christ says in relation to certain conduct, that the actors "shall be in danger of the judgment." This refers to the execution of the sentence of law, if broken. Matt. 7: 2; "For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Here, again, judgment has reference to the execution of justice. The Lord has made law and pronounced his sentence on all who violate its precepts, and all those who live in sin through life are sentenced to receive "the wages of sin (which) is death"; while all who will repent, believe and obey his Son Jesus Christ, shall be rewarded with "life eternal." Thus the law is given, penalty stated, sentence passed, reprieve offered; so that both classes may know the results of each course of life."

Let us now hear Jesus on this subject. John 9: 39,—"For judgment I am come into this world, that they which see not might see, and that they which see might be made blind." This evidently refers to God's national execution of judgment on the Jews and public manifestation of his condemnation of sin, and also of his plan of mercy to the Gentiles, by the atonement of Christ. But the idea is more fully set forth in John 12: 31,—"Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out. And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." God executed the penalty of the law by the sacrifice of his Son, showing his displeasure against sin. Judgment was executed on Christ. "All the world became guilty before God." Before Christ was executed, however, he lived under and kept the law, which man had broken. Paul (in Rom. 8: 3) gives a clear illustration of the point now under consideration. "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh." By Christ's resurrection the power of death was wrested from the devil, and he and all his works sentenced to destruction, as stated in Heb. 2. From that hour the doom of the prince of this world was decided, and the day of righteous execution of God's verdict against a sinful world made sure, as stated by Paul, Acts 17: 31.

But some may quote Christ's saying, "If any man believe not, I judge him not." Very well. He also said, "The word that I have spoken unto you, the same shall judge you in the last day." It will be a swift witness. Again, "He that believeth not is condemned already." If condemned, why try them again? It is said in John 5: 22, 27,—"For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son. That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father; . . . and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man." It is clearly shown that the Father condemned the world, and that Christ came to save all who would accept him, and received authority to execute all who will not receive and obey him. But this is not done until our day of trial or probation is ended. All who believe are "freely justified." "It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth?" If justified by his grace, why be tried afterwards?

"The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his." When Jesus comes to execute judgment, he will know who to raise "in the resurrection of the just." We are on trial now for life or death. Let us trust in Christ, be acquitted, freely justified, have the spirit in us that raised up Christ, and it will give us immortality when the day of execution comes.

Henry Grew.

BRO. GRANT:—In a late number of the Crisis I saw it suggested that it would be very gratifying to some of the friends of our dear Bro. Henry Grew if a little narrative of his life, experience and labors could be communicated through the Crisis. I think it would be a good work and a blessing attend it, for he was truly one of the honored ones of our Father's family. The grace of christian meekness, patience, forbearance and integrity of character was so truly exemplified in him, that it made even his enemies to be at peace with him, just as we are told, "when a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." I felt inclined to make a few extracts from a letter I received from him last June, after he had been brought very low by sickness, and though somewhat improving in strength was yet quite feeble.

"I owe a tribute of praise to the Father of mercies who delivereth us from all evil, and to our merciful High Priest who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities for most gracious dealings with me in my afflictions, causing me to know experimentally the verity of the truth and most precious promises; teaching me my own unworthiness and entire dependence on the grace which is in Christ Jesus. "God is love" and all his chastisements are the fruit of his love, for which we shall praise him eternally.

Very delightful to my soul has been the anticipation of loving and serving him soon without imperfection and without weariness, where sin and sorrow can never, no never disturb our holy repose.

'O glorious hour! O blest abode!
I shall be near and like my God;
And flesh and sin no more control
The sacred pleasures of my soul.'

Often do I think of my Lord's willing sufferings for such an unworthy one. He was 'wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed.

Sweet, most sweet have I found it to sink down deep and calmly into the will of God and repose on his everlasting arms, when flesh and spirit seem too weak to stretch the wings of faith and soar away in divine contemplation. This was my privilege in my late affliction; it reminded me of the same privilege I enjoyed in my first love, when I was buried with Christ in baptism. There are seasons when the soul is favored with special consciousness of intimate and endearing union to God and the Lamb. For this the heaven-born spirit pants.

'Nearer to thee, my God, nearer to thee!'"

I appreciate very highly the spirit of that dear aged saint and brother, and I send these few lines to you as a small testimonial of the language he breathed when near the close of his earthly pilgrimage; and such was his life while among us that those who knew him loved him, and love his memory still, for the truth's sake which dwelt with him. ### The Boston Discussion.

"QUESTION.—Do the Scriptures teach that man has a spirit that will be eternally conscious?"

In continuation of the argument on this question, we remarked:—

7. This spirit is either material or immaterial. If material, the popular definition is wrong; for it is said to be "immaterial." If immaterial, it cannot come in contact with materiality. We then inquired, if the view we oppose is correct, why is it that a brain fever causes insanity? The following are extracts from a work by Cooper:—

"Dr. Haslam says that insanity is always connected with organic alterations of the brain." "Dr. Wright, of the Bethlehem Lunatic Hospital, deposes that in one hundred cases of insane individuals, whose heads he examined, all exhibited signs of disease." "One of the writers for the prize, offered by the celebrated Esquiral for the best dissertation on insanity, assures us that he had examined the heads of more than one hundred individuals who died from insanity, and comes to the following conclusions:—1st. That in the brains of those who die of insanity, changes of structure will always be found. 2d. That these changes are the consequences of inflammation, either acute or chronic. 3d. That there exists a correspondence between the symptoms and the organic changes, and that the names monomania, mania, etc., ought only to be employed as representing degrees and stages of inflammation of the brain."

As the foregoing facts cannot be truthfully disputed, it follows that if man has a spirit, that it is the intelligent entity; then it is affected by a material brain, and becomes deranged in consequence of such connection, hence is not itself immaterial; therefore the popular definition of the spirit is not sustained by facts. If, as asserted, the spirit in man is the intelligent being, it appears to be most positively settled that it is dependent upon a material organism for its development, and that mental derangement always results from a corresponding derangement of the brain, which is certain proof that the intelligent entity, be it what it may, is inseparably connected with the material being called MAN by his Creator. We inquired, how can an immaterial being be deranged by contact with a material one, when such a contact is impossible, as admitted?" For as the learned writer, Mr. Drew, says:—"As an immaterial substance has no surface, it is a contradiction to suppose that matter can ever be brought in contact with it. To suppose such a contact possible, is to suppose a surface in an immaterial being, which at the same time is excluded by its natural immateriality. Whatever has an exterior must have an interior; and what has both must be extended."

Again; if the spirit is the intelligent entity instead of the being made "of the dust of the ground," whom the Creator called man, whom he commanded and rendered an accountable being; why is it that a man with a sloping forehead, as in the case of the idiot, cannot think and reason as well as a man with a brain like Daniel Webster? And why does a blow on the head stop one's thinking, and make the man unconscious? Do not all these, and a multitude more of similar facts, show the idea that there is an immaterial spirit in man, which does all the thinking, is entirely unfounded in truth, and hence unstained by sound philosophy, common sense, or the Bible?

8. This spirit either has a form or it has not. If it has, it is material. Then it is not correct to say "it is immaterial." If it has no form, what is it? Can such a nonentity go to the new Jerusalem, and there praise the Lord? Then it must have organs of speech; but as soon as it has these, it at once becomes material, and then the whole spiritual system falls to the ground. It is certain the organs of speech, with which men are endowed by our Creator, are component parts of the man, and are buried with them in the grave. Where does the spirit obtain these organs, provided it were possible for an immaterial being to have them?

The same being, or entity, praises the Lord in this world that does in the next. One part of man does not praise the Lord in this life, another when he is dead, and another in the world to come. It is the same man in both worlds. Who praises the Lord here? Suppose it is a spirit in man. Then that will EVER do the praising. But David says in Ps. 115: 17, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Then it follows the living do or can. In Isa. 38: 18, 19, we read, "The grave (sheol) cannot praise thee; . . . the living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day." Observe, it does not read,—the spirit, the spirit, it shall praise thee. We find nothing of the kind in the Bible relative to man. The spirit, when applied to man, is always neuter gender. Why, if this spirit is the real man?

9. The spirit in man is either a part of God or it is not. If it is a part of God, can it sin? If a part of man, it is mortal, because man is mortal. As nothing can die only what is mortal; if the spirit dies a spiritual death, it must be spiritually mortal. If the spirit is an immortal entity, it must have spiritual immortality; how then can it die a spiritual death? If literal death kills a literal being, must not spiritual death kill a spiritual one?

10. Let us now inquire what the spirit is which leaves man at death. We find from the account of his creation, in Gen. 2: 7, that after he was "formed," he was made a living being, by receiving "the breath of life" "into his nostrils." "Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils."—Isa. 2: 22. But the spirit is in the nostrils also:—"The spirit of God is in my nostrils."—Job 27: 3. "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died, . . . and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark."—Gen. 7: 21–23. From these Scriptures, we learn that there is a spirit, or breath in man's nostrils. This breath or spirit leaves us at death. Who gave this spirit?—God. Who takes it away? "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."—Ps. 104: 29. "Then shall the dust return to the dust as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."—Eccl. 12: 7. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4. In Job 27: 3, Ps. 104: 29, Eccl. 12: 7, and Ps. 146: 4, the words spirit and breath are from the same Hebrew word ruach.

We have now found one breath or spirit, which is in man's nostrils, and is essential to life, that leaves him at death. Is there another spirit that leaves him? The Bible says nothing about any other that goes from man in the hour of death, but the one in his nostrils. Hence, we are driven to the conclusion, if we adhere to the Bible, facts, philosophy, and common sense, that nothing else leaves him at death but "the breath of life" or spirit, which is in his nostrils. In all our discussions, no one has yet been able to produce one passage of Scripture to show that any other spirit leaves man when he dies; therefore, we must conclude that "the Scriptures" do not "teach that man has a spirit that will be eternally conscious."

Salem Discussion.

Brn. R. Wendell and I. R. Gates held a discussion in Salem, last week, commencing Monday evening, Dec. 1st, which continued seven evenings. It was held at the Endicott St. meeting house, where Dr. J. Litch has been preaching for some time. We were not privileged to attend but one evening. We were much pleased with the candor, fairness and ability with which Bro. W. supported the truth on the state of man in death. We learn the debate has resulted in opening the eyes of several to see the harmony of the Scriptures in teaching that man is wholly unconscious between death and the resurrection. The more the truth is put to the test the brighter it shines.

We hear excellent reports from Concord as to the results of our debate there. Some, who before the discussion had no confidence in these things, are now anxious to hear. The wavering have been confirmed, and the cause of truth greatly advanced; while at the same time error has lost much ground. To the Lord be all the praise.

"Itching Ears."

Paul has said, "Preach the word, . . . for the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."—2 Tim. 4: 3–4.

In Dickinson's New Testament, this passage reads:—"Preach the word, . . . for the time will come when they will not endure sound instruction; but will accumulate teachers to themselves, according to their own eager desires, having an insatiable curiosity; and they will indeed withhold their attention from the truth, and will be turned to fables." Coverdale's Bible reads:—"For the time will come, when they shall not suffer wholesome doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they (whose ears itch) get them an heap of teachers, and shall turn their ears from the truth, and shall be given unto fables."

We verily think the time has come when the foregoing scripture is being fulfilled, if never before. From the context we learn that it is "in the last days," when the people will have "itching ears," and "heap to themselves teachers" to gratify their "insatiable curiosity." When we look over the land and see the heaps of theological students in the various literary institutions, and witness the worldly spirit by which a large proportion of them are actuated—their pride, conformity to the world, lack of devotion; and then consider that they are so plenty that they are obliged to seek for months, and even years, to find a place to preach; and then recollect our divine Master has said, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few;" and add to this the fact, that nearly all these heaps of teachers are opposed to the doctrine that Christ is speedily coming; and, instead, are advocating the conversion of the world, urging men to go to the war and kill their fellow men; while at the same time revivals are nearly ceased under their labors; we think we know of whom Paul is speaking in 2 Tim. 4: 3–4.

The following from Zion's Herald, (Dec. 3, '62,) the leading Methodist paper in New England, gives some truthful hints at the state of things. It is headed HINDRANCES TO REVIVALS. The writer says:—

"Of all the questions agitating the public mind at the present time with intense solicitude, there is none fraught with such incalculable importance as the one—Why are not revivals of religion more prevalent? . . .

Among the hindrances to revivals against which christian ministers should especially guard, we may instance popular preaching, falsely so called. It has been truthfully said that most of our preaching is too predominantly rhetorical. That the sermon is prepared with too much comparative reference to its finish and beauty, as a piece of composition. That style, ornament, and it may be a formal logic, take the place of sound doctrine and that affectionate exhortation in which lies much of the power of any sermon.

Now as ministers, like other men, are open to temptation, we can easily understand how in their preparation for the pulpit they may lose sight of the great end of a sermon, and fix their minds on the question, how shall we prepare a discourse which shall bear the test of the scholar's criticism, or gain the reputation of accomplished and skillful writers. And especially at this day, when the intellectual is so much lauded, and the moral left so much out of view, in the popular estimate of a preacher, there is danger that ministers err in giving their people scholarly and finished sermons rather than sermons which shall convict of sin and lead to Christ.

As mankind are generally 'pleased with a rattle and tickled with a straw,' so with lofty, soaring imaginations, with dazzling corruscations of fancy, with glittering paragraphs, and with full, well turned periods in a discourse, they are highly gratified. Hence they go from the sanctuary to laud the superior natural and acquired abilities of the preacher. What a clear, consecutive thinker! What a sound sermonizer! What a close and accurate reasoner! In fine, what a splendid preacher!

But does such preaching, eloquent though it may be called, make the people really wiser and better? When the gospel is preached with greater simplicity and less display, greater real sympathy and less affected, in short, 'in the demonstration of the Spirit, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven,' then sinners will go from the house of God so deeply convinced of sin that they will be constrained to say, O how I felt! What a great sinner I am! Is there any mercy for such a wretch as I?'

A Good Example.

Would that others, in the same situation, would follow the worthy example of the one named in the following:—

"I know a man. He is not a christian. His daily life is not in accordance with even the principles of morality. He has three beautiful, well behaved children. The other day he told me this incident of one of them, his little girl three or four years old:

Said he—'Perhaps some people would think it sacrilege, but I don't; but for some time back, I have been in the habit of reading the Bible, and of having prayers every night before the children go to bed. I have done it because it has a good influence on the children, and because I hope it may have a good influence on myself. Last night, I went to the "Lodge" (he is a mason,) and did not go home till after eleven o'clock. The children, of course, were all abed, and I supposed asleep. Before going to bed, I knelt down by my bed to pray, and had been there but a moment, when I heard Nobie get up from her bed in the next room, and her little feet came pattering across the floor toward me. I kept perfectly still, and she came and knelt down beside me without saying a word. I did not notice her; and in a moment, speaking just above her breath, she said: "Pa, pray loud." I prayed. I kissed her, and she went back to bed. And I tell you, G——, I have had nothing affect me so so for the last ten years. I have thought of nothing else all day long, but just that little "Pa, pray loud."'

THE GILT CHRISTIAN LYRE.—We have just received a fine specimen of the Lyre gilt binding. Price $1.00, postage 9 cts.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S HEBREW CONCORDANCE.—I have ordered a few copies of this book, but not enough to supply all the calls I have had. Probably no more can be got before spring. These may be here by Jan. or Feb. 1st. The price of exchange has advanced since I ordered the books. I cannot tell what they will cost till they arrive. I have to pay for them in gold, or its equivalent. If any one can send me $16 in gold, I presume it will cover the cost, but I think that amount in paper would not cover it. The former price was $22 in gold, or its equivalent. This would now amount to $33, but there are also other extra expenses. I think those who can furnish gold or silver had better do so, and when the books arrive I will notify them of it. As all who have sent cannot be supplied from this lot, I shall furnish them to such as I think need them most, or to such as have sent or may send specie for payment. I do not, however, intend that poor preachers shall be deprived of the book for want of a dollar or two to pay for the extra cost. Others who wish for the book may continue to send in their names, that I may be ready to order again by and by.

A Sweet Visit.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just come from a tour up in Vermont. On my journey I visited Poultney, Rutland, and Castleton, and was blessed to see the revival of the work of God in all those places. I had a blessed time with Brn. Carpenter, Mathewson, Taylor and Batchelor on the tour. My visit to Castleton was a most sweet, sweet one. The revival commenced there in less than a week from the time we began our meetings, and I hope will continue long. Bro. Taylor and his wife seem all given up to God. We spent our time in talking of God, sleeping, eating twice a day, reading the Bible in three different translations, and praying. O, what sweet times we had in prayer! How blessed it is to be little and meek! I reckon my enemies would like to be as happy as I am. The mouse is in the cleft of the rock! I was kind of divinely amused one morning while at Bro. T.'s. While we were praying one morning, a quantity of flour rained down into the kitchen. (It rained out of a human cloud, doubtless.) Bro. T., after prayer, went from the room where we were into the kitchen, and seeing it began to praise the Lord, while I caught up the echo in the room where I was, and we two happy fools had a happy time, while sis. stood and laughed with holy joy.

Among the many dear families where I feel at home, none are more dear than my own dear home, Bro. Mathewson's, Bro. Taylor's, and Bro. Carpenter's. But a more blessed than all these families shall soon be gathered. What a good time we will have when all are together to part no more! EDWIN BURNHAM.

Wanted,

A book, called "The Doctrinal Tracts of the M. E. Church." The preface reads as follows:—

"Several of the following tracts were formerly published in the form of a Discipline; but as this undergoes a revision once in four years, the General Conference of 1812 caused those tracts to be left out of the Discipline; and that they might still be in the reach of every reader, directed them to be published in a separate volume," etc. etc.

I have been thus particular, as I have the revised work. It will not do, as I wish it for a special purpose in a debate. I would like it in its olden form, bound with the Discipline. I hope to have better success in this than the other I advertised for. I am willing to pay double price for the work if any one will send it to me. If they will not sell it, lend it for awhile. Will some one help me to this work? If so, write to PETER S. W. DEYO, Strawberry Point, Clayton Co., Iowa.

The Salem Debate.

I last night (Sunday) closed a Discussion of seven evenings with Eld. I. R. Gates, the late opponent of Bro. Grant. It was held in the Endicott Street (Advent) Church in this city, of which Dr. Litch is Pastor. Other particulars next week. RUFUS WENDELL.

More Preachers Wanted.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just read in your issue of Nov. 9th an article from the pen of Bro. Sheldon with the above heading. He proceeds to give his views of the kind of men wanted, and the reasons why more are wanted, which is because time is short. This is all true, and the perusal of the piece gave rise to the following queries and reflections.

Why such frequent calls for more preachers when there are so many valiant ones lying idle now? Have all these been proved untrue, or unworthy? Do new brooms sweep so clean that older ones are to be entirely overlooked? Is not experience a useful as well as dear schoolmaster? Have all those who so many years endured more than any imagine (save he who has been taught by personal privations), lost faith and interest in the best of causes, that makes us so quiet now? How many I hear giving the emphatic "No! no! never for a moment; but we labored night and day preaching the word and toiling with our hands every spare moment, enduring a thousand exposures of which the stayer-at-home knows nothing, until frail nature failed, and we were turned out like the worn-out beast of burden to get our own subsistence or famish. If we could run wild like the native turkey, and live on nuts and buds; or if we could eat grass like an ox, as did Nebuchadnezzar, from Monday morning until Saturday evening, many of us might yet preach on Sunday. But, alas! we are human yet, and must have locality, subsistence and apparel; and thus we are tied with penury as firmly as Lazarus with his grave clothes; and when called on to go a distance and preach to the poor, we are compelled to say, I cannot go, I have no means to ride, and faith has not yet lent her wings; so the 'poor (cannot) have the gospel preached to them.'"

Another class of laborers, younger, but true and strong, who have preached but a few years, with heavy hearts leave the work because they cannot subsist on wind and water. As a brother wrote us the other day—"I have really no clothes fit to wear into the pulpit, and what to do I know not; shall have to stop preaching." This man loves the work of the ministry, and should be sustained. Another promising young man said to us last week, "I shall have to get into business, and try to do something to sustain meetings some of the time, or somewhere." This brother, I think, would gladly devote all his time to the Lord's cause. If myself and husband were the only ones thus bound by want, I should conclude that our poor efforts were not worth having; but there are others scattered all around the country, who are surely worthy, but whom poverty fetters. Some are engaged in manual toil six days, and once a week try to speak; but they cannot be efficient; the mind must be fed as surely as the body, or the sermon will lack interest, and the speaker will exclaim, "O! my leanness, my leanness."

In view of these undeniable facts, shall we call for more preachers for the sake of their being soon compelled to go a fishing in order to gain a scanty livelihood? If these public servants want a religious periodical, they cannot pay for it; if they very much need a Lexicon, or Concordance, they cannot be had without money; so he must go without; but he must understand the word of God faithfully without these helps, or a spare hour for study; and if a traveling proclaimer of truth come his way, he is expected to aid him as well as the rest; and it is assuredly required of him to keep his doors always wide open to entertain all visiting friends from abroad; and if there is one dainty morsel in the house it is used now, though he knows his own meals must be scanty for days to come. "But," says Well-to-do-in-the-world, "what are a dozen or twenty meals of victuals?" If they are trifling in your eyes, with your overflowing granaries, then invite the company home, or help that poor preacher set his table, at least while guests are present, if for no other purpose than that of saving your credit.

Now let me relate a few examples, showing how some ministers, who have neither salary or income, have to fare, or what the church requires of them. Not a great while ago, two speakers, a man and woman, were requested to have a conference some ninety miles from home. So the papers told the news, and the ministers were at their posts, though the patch of corn at home needed his care. The journey had to be made by horse power, and they were compelled to stop at a public house late at night, and buy neither supper nor breakfast (not because appetite failed). Well, the meeting closed, and the preachers were homeward bound; but not one dollar did those do for these pilgrims who were so anxious for that meeting, but seemed to think it hard to have to pay for the hall. The preachers have been requested to go there both before and since with about the same remuneration, although there was a brother living there able to give hundreds annually.

Another case. A minister was written to, to come a distance and preach on a certain question. He journeyed long and long, fulfilled his duties, and in time returned, with a remuneration amounting to nine cents per day. These trials are not the sorest the minister has to undergo. He must leave all the endearments of home,—must tear himself away from a sick wife or child, doubting whether he shall ever meet them again. But "the servant is not above his Lord," and he knows that he suffers for Christ's sake, and his reward is sure in a world to come. This is a blessed assurance to those who sigh for home; but it does not supply one present want. There are some benevolent ones in the world whose sympathies are not seared with the love of money; to such the thanks of the minister are due. They are not so near-sighted but they can see the wants of a brother or sister. Such ones these plain truths will not offend; such only will feel sensitive as have been remiss in duty in helping on the work of the Lord. Facts are stubborn things, and these statements here made are too true.

Then when we call for more preachers, let us ask all to help bear the burden,—if this is a correct word to use,—and not act on the principle that the minister can and ought to make about all the sacrifice, and that he and family must endure many more trials and privations than you. O God! forgive this selfishness, and prepare all for the coming day. May we watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation.

Reading, Mich. MARY A. SEYMOUR.

Notes from my Mission Diary.

Thinking that the friends of the "Maine Advent Mission" wish to know what I am doing in the cause of our Lord; and being desirous to "follow in the steps of my beloved predecessor"; I "beg leave to report" some of my labors since I entered the mission field.

My first place of labor after the Portland Conference was at the "Yellow school-house (so called) in Brunswick, where in days past I had enjoyed some precious seasons in talking over our faith with the few children of the Lord who reside in that vicinity. Since my first visit to this place in 1853, the few remaining ones have met with many reverses; but they still keep up their meetings, and are determined to go through and gain the kingdom. Spent one Sunday with them, and had a profitable meeting. From this place returned to Yarmouth, to make preparations for leaving home, to go forth to "the regions beyond" to proclaim the gospel. Attended an excellent prayer meeting; some two or three seeking the Lord. The Lord bless the little flock here with whom I have labored so long.

Saturday, Oct. 4th, took a "flying trip" with the "flying message" to Flying Point, in Freeport; where there are a few looking for Jesus from heaven. Preached to a school-house full of attentive hearers. Among the lovers of the Lord in this place are the two daughters of Bro. Collins, who sought and found peace in Jesus at the Portland Conference, and who have since that time been baptized in Yarmouth by Bro. Wellcome.

Sunday, Oct. 5th, preached twice in the Litchfield school-house in Freeport,—a new place. The most of the people in this vicinity are Congregationalists; but their large school-house was crowded both forenoon and afternoon with as candid hearers as are generally seen. They requested more meetings, and I shall visit them again if the Lord will.

Oct. 7th. This evening preached to a house full of attentive hearers, at a new place near Cumberland Centre. I endeavored to show from Scripture where the future and everlasting home of all the saints will be when Jesus comes. All appeared satisfied that no fault could be found with our position, for it was a Bible one. Since then I learn that a preacher near the place has publicly preached that the earth can contain but a very small portion of what are to be saved. I think the preacher has never taken pains to work the subject out mathematically; if he had, he would have come to a different conclusion.

Oct. 9th. Spent this evening with the brethren and friends at Lancaster school-house, East Bowdoinham. There are a few old and tried friends of the truth here, who, like the faithful of olden time, look for a "better country." They need help. Shall make a protracted effort for their good soon, if the Lord will. Oct. 10th. Went to Richmond and spent several days in visiting the "pilgrims and strangers" that reside there and in the vicinity. Preached in the Reed meeting-house Sunday, Oct. 12th, to good congregations. With this people I have met, generally, once a month for two years. Now I must leave them for awhile at least. The brethren and sisters here have had severe trials for some years; but, like the handful of Gideon's valiant ones, named in Judges 8: 4, though "faint are yet pursuing." There are indications of good here now, several seeking Jesus.

While in this place I found the family of Bro. John Umberhind in deep affliction; reports having just reached them that one of their sons had been murdered on the Mississippi river, and another one imprisoned. May the blessed hope of the gospel comfort them in this hour of sadness. On my way home called on Sister K. Temple, who resides in West Bowdoin; and who, though in the midst of opposers, is contending for the faith. Hope for an open door in this place for the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom.

Oct. 17th. Left home and friends in Yarmouth for an eastern tour. My appointment this evening was at Bath, where resides our beloved Bro. G. Douglass, who, with his companion and a few others, are looking for eternal life at the resurrection. There being no doors open for a meeting, I spent the evening with the lovers of truth in talking over the blessed prospects soon to be enjoyed by the saints of God.

Oct. 18th, at Woolwich, a place where they have but very few meetings. There are a few in this place "who know the joyful sound," but think it so hard a place that it is not much use to try to keep up meetings. Preached Saturday evening and Sunday to a very few. Brn. Dinsmore and Dickson of Bowdoinham were here to help, who were to me in this hard place like the coming of Titus to Paul. Found one young lady deeply interested in the truth, who promised me she would give all for Christ and strive for the kingdom.

Oct. 20 to 23. Called on some of the praying ones in Alna, Damariscotta, Round Pond, and Friendship. Had one meeting at Round Pond, in the Union Chapel. The most of the brethren being engaged in business on the "mighty deep," I did not see them. A conference is wanted here soon. Had an appointment for a meeting at Friendship, but there being no place for it, and a heavy shower coming up just at meeting time, we concluded it was all right if no meeting was held. So I had the privilege of talking to a few that evening at the real pilgrim home of Bro. Bradford. I enjoyed the season much, for I felt that if there was no friendship outside, I was in the town of Friendship, and that there was true friendship at Bro. B.'s house.

My next appointment was at Rockport, where our beloved brother Dr. Eaton resides. This place is rightly named, for it is as hard as a "rock." But the Dr. keeps the work of bombardment going on, and his hot shot and shells in the shape of "soft words" yet "hard arguments," together with the tracts and books that he scatters, are making some impression upon the place. I hope it will fall into the hands of "our King" yet. There being no prospect of getting out the people, it was thought best to make an effort at Camden Harbor, two miles up the river from Rockport. So on we went to Camden, and found that Bro. Stone had secured a good hall for meetings. Had a good gathering Saturday evening, and on Sunday the brethren came in from adjoining towns, and cheered us by their presence and aid. The people appeared candid, and I think there is a chance here to do good.

Oct. 28. Rode through a severe storm to South Hope to fill my next appointment. The storm continuing, and the traveling being so bad, had no meeting. There are some faithful ones in "Hope," who know what the "blessed hope" is. I hope they will hope on to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto them at the revelation of Jesus Christ. While in this vicinity I received calls to go and labor in Bradley, Hope Corner, and Frankfort Mills. Shall visit them soon.

The appointment following was at Palermo, in the Union Church, where Bro. R. Hall preaches a part of the time. Our dear brother Dr. Mitchell had secured the house and given out the appointment. Had a free time in speaking to not a large, but an attentive congregation. From this place went to Augusta, and in company with Brn. I. Wight, and L. Dudley, journeyed on to the Wayne Conference. Found the meeting going on well, and it continued well to the close, as the report of the Secretary will show. It was blessed to meet my fellow laborers at this meeting—those who know what it is to suffer for Jesus and his truth. Well, a glorious reward awaits us, and it will soon be given. Amen.

Nov. 3d. Arrived home in good health and courage, and found all well and prospering in Yarmouth. Praise the Lord for his loving kindness and tender mercy. The hard drives through storm and mud, the joys and sorrows incident on such labors as I have been engaged in, have done me good I trust. Brethren and sisters, pray for me. R. R. YORK.

Yarmouth, Nov., 1862.

"Fear not Man."—Matt. 10: 28.

In this text two parts of man are spoken of—the soul and body. Jesus says that man can kill or destroy the body, and not the soul; but that God can and will destroy them both. This shows the limited power of man over the elements of natural life. That there is a principle in animal life that cannot be destroyed but by the power of God, is clear. The word soul represents (1) the body; and (2) the life in man; and this life of all flesh is said to be in the blood.

We read in Genesis that God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, and there was a power in the breath that had life in it, and that principle, being itself life, created animal life in the body of man, and constituted him a living soul. This power of life that God gives is the electric power in the atmosphere. It enters the lungs by the breath, and there being iron in the blood, it conducts the electric current to all parts of the body, producing heat or animal life. When man dies, this breath of life (nephesh or soul) in him, that man has not the power to kill, goes out of him with the breath, and remains the same as it was; and God only can destroy it. This he has declared he will do, both the body and soul or life, in the place represented by the fire of Gehenna. Then it follows that there must be a resurrection, and a re-union of this life power in the resurrected body, in order that both may be destroyed together.

Some call the life that man cannot destroy the life "hid with Christ in God." That cannot be, because God has said he will destroy the life spoken of in the text. But immortal life he has never said he would destroy. It cannot be in the nature of the case. God will raise up all the dead, and quicken his saints into immortal life by his Spirit, and breathe the same breath of life into the nostrils of the wicked as they had before death, and cast them, with the body and this life in them, into the lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death. Then the elements will be dissolved, and the life power itself destroyed, with them that fear man more than God. Let God be true. Amen.

E. BELLOWS.

Obituary Notice.

Died in the Hospital at Springfield, Mo., Oct. 13th, 1862, Corporal PAYNE TURNER, aged 39 years.

He had not been in the army but a few weeks. He went feeling it his duty to defend his country, and was left by his company sick, expecting to join them soon. Alas! how little he thought his end was so near. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn. They did not hear of his sickness until he had been dead over a week. He never made a profession of religion, yet he had had much light on the Bible, as his brothers, G. W. and C. B. Turner, often talked or wrote to him on the subject; and many times was heard to argue the truths of God's word, when his brothers did not hear him, and yet to them he opposed their doctrine. May this affliction be blessed to the good of his family and friends.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The London Herald asserts that the relations of England and France have assumed an unsatisfactory character, but the Globe in response ridicules the idea that Cabinet Councils were of frequent occurrence.

The French mediation project continues to claim the comments of the Paris journals. They generally reproach the English Government for holding back, and charge it with discreditable motives.

The accounts from Pisa relative to Garibaldi's health were cheering.

The Prince of Wales and the Prince of Prussia were received by the Pope in private audience.

The Emperor of Austria has granted an amnesty to all political offenders condemned by courts martial, as well as such refugees already returned.

The Spanish papers hint that Mexico is being destined for a French Canada.

It was rumored that a plot had been discovered against the Emperor's life. A dispatch announcing an actual attempt on the Emperor had made its way over Germany, and temporarily alarmed the Bourses.

A new eruption of Vesuvius is expected at Naples. The volcano is already sending forth lava in the direction of Pompeii, and ashes in the direction of Portici. The atmosphere of the city is highly charged with electricity—a phenomena which usually precedes an eruption.

The English papers state that the amount of suffering in the cotton manufacturing districts is fearful and increasing at an appalling rate, while the aristocracy are represented as looking on with apathetic indifference, and displaying the greatest selfishness; for example, one sporting nobleman who draws $70,000 a year in rents from the town of Ashton, where one-half of the population is dependent upon charity for their daily bread, has subscribed but $100.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Wilmington, N. C., Nov. 28. The Enquirer says the next battle between Lee and Burnside may be a very decisive one; that if an overwhelming victory is gained by Lee the defense of Washington will be gone and that city may be captured. Such a result should be before the eyes of our soldiers, and be the object of the contest. Upon the next battle, therefore, depends whether the war shall end or drag along in undecided battles or mere material victories.

The Richmond Dispatch of the 29th ult., says that everything at Fredericsburg is in a state of inaction. It is reported that the enemy are in force eighteen miles up the Rappahannock toward Warrenton Junction.

Mobile is to be defended to the last extremity, and the Federals may burn its edifices, but they shall never occupy its soil in peace.

New York, Nov. 30. Late Southern papers received here indicate that the rebels regard their prospects as hopeless in the Southwest, and that they will endeavor to concentrate their entire strength in Virginia, and make a desperate struggle for independence.

Ex-Secretary Randolph and Edmund Ruffin, of Virginia, prime movers and leading spirits in the rebellion, say that the original plan has proved a failure, and must be thrown overboard; and it is said that they with others, have withdrawn from active participation in the affairs of the Confederacy.

There is every evidence of great suffering in the South, and all enthusiasm is fast dying out.

The news from the South increases hopes for the success of Banks' expedition.

New York, Dec. 4. Several steamers with numerous regiments left this port to-day as a portion of Gen. Banks' expedition. Among them were the Illinois, Northern Light and several smaller craft, with the 42d, 50th, 52d Massachusetts and several other New England regiments, together with a number of New York batteries.

New York, Dec. 8. A special Nashville dispatch of the 7th inst, says Moore's Brigade, consisting of the 104th Illinois, 106th and 108th Ohio, Nickle's Battery and a small detachment of the Indiana Cavalry, were surprised at daylight this morning, at Hartsville, by Morgan, commanding three regiments of Cavalry and two of Infantry. After fighting an hour and a quarter, our forces surrendered and the enemy burnt our camp, capturing nearly all the brigade train and teams, and burning what they could not carry away. Two guns of Nickle's battery were also captured.

Our loss was between 50 and 60 killed and wounded. Lieut. Moore is among the captives.

New York, Dec. 4. The gunboat Ellis left Newbern on the 18th, and arrived at the mouth of New River Inlet on the morning of the 23d. About five miles up the river she captured a schooner with a cargo valued at $30,000.

At noon she reached the town of Onslow, and took possession of the town, twenty-five stand of arms, and two schooners.

Three rebel schooners while attempting to run the blockade into Wilmington, N. C., on Wednesday last, were captured by the U. S. steamers.

New York, Dec. 8. A special dispatch from Washington states that six of our pickets in the army of the Potomac were frozen to death on Saturday night, while at Camp Misery, Alexandria. Seven more died from the effects of the cold.

Harper's Ferry, Dec. 7. A fire broke out in the guard house where the rebel prisoners were confined, last night. Two government buildings were completely consumed, including the telegraph office. Loss about $20,000.

The Mediation Project.

The London correspondent of the New York Post says: "I have official reasons for knowing that negotiations are still carried on between the courts of England, France and Russia, with a view of arranging some joint plan of action. Without the consent of Russia, England will not co-operate with France. The organs of the Tory party are raising the cry that the interests of England are sacrificed by the government through the refusal to co-operate with France. The termination of the civil war in America, by persuasion, if possible, by force if necessary, will be the policy of the Derby-Disraeli party if the Lancaster distress goes on increasing. If I am not mistaken, next March will see Lord Derby in office, and then there is no saying how far the Tory ministry may not go. Beyond passive support to the South the present administration will not advance a step, according to their existing views."

The Chicago Tribune says that in Southern Indiana, Southern and Central Illinois, the greater portion of Iowa, and all of Missouri, agricultural produce is worth next to nothing; while all over the West the prices of cloth, sugar, molasses, salt, iron—all the great necessaries of farm and household economy, save breadstuffs and meat for man and food for animals—have, in some cases, doubled, in others quadrupled in price. A bushel and a half of corn will buy but a pound of sugar, and three bushels of corn, or a bushel of wheat, only equal in market value a pound of common coffee. Cloths of all descriptions are sold at enormous figures. The prices of labor have increased so greatly that on thousands of farms the grown corn crop is not worth the bare cost of gathering for market.

It was stated at a meeting of the New York Historical Society, on Tuesday evening, that the will of Washington, which was stolen some time since on the advance of our army into Virginia, has been sold to the British Museum! This will was originally deposited in Fairfax Court House, where it lay in the archives up to a few months since. The diction and writing was Washington's exclusively; it was the last production of his pen, and gave evidences of those traits of character which won for him immortality. He placed his signature at the end of every page, and distinctly stated that the will was devised by himself. When our troops captured Fairfax Court House the will, with other valuable documents, was stolen. The fact of its sale is vouched for by Mr. Moore, the Secretary of the Historical Society.

The Boston Pilot (Roman Catholic) made a statement in its Christmas article, last year, not familiar to Protestants at least:

"The chief festival of the year is now at hand. All hail to its return! It never comes without causing a universal diffusion of happiness. The damned themselves are said to exult in its approach, to be released from their fiery pains while it lasts, and to be thrown into new convulsions of woe when its final seconds are announced by the rejoicing devils who command their torments."

Army of the Potomac, Dec. 6. A lady who came over the river yesterday, under a flag of truce, reports the condition of the rebel army as destitute beyond description, and that they cannot possibly retain their position during the winter. Quite one third of the army is without shoes, and hundreds are almost wholly without clothing.

During the war with Napoleon the highest premium on gold in England was 141 1-4, and it was held at that price from December, 1812 until March, 1813. The highest premium at which gold has been held in New York was 136.

Gen. Woodbury is said to have been placed under arrest by order of the Secretary of War, on account of negligence in forwarding the pontoon bridges for the use of the army of the Potomac in the late movement.

The Richmond Enquirer believes the coming struggle in Virginia will be the final battle of the war, provided it does not turn out a Confederate defeat, and it urges the use of every effort to prevent its being so.

☞ People need not sneer at the idea of the rebellion's being soon starved out when it is known that the rebels have to pay from $35 to $50 per barrel for flour, and in proportion for all the other necessaries of life.

It is stated on good authority that no less than 180,000 of the soldiers whose names now fill the muster rolls, are absent with or without leave.

I shall stay a few days in a place, as duty may demand. I shall have an assortment of books and tracts with me to scatter. Those wishing my labors, write me as soon as possible.

The Blind Man's Daughter.

Written by request, on the death of Florence Eliza, only child of Bro. S. C. Hancock.

These sightless orbs ne'er looked on her sweet face,
Nor gazed into the depths of her dark eyes,
And yet I felt that she was beautiful.
As sunbeams, that had bathed in fragrant dew
Their wings, steal in through windows curtained o'er
With rose and jessamine, and nestle mid
The shadows gently sleeping on the wall:
So on my darkness, my perpetual night,
Beamed her sweet presence, and soft twilight made.
Ah! how my heart thrilled with its weight of bliss,
When first these arms encircled her dear form;
And to my cheek, softly and gratefully,
Her warm, sweet breath came like perfume of flowers.
I could not watch the shadows come and go,
As infant sorrows clouded her young face,
Nor count the dimples when the smiles returned;
Nor could I mark the freaks the sunbeams played,
Dancing amid the waves of her soft hair,
Changing its brown to golden. But I've sat
Beside the cottage door, as eve drew on,
Listening intently, with suspended breath,
To catch the distant bird-like melody
That rang out joyously on the still air,
Betokening her return from gay pursuit
Of bees or humming-bird, that all uncaught
Had sought the safety of their quiet homes.
Near and more near floated the music tones,
And soon the pattering of little feet
Along the well trod path; and soft arms thrown
Around my neck, told of her safe return
Ere dew-drops bathed the violets azure-eyed,
That zephyrs lulled in mossy beds to sleep.

Her little feet shall tread, alas! no more
Our garden walks; her joyous laugh no more
Makes merry music round the cottage hearth.
Beside her empty crib her mother weeps,
And I am sitting lone and desolate.
O death! what hast thou done? Thine arrow-points,
Though barbed with scorpion stings, thou buriest
Deep in these quivering, bleeding hearts of ours,
Unmindful of the pain "O Lord! how long?"
To Thee, whose name is Love! Father supreme!
In helplessness and agony I come,
And lift my weeping, sightless eyes to Thee,
And ask "how long?" Hark! from the ether
Speaks a voice in tones melodious, like that
Which woke the echoes 'mong Judea's hills,
And on the ear of Bethlehem's shepherd fell,
Proclaiming "Peace on earth, good will to men!"
"Thine eyes, O weeper lone, shall see the King!"
Thine eyes, unused to seeing, shall behold
His matchless beauty—fairest of the fair!
And in his train, with spotless raiment clad,
Thou too shalt see thy "Florence," and thine arms
Shall clasp her once again, more beautiful
Than thought or fancy ever dared portray.
And ne'er again shall tear-drop bathe thy cheek,
Or pang of separation pierce the heart,
While onward rolls, beyond the reach of thought,
The mighty cycles of the eternal age!

My Journal.—No. 3.

Tour West.—Dr. Seiss—Harrisburg and Marsh Creek.

Monday, Oct. 27. Having finished work in Philadelphia, I took a few hours for an interview with Dr. Seiss, the Lutheran minister and pastor of St. John's Church. I was warmly welcomed as an old acquaintance. He was in the act of examining the chronology of the Bible, intending to go through the Bible and bring out an independent view of the subject. He had not in time past given this subject a full examination; but I hope he will now. He is an honest, independent thinker, and will give his convictions whatever they may be, if he should think proper to publish. He is also preparing a new edition of his excellent work on the "Last Times," the old edition being nearly out. Our chief topic of discussion was the time, and the return of the Jews. He said he had no particular objection to my views of the time; but on the Jew, and the part he is to take in the next dispensation, we were wide apart; he taking the Millennarian view, and I the Advent. We looked over critically many passages in the Old and New Testaments; but probably did not materially alter each other's views.

I am sure our interview was a profitable one. Dr. Seiss is a genial, frank and earnest man. No one can fail to profit by any association with him. His humble and excellent spirit, and enlightening and edifying discourse, will charm and interest those who enjoy them. But for a special engagement, I should have been detained hours longer in reading the Word. Duty called, and we had to part. I left feeling like the disciples on their way to Emmaus, with my "heart burning" within me. O! how precious is the word of God to those who believe and keep it.

Tuesday, Oct. 28. Took leave of Bro. Lye and family, with whom I had enjoyed a short but pleasant visit. God bless them. At 7 A. M. took the cars for Harrisburg, and arrived at noon. Eld. J. Colder, on whom I was to call, was absent, and there being no place for meeting I had no appointment for the evening. I put up with Bro. Theodore Boyer, where I was welcomed. He is an elder in Bro. Colder's church. They have lately joined the Free-will Baptist denomination, though they hold to the pre-millennial faith. I found but one old Adventist family in the place. And having no means of getting at the public to preach, I spent my time in visiting some old friends, and also a few hours at "Camp Curtin." Here was a large number of soldiers, and thousands of drafted men were pouring in from all parts of the State. It was affecting to see so many sad ones, who had been torn from their families to fight the battles of their country. I learn that those among the drafted men who have conscientious scruples about fighting are relieved by the government. This is as it should be. On introducing myself to the Captain of the Camp, I found him to be an old acquaintance, formerly of Lowell, Mass., a Mr. Boynton, who had often heard me preach there. He received me very kindly, and had I been able I should have stopped and preached to the soldiers in the evening. As it was, Bro. Gates spoke to them on the 2nd of Daniel. But the bustle and confusion is so great at this time, very little good can be accomplished.

Wednesday, Oct. 29. Rose at 2 A. M., and Bro. Boyer went with me to the Depot in order to take the car for Lewistown; but the train having broke down on the way, it did not arrive till half past six A. M. The depot was full of soldiers and citizens, waiting to take the train. So I had four hours in the society of about all classes and kinds of human beings; some drinking, smoking, chewing, snuffing; others swearing and discussing the merits of the war and the last battles: some sleeping, others walking about, watching and waiting. Having no acceptable society after Bro. Boyer left me, I read and communed with my own heart, in hope to find congenial society soon among christian friends. At half past six the cars arrived, and we came to Lewistown, two hours too late for the Belfonte stage. So I put up at the hotel; inquired if I could get a place for meeting in the evening, and was informed that I could get the Town House. I did so, and issued a notice for an evening service. About fifty in all came out, but most of them were young persons and children—very few adults. So I spoke to the children on the first and second coming of Jesus, sung them some of our hymns, gave them tracts to take home, and closed the service at an early hour. Some good will come out of it. I called on the Lutheran minister, who received me kindly, and gave him some papers. He said I was not fortunate in the evening. It was the night when all the churches had their evening meetings. But I had no other time. Eld. L. M. Jackson arrived this evening, on his way home to Milesburg from N. E. He has been out of health, but is some recruited by his visit to the home of his childhood in Abington, Mass.

Thursday, Oct. 30th. Took the stage in company with Bro. Jackson, for Belfonte, which is a distance of thirty miles over the mountains. It is a tedious, yet a pleasant jaunt. The scenery at this season even, when the foliage is in the "sere and yellow leaf," is very beautiful; but of course much more beautiful in summer. After ten hours' ride and walk, arrived at Belfonte. But I was still five miles from my appointment, and it was now near 6 P. M. I learned that the person who came for me had left, and so I had to walk. But I reached the chapel in season for the service, though a little weary. All well. Bro. Jackson made an effort to get a conveyance for me from Milesburg, but failed. He has my thanks notwithstanding. I opened the service at 8 o'clock, by a general address. A minister of Christ could not be more warmly or kindly greeted at the close than I was. For three full years they have been making efforts to get me to visit them; but all seemed to fail till now. I am to preach to them ten days, including two Sabbaths; and my prayer is that good may be done, both to the church and community at large.

This church was raised by Eld. J. D. Boyer, in 1847, although Eld. Gates had preached the time strongly in 1843 in this county, and waked up many, of whom I find a few of the best and most devoted ones in the Advent cause. The chapel is located three miles from Milesburg, in Marsh Creek. The church has been one of the largest (Adventist) in the county. Three years ago, at the instance of Bro. Litch, they with others dropped the Advent name for that of Messiah. One of the reasons for this, as given by Bro. L., was, that they might be separated from those who held to the "life and death" question,—this class of believers not being eligible to membership with them; and this class of preachers also being shut out of their pulpits. They now add another class of proscribed persons—those who believe in the time of the Lord's coming. So that I am now shut out from all my old associations as an Adventist, simply because I believe we have evidence that the time is near, even about 1867–8.

Bro. Jackson, the former pastor of this church, declines utterly to labor with me or give me the least countenance as a public teacher. But the church and community at large crowd to hear and give me both their sympathy and support. And so do all other denominations, except my old Advent brethren who have gone into the new organization under the name of "Messiah." I can but hope that our Lord Messiah may receive us in the day of his coming, even though we do not use his sacred Name for denominational distinction, and to save those who look for his speedy coming. I find the church in a low, tried and depressed state. There has been a lax discipline, and utter neglect of the spiritual and moral affairs of the body. There have been a number of cases of moral delinquency. In view of these things, I have spoken on the spiritual, moral, and physical habits of the people of God, showing that impurity and inebriation are brought on by the use of stimulating foods and drinks, exciting causes, which should be avoided by persons professing holiness and looking for the coming of Christ. I do not hope to do more than to modify the general habits of the professing people of God in their manner of living; but in the use of stimulating drugs and drinks, with narcotics, I succeeded in making a complete revolution with many who took the pledge, and will henceforth eat and drink more "to the glory of God."

For teaching and enforcing the doctrine of temperance in eating and drinking, I have been reported here, from New England, as a preacher of "bran bread holiness," simply because I believe with some of the best physicians, that to give man the vantage-ground is to wholly free him from the lust of the flesh-pots; is to purify him from the taste of blood; to teach him that he was never intended to be the universal scavenger; to give him to understand that, in his primal dignity and God-like attributes, he is to be the Lord, not the ravager of creation; that his stomach was never made to be a common sepulchre for the dead carcases of animals; that a higher office is assigned him, the protector, and not the destroyer, of all that his Master has pronounced "very good," that he was ordained to rule over and not prey upon the creatures below him; and that his mission is to subdue and cultivate the earth, not to breed the meaner creatures for the sake of devouring them; and that man's body and brain, his mind and his soul, and all the powers of his material and spiritual nature, will in such a course take an upward, higher, and better direction.

But man cannot save himself by any system of reform. Salvation is by Christ. The atonement of the Lord Jesus is the only ground of a sinner's hope. And holiness is by the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit; yet the manner of one's life does have a great influence on their spiritual progress, and in their usefulness to others.

I have given thirteen discourses, seven of which were on practical subjects, the rest on prophetical questions, including the prophetic periods. We have had several cases of conversion, and one baptism; and a large number have been reclaimed from a low, backslidden state. The meeting has been a success. I missed Bro. Joseph Eckley, who has died since my last visit in 1857. He was a father among the Adventists here and in this region. He was a good man, and sleeps in Jesus. He will come up in the resurrection of the just. And how happy the thought that that day will soon come.

Monday, Nov. 10th. Took leave of Bro. Zimmerman, with whom I put up. I had a very pleasant time in a truly christian family. The Lord reward them. Dr. Barrot took me to Milesburg at noon, where I am to take the stage at 2 P. M. for Port Matilda, on my way to Iowa, in good health and good cheer.

Laborers.

By reading Matt. 20th chapter, we find that the blessed Jesus compared the children of God to laborers he has called to work in his vineyard. We first inquire who the Husbandman calls? Are they the rich who move in great splendor, and array themselves in gorgeous apparel? Or those endowed with a great intellect, whose minds soar to the heights of worldly wisdom? Or can it be the poor, degraded outcast, who has violated the laws of God and man? For an answer we turn to the Revelator, who exclaims, "Whosoever will, let him come and partake of the waters of life freely." Yes, high or low, rich or poor, sick or well, wise or simple, the invitation is to all. And as we know we must perish if we do not work, such an invitation is invaluable. And there is a work adapted to our capabilities for us to perform. Yes, all are called to work; none are so weak or small that they cannot work. To the weak he gives work no harder than they are able to do, with the strength he imparts, but just as much as they can do; and by improving what they have, gain more. For the large intellect, developed mind, there is a work; also for those who are "little and unknown."

No idlers or those too proud to work, are admitted as laborers. All must be humble enough to do the work designed for them before being accepted. And how shall we go to work? With a murmuring and complaining frame of mind, wanting to choose the kind we think we can do best, and love to do? Or, shall we let the great Husbandman give to us the portion his wisdom sees fit, and go about it willingly and cheerfully, feeling that we can do it through Christ strengthening us.

We find that the vineyard comprises the whole world, so we need not all go to some foreign country to convert the heathen, but we may find work nearer home, different places to work in, and different kinds of work to do. Some the Husbandman bids go from place to place diffusing light, comfort, and hope to the scattered flock. To such I would say,

"Fly, fly on wings of morning!"

the few remaining moments of the eleventh hour. Oh! linger not in tents of ease, while sheaves lie ungathered. Thy Master calls,—haste thee to obey!

Sorrowing, desponding one, lift thy head; there is a work for thee and a cheering blessing with it. Go to the lone widow and destitute one; open thy mouth, and it shall be filled with words of comfort for them, while thine own heart will also receive its full meed of peace, joy and hope. Talk with thy neighbors, try to persuade them to go to Jesus; that their blood be not found in thy skirts. Falter not, though thy words seem to fall like idle tales, for thou knowest not what shall prosper, this, or that.

"Dare to do right! dare to be true!
You have a work no other can do;
Do it so bravely, so kindly, so well,
As to gladden all heaven, and silence all hell."

He that worketh receiveth wages; and the christian laborer is not without without his reward. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." What a gift! An inheritance on the new earth, where we shall meet the loved ones, and fear no wasting disease, no death-bed parting scenes, and sorrow's tears will never be shed. I long to be there. ### The Wanderer Restored.

I was a wandering child,
I did not love my home;
I did not love my Savior's voice,
I did the wrong way roam.

The Shepherd called his sheep;
The Father sought his child;
E'er followed me through vale and grove,
Through many a weary wild.

Christ spoke in tender love,
And made all bright and fair;
He'll bring me to his heavenly fold,
The long-sought wanderer.

The War Question.

Bro. Grant:—Having read the two articles on the duty of christians in this war struggle, from the pen of H. Grattan Guinness, allow me to say, that I regard his position as the only one we can take and be faithful to our Lord's teaching. Let every one who is a christian and perplexed on this subject read his articles and there learn his duty, and not imbrue his hands in human blood to save a government that must go to pieces to make room for Him, of whom it is said, the "Government shall be upon his shoulder; . . . to order it, and to establish it . . . forever." Thanks be to his holy name, forever and ever!

Paul the great apostle to the Gentile christians says, "Our weapons are not carnal." Therefore, my brethren in the Lord, let us gird up the loins of our mind and be sober, and follow our great Leader, even Jesus, the Messiah, who said "he that taketh the sword shall perish with it;" being well assured that if this government be of God, or ordained of God, that he is abundantly able to discomfit the rebels and disloyalists without calling his children to arms.

Brethren, I am not a little surprised, but greatly so, to see those who profess to be looking about this time for the kingdoms of this world to become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, shoulder arms to keep this one in power. I think I shall not enlist to save this one. I have the utmost confidence in the righteousness of our Leader, who said he would "never leave nor forsake us; and I have lost all confidence in the righteousness of this and other present governments. Brethren, let us all go in for a government to be established in righteousness.

Yours truly, G. W. Denny.

Sketches by the Wayside.—No. 6.

The following account of the Aurora Borealis I find in a "History of New England," compiled by Rev. Henry White, and published twenty-one years ago. I think it of sufficient interest to transcribe for my "Sketches."

"The first appearance of the Aurora Borealis, or Northern lights, in New England, is thus related by Hays:—'A phenomenon singular at the time, and still unsatisfactorily explained, alarmed the people of New England in 1719. This was the Aurora Borealis, first noticed in this country on the night of the 17th of Dec.* It is thus described by a writer of the time. "At seven o'clock in the evening there was a bright light in the north-east, like that which arises from a house when on fire, which soon spread itself through the heavens from east to west, and was unusually broad. It streamed with white flames, or streams of light, down to the horizon, very bright and strong. When I first saw it, which was when it extended itself over the horizon from east to west, it was brightest in the middle, which was from me north-west; and I could resemble it to nothing but the light of some fire. I could plainly see streams of light redder than ordinary, and there seemed to be an undulating motion of the whole light, so thin that I could plainly see the stars through it. Below this stream or glare of light there lay in the horizon some thick clouds, bright on the tops or edges. It lasted somewhat more than an hour, though the light of its red color continued but a few minutes. About eleven at night the same appearance was visible again, but the clouds hindered its being accurately observed as I could wish. Its appearance was somewhat dreadful; sometimes it looked like a flame, sometimes of a blood-red color, and the whole north-eastern horizon was very bright, and looked as though the moon had been near her rising. About an hour or two before break of day, the next morning it was seen again, and those who saw it, say it was then most terrible.'

"That so novel and singular appearance should have produced great consternation, is not extraordinary. At this day, by many it is not beheld without foreboding apprehensions. When first seen in England, the consternation was equally great. One who saw it gives the following description: 'The brightness, bloodiness, and fieryness of the colors, together with the swiftness of the motions, increased insomuch that we could hardly trace them with our eyes, till at length almost all the whole heavens appeared as if they were set on flame, which wrought and glimmered with flashes in a most dreadful and indescribable manner. It seemed to threaten us with an immediate descent and deluge of fire, filled the streets with doleful outcries and lamentations, and frightened a good many people into their houses. And we began to think whether the Son of God was next to make his appearance, or the conflagration of the world was now begun; for the elements seemed just as if they were melting with fervent heat, and the ethereal vault to be burning over us, like the fierce agitations of the blaze of a furnace, or the top of a fiery oven. And the glimmering light looked as if it proceeded from a more glorious body behind, that was approaching nearer, and about to make its sudden appearance to our eyes.'

"The Aurora Borealis was first noticed in Europe about 1560; from that time it was occasionally seen, though unattended with any extraordinary brilliancy until 1623; from that time for more than eighty years, we have no account of a similar phenomenon being observed. In 1707 and 1708 it was noticed several times; and in 1716 Dr. Halley observed and described a very brilliant one, which spread over the most of the north of Europe. Since that time, until twenty or thirty years past, it has been common in all latitudes, often extending southerly of the zenith, and of great brilliancy, and from its frequency has ceased to alarm. It is certain that the Aurora Borealis was of rare occurrence in our latitudes until about a century ago, and indeed it was scarcely known previous to that time."

Does not this description harmonize with the prophetic declaration of the prophet Joel respecting the "fearful sights" and "great signs" there should be in the "last days?" "Blood, fire, and pillars of smoke." And when these signs first appeared, they were recognized as the tokens of approaching judgment, but now, as the writer remarks, their frequency has ceased to alarm. "Wonders" in heaven and on earth have abounded, yet thousands of the professed watchmen are all unaware that the great and terrible day is at hand. "Signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and on the earth distress of nations with perplexity." God has spoken in thunder tones through these manifold tokens, and that day will not come as a thief on those who have watched for the morning, and done well by heeding the sure word of prophecy. M. D. W.

The Children's Tract Society.

Dear young Friends:—I am glad that Sister Mathews suggested the plan of a Children's Tract Society. The idea is a good one, and I hope it will be carried out. If you will all take hold of it in earnest, and send your pennies, you will have, in a few months, quite a fund to send tracts to those who are not able to buy them, and to the poor soldiers. What a satisfaction it will be to you, to feel that you are doing good in this way, as well as the older folks. God will remember it, and put it down in His book.

I was telling my two little girls about it, yesterday,—and when I read "Sister Maria's" letter to them, Rosa, the oldest, nearly four years old, asked,—"Who is Sister Maria, ma? Is she sister to all the little children?" When I told her that she was their sister, because her Father in heaven is their Father too, and because they both love Jesus, she said, clapping her hands together,—"Then I am their little sister, aint I, ma? and Maria is their big sister." Then she ran to the drawer, saying, "I must send one of my cents. I can spare one. O, I guess I'll send my new bright one that Georgiana gave me!" Little Mary, two years old, ran after her, saying, "Me send cent, too. Me send bight 'un—Dorgie give me." I asked them if they would not like to give more than one cent, for they could do more good if they sent more money. Rosa said, "Yes, I'll send my five cent piece"; and little Mary said, "Me, thee (three) bents."

I was glad that they were willing to give their bright cents that they thought so much of, and silver, too; and I hope, dear children, that you will freely give yours, also. A cent, I know, is worth a great deal to a child, as much as a dollar is to a man; but only think how much good even one cent may do. It may teach some little child, or some older person, to love Jesus, and show them the way to the Kingdom of Heaven. If you can do so much good with one cent, will you not be glad to give away your little treasures to help form a fund for The Children's Tract Society, to do good with?

Try and do all you can for Jesus, and great will be your reward when He comes.

Aunt Mary.

P. S.—I think that every boy and girl that reads the Crisis, can just as easily send six cents now, as to lay it by, a cent each month, and then send the six cents at the end of six months. I would therefore suggest that each one send, at once, in stamps or postage currency, what they feel able to give,—three, five, ten, fifteen or twenty cents,—stating, when they write, that it is for The Children's Tract Society. If there are only five hundred children who read the Crisis, and if each one should send only five cents, it would amount to $25.00. Just think—how much good $25.00 worth of tracts might do.

The Stolen Grapes.

"Annie, don't you want some nice grapes?" asked Charlie Wood of his sister, as they were going home from school one day.

"O yes, Charlie!" cried Annie, her blue eyes sparkling with delight at the sight of the tempting fruit.

"Well, Annie, you may have this large bunch. Are n't they nice?"

"Delicious! Thank you. Where did you get them?"

"O, I got them—in—in—a good place," said Charlie, confusedly. "Why don't you eat away?"

Annie saw from his manner that something was wrong, and replied, "I can't, till you tell me where you got them." And she looked sad and thoughtful.

"O Annie, what a strange girl you are! Eat the grapes, and think no more about where they came from. They are so nice."

"No, I can't eat any more till you tell me who gave them to you."

"Well,—nobody gave them to me," said Charlie.

"Where did you buy them, then?"

"I did not buy them anywhere."

"Why, Charlie, you did not steal them?" asked Annie, dropping the grapes and laying her hand on her brother's arm, and looking up to his face with tearful eyes.

"I don't call it stealing,—but perhaps you would, you are so particular. I took them from farmer Goodman's vine, as I came by. They were hanging over the wall, and I thought if I did not take them some one else would. And you know he has so many he would not care for them," replied Charlie, trying to get away from Annie's reproachful look.

"O, Charlie, how could you, when you have so often read in your Bible:—'Thou shalt not steal,' and our good father and mother have so often taught us how wicked it is? What will mother say? and farmer Goodman, too?"

"You need not tell mother, and I am sure I shall not tell father Goodman of it," said Charlie. "Everybody would not think it such a dreadful thing as you do, Annie. Come, don't be so particular, but eat the rest of the grapes."

"No, Charlie, I can not eat any more," said Annie, the tears rolling down her cheeks." "O, I wish I had not tasted them at all."

"Come, come, Annie, don't be foolish! If you feel so very badly, we will throw the grapes away, and say no more about them. Nobody need ever know anything about it but us, and we can soon forget it."

"But, Charlie, don't God know it? Can He forget it, or forgive it, unless you are sorry for it, and show that you are sorry?"

"How can I show that I am sorry, Annie?"

"You can ask God to forgive you, and then come with me to farmer Goodman's and tell him what you have done, and ask him to forgive you."

"Go and tell him I have stolen! No, no, Annie, I can never do that!"

"Well, come with me, and I will tell him for you. I know he will not love you less. He will feel sorry, but will readily forgive you, I am sure. Come, Charlie, the bright angels from heaven—God's ministering spirits—are waiting to see you do right, and if you do, oh, what rejoicing there will be! Jesus will love you so, and be so glad for you; father and mother, and I, and all of us, will be so happy! Come, Charlie."

Charlie's heart was melted. How could he resist his angel sister's pleadings? Tears filled his eyes; and, placing his hand at last in hers, they went away silently towards farmer Goodman's house. As they drew near the gate, they met him with a basket of grapes.

"Just the ones I wanted to see," said farmer Goodman, smiling, "I was going to your house to make you a present of these grapes, and now you have saved me the walk."

"We—we—were coming to—to—see you—on particular business, sir," said Charlie, blushing, and holding down his head. "But I cannot tell you what it is,—Annie will tell you." And the tears burst from his eyes.

Annie, in her artless way, told the whole story, and begged the farmer to "forgive Charlie." He caught her up in his arms and kissed her, and taking Charlie's hand, said:—"I am sorry you took the grapes, my boy. You forgot that God saw you; but I trust you will never transgress in this way again. I forgive you, Charlie, freely. I don't care for the grapes; but the sin is great. Always remember the eye of God is on you; and he has told you in your Bible;—'Thou shalt not steal.' I hope you will never forget it again."

"I hope I never shall, sir. I am punished enough now to remember it all my life. God helping me, I will never steal again."

Annie looked happy again, and taking Charlie's hand, told him they must go home with the grapes. They went home to their parents, and told them all about it. Charlie loved his sister better than ever, and always kept his promise to farmer Goodman.

I hope, dear children, you will never break the eighth commandment. Remember that God always sees you. No wicked child can enter the kingdom of heaven, and I want to meet you all there.

Little Willie's Thanksgiving Treat.

A TRUE STORY.

I knew a little pleasant child,
With eyes dark blue and fair,
Of temper placid, sweet and mild,—
Friends loved for him to care.

One morn—one frosty morning clear,
It was thanksgiving day,
Appointed by our country dear,
All work aside to lay.

Good parents dressed their little son
In his best Sunday clothes,
Quick to the door away he run,
Nor would he let it close.

And oft he shouted, loud and clear,
"Papa! mama! make haste;
I want to see my Grandpa dear,
And his good dinner taste."

When Grandpa's house at last they reached,
Invited there to dine;
For them was ready a repast,
And yet 'twas without wine.

Then little Willie's Grandpa said,
"You dearly love mince pie;
You've had enough—you are well fed,
Now play, but do not cry.

But you shall have one whole mince pie,
And it shall be your own;
But lay aside till by and bye,
For you may take it home."

Well pleased was he—but ere night came
A sad sight met his eye;
A poor boy led a blind man lame,
And they were passing by.

Then Willie ran to fetch his pie,
And said, "Now down here sit,
And then for food no more you'll sigh,
'Tis yours—now finish it.

I'll ask Grandpa to give you more,
He will fill your basket;
And then for days you have a store,—
I'll quickly go and ask it."

This was a good thanksgiving treat,
Brought Willie no alloy;
To feed the poor, their wants to meet,
Gives inward peace and joy.

Bible Riddle.

There was a man of Adam's race,
Who had a certain dwelling place;
He had a house well covered o'er,
Where no man dwelt since or before.
It was not built by human art,
Nor brick, nor lime, in any part;
Nor wood nor rock, nor cave nor kiln,
But curiously wrought within.
'T was not in heaven, nor yet in hell,
Nor on this earth where mortals dwell.
Now if you know this man of fame,
Tell where he lived and what's his name.

My Savior.

My Savior! O what matchless love!
He left his Father's throne above,
And to this world a wanderer came,
Forsaken and despised of men.

He came of meek and lowly heart,
To take the guilty sinner's part;
A willing lamb to slaughter led,
He suffered in the sinner's stead.

O wondrous love! can this be true?
Yes, Jesus died for me and you;
He spilt his own most precious blood,
That rebels might return to God.

All hallelujahs to his name!
He burst death's strong and icy chain;
A victor from the tomb he rose,
Destined to conquer all his foes.

Looking for Jesus.

"And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—HEB. 9: 28.

Two things are necessarily implied in looking for Jesus.

1st. Faith that he will come.

2nd. We must expect him.

First. In order to have true faith in the coming of the Lord, we must have immutable testimony. Have we this kind of testimony in the living oracles? I answer, yea. You demand the proof. Well, it shall be forthcoming. Please listen to it. Jesus, in order to comfort his desponding disciples, testified: "If I go away, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." The testimony of the two witnesses is in point. Acts 1: 9–11. "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." 1 Thess. 4: 16. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." That is, before the righteous living are changed. Jude 14. "And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints."

Job 19: 25–27. "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another, though my reins be consumed within me." Num. 24: 16. "He hath said, which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the Most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty falling into a trance, but having his eyes open; I shall see him but not now; I shall behold him but not nigh; there shall come a star out of Jacob, and a scepter shall rise out of Israel and shall smite the corners of Moab, and shall destroy all the children of Sheth. Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth of the city. . . . Alas! who shall live when God doeth this?" A solemn question—who can answer it?

Ps. 50: 3–6. "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence. A fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare his righteousness, for God is judge himself." Ps. 102: 16. "When the Lord shall build up ZION, he shall appear in his glory." Ps. 96: 10–13. "Say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth; the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved; he shall judge the people righteously. Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fullness thereof. Let the fields be joyful, and all that is therein; then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord; for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth; he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth." Ps. 98: 7–9. "Let the sea roar and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein. Let the floods clap their hands; let the hills be joyful together before the Lord; for he cometh to judge the earth; with righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity." Isa. 25: 9. "And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Isa. 26: 21. "For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; [those that are alive at his coming.] The earth also shall disclose her blood and no more cover her slain." Isa. 35: 4. "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, be strong, fear not; behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you." Isa. 40: 10. "Behold the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold his reward is with him, and his work before him." Isa. 42: 13. The Lord shall go forth as a mighty man, he shall stir up jealousy like a man of war; he shall cry, yea, roar; he shall prevail against his enemies." Isa. 62: 11. "Behold, the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, say ye to the DAUGHTERS OF ZION, Behold thy salvation [Redeemer] cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Isa. 64: 1. "Oh that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence." Isa. 66: 15. "For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire."

Again, the testimony of Jeremiah and Ezekiel is positive that Jesus will come. Jer. 23: 5, 6; Ezek. 21: 25–27; also Daniel 7: 13, 14. "I saw in the night visions, and, behold one like unto the Son of man came with clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him; and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." See Dan. 12: 1. Again, 1 Cor. 15; 22, 23. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order, Christ the first fruits;" THAT IS, CHRIST THE FIRST IN THE ORDER OF THE RESURRECTION; "afterwards THEY THAT ARE CHRIST'S AT HIS COMING." Phil. 3: 20. "For our conversation [citizenship, and Christ is our citizenship], is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Thess. 2: 19. "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not ye even in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? 1 Thess. 3: 13. "To the end he may establish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." 2 Thess. 1: 7–9. "And to you who are troubled, rest with us; when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting DESTRUCTION from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." 2 Thess. 2: 1, 8. "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him. . . . And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of HIS COMING."

Again, 2 Tim. 4: 1. "I charge thee therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick [the living] and the dead [those that are in their graves] at his APPEARING and his kingdom." Titus 2: 13, 14. "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious APPEARING OF THE GREAT GOD, and OUR SAVIOR JESUS CHRIST." Heb. 9: 27, 28. "And as it is appointed unto men ONCE TO DIE, but after this the judgment; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall HE APPEAR THE SECOND TIME without sin unto salvation." Heb. 10: 37. "For yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come and will not tarry." Peter's testimony is in point. Acts 3: 20. "And He [God] shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you." 1 Pet. 1: 13. "Wherefore, gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. 1 Pet. 5: 4. "And when the Chief Shepherd [Christ] shall APPEAR, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 2 Pet. 1: 16. "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty." I will now introduce James as witness. James 5: 7–9. "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the COMING OF THE LORD. . . Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the COMING OF THE LORD draweth nigh. . . Behold the Judge standeth before the door."

Reader, you will please listen to what that disciple has to say who leaned on Jesus' breast at supper time. 1 John 2: 28. "And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall APPEAR, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his COMING." 1 John 3: 2. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; [to the world] but we know that when he [Christ] SHALL APPEAR, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Rev. 1: 7. "Behold he [Jesus] COMETH with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen." Rev. 6: 16, 17. "And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" See Rev. 19: 11–16.

Again, Paul says of his Thessalonian brethren (1 Thess. 1: 10), that they had been led by the gospel to turn their backs upon idols, "to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come." Matt. 16: 27. "For the SON OF MAN SHALL COME in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. 24: 30, 31, 42, 50. "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man COMING in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. . . But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Mark 8: 38. "Whosoever, therefore, shall be ashamed of me and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed when he COMETH in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels." See Mark 13: 26, 34–36; Luke 12: 36, 40, 46; 21: 17; John 14: 1–3, 18, 28; Rev. 22: 7, 12, 20; Matt. 25: 31. "When the Son of man shall COME in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Rev. 19: 12. "His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head many crowns; . . . and out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS!'

The Nature of Man.

IS MAN IMMATERIAL AND IMMORTAL, OR MATERIAL AND MORTAL?

The following was written for the Herald of Gospel Liberty, but was rejected.

(Concluded.)

My friend tells us that "the immaterial soul, or spirit, is all Adam's intelligence, and that his soul or spirit did not return to the ground." We read that the Lord said unto Adam, Gen. 3: 19, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Who did the Lord address; the body that had no knowledge or reason, or the understanding of Adam? If the Lord addressed Adam's understanding, and that is his immaterial soul, or spirit, how can it return to the ground? Again, if the sentence was against the body only, that had no knowledge or reason, and therefore could not be in any way responsible for the sin committed by the immaterial spirit; nor could it in any way understand the nature of the judgment pronounced against it; then the immortal soul or spirit that committed the sin is not affected or punished by the edict of the Almighty, as this immortal soul or spirit, my friend asserts, is all man's intelligence, and "came by the Lord's own breath, and that the spirit will return to God who gave it"; and thereby he does assert that the spirit, or intelligence, is not punished, but goes to God, taking the Universalist argument, that all will be saved at death.

Allow me to give a parallel case. The Court issues a warrant to arrest Mr. A. for transgressing the law of our State. The officer takes A's old house he lives in and carries it before the Court, and the Court orders the house to be destroyed; but Mr. A., the criminal, is ordered into a very fine and costly edifice, to be always furnished with all imaginable comforts and means of happiness for life. This is the logic of those who talk about the distorted imagination of Solomon and Peter.

One more. If the material man does not think and reason, but all his reasoning faculties are derived through God's immortal spirit; I wish to inquire why the child does not have as mature a mind as the adult? Why do old men, when their physical systems are nearly worn out, manifest such imbecility of mind? Is the immortal spirit, that always existed, too young or too old to reason? Why does intoxicating liquor deprive a man of his reason? Does the immortal spirit drink the liquor and get tipsy? Why does a blow on the head, or the brain fever, make a man insensible? Is the immortal spirit affected by a blow or by a fever? If a blow on the head will deprive a man of his reason, will a blow that crushes the brain to atoms make him know more than he ever did before? If a material blow can affect man's reason, does it not prove that his mind is derived through material organs? Can there be but one answer, except by those who talk about "the delusive dreams of a distorted imagination of Solomon and Peter"?

To prove that the spirit is the real man, my friend quotes Job 32: 8,—"There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." Giveth understanding to whom? Does it give understanding to the spirit? No; but it giveth understanding to them, the persons. This was Elihu's argument to overthrow the faith of God's servant Job; but he failed.

He also refers to Zech. 12: 1,—"The Lord . . . formeth the spirit of man within him." I believe the Lord formed the spirit of man within him, and that man could not live without that spirit any more than he could without blood; but there is no evidence in this passage to prove that the spirit has any intelligence separate from the body. Job 27: 3, says, "The spirit of God is in my nostrils." Did Job have all his intelligence in his nostrils? He also quotes Prov. 20: 27,—"The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord, searching all the inward parts." But does this prove that the spirit is immortal and all man's intelligence? Let the Bible answer. Prov. 24: 20,—"The candle of the wicked shall be put out." Job 18: 5, 6,—"Yea, the light of the wicked shall be put out; and the spark of his fire shall not shine; . . . and his candle shall be put out with him." Can immortality be put out?

It is often argued by the Spiritualist, that as the spirit gives understanding to man, it must possess understanding separate from the body, as the spirit cannot impart that which it did not possess. Let us examine this by the Bible. We read in Lev. 17: 11,—"The life of the flesh is in the blood." Lev. 17: 14. Blood "is the life of all flesh." Gen. 9: 4,—"But flesh, with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof." It follows, if the spirit is an eternal entity, and possesses understanding and reason separate from the formed man, that the same construction of language and the same manner of reasoning will prove that the blood is an eternal living entity, and will live forever separate from the body after the body is dead and dissolved. The absurdity of proving natural immortality by such reasoning is also shown by machinery carried by water, steam or wind.

Justin Martyr, who had been a Platonist, and who was converted from Plato's immortal-soul doctrine into the faith of the gospel, says, "If you meet with some who are called christians, who . . . dare calumniate the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and who say there is no resurrection of the dead, but at death their souls are received up into heaven, do not regard them as christians."—Debt and Grace.

Martin Luther, in answer to the Pope's anathema, said, "I permit the Pope to make articles of faith, for himself and his faithful, such as, that he is emperor of the world, king of heaven and God upon earth—that the soul is immortal, with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals."

McCullock says, in his able work on the "Credibility of the Scriptures," vol. 2, page 471, "There is no word in the Hebrew language that signifies either soul or spirit, in the technical sense in which we use the terms, as implying something distinct from the body."

Kitto, in his Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature, vol. 1, p. 59, remarks on Gen. 2: 7, "We should be acting unfaithfully, if we were to affirm (that) an immortal spirit (is) contained or implied in this passage."

Bishop Tillotson says:—"The immortality of the soul is rather supposed, or taken for granted, than expressly revealed in the Bible."

Noah Webster, in his unabridged dictionary, gives the primary meaning of the word spirit in the Latin and English thus:—"Spirit, L. (Latin) spiritus, from spiro, to breathe, to blow. The primary sense is to rush or drive." The English definition thus: Spirit. 1st. "Primarily, wind; air in motion; hence, breath." I wish to respectfully ask, where is the authority for asserting that "the spirit is all man's intelligence," excepting we take the heathen writers as our authority in contradistinction to the Bible and primary meaning of the word spirit?

When I look at the parentage of the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, and by whom it has been defended, I am surprised that any one professing to be a christian should believe it; and I should be much more surprised if we did not read in the word of the Lord, Dan. 7: 21,—"The same horn, (the Roman Catholic Church) made war with the saints and prevailed against them." Dan. 7: 25,—"And he shall speak great words against the Most High." Dan. 8: 12,—"And it cast down the truth to the ground."

This never-dying-soul doctrine was first preached by the serpent to Mother Eve, in the garden. Among its first advocates were the Egyptians. Herodotus, in his history, informs us that the Egyptians were the first of mankind who had defended the immortality of the soul. Socrates, Plato, and all the heathen philosophers embraced and advocated it. And, serpent-like, it crept into the apostolic church and gained the ascendancy in a council at Chalcedon, A. D. 451. Then the Roman Catholic Church began to fulfill the prophet Daniel,—"It made war with the saints and overcame them, and it cast down the truth to the ground." And this same old serpent's lie,—"Ye shall not surely die"—is now preached for the gospel of Jesus Christ, and it is preached with such boldness, that it is no wonder that our Savior, knowing what would take place, said, "if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Matt. 24: 24. It truly has a worthy and royal line from its first parent, the Devil, down through the Egyptians, the heathen, and the Roman Catholic church, to the present time; and now we see the fruits of their teaching in Spiritualism, preparing the world for the great harvest of God.

The Faith of the Church.

NUMBER THREE.

Through faith we understand that "God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."—Gen. 2: 7. According to "the faith once delivered to the saints" in respect to the origin of our race, we are to receive and maintain that God made man of "the dust of the ground," and "created" him "in his own image" and "likeness." Gen. 1: 26, 27.

This is in opposition to the materialistic theory:—"Intelligence is the product of material development." By which we are to understand that the world and the laws of nature produced man. It is affirmed by those maintaining this theory, that the time was, far back in the ages, when "intelligence did not exist"; but by the law of "creative progress" it was brought forth. First in the "Saurian age," nature produced the lizard-mind; and the fish-lizard-god became the highest and supreme intelligence on earth. Then, finally, by the same order of created progress man was brought forth, created, and developed, and is now the supreme being on earth. So according to this philosophy and science, "falsely so called," "the laws of nature will create a god; instead of God creating nature."

But we are to maintain that the Almighty God who created the universe by miracle from nothing, created also man by miracle from the dust of the earth, and brought him into existence against any known laws of nature. If the laws of nature will create and develope man from the earth, why is it that we have not had instances of the kind within the history and knowledge of our race? Why was the pro-creative act limited to the first Eden pair?

But again. We are to contend in connection with this origin of man from the hand of his Maker, the one origin and unity of mankind against the theory of the diverse and multitudinous types of the race, as is claimed and advocated by Prof. Agassiz and others. "God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation."—Acts 17.

Upon these doctrines, as taught in the Scriptures, we are happy to know that a large majority of the able, philosophical naturalists give their assent against the theories that "Intelligence is the product of material development"; and the "diversified tribes of mankind." And upon these truths God has offered to all the brotherhood of men, alike fallen in sin, a common salvation, through his only begotten Son, who himself was made "in the likeness of sinful men," and who is the great Life-giver of the world.

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER NINE.

XII.—INCREASE OF MORTALS IN MESSIAH'S KINGDOM.

The prophet Isaiah, in predicting the reign of Christ "upon the throne of David," remarks:—"Of the INCREASE of his government and peace there shall be no end" (Isa. 9: 7). It is claimed by some that this "increase" is the augmenting of the number of subjects in the Kingdom, by a propagation of the human species. But we have only to look this theory in the face, earnestly, to see its deformity. An "increase" of that kind is more than its advocates have bargained for, when carried out, for of the "increase" here spoken of "there shall be NO END"; hence, if an increase of subjects by the birth of children is meant, it follows that there must be an endless propagation of the species.

1st. At the ordinary rates of increase (allowing the claim that deaths are to be rare occurrences), by the time Christ shall have governed the world as long as it has already been under Satan's control, it would require scores of worlds like this to hold their offspring!! And yet this is but a priming to this "increase," for it shall have "no end." If it means an increase of children, the time would arrive when every planetary system in the vast universe would be crowded; and still there would be "no end" to this increase; God must build more worlds, and transport them thither!!

2nd. But it is sometimes said, they may not increase as rapidly as they now do. Well, that would not materially alter the results: no matter how slowly they increase, as there is to be "NO END" to it, the time would come when one world would be filled full, then another, and another; finally a million, and a billion, and still there is no end to it. Thus the earth, instead of being the territory of the kingdom of God, would contain but a meagre fraction of its subjects!

Others claim that the "increase" here mentioned refers to acquired territory,—that the Kingdom is to be set up in Palestine, a little small power to begin with, and then spread its conquests, and "increase" its territory. Even if this were so, there would be an "end" to this "increase" of territory, and thence to all the other planets, and even then the last planet would be gained in process of time, and an "end" to this kind of "increase" be reached!

This "INCREASE" [marbeeth] signifies not the process of increasing, but the result of that process, as in 1 Sam. 2: 33, where in giving to Eli a prediction of the death of his two sons Hophni and Phinehas, it is said, "The increase [marbeeth] of thy house shall die." Those who had been gathered into his household, as members of it, were called his "increase"; so those who will be gathered into the kingdom, as subjects of it, are called its "increase," or income, which shall never be destroyed; shall have "no end"; or as Gabriel remarks, in speaking of the same thing,—"Of his kingdom there shall be no end," including its subjects. The "increase," or income, or ingathered ones of this kingdom will be immortal,—"no end" to their existence.

The Christian's Conversation.

The word conversation is employed in the Scripture as a general term, expressive of deportment or behavior. But we propose at this time to take it in its limited signification, noticing how the christian is to order the words of his mouth, that they may be acceptable in the sight of the Lord.

From the Bible we gather that five distinct elements are to characterize the conversation of God's children.

1. Sobriety: We "are all the children of light . . . let us watch and be sober." "The end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober." "Be sober . . . because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour." My beloved fellow christian, are you witty? Do you sometimes indulge in trifling or facetious language? In view of the fearful judgments threatening the world, and by the unmistakable signs that are heralding the coming of our Lord, to establish his kingdom, and "reign in Mt. Zion and Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously"—in meekness and love, I entreat you to lay aside your "foolish talking and jesting," which the word says ought not to be named among us as saints, (Eph. 5: 4,) and let your testimony for Jesus be with earnestness and gravity, speaking only "that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers."

2. Love. Love in the heart is like sunshine in earth, brightening, beautifying, nourishing, and developing to perfection all under its influence. When we have learned to talk always with charity; anger, slander, evil-speakings and proud words will cease; transgressions will be covered, and schism less prevalent. They who publicly combat error, will use neither stinging sarcasm nor unkind ridicule. But having found the "more excellent way," our words of love, like golden cords, shall bind the dismembered body of Christ into an harmonious whole.

3. Truthfulness. We do not wish to think that any who profess to have the spirit of the Lord Jesus, are guilty of positive, willing falsehood; but we are compelled to believe that some are addicted to thoughtless exaggeration. With great recklessness they use the strongest forms of expression, the highest degrees of comparison. Things slightly disagreeable are spoken of as "perfectly horrible;" a few persons, or a limited amount of influence as "all the world;" that which occasionally happens as "invariably so;" under the slight pressure of circumstances they are "tired to death," "worried to death," "frozen to death," &c. Beloved, that you speak thus without considering it is sinful, I am persuaded. But the searching eye of Jehovah marks our deviation from strict truthfulness; and as he has called us unto perfection, let us be careful, that we may abide in his favor, for "the lips of truth shall be established forever." "Above all things, my brethren, swear not; neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath; but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation."

4. Holiness. "As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation." The believer would be shocked to think an impure word or coarse jest ever passed the lips of his Master, the spotless Lamb of God. Why then should his followers indulge in such things? Are we not to walk in his inimitable steps, in whose "mouth was found no guile?" (1 Pet.2: 22.) My dear sister, when you have given utterance to such ejaculations as "Lor!" "Mercy!" "Gracious!" "Goodness!" and the like, has it never occurred to you that these were irreverent, unholy expressions? "Death and life are in the power of the tongue." Let us speak as those that are seeking life; as those whose citizenship is in Heaven; as those who would be "without spot and blameless" in the day of the Savior's appearing.

5. Thanksgiving. Our Heavenly Father has called us from death, darkness, and bondage, unto life, light, and liberty. Large measures of truth have been revealed unto us. Blessings without number crowd the daily lives of each of us. Walking by the "sure word of prophecy," and enabled through its light to discern and avoid the thickening perils of the "last days"—surely gratitude to God for his great salvation and everlasting kindness should take possession of us. Let all impatience, murmuring and doubting, be banished from among us. And till Jesus comes, may we obey the holy commands, doing "all things without murmurings and disputings;" rejoicing in the Lord, "giving thanks always and for all things, unto God and the father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ;" by him offering "the sacrifice of praise to God continually; that is the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name."

Thus guiding our tongue, the most offending member of the body according to gospel principles, we shall honor God and "grow up unto (Christ) in all things." For "if any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body."

Rev. 20: 13-15.

"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hades delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

Now if the sea gave up its dead, and death and hades gave up their dead, and they were judged, they were necessarily alive—and live men too—not beasts and creeping things. "And death and hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Now does any body suppose that these destroyed ones experienced their doom without being made alive? It is sheer nonsense to say that a handful of dust that had lain passive and inert matter for a thousand years was judged, and then cast into a lake of fire, and called a "second death." If there were any cast into a lake of fire it was the wicked; but I should like to know how a man that has no existence can be judged and cast into a lake of fire?

But these did have a resurrection from the sea, death, and hades, and then were burnt up. If any are inclined to question the authenticity of the book of Rev. on the ground of symbolic prophecy, but practically because it is the last straw that breaks the camel's back; if a believer in the Lord's coming, he had better get his eyes open to the fact that some of his treasured hopes, made more precious by a descriptive knowledge of state and being, are found depicted through its allegorical language. And if inclined to any peculiar dogma, which, by rejecting the book he hopes to establish, he had better transfer the groundwork of his millennium faith to a more congenial atmosphere, where he can find time and room to commence a disproval of its authenticity.

It seems so curious to disavow a prevailing doctrinal tenet of the early church of which Papias, John's disciple, was an advocate, and whose chiliastic faith he drew from the apocalypse, and which Irenæus intimates he claimed the sanction of John for. It certainly comes with a very poor grace from men who in their bigotry impeach a witness of the living faith once delivered to the saints.

I am sorry to see a prevailing element of incredulity pervading the church, which is fast developing itself in gross scepticism. The right of private judgment is hackneyed and abused until every man has become a theologian, worshiping at the shrine of every fanciful freak occasioned by an inherent prejudice neither guaged nor governed by the spirit of Christ. It is high time that the gospel of Christ became less a chimera of the brain, and more a monitor of the heart.

Rev. 17.—"Seven Kings."—No. 3.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space."—Rev. 17: 10.

It is generally conceded that the Greek Emperor Justinian became the first Imperial Protectorate of Papal Rome, which establishes the identity between the two powers. The seven kings above, and the following seven heads of the 13th of Revelation are beyond a doubt identical. "And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority."

Three particulars in the above prophecy claim our attention.

1st. The mouth.

2d. The grant of the dragon.

3d. The ten kings.

First. The mouth. This I consider refers to the Pope of Rome, who became the mouthpiece of the seven successive imperial Roman Catholic Dynasties that supported Papacy, of which we shall speak. The Pope became the mouth to these powers in the sense that Aaron became the mouth of Moses. Ex. 4: 15, 16.—"And thou shalt speak unto him, and put words in his mouth: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do. And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people: and he shall be, even he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him instead of God."

Second. The grant of the dragon. The following extract, from Gibbon's History of Rome, Vol. 111, p. 512, will be sufficient to show the fulfillment of the prophecy: "The unfortunate Augustulus was made the instrument of his own disgrace. He signified his resignation to the Senate, and that assembly, in their last act of obedience to a Roman Prince, still affected the spirit of freedom and the forms of the constitution. An epistle was addressed by their unanimous decree to the Emperor Zeno, who had lately been restored after a short rebellion to the Bysantine (Greek throne.) They solemnly disclaim the necessity, or even the wish, to continue any longer the imperial succession in Italy, since in their opinion the majesty of a sole monarch is sufficient to pervade and protect at the same time both the east and the west. In their own name, and in the name of the people, they consent that the SEAT OF UNIVERSAL EMPIRE shall be transferred from Rome to Constantinople; and they hereby renounce the right of choosing their own master: THE ONLY VESTIGE THAT YET REMAINED OF THE AUTHORITY WHICH HAD GIVEN LAWS TO THE WORLD."

The above settles two points. First, the yielding up of dragon authority, and the Greek Emperor becoming the dominant power. We settle it that the GREEK IS THE FIRST HEAD of the leopard beast. In A. D. 800 there was a separation of the Pope from the eastern empire, and a new empire was founded in the West by CHARLEMAGNE, who is crowned at Rome by the Pope, King of Italy, Germany and France. This constitutes the

FRANKS THE SECOND HEAD of the leopard beast, with the Pope for his mouth. Gibbon, Vol. 5, p. 40, says: "It was after the Nicene Synod, and under the reign of the pious Irene, that the popes consulted the separation of Rome and Italy by the translation of the empire to the less orthodox Charlemagne. By this decisive measure they would finally eradicate the claims of the Greeks. The majesty of Rome would be restored; the Latin churches or christians would be united under a SUPREME HEAD in their ancient metropolis; and the conquerors of the West would receive their crown from the successors of St. Peter. The Roman church would acquire a zealous and respectable advocate. Under the shadow of the Charlemagne power, the Bishop might exercise with honor and safety the government of the city."

After the abdication of Charles the Fat, which terminated the Carlovingian Dynasty, Gibbon says the whole term of seventy-four years may be deemed a vacancy from the abdication of Charles the Fat to the establishment of Otho the First of Saxony, which brings us to consider

THE SAXONS, THE THIRD HEAD. Concerning this power Gibbon says: "Otho was of a noble race of dukes of Saxony. His father, Henry the Fowler, was elected by the suffrage of the nation to save and institute the kingdom of Germany. Its limits were enlarged on every side by his son, the first and greatest of the Othos. . . . In the north, christianity was propagated by the sword. . . At the head of a victorious army he passed the Alps, subdued the kingdom of Italy, delivered the Pope, and forever fixed the imperial crown in the name and nation of Germany. From that time or memorable era, two maxims of public jurisprudence were introduced by force, and ratified by time. FIRST. 'That the Prince who was elected in the German Diet acquired, from that instant the subject kingdoms of Italy and Rome.' SECOND. 'But that he might not legally assume the titles of Emperor and Augustus till he had received the crown from the HANDS OF THE ROMAN PONTIFF.'"

The imperial house of Saxony terminated with the death of Henry, A. D. 1024. Prof. Kohlrausch in his History of Germany, page 137, says:—"Henry the Saxon died in the year 1024, aged fifty-two, at his favored Grona in the Liengaw (near Gottingen) which had often been the seat of the Saxon Emperors. On his death the Germanic States, each under its Duke, assembled for the election of a new emperor. They elected Conrad;" and by that act the HOUSE OF FRANCONI became the FOURTH HEAD. Hallam, in his "History of the Middle Ages," page 238, says:—"A general assembly was determined by merit to elect Conrad, surnamed the Salic, a noble man from Franconi." From this Prince sprang three successive Emperors—Henry III, IV, and V. Perhaps the imperial prerogatives over the subordinate confederacy never reached so high a point as in the reign of Henry III., the second emperor of the House of Franconia. This imperial succession terminated with the death of Henry V., of which the same historian says on page 229:—"At his death in 1125 the male line of the Franconian emperors was AT AN END." Please mark this fact. We have found a perfect harmony in the imperial succession thus far connected with the Papacy, the mouthpiece of this leopard beast.

We shall now proceed to notice the next head of this power. The difficulty and hatred between the two parties, Guelfs and Ghibelines, grew so warm shortly after the death of Henry, causing great difficulties in the elective bodies, they elected Lothaire Duke of Saxony in an irregular manner after his death. The historian says (p. 330):—"On the death of Lothaire in 1138, the partisans of the HOUSE OF SWABIA made a hasty and irregular election of Conrad, in which the Saxon found himself obliged to acquiesce." Kohlrausch (p. 159) says:—"Conrad returned after an absence of two years and died shortly afterwards, in the year 1152, at Bamberg. He was a valiant, high-minded and noble-hearted man, and was universally esteemed. He was succeeded by Frederick Barbarossa, Duke of Swabia; of which the same historian says: "he was one of the most powerful of all the German Emperors." He was crowned by the Pope in St. Peter's church in Rome, June 18th, 1855. I therefore consider

THE HOUSE OF SWABIA THE FIFTH HEAD. Proctor's History of Italy says:—"With the extinction of the house of Swabia, the great divisions of Italian faction had entirely lost their original signification and ostensible purposes." Then commenced what is termed the grand interregnum. From Koch the historian, Lon. Ed. p. 71:—"The numerous republics which had sprung up in Italy, in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, were torn to pieces by contending factions, and a prey to mutual and incessant hostilities. What contributed to augment the trouble and confusion in that unhappy country was, that during a long series of years no Emperor had repaired thither in person, or made the smallest attempt to restore imperial authority in those States." For very interesting reminiscences of this gloomy period see Proctor's History of Italy.

It is necessary that I should present some evidence concerning the long period that intervened ere there was a sixth imperial successor. The above historian (p. 55) says:—"From the middle of the thirteenth century, the unhappy divisions of factions which raged without principle or object, had the effect of depriving Italian history of all general and determined connection. For above two hundred years, we shall be at a loss to discover among the numerous States of Italy any moment of common action and union on which it is possible to rest as an epoch in her annals. We are thrown on a wide and tempestuous sea of endless revolution, and bloodshed and crime, and yet these are not the storms of barbarism. The refulgence of intellectual light, the revival of poetry and literature, the dawn and noontide of immortal art play over the troubled scene in strange contrast with its gloomy horrors, with the atrocities of implacable factions, the din of increasing wars, the appalling silence of domestic tragedy."

It is evident from history that there was no imperial protector of the Italian interests in connection with Papacy until the rise of the Sixth Head, which we shall present in our next number.

Save the old Papers.

Do not waste nor burn a single scrap of old paper. The price of printing paper has doubled within about two months. Old newspapers and waste papers, formerly dull at one cent a pound, now sell for four or six cents per pound. We are threatened with a paper panic. We must have paper to print books and tracts on, so now save it all. A hundred pounds of old papers or books will pay for the Crisis for a good while. If each one saves all the pieces of paper, we shall not be destitute at present. Now is the time to clear out the old garrets. Rags are worth twice as much in cash as you used to get for them in tinware. Pick them up and use what you can, and sell the rest. There are rags enough in the hands of the readers of the Crisis to keep one paper a going for a year no doubt. Don't sell the rags you can use or wear. And don't sell old books and papers that are worth more than new ones; be careful about that, for you may have treasures hid in the old napkins.

The Boston Discussion.

"QUESTION.—Do the Scriptures teach that man has a spirit that will be eternally conscious?"

In discussing the foregoing question, Eld. Gates affirmed, and we denied. The following are some of the points in the argument on the negative:—

11. If the spirit is the man, it has the name. But that which has the name is material and mortal; therefore the spirit is not the man, and "eternally conscious." Adam was the name of the first man, who was made "of the dust of the ground." After his creation, he sinned, and died. "And all the days that Adam lived, were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." Gen. 5: 5. Said Job, "If a man die, shall he live again?" We find no intimation of a conscious spirit that survives the death of the man.

12. Man is either wholly mortal, immortal, or partly so. He is not wholly immortal; then he is wholly mortal or partly so. If partly so, which part?—"The body." Which part is immortal?—"The spirit." How can mortality and immortality unite in the same being, at the same time?—No answer. Which is the accountable part?—"The spirit." Which is to be judged, rewarded, or punished?—"The spirit," "the immortal part," we are told. Let us now read a few portions of Scripture, bearing on this point: "This I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets; and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."—Acts 24: 14, 15. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 28, 29. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell [hades] delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were JUDGED, every MAN according to their works."—Rev. 20: 13. The foregoing scriptures for ever settle the matter, that the being who is "JUST" or "UNJUST"; the one who has done the "GOOD" or "EVIL," and is to be "JUDGED," and who is called "MAN," is "DEAD" and in the GRAVE. Now, what shall we do with facts like these, if we assume that the spirit is the accountable being, and never dies? We wait for an answer.

We think no truth in the Bible is plainer than that the being to be judged, rewarded, or punished, is dead between death and the resurrection; hence man has ot an spirit that will be "eternally conscious."

13. If the spirit is the conscious part, it is the intelligent part, which is innocent or guilty. If it is "eternally conscious," it is never unconscious, or without knowledge. He who has the knowledge goes to sheol at death; therefore the guilty or innocent being, or entity, goes there. But that which goes to sheol is unconscious while there; therefore if the spirit is the knowing and conscious part, it is not "eternally" so; hence the Scriptures do not sustain the affirmative of the question. Says the wise man:—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in [sheol] the grave, whither thou goest."—Eccl. 9: 10. No language could make this point plainer, or stronger. Shall we believe it? If the spirit is the man, why is it always in the neuter gender?

14. Man, the accountable being, was either made of dust, or he was not. If not, the record is not true, in Gen. 2: 7—"The Lord God formed MAN of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and MAN became a living soul." As man was made of dust, he must be a material being, and that which is immaterial is no part of him, and cannot be considered as connected with the subject under consideration. It is impossible to make an immaterial being out of material elements. But man was made of material elements, man is conscious, is commanded, sins, repents, dies, is raised, punished or rewarded; hence man, the material being, made "of the dust of the ground," is the ACCOUNTABLE being; therefore the spirit is not the accountable part, and "eternally conscious." Again we come to the conclusion that the affirmative of this question is not sustained by the Scriptures.

15. If the spirit existed before it was united with the body, it must have been mature when it entered the man; or else be developed with the body. If mature when it first entered the man, then it should be as intelligent and effective in the infant, as the man of years; but if it is developed with the body, then it will decay with the same. What are the facts in the case? We know they are in harmony with the latter view. As the child advances in years, he grows physically and intellectually to a certain point; when he begins to decline on account of age. Soon, his memory begins to fail, the keenness of his perceptive faculties is blunted, all his senses become less active; he continues to decline till he becomes as imbecile as a child, both physically and mentally. These facts are in perfect keeping with the idea that thought in man is the result of an active brain; and that when the brain is deranged, the mind is also; and when the brain is weak or inactive, there is a corresponding mental development. We may as well dispute that the sun gives light, as to deny these facts.

As the brain is the organ of thought, it is perfectly natural that a blow on the head may render the person unconscious.

In the revolutionary war, a man on board one of her Majesty's ships, received a fall from the yard-arm, and was picked up insensible, in which state he remained thirteen months; when, by the action of trepanning, "he was at once restored to all the functions of the mind." During the thirteen months "his mind remained in a perfect state of oblivion." Now suppose that, instead of trepanning him, the surgeon had taken a sledge and dashed his brains out; would that have made him conscious also? Where is the Bible, philosophy, or common sense to prove such an absurdity? Echo answers, "where?"

The mind, or thought, is not an entity, or being, or a component part of a being, any more than pain or joy are entities. It is impossible to have pain, unless there is a physical organism. In other words, the pain does not exist by itself, as an entity. The same is true of all the propensities and emotions. Thought cannot be taken out of the man, as a component part of him, any more than time can be taken from the watch. The watch may be as perfect when not keeping time, as when it is in motion; so man may be as perfect when not thinking, or in a state of sound sleep, as when he is charming thousands by his eloquence during his waking hours. As motion and time are not component parts of the watch, which exist as entities either in the watch or out of it; so motion and thought are not personal beings, or entities, either in the living man, or out of him when he is dead. Neither motion, time, thought, pain, love, or hatred, are material; but they cannot exist, excepting in name, unless there are material organisms to produce them. All attributes of beings, and properties of bodies are immaterial, and are manifested only through material agents; but are not in themselves personal entities.

Our Wishes Gratified.

It is always comforting to learn that our prayers are answered; because with them are blended our strongest desires; and when the Lord hears and answers our petitions, we are warranted to believe that we have asked in harmony with his will. From our first connection with the Crisis, it has been our daily prayer that the Lord would assist us to publish a paper that would comfort, strengthen, and edify his children; especially the poor and unlearned, as they constitute the larger portion of those who are trusting in the Savior, and are loving his appearing, and anxiously waiting for his coming. The rich and learned will not humble themselves sufficiently to walk with Jesus.

In order to accomplish the desired object, our paper should be characterized for simplicity and goodness, rather than for learning. In short, we would have its readers feel after its perusal as though they had just finished a pleasing conversation with a dear christian brother, or attended a good prayer meeting where all was sweet harmony, joy and peace.

The following, from one of our readers in Bangor, Me.,—a lonely widow,—is one among many of similar import:—"Why, after perusing its columns, I feel as satisfied as though I had been to a prayer meeting and borne the cross."

When we read such cheering expressions, we say, our wishes are gratified.

We are aware there are some, who, like ourself, enjoy a well-conducted debate, that would like to see controverted points argued pro and con, through the columns of the Crisis; but as soon as it is done, we should not receive any more such sweet gems as the one we have just quoted from the sorrow-stricken widow. The effect would be the same as it would to controvert the same points in a prayer meeting. It at once breaks up the heavenly, devotional feelings, and awakens our combative nature on either side, and then follow contention, strife and ruin.

Let us all do and say those things that make for peace. For this reason, we hope all our excellent contributors will spare no pains to have their articles bathed in prayer and filled with love, that they may enjoy the pleasure of feeding "the flock of God." If you only knew how much comfort such articles afforded the scattered saints, who hear no preaching once in six months, and hardly meet a kindred spirit in the same time; we feel assured that more of your spare moments would be spent in writing words of good cheer. Come, now, send us a short article from your warm heart, and thus comfort thousands. This is an easy way of doing much good at a cheap rate.

We are continually receiving new subscribers, not only from those who are specially identified with the great truths we hold, but from members of other churches, who say, "We like the spirit of your paper." They are first attracted to the honey by its sweetness. Dear brethren and sisters, let us have our paper filled every week with articles like the delicious honey made from white clover blossoms. Let us renew our efforts to do good. It is blessed to be associated with Christ in well doing.

Be Kind.

If you would convince the skeptic of his error, use no unkind words. No rule is more important for a reformer, who would be successful, than to be KIND; hence Satan will try all ways to persuade those who are defenders of the truth, to be harsh and unkind; while he will try to have his supporters show a better spirit. It has been well said, that the truth suffers more from the imprudence of its defenders, than from any other source. If we can be induced to show a "bad spirit," the enemy is quite sure of the victory.

We would most earnestly request all, who write for the Crisis, to use no unkind or disrespectful words against those who differ from us. Use "soft words and hard arguments," and success must attend our efforts. He who has the truth, must expect bitter opposition from its enemies; but all this we can afford to bear for the truth's sake. It is for the glory of the Lord, that we should be kind to all men. It is very grievous to see the great truths of the Bible treated with contempt or perverted to mean something else, and thus poison those who have not examined for themselves; but kindness and patience will conquer where the opposite course will only bring a disgraceful defeat. Be kind, BE KIND.

☞ THANKS to those who have received bills and responded to our request to let us know whether they wished the Crisis continued to their address. Let us hear at once from all the others, that we may know what to do. We think all must see that our request is reasonable. If you can't pay anything now, please say so frankly. If you can pay a part, it will be thankfully received. It costs us considerably more to print the paper now, than ever before. Please do the best you can by us.

Wood and Cotton.

What a multitude of evidence appears at the present time to show that the last days have come. Every shade of the prophetic chart is being brought out in bold relief, so that no student of prophecy can doubt that "the last days" have really come. Among the signs is covetousness. Here is a sample:—

"In a bale of cotton opened at the Perry Mill, Newport, R. I., last week, were found pieces of wood ten inches in diameter, which when placed together showed that they were all sawed from a beech log of eleven feet in length. The whole amount of false weight made by the wood and waste was rising three hundred pounds."

The great mass seem to be bound for perdition, and will not stop to listen to the kind words of the Savior as he invites them to come and receive life. Every thing seems rushing to destruction. Now is the time for christians to stand immovable in the Lord.

THE WAR.—Latest accounts from the army give us bloody reports. The Union forces have crossed the Rappahannock to Fredericksburg, and are having a very severe contest with the rebels. The results are not yet fully known. Many have been killed, including several officers and chaplains.

POULTNEY, VT.—We learn that thirteen have recently been added to the church in Poultney. This is good news. We trust the Lord will continue to bless the faithful labors of Bro. Carpenter.

"Don't impose on the Editor."

The following sensible remarks are from the "Review." When you read them, please substitute "Crisis" for "Review," and they will be applicable to our latitude and longitude:—

"The Review is a good paper: we all know it. And it should be the study of all to help its conductors to make it good. But I hear some reader say, 'I am sorry that such an article, or letter, was published.' Why? 'Because I have no confidence in the writer.' That is bad, indeed; but the Editor does not know him, and it was well written. 'Yes; but it has a bad influence with those who do know him; especially if they are prejudiced against us or our faith.'

Now I have often felt just so, and could heartily wish that the Editor knew everybody. But as he cannot, I will say a few words to those who write for the paper. If you love the Review as you profess to, do be careful and not abuse the privilege granted through its columns. I will tell you just what I mean. Some persons who have not a good standing with the church, who know very well that the brethren have somewhat against them, will write to the Review, regardless of the home influence of their letters, and perhaps excite the sympathy of the Editor and readers, when they themselves know, if they know anything of church relations and duties, that they are not entitled to that sympathy. Such should realize that their letters will be read in their own neighborhood, where their own inconsistencies will cause their letters to be despised. And thus the paper suffers, and the cause is reproached."

Infidelity.

We have never seen a truer picture of the "popular infidelity of the day," than the following. Yet we expect those who have imbibed the poison of this ruinous system, will cry against just such faithful warnings as the one we are about to introduce. Read it carefully. It is but another sign of the times—turning from truth to fables. We expect this infidel theology will spread rapidly among backsliders and worldlings; as it is well adapted to deceive those who are not wholly consecrated to the Lord. It is one of Satan's best efforts to appear as an angel of light. The article is headed:—

"POPULAR INFIDELITY OF THE DAY."

"It is not Atheism I fear so much in the present time as Pantheism. It is not the system which says nothing is true, as the system which says everything is true. It is not the system which says there is no Savior, so much as the system that says there are many saviors, and many ways to peace. It is the system which is so liberal, that it dares not say anything is false. It is the system which seems ready to honor other religions as well as that of our Lord Jesus Christ; to class them all together, and hope well of all those who profess them. It is the system which will smile complacently on all creeds and systems of religion—the Bible and the Koran—the Hindoo Vedas and the Persian Zendavesta—the old wives' fables of Rabbinical writers and the rubbish of Patristic traditions—the Racovian Catechism and the Thirty-nine articles—the revelations of Emanuel Swedenborg and the Book of Mormon or Joseph Smith: all are to be listened to; none are to be denounced as lies. It is the system which is so scrupulous about the feelings of others, that we are never to say they are wrong. It is the system which is so liberal, that it calls a man a bigot if he dares to say, "I know my views are right."

This is the system which I desire emphatically to testify against and denounce. What is it but a sacrificing of truth upon the altar of a caricature of charity? Beware of it, if you believe the Bible. Has the Lord God spoken to us in the Bible, or has he not? Has he shown us the way of salvation plainly in that Bible, or has he not? Has he declared to us the dangerous state of all out of that way, or has he not?

Gird up the loins of your mind and look the questions fairly in the face, and give them an honest answer. Tell us that there is some other inspired book besides the Bible, and then we shall know what you mean. Tell us that the whole Bible is not inspired, and then we shall know where to meet you. But grant for a moment that the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, is God's truth, and then I know not in what way you can escape the conclusion that sincerity alone will not save your soul. From the liberality which says everybody is right—from the charity which forbids you to say anybody is wrong—from the peace which is bought at the expense of truth, may the good Lord deliver you!"—Rev. J. C. Ryle.

The War.

The American war is a terrible reality, and is becoming more and more horrid. The scales between the North and South keep poised about the same as they were eighteen months since. They are exhausting each other, as consumption does its victims till they are beyond the point of recovery. We can see no chance for the re-establishment of the American Union under the old constitution. The great Teacher said:—"Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand."—Matt. 12: 25. No clearer case could occur, as an example, than the present war. The flag rent in pieces is now a fit emblem of our nation. Its cup is apparently full of wickedness, and retribution is advancing with a firm, bold tread.

The following, from the Boston Journal, of Dec. 11th, we think is one of the most sensible articles that we have seen on the war question:—

FALMOUTH, Va, Dec. 8.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

WHY THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC WAITS.

Man proposes, but God disposes. On Thursday last Gen. Burnside issued an order for a rapid movement of Gen. Franklin's grand division in a direction which would have brought it upon one of the flanks of the rebel army. It was to be a quick march of about twenty-eight miles. On Friday he was to make sixteen miles. At daybreak on Friday morning his command broke camp. It was a rainy morning. As the day wore away the temperature decreased. The rain became snow. The roads quickly turned to mortar beds. Each human foot, each animal hoof, each wheel did its part to deepen the mire. The artillery came to a halt. Baggage teams stuck fast. Horses, mules, and men sank in the mire. All day long they toiled, and when night came on the advance had made but nine of the sixteen miles. Weary, wet, chilled, the column came to a halt and bivouacked in the snow storm. At midnight the clouds rolled away, the wind whirled to the northwest, and blew piercing blasts, freezing streams, the ground, and the damp snow. It was a hard night for the camp. Saturday morning dawned, the wind blowing more fiercely, angry clouds sweeping across the sky, and the air so keen, that in the sunniest and most sheltered places the sun refused to thaw the ice and snow. It was impossible to go on. Horses and men were broken down, and so the newly fallen snow, which otherwise might have been that night stained with the life blood of thousands, is still white and pure. If any one asks why the Army of the Potomac has not moved, the answer may be found in the above statement.

Last week I informed you that the signs were hopeful. I saw indications of a movement which has been undertaken, but which has not succeeded, because He who sitteth in the heavens has ordered otherwise.

Is there a feeling of despondency because the plan has failed? I have heard men remark to-day that it was too bad. Are we competent to counsel God? Let us not forget that God is our Sovereign. He is teaching us—leading us—we may not be able to see to what end, and quite likely the end may not be what what we most desire. 'My ways are not your ways,' is His declaration. Possibly in the future we may see that the delay is a great turning point in the history of this nation.

Although the army is at a stand still, the determination to move is unchanged. To-day the weather is intensely cold. The Potomac and Rappahannock are running sheet ice. The creek at Bell Plain is frozen over, preventing the landing of supplies. I do not see any prospect of an immediate change of position. CARLETON.

Gone to Heaven.

According to the Minutes of the Conferences, ten thousand six hundred and twenty-two members of the Methodist Episcopal church have died during the past twelve months. Nearly a thousand a month from this one christian denomination, mostly confined to the loyal States of this country, and generally adults, are transferred from the church militant to the church triumphant. A regiment every month!—Zion's Herald.

We should like the proof that men go to heaven at death. Where is it? Please give us chapter and verse. We read, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in [sheol] the grave, whither THOU goest!" Instead of going to heaven when they die, they go to the grave, where there is no knowledge.

The Waters of Salvation.

To illustrate the glory of God's grace exceeds the power of human language. No tongue can express the height and depth of love divine. Hence all nature is laid under tribute to furnish illustrations which shall show forth the exceeding richness of divine favor. All emblems of strength, of beauty, of loveliness and blessing, combine to portray to the perishing the mercy of God and the love of Jesus Christ.

In the Eastern world, where deserts were numerous, and where springs were few; where on wide and arid wastes travelers panted beneath a burning sun, and suffocated and died; nothing under heaven was more precious than water; nothing more necessary for the support and comfort of mankind. So all through the Scriptures this is seized as a fit emblem to express the blessings which God in his mercy bestows on man. As the hart panteth after the water-brook, so the soul of the believer thirsteth after the living God. And as in the desert Israel drank from the smitten rock, so christians drink from Christ—that spiritual rock which pours forth its floods for them. And the invitations of the gospel tell by such figures as these of the fulness and freeness of divine favor. Standing in the midst of earth's thirsting and perishing ones, the prophet cries, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy." Jesus declared that the water which he should give, would be within the believer a well of water springing up to everlasting life; and that he that believed on him should become a source of blessing to others, so that out of him should flow rivers of living water.

Said one good man while telling of some new experience of God's grace and mercy, "God has dug a well in my heart." So the christian may feel: and though the process of digging may be rough and tedious, yet when the rubbish is cleared away, the rocks dug out, and it may be blasted out, the heart new-fashioned and moulded beneath the power of divine grace, and when God has planted within it that which springs up to everlasting life, well may the christian say, "God has dug a well in my heart—a well that dries not in the hottest sunshine; a well that springs up pure, bright, gushing and perpetual UNTO EVERLASTING LIFE."

Reader, do you know what it is to thirst? Does your heart pant and long for absent comforts, for satisfying joys? Know then, that all this world shall never satiate your strong desire. Know that all earth's comforts will be vain, and all earth's pleasures will but add to your thirsting and to your agony. Know, too, that if you would be satisfied and filled, you must heed the words of Jesus who has said, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteous-

Rev. 17.—"Seven Kings."—No. 3.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space."—Rev. 17: 10.

It is generally conceded that the Greek Emperor Justinian became the first Imperial Protectorate of Papal Rome, which establishes the identity between the two powers. The seven kings above, and the following seven heads of the 13th of Revelation are beyond a doubt identical. "And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority."

Three particulars in the above prophecy claim our attention.

1st. The mouth.

2d. The grant of the dragon.

3d. The ten kings.

First. The mouth. This I consider refers to the Pope of Rome, who became the mouthpiece of the seven successive imperial Roman Catholic Dynasties that supported Papacy, of which we shall speak. The Pope became the mouth to these powers in the sense that Aaron became the mouth of Moses. Ex. 4: 15, 16.—"And thou shalt speak unto him, and put words in his mouth: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do. And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people: and he shall be, even he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him instead of God."

Second. The grant of the dragon. The following extract, from Gibbon's History of Rome, Vol. 111, p. 512, will be sufficient to show the fulfillment of the prophecy: "The unfortunate Augustulus was made the instrument of his own disgrace. He signified his resignation to the Senate, and that assembly, in their last act of obedience to a Roman Prince, still affected the spirit of freedom and the forms of the constitution. An epistle was addressed by their unanimous decree to the Emperor Zeno, who had lately been restored after a short rebellion to the Bysantine (Greek throne.) They solemnly disclaim the necessity, or even the wish, to continue any longer the imperial succession in Italy, since in their opinion the majesty of a sole monarch is sufficient to pervade and protect at the same time both the east and the west. In their own name, and in the name of the people, they consent that the SEAT OF UNIVERSAL EMPIRE shall be transferred from Rome to Constantinople; and they hereby renounce the right of choosing their own master: THE ONLY VESTIGE THAT YET REMAINED OF THE AUTHORITY WHICH HAD GIVEN LAWS TO THE WORLD."

The above settles two points. First, the yielding up of dragon authority, and the Greek Emperor becoming the dominant power. We settle it that the GREEK IS THE FIRST HEAD of the leopard beast. In A. D. 800 there was a separation of the Pope from the eastern empire, and a new empire was founded in the West by CHARLEMAGNE, who is crowned at Rome by the Pope, King of Italy, Germany and France. This constitutes the

FRANKS THE SECOND HEAD of the leopard beast, with the Pope for his mouth. Gibbon, Vol. 5, p. 40, says: "It was after the Nicene Synod, and under the reign of the pious Irene, that the popes consulted the separation of Rome and Italy by the translation of the empire to the less orthodox Charlemagne. By this decisive measure they would finally eradicate the claims of the Greeks. The majesty of Rome would be restored; the Latin churches or christians would be united under a SUPREME HEAD in their ancient metropolis; and the conquerors of the West would receive their crown from the successors of St. Peter. The Roman church would acquire a zealous and respectable advocate. Under the shadow of the Charlemagne power, the Bishop might exercise with honor and safety the government of the city."

After the abdication of Charles the Fat, which terminated the Carlovingian Dynasty, Gibbon says the whole term of seventy-four years may be deemed a vacancy from the abdication of Charles the Fat to the establishment of Otho the First of Saxony, which brings us to consider

THE SAXONS, THE THIRD HEAD. Concerning this power Gibbon says: "Otho was of a noble race of dukes of Saxony. His father, Henry the Fowler, was elected by the suffrage of the nation to save and institute the kingdom of Germany. Its limits were enlarged on every side by his son, the first and greatest of the Othos. . . . In the north christianity was propagated by the sword. . . At the head of a victorious army he passed the Alps, subdued the kingdom of Italy, delivered the Pope, and forever fixed the imperial crown in the name and nation of Germany. From that time or memorable era, two maxims of public jurisprudence were introduced by force, and ratified by time. FIRST. 'That the Prince who was elected in the German Diet acquired from that instant the subject kingdoms of Italy and Rome.' SECOND. 'But that he might not legally assume the titles of Emperor and Augustus till he had received the crown from the HANDS OF THE ROMAN PONTIFF.'"

The imperial house of Saxony terminated with the death of Henry, A. D. 1024. Prof. Kohlrausch in his History of Germany, page 137, says:—"Henry the Saxon died in the year 1024, aged fifty-four, at his favored Grona in the Liengaw (near Gottingen) which had often been the seat of the Saxon Emperors. On his death the Germanic States, each under its Duke, assembled for the election of a new emperor. They elected Conrad;" and by that act the HOUSE OF FRANCONI became the FOURTH HEAD. Hallam, in his "History of the Middle Ages," page 238, says:—"A general assembly was determined by merit to elect Conrad, surnamed the Salic, a noble man from Franconi." From this Prince sprang three successive Emperors—Henry III. IV. and V. Perhaps the imperial prerogatives over the subordinate confederacy never reached so high a point as in the reign of Henry III., the second emperor of the House of Franconia. This imperial succession terminated with the death of Henry V., of which the same historian says on page 229:—"At his death in 1125 the male line of the Franconian emperors was AT AN END." Please mark this fact. We have found a perfect harmony in the imperial succession thus far connected with the Papacy, the mouthpiece of this leopard beast.

We shall now proceed to notice the next head of this power. The difficulty and hatred between the two parties, Guelfs and Ghibelines, grew so warm shortly after the death of Henry, causing great difficulties in the elective bodies, they elected Lothaire Duke of Saxony in an irregular manner after his death. The historian says (p. 330):—"On the death of Lothaire in 1138, the partisans of the HOUSE OF SWABIA made a hasty and irregular election of Conrad, in which the Saxon found himself obliged to acquiesce." Kohlraush (p. 159) says:—"Conrad returned after an absence of two years and died shortly afterwards, in the year 1152, at Bamberg. He was a valiant, high-minded and noble-hearted man, and was universally esteemed. He was succeeded by Frederick Barbarossa, Duke of Swabia; of which the same historian says: "he was one of the most powerful of all the German Emperors." He was crowned by the Pope in St. Peter's church in Rome, June 18th, 1855. I therefore consider

THE HOUSE OF SWABIA THE FIFTH HEAD. Proctor's History of Italy says:—"With the extinction of the house of Swabia, the great divisions of Italian faction had entirely lost their original signification and ostensible purposes." Then commenced what is termed the grand interregnum. From Koch the historian, Lon. Ed. p. 71:—"The numerous republics which had sprung up in Italy, in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, were torn to pieces by contending factions, and a prey to mutual and incessant hostilities. What contributed to augment the trouble and confusion in that unhappy country was, that during a long series of years no Emperor had repaired thither in person, or made the smallest attempt to restore imperial authority in those States." For very interesting reminiscences of this gloomy period see Proctor's History of Italy.

It is necessary that I should present some evidence concerning the long period that intervened ere there was a sixth imperial successor. The above historian (p. 55) says:—"From the middle of the thirteenth century, the unhappy divisions of factions which raged without principle or object, had the effect of depriving Italian history of all general and determined connection. For above two hundred years, we shall be at a loss to discover among the numerous States of Italy any moment of common action and union on which it is possible to rest as an epoch in her annals. We are thrown on a wide and tempestuous sea of endless revolution, and bloodshed and crime, and yet these are not the storms of barbarism. The refulgence of intellectual light, the revival of poetry and literature, the dawn and noontide of immortal art play over the troubled scene in strange contrast with its gloomy horrors, with the atrocities of implacable factions, the din of increasing wars, the appalling silence of domestic tragedy."

It is evident from history that there was no imperial protector of the Italian interests in connection with Papacy until the rise of the Sixth Head, which we shall present in our next number.

Save the old Papers.

Do not waste nor burn a single scrap of old paper. The price of printing paper has doubled within about two months. Old newspapers and waste papers, formerly dull at one cent a pound, now sell for four or six cents per pound. We are threatened with a paper panic. We must have paper to print books and tracts on, so now save it all. A hundred pounds of old papers or books will pay for the Crisis for a good while. If each one saves all the pieces of paper, we shall not be destitute at present. Now is the time to clear out the old garrets. Rags are worth twice as much in cash as you used to get for them in tinware. Pick them up and use what you can, and sell the rest. There are rags enough in the hands of the readers of the Crisis to keep one paper a going for a year no doubt. Don't sell the rags you can use or wear. And don't sell old books and papers that are worth more than new ones; be careful about that, for you may have treasures hid in the old napkins.

Dec. 9th, 1862. H. L. H.

☞ On the 24th ult., in the afternoon, an aerolite passed over Huntendon county, N. J., moving from southwest to northeast, and exploding with a very heavy report which reverberated over the hills and along the valleys for several seconds. The light emitted by this strange visitant was noticed by several persons, and the people generally were much startled by the sudden and terrific explosion.

The Boston Discussion.

"QUESTION.—Do the Scriptures teach that man has a spirit that will be eternally conscious?"

In discussing the foregoing question, Eld. Gates affirmed, and we denied. The following are some of the points in the argument on the negative:—

11. If the spirit is the man, it has the name. But that which has the name is material and mortal; therefore the spirit is not the man, and "eternally conscious." Adam was the name of the first man, who was made "of the dust of the ground." After his creation, he sinned, and died. "And all the days that Adam lived, were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." Gen. 5: 5. Said Job, "If a man die, shall he live again?" We find no intimation of a conscious spirit that survives the death of the man.

12. Man is either wholly mortal, immortal, or partly so. He is not wholly immortal; then he is wholly mortal or partly so. If partly so, which part?—"The body." Which part is immortal?—"The spirit." How can mortality and immortality unite in the same being, at the same time?—No answer. Which is the accountable part?—"The spirit." Which is to be judged, rewarded, or punished?—"The spirit," "the immortal part," we are told. Let us now read a few portions of Scripture, bearing on this point: "This I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets; and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust"—Acts 24: 14, 15. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 28, 29. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell [hades] delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were JUDGED, every MAN according to their works."—Rev. 20: 13. The foregoing scriptures for ever settle the matter, that the being who is "JUST" or "UNJUST"; the one who has done the "GOOD" or "EVIL," and is to be "JUDGED," and who is called "MAN," is "DEAD" and in the GRAVE. Now, what shall we do with facts like these, if we assume that the spirit is the accountable being, and never dies? We wait for an answer.

We think no truth in the Bible is plainer than that the being to be judged, rewarded, or punished, is dead between death and the resurrection; hence man has ot an spirit that will be "eternally conscious."

13. If the spirit is the conscious part, it is the intelligent part, which is innocent or guilty. If it is "eternally conscious," it is never unconscious, or without knowledge. He who has the knowledge goes to sheol at death; therefore the guilty or innocent being, or entity, goes there. But that which goes to sheol is unconscious while there; therefore if the spirit is the knowing and conscious part, it is not "eternally" so; hence the Scriptures do not sustain the affirmative of the question. Says the wise man:—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in [sheol] the grave, whither thou goest."—Eccl. 9: 10. No language could make this point plainer, or stronger. Shall we believe it? If the spirit is the man, why is it always in the neuter gender?

14. Man, the accountable being, was either made of dust, or he was not. If not, the record is not true, in Gen. 2: 7—"The Lord God formed MAN of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and MAN became a living soul." As man was made of dust, he must be a material being, and that which is immaterial is no part of him, and cannot be considered as connected with the subject under consideration. It is impossible to make an immaterial being out of material elements. But man was made of material elements, man is conscious, is commanded, sins, repents, dies, is raised, punished or rewarded; hence man, the material being, made "of the dust of the ground," is the ACCOUNTABLE being; therefore the spirit is not the accountable part, and "eternally conscious." Again we come to the conclusion that the affirmative of this question is not sustained by the Scriptures.

15. If the spirit existed before it was united with the body, it must have been mature when it entered the man; or else be developed with the body. If mature when it first entered the man, then it should be as intelligent and effective in the infant, as the man of years; but if it is developed with the body, then it will decay with the same. What are the facts in the case? We know they are in harmony with the latter view. As the child advances in years, he grows physically and intellectually to a certain point; when he begins to decline on account of age. Soon, his memory begins to fail, the keenness of his perceptive faculties is blunted, all his senses become less active; he continues to decline till he becomes as imbecile as a child, both physically and mentally. These facts are in perfect keeping with the idea that thought in man is the result of an active brain; and that when the brain is deranged, the mind is also; and when the brain is weak or inactive, there is a corresponding mental development. We may as well dispute that the sun gives light, as to deny these facts.

As the brain is the organ of thought, it is perfectly natural that a blow on the head may render the person unconscious.

In the revolutionary war, a man on board one of her Majesty's ships, received a fall from the yard-arm, and was picked up insensible, in which state he remained thirteen months; when, by the action of trepanning, "he was at once restored to all the functions of the mind." During the thirteen months "his mind remained in a perfect state of oblivion." Now suppose that, instead of trepanning him, the surgeon had taken a sledge and dashed his brains out; would that have made him conscious also? Where is the Bible, philosophy, or common sense to prove such an absurdity? Echo answers, "where?"

The mind, or thought, is not an entity, or being, or a component part of a being, any more than pain or joy are entities. It is impossible to have pain, unless there is a physical organism. In other words, the pain does not exist by itself, as an entity. The same is true of all the propensities and emotions. Thought cannot be taken out of the man, as a component part of him, any more than time can be taken from the watch. The watch may be as perfect when not keeping time, as when it is in motion; so man may be as perfect when not thinking, or in a state of sound sleep, as when he is charming thousands by his eloquence during his waking hours. As motion and time are not component parts of the watch, which exist as entities either in the watch or out of it; so motion and thought are not personal beings, or entities, either in the living man, or out of him when he is dead. Neither motion, time, thought, pain, love, or hatred, are material; but they cannot exist, excepting in name, unless there are material organisms to produce them. All attributes of beings, and properties of bodies are immaterial, and are manifested only through material agents; but are not in themselves personal entities.

Our Wishes Gratified.

It is always comforting to learn that our prayers are answered; because with them are blended our strongest desires; and when the Lord hears and answers our petitions, we are warranted to believe that we have asked in harmony with his will. From our first connection with the Crisis, it has been our daily prayer that the Lord would assist us to publish a paper that would comfort, strengthen, and edify his children; especially the poor and unlearned, as they constitute the larger portion of those who are trusting in the Savior, and are loving his appearing, and anxiously waiting for his coming. The rich and learned will not humble themselves sufficiently to walk with Jesus.

In order to accomplish the desired object, our paper should be characterized for simplicity and goodness, rather than for learning. In short, we would have its readers feel after its perusal as though they had just finished a pleasing conversation with a dear christian brother, or attended a good prayer meeting where all was sweet harmony, joy and peace.

The following, from one of our readers in Bangor, Me.,—a lonely widow,—is one among many of similar import:—"Why, after perusing its columns, I feel as satisfied as though I had been to a prayer meeting and borne the cross."

When we read such cheering expressions, we say, our wishes are gratified.

We are aware there are some, who, like ourself, enjoy a well-conducted debate, that would like to see controverted points argued pro and con, through the columns of the Crisis; but as soon as it is done, we should not receive any more such sweet gems as the one we have just quoted from the sorrow-stricken widow. The effect would be the same as it would to controvert the same points in a prayer meeting. It at once breaks up the heavenly, devotional feelings, and awakens our combative nature on either side, and then follow contention, strife and ruin.

Let us all do and say those things that make for peace. For this reason, we hope all our excellent contributors will spare no pains to have their articles bathed in prayer and filled with love, that they may enjoy the pleasure of feeding "the flock of God." If you only knew how much comfort such articles afforded the scattered saints, who hear no preaching once in six months, and hardly meet a kindred spirit in the same time; we feel assured that more of your spare moments would be spent in writing words of good cheer. Come, now, send us a short article from your warm heart, and thus comfort thousands. This is an easy way of doing much good at a cheap rate.

We are continually receiving new subscribers, not only from those who are specially identified with the great truths we hold, but from members of other churches, who say, "We like the spirit of your paper." They are first attracted to the honey by its sweetness. Dear brethren and sisters, let us have our paper filled every week with articles like the delicious honey made from white clover blossoms. Let us renew our efforts to do good. It is blessed to be associated with Christ in well doing.

Be Kind.

If you would convince the skeptic of his error, use no unkind words. No rule is more important for a reformer, who would be successful, than to be KIND; hence Satan will try all ways to persuade those who are defenders of the truth, to be harsh and unkind; while he will try to have his supporters show a better spirit. It has been well said, that the truth suffers more from the imprudence of its defenders, than from any other source. If we can be induced to show a "bad spirit," the enemy is quite sure of the victory.

We would most earnestly request all, who write for the Crisis, to use no unkind or disrespectful words against those who differ from us. Use "soft words and hard arguments," and success must attend our efforts. He who has the truth, must expect bitter opposition from its enemies; but all this we can afford to bear for the truth's sake. It is for the glory of the Lord, that we should be kind to all men. It is very grievous to see the great truths of the Bible treated with contempt or perverted to mean something else, and thus poison those who have not examined for themselves; but kindness and patience will conquer where the opposite course will only bring a disgraceful defeat. Be kind, BE KIND.

☞ THANKS to those who have received bills and responded to our request to let us know whether they wished the Crisis continued to their address. Let us hear at once from all the others, that we may know what to do. We think all must see that our request is reasonable. If you can't pay anything now, please say so frankly. If you can pay a part, it will be thankfully received. It costs us considerably more to print the paper now, than ever before. Please do the best you can by us.

Wood and Cotton.

What a multitude of evidence appears at the present time to show that the last days have come. Every shade of the prophetic chart is being brought out in bold relief, so that no student of prophecy can doubt that "the last days" have really come. Among the signs is covetousness. Here is a sample:—

"In a bale of cotton opened at the Perry Mill, Newport, R. I., last week, were found pieces of wood ten inches in diameter, which when placed together showed that they were all sawed from a beech log of eleven feet in length. The whole amount of false weight made by the wood and waste was rising three hundred pounds."

The great mass seem to be bound for perdition, and will not stop to listen to the kind words of the Savior as he invites them to come and receive life. Every thing seems rushing to destruction. Now is the time for christians to stand immovable in the Lord.

THE WAR.—Latest accounts from the army give us bloody reports. The Union forces have crossed the Rappahannock to Fredericksburg, and are having a very severe contest with the rebels. The results are not yet fully known. Many have been killed, including several officers and chaplains.

POULTNEY, Vt.—We learn that thirteen have recently been added to the church in Poultney. This is good news. We trust the Lord will continue to bless the faithful labors of Bro. Carpenter.

"Don't impose on the Editor."

The following sensible remarks are from the "Review." When you read them, please substitute "Crisis" for "Review," and they will be applicable to our latitude and longitude:—

"The Review is a good paper: we all know it. And it should be the study of all to help its conductors to make it good. But I hear some reader say, 'I am sorry that such an article, or letter, was published.' Why? 'Because I have no confidence in the writer.' That is bad, indeed; but the Editor does not know him, and it was well written. 'Yes; but it has a bad influence with those who do know him; especially if they are prejudiced against us or our faith.'

Now I have often felt just so, and could heartily wish that the Editor knew everybody. But as he cannot, I will say a few words to those who write for the paper. If you love the Review as you profess to, do be careful and not abuse the privilege granted through its columns. I will tell you just what I mean. Some persons who have not a good standing with the church, who know very well that the brethren have somewhat against them, will write to the Review, regardless of the home influence of their letters, and perhaps excite the sympathy of the Editor and readers, when they themselves know, if they know anything of church relations and duties, that they are not entitled to that sympathy. Such should realize that their letters will be read in their own neighborhood, where their own inconsistencies will cause their letters to be despised. And thus the paper suffers, and the cause is reproached."

Infidelity.

We have never seen a truer picture of the "popular infidelity of the day," than the following. Yet we expect those who have imbibed the poison of this ruinous system, will cry against just such faithful warnings as the one we are about to introduce. Read it carefully. It is but another sign of the times—turning from truth to fables. We expect this infidel theology will spread rapidly among backsliders and worldlings; as it is well adapted to deceive those who are not wholly consecrated to the Lord. It is one of Satan's best efforts to appear as an angel of light. The article is headed:—

"POPULAR INFIDELITY OF THE DAY."

"It is not Atheism I fear so much in the present time as Pantheism. It is not the system which says nothing is true, as the system which says everything is true. It is not the system which says there is no Savior, so much as the system that says there are many saviors, and many ways to peace. It is the system which is so liberal, that it dares not say anything is false. It is the system which seems ready to honor other religions as well as that of our Lord Jesus Christ; to class them all together, and hope well of all those who profess them. It is the system which will smile complacently on all creeds and systems of religion—the Bible and the Koran—the Hindoo Vedas and the Persian Zendavesta—the old wives' fables of Rabbinical writers and the rubbish of Patristic traditions—the Racovian Catechism and the Thirty-nine articles—the revelations of Emanuel Swedenborg and the Book of Mormon or Joseph Smith: all are to be listened to; none are to be denounced as lies. It is the system which is so scrupulous about the feelings of others, that we are never to say they are wrong. It is the system which is so liberal, that it calls a man a bigot if he dares to say, "I know my views are right."

This is the system which I desire emphatically to testify against and denounce. What is it but a sacrificing of truth upon the altar of a caricature of charity? Beware of it, if you believe the Bible. Has the Lord God spoken to us in the Bible, or has he not? Has he shown us the way of salvation plainly in that Bible, or has he not? Has he declared to us the dangerous state of all out of that way, or has he not?

Gird up the loins of your mind and look the questions fairly in the face, and give them an honest answer. Tell us that there is some other inspired book besides the Bible, and then we shall know what you mean. Tell us that the whole Bible is not inspired, and then we shall know where to meet you. But grant for a moment that the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, is God's truth, and then I know not in what way you can escape the conclusion that sincerity alone will not save your soul. From the liberality which says everybody is right—from the charity which forbids you to say anybody is wrong—from the peace which is bought at the expense of truth, may the good Lord deliver you!"—Rev. J. C. Ryle.

The War.

The American war is a terrible reality, and is becoming more and more horrid. The scales between the North and South keep poised about the same as they were eighteen months since. They are exhausting each other, as consumption does its victims till they are beyond the point of recovery. We can see no chance for the re-establishment of the American Union under the old constitution. The great Teacher said:—"Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand."—Matt. 12: 25. No clearer case could occur, as an example, than the present war. The flag rent in pieces is now a fit emblem of our nation. Its cup is apparently full of wickedness, and retribution is advancing with a firm, bold tread.

The following, from the Boston Journal, of Dec. 11th, we think is one of the most sensible articles that we have seen on the war question:—

FALMOUTH, Va, Dec. 8.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

WHY THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC WAITS.

Man proposes, but God disposes. On Thursday last Gen. Burnside issued an order for a rapid movement of Gen. Franklin's grand division in a direction which would have brought it upon one of the flanks of the rebel army. It was to be a quick march of about twenty-eight miles. On Friday he was to make sixteen miles. At daybreak on Friday morning his command broke camp. It was a rainy morning. As the day wore away the temperature decreased. The rain became snow. The roads quickly turned to mortar beds. Each human foot, each animal hoof, each wheel did its part to deepen the mire. The artillery came to a halt. Baggage teams stuck fast. Horses, mules, and men sank in the mire. All day long they toiled, and when night came on the advance had made but nine of the sixteen miles. Weary, wet, chilled, the column came to a halt and bivouacked in the snow storm. At midnight the clouds rolled away, the wind whirled to the northwest, and blew piercing blasts, freezing streams, the ground, and the damp snow. It was a hard night for the camp. Saturday morning dawned, the wind blowing more fiercely, angry clouds sweeping across the sky, and the air so keen, that in the sunniest and most sheltered places the sun refused to thaw the ice and snow. It was impossible to go on. Horses and men were broken down, and so the newly fallen snow, which otherwise might have been that night stained with the life blood of thousands, is still white and pure. If any one asks why the Army of the Potomac has not moved, the answer may be found in the above statement.

Last week I informed you that the signs were hopeful. I saw indications of a movement which has been undertaken, but which has not succeeded, because He who sitteth in the heavens has ordered otherwise.

Is there a feeling of despondency because the plan has failed? I have heard men remark to-day that it was too bad. Are we competent to counsel God? Let us not forget that God is our Sovereign. He is teaching us—leading us—we may not be able to see to what end, and quite likely the end may not be what what we most desire. 'My ways are not your ways,' is His declaration. Possibly in the future we may see that the delay is a great turning point in the history of this nation.

Although the army is at a stand still, the determination to move is unchanged. To-day the weather is intensely cold. The Potomac and Rappahannock are running sheet ice. The creek at Bell Plain is frozen over, preventing the landing of supplies. I do not see any prospect of an immediate change of position. CARLETON.

Gone to Heaven.

According to the Minutes of the Conferences, ten thousand six hundred and twenty-two members of the Methodist Episcopal church have died during the past twelve months. Nearly a thousand a month from this one christian denomination, mostly confined to the loyal States of this country, and generally adults, are transferred from the church militant to the church triumphant. A regiment every month!—Zion's Herald.

We should like the proof that men go to heaven at death. Where is it? Please give us chapter and verse. We read, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in [sheol] the grave, whither THOU goest!" Instead of going to heaven when they die, they go to the grave, where there is no knowledge.

For the Crisis.

The Waters of Salvation.

To illustrate the glory of God's grace exceeds the power of human language. No tongue can express the height and depth of love divine. Hence all nature is laid under tribute to furnish illustrations which shall show forth the exceeding richness of divine favor. All emblems of strength, of beauty, of loveliness and blessing, combine to portray to the perishing the mercy of God and the love of Jesus Christ.

In the Eastern world, where deserts were numerous, and where springs were few; where on wide and arid wastes travelers panted beneath a burning sun, and suffocated and died; nothing under heaven was more precious than water; nothing more necessary for the support and comfort of mankind. So all through the Scriptures this is seized as a fit emblem to express the blessings which God in his mercy bestows on man. As the hart panteth after the water-brook, so the soul of the believer thirsteth after the living God. And as in the desert Israel drank from the smitten rock, so christians drink from Christ—that spiritual rock which pours forth its floods for them. And the invitations of the gospel tell by such figures as these of the fulness and freeness of divine favor. Standing in the midst of earth's thirsting and perishing ones, the prophet cries, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy." Jesus declared that the water which he should give, would be within the believer a well of water springing up to everlasting life; and that he that believed on him should become a source of blessing to others, so that out of him should flow rivers of living water.

Said one good man while telling of some new experience of God's grace and mercy, "God has dug a well in my heart." So the christian may feel: and though the process of digging may be rough and tedious, yet when the rubbish is cleared away, the rocks dug out, and it may be blasted out, the heart new-fashioned and moulded beneath the power of divine grace, and when God has planted within it that which springs up to everlasting life, well may the christian say, "God has dug a well in my heart—a well that dries not in the hottest sunshine; a well that springs up pure, bright, gushing and perpetual UNTO EVERLASTING LIFE."

Reader, do you know what it is to thirst? Does your heart pant and long for absent comforts, for satisfying joys? Know then, that all this world shall never satiate your strong desire. Know that all earth's comforts will be vain, and all earth's pleasures will but add to your thirsting and to your agony. Know, too, that if you would be satisfied and filled, you must heed the words of Jesus who has said, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." Such—and such only—shall find satisfaction, shall have all their wants supplied, their longings satiated.

To you Christ calls, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." To each of you who weary yourselves among life's shattered potsherds and broken cisterns, he says, "If thou knewest the gift of God, . . . thou wouldst have asked" of me, and I "would have given thee LIVING WATER." To you his voice still sounds in words of the gentlest love, inviting you to come and be satisfied. "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come: and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." This, O mortal, is thy Savior's invitation. Hear it, heed it, and receive the blessings of God which are poured in living floods. Look up and claim the promise made to thirsting souls: "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground." Receive the blessings which Christ so freely offers, break up your fallow-ground, for it is time to seek the Lord till he come and reign righteousness upon you. So, having drank of the water that Jesus giveth thee, press forward to those living streams that never fail, those floods that gush from the eternal throne, those streams that make glad the city of our God. There may you drink of "the water of life FREELY," and joyfully draw water from the wells of salvation.

H. L. HASTINGS.

Correspondence.

From Sr. N. M. Henry.

BRO. GRANT:—After repeated solicitations, and inquiries of "Why don't you write for the Crisis?" I concluded to once more take up the pen, to chat with the many readers of our little "household dove," that comes with its "olive leaf" and its words of good cheer, encouragement, warning and profit every week.

But before I commenced to write, I threw aside my work, put baby in her cradle,—(by the way, dear readers, a little "household dove" of another kind has folded her pretty wings and nestled down at our fireside, claiming our love and protection),—donned "shaker" and shawl, then bent my steps toward that common resort, the Post Office, wondering what I should get, and commenting in my own mind on the various persons I met on the way, as I turned street after street, hurrying from the office, some in a hurry as though great events hung upon their expedition. Here comes one with a letter with the Army mark on it. Wish I knew if it had good news; the bad I don't want to know. There is one reading the morning paper. He is an acquaintance. "Good morning, Mr. ——; anything of importance in the paper?" "No, nothing important,—only skirmishing, killing a few hundred."

I passed on. Nothing important! only a few hundred killed! But the "pomp and circumstance of glorious war" does not hide, with all its brass and show, the forms of weeping wives, the gray-haired old father and mother made childless, who, like the vine when its strong support is taken violently from it quivers in its agony and and helplessness like a "thing of life," then sinks unsupported to the ground. So with the old father and mother, who moan out with the bitterness of heart which King David felt. Although success attended his arms, yet he cries over his godless son—"Would God I had died for thee, my son! my son!" Then the children made fatherless. Maidens with crushed hearts and hopes. The poor boys themselves, as they feel that death is their portion and the end of their high aspirations; as thoughts perchance recur of the old home, the fond wife that would gladly pillow that bleeding head, and kiss the clammy brow,—visions of the darling baby, who will never know what its father dared for its sake, or the love of that father for his precious little one,—and the dear, dear mother and kind father who bade him go—or perchance of "the girl he left behind him." Then he thinks of the cool spring as he begs for water. Poor boys! God pity you!

We have reached the "office," and the first thing that meets our eyes is the sight of several goodly bundles of tracts and books from dear old Boston. I started eagerly for home,—found among the rest two of Bro. Hastings' "Reasons for my Hope," and good reasons they are too. Already they are gone; one to a deacon, the other to the pastor of the Congregational church—"good men and true." A Baptist minister said that "it was the best book he ever read but the Bible." I was glad to see some of Bro. Grant's books. One gentleman told me who has embraced our views, "I argue with them as far as I can go; then I bring on Miles Grant, and he finishes them." Some of them that I sold in a city forty miles from Alton, strayed to that city, and have been the means of awakening an interest there; and an invitation has been sent me to come to Alton to preach. Another sett (I sell four for a sett) fell into the hands of a Presbyterian deacon, at a town ten miles from here, where our doctrines have never been preached. The result is, an offer of a place to preach, and an earnest invitation to come at an early day. Another sett has fallen into the hands of a Methodist preacher. I heard last night that he was reading them with much interest.

I have at present invitations from nine new places, large towns all of them; and soldiers write me from the camps for books. I send all I get, even to my back numbers of the Crisis. Thanks at present, with the promise to do all the good I can with them, are all I can do for the Society. The truth is spreading.

Bro. Sheldon's sermons on Sunday I hear from every where I go. The subjects were, the kingdoms of this world, the great Image of Daniel, and the destiny of the wicked. People that heard him think there never was his equal. God bless his efforts.

From Sr. Lucy M. Ward.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I became interested in the second coming of Christ in 1838. I have been poor and not able to buy books nor take the paper; but I have desired to know all about God's word concerning this precious doctrine; and can say that God has not turned me away empty, because I had no means to buy. He has surely heard my prayers and blessed me with books and papers for the most part of the time since 1843, for which I most sincerely bless and thank him. I can testify to all, that God will help every one that comes to him, and desires to understand his word. I love the Bible; I love the coming of Jesus, and I love to read about it—it is my constant theme. I love to read the letters, from those of like precious faith, in the Crisis. My heart is with them, although I cannot see them, nor hear preaching such as I love.

And now, beloved in the Lord Jesus that love his coming and have been waiting for the same, lift up your heads and rejoice; for our redemption is surely nigh. God loves his children at this age, just as well as he ever has, and will surely take care of them in this time of trouble, which he has told us about in the book of Daniel. And Jesus has told us about it also; for it is a time of "distress of nations with perplexity." God will set his Son upon his holy hill of Zion very soon. The nations are angry, and his wrath will soon come. O! thanks be to God for giving us waymarks, so that we can know where we are. That day will not overtake us as a thief. God grant in great mercy to strengthen his own children at this time, is my prayer. I hope soon to see all, both black and white, that love Jesus. For it will not be long before the trumpet will sound, and the clouds will reveal our King. Yours in the faith.

Obituary Notice.

Died, in Charlestown, Mass., Dec. 9th, ALFRED, son of Alfred and Annie E James, aged five years and ten months.

Alfred was a lovely child, strongly bound in parental affection. In religious character, he was much in advance of his age. He loved the Savior, loved to pray, and talk of good things. We think a proper inscription on his tombstone would be one like what Prof. J. Delassney found in the catacombs of Rome:—"HERE SLEEPS—FIVE YEARS OLD—GOD'S LITTLE LAMB."

[Funeral attended by the Editor.

Fell asleep in Jesus at North Searsport, Me., Nov. 20th, 1862, EDWIN K., only son of Benjamin and Elonia Tripp, in the twenty-seventh year of his age.

He died in the full hope and expectation of soon hearing the beloved voice of his coming Savior calling him forth to life. An appropriate discourse was delivered by Eld. J. Hemenway, from the soul-stirring words of Jesus—"I am the resurrection and the life."

BENJAMIN TRIPP.

Died in Stanbridge, C E., Aug. 4th, 1862, of malignant scarlet fever, HERMON, son of Reuben and Sarah Corey, aged five months and fifteen days.

Thus death, as an insatiate conqueror, bears away the loved gems of earth to hades' drear solitude, to await the morn of rising triumph, when Jesus who "is our life shall appear," and ransom death's sleepers from the dominion of the grave. The fond parents were comforted by this sure prospect by the writer.

C. P. DOW.

Died, in Honeoye, N. Y., Nov. 14th, 1862, of membraneous croup, ANNIE M., daughter of Stephen and Sarah Cornell, in the third year of her age.

Also in Honeoye, N. Y., Nov. 16th, 1862, of quick consumption, Sister MARY BECKER, wife of Allen Becker, aged thirty-five years.

A large circle of friends mourn her loss, but as she died in the faith and hope of the gospel, we expect she will awake in the morning of the resurrection in the likeness of Christ.

Both these funerals were attended by the writer.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Liverpool, Nov. 29th, Queenstown, 30th.

The Times thinks that Prince Nicholas, the youngest brother of the King of Sweden, will be elected to the Greek throne.

The Prince of Wales will be married in April next.

A Liverpool paper says:—"The ball has been extracted from the leg or the foot of Garibaldi, not by an English but by a French surgeon, and the Italian hero is now in a fair way of recovery. It is not complimentary to our surgical skill that a professional man was dispatched with great pretension from this country at an enormous cost, defrayed by public subscription, who declared that the ball was not in the foot or the leg at all."

ITALY.

The Chambers continued to debate the Roman question. Among other propositions was one that the Parliamentary session for 1863 should be held at Naples.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Arkansas, Dec. 8. Gen. Herron's force, while en route to reinforce Gen. Blunt, met the enemy yesterday on Crawford's Prairie, ten miles south of Fayetteville and won a decisive victory. The enemy were 24,000 strong, divided into four divisions, under Gens. Parsons, Marmaduke, and Rains, all under Gen. Hindman, and embraced the flower of the rebel trans-Mississippi army, well supplied with eighteen pieces of artillery. The enemy flanked Gen. Blunt's position at Cane Hill, and made a sudden attack on Gen. Herron's forces to prevent them from uniting with Gen. Blunt.

Gen. Herron's forces consisted of the 14th and 31st Illinois, 19th and 20th Iowa, 26th Indiana, 20th Wisconsin and a battalion or two of cavalry, in all 6500 or 7000 men and 24 pieces of artillery.

The battle raged from 10 A. M. until dark, and was desperately fought throughout. Our artillery drove the rebels from two strong positions and kept their overwhelming numbers at bay. The 20th Wisconsin captured a rebel battery of four heavy guns, but were forced to abandon them under a murderous fire. The 19th Iowa also took the same battery and fought most desperately, but were also obliged to yield it. Almost every regiment distinguished itself.

About 4 o'clock Gen. Blunt arrived from Cave Hill with 5000 men and a strong force of artillery, and attacked the rebels in the rear. The rebels made desperate efforts to capture his batteries, but were repulsed with terrible slaughter.

We held the whole field at dark, and before 9 o'clock that night the entire rebel force were in full retreat over Boston Mountains. Our entire loss in killed and wounded was 600. The rebel loss was 1500 by their own admission.

Several of the rebel officers were killed, among them Col. Stein, commanding a brigade, and formerly a Brigadier of the Missouri State Guard. Only a few prisoners were taken.

We captured four caissons filled with ammunition.

Lieut. Col. McFarland, of the 19th Iowa Regiment, was the only field officer killed on our side. Major Hubbard, of the 1st Missouri cavalry was taken prisoner.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 9. Three thousand rebel cavalry, supposed to be under Forrest, intending to make another raid into Kentucky or a dash on Fort Donelson, were at Clarksville to-day.

Washington, Dec. 9. Our relations with France are the prominent topic of conversation here, and many anticipate trouble with our Gallic friends.

An American residing in London writes to the Rochester Union and Advertiser that "he knows that no less than eighteen iron-clad steamers, some of them formidable monsters of the deep, are being built in England and France for the rebels. Some of these vessels are nearly finished, and will be launched and abroad doing their work of destruction before the New Year."

Washington, Dec. 14. The fighting yesterday at Fredericksburg was desperate.

A Washington dispatch dated Sunday, says that the fight was so variable up to half-past one o'clock yesterday afternoon, that it was not known which side had advantage. This state of things continued until nightfall, the enemy, who left their intrenchments to meet us, making the most desperate resistance.

It is estimated that 40,000 of our glorious and gallant army were engaged in the bloody work of the day, trying to take the first ridge back of the town, on which the rebels' first lines of works were situated, which, until late in the day, it seemed impossible to do; but it is reported that the perseverance and the unflinching courage of the army at last prevailed. Just before darkness put a stop to the day's battle, success crowned their efforts; thus they took the whole ridge from in front of the town down to Franklin's position, three miles below.

A Washington dispatch to the Herald says, We learn from an old army officer, who scanned the rebel works behind Fredericksburg closely with a powerful glass, that there are six distinct lines of works.

Stonewall Jackson occupied the right wing, Longstreet the centre, Gen. Lee and Stuart the left, while Gen. A. P. Hill's corps acted as the reserve.

The entire rebel force was estimated at 200,000 men, and occupied a front of not less than twenty miles. The troops were for the most part veterans who had fought through the peninsula campaign, while the officers were the ablest the South could produce.

Along the whole line the battle has been fierce all day, with great loss on both sides. To-night each army holds its first position, except a slight advance on our left.

The enemy contested every foot of ground, and it was only by the hardest kind of fighting that he would be compelled to change his position.

Among the bodies brought to the government embalmers in this city was that of Rev. Arthur B. Fuller, Chaplain of the 16th Mass. Regiment, who was one of the volunteers who crossed to Fredericksburg in boats to disperse the rebel sharpshooters. He was shot through the right side, above the hip. Also the body of Capt. Chas. F. Cabot, of the 20th Mass. Regiment, who was shot through the head.

New York. Dec. 15. A Fortress Monroe letter states that Plymouth N. C., has been destroyed by fire, but by what division of the Federal army is not known.

Washington, Dec. 15. Last night, about 8 o'clock, the rebel cavalry under Major White, made a raid into Poolesville, and captured 17 of the Federal troops.

THE PIRATE ALABAMA. Mr. Henry A. Lewis, who was a passenger on board the ill fated T. B. Wales, communicates the following to the editor of the New Bedford Mercury:

"The engines of the Alabama are below the water line, and her magazine is below that. She is a fast vessel, has six boilers, and Semmes states that, 'rather than be captured, he will blow up the Alabama, and all hands go to hell together.' He also states that he started for Boston harbor, but a storm delayed him and he got short of coal. He was going in during the night, and out again before morning. They receive letters regularly, touching at certain points to get them. They have agents in Liverpool, to whom they send orders. The citizens of Martinique were very glad to see them, and were very familiar."

Under date of Thursday, the New York Post's Washington correspondent says:

"There is great confidence felt here generally in Burnside's ability to conduct a great battle, but the anxiety is intense, as it is felt that the issues are tremendous.

Advices from Demarara report a slave insurrection in Surinam.

☞ Immense supplies are being made from day to day for the supply of the army with the munitions of war. The Ordnance Department have contracts for the year 1863 for 750,000 small arms. Eight hundred muskets are turned out daily at the Springfield Arsenal, and the Government claims that these are the best muskets in the world.

SMALL POX IN RICHMOND, VA.—The Examiner of last Friday says that the small pox has broken out most pestilentially in Richmond, and a number of citizens have died, and others are now laboring under this terrible disease. In the hospitals there have been 146 cases, and the disease is spreading into all parts of the city. Consternation is great in consequence.

☞ In one week recently—the storm week as it is called—nearly nine hundred vessels were wrecked on the coast of England. What a commerce that must be which can afford to give so much of its life to the sea, and yet retain its vigor!

New York, Dec. 10. The steamship Creole, which arrived last night from New Orleans, touched at Havana on the 4th inst. She brings later intelligence from Mexico. The French occupied Tampico on the 22d ult. without opposition. The government soldiers and officials retired into the country. The fort in the harbor and the fortifications on shore had been previously dismantled and the cannon sent up the river. The French sent a gunboat in pursuit, which, at last accounts, had not been heard from.

The foreign Consuls had obtained a promise of the French Admiral that order should be preserved in the city. Gen. Forey is said to have put in motion a part of his forces toward Puebla, but is delayed in the movement for want of transportation. In the meantime the work on the fortifications of Puebla continues, and the French, when they do advance there, will no doubt be met with a warm reception.

Private advices from Meixco state that the French army cannot leave its present position for want of transportation, and that orders have been sent to New York for the purchase, in the United States, of 1000 mules, with the requisite harnesses and 500 wagons.

☞ Those who are interested in naval warfare in Washington, are much excited with respect to a new invention of First Assistant Engineer James Whittaker, which, it is said, will destroy the most impregnable of iron-clad ships yet constructed, with as much ease as a five hundred pound shot would a wooden vessel. The apparatus is now under trial by permission of the Secretary of the Navy, who, it is reported, has given liberty to place the apparatus on board the iron-clad war steamer Osark, building on the Ohio. No one knows what the invention is like—whether it is a gun, projectile or ram—but even the wisest men in the service, it is asserted, do not doubt that its effect on naval matters will be of the most revolutionary character.

☞ Persons living in the lower counties of Maryland say that the slaves are becoming very restive, in view of the near approach of the first of January, when they expect to become free under the President's emancipation proclamation. The fact that such an edict has gone forth, is known to every negro in lower Maryland. Considerable trepidation exists among the whites.

It is feared that thousands of blacks and whites will starve in Louisiana and Mississippi this winter, provisions are so high and so scarce.

THE TAX LAW.—A Washington dispatch says the Committee on Ways and Means has already set to work to amend the tax law.

Married.

In Stanbridge, C. E., Oct. 26th, 1862, by ELD. CHAS. P. DOW, MR. CLARK H. HASTINGS, of St. Armand, C. E., to Miss MARIA, second daughter of DEA. HARVEY SMITH, of Stanbridge, C. E.

"Now this is the sum of the matter
If ye will be happy in marriage,
Confide, love, and be patient;
Be faithful, firm, and holy."

Notices, &c.

Notice.

I would inform my friends that the work on the KINGDOM OF GOD and THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES is now in the printer's hands, and will be ready for distribution, probably, by the 1st of Jan. I am desirous of issuing a Tract on the Four GREAT MONARCHIES, that I have written by request. It is ready for the press. It will contain considerable historical information, an exposition of Dan. 11: 44, the Ten-Toe Kingdoms, and the Ten Kings of Rev 17. This little work will be illustrated with wood cuts. I cannot tell exactly what the price of either will be, but will give due notice.

I wish to say to my friends, I desire your assistance. Send in your orders, with the money, and where, and how the books must be sent. Come, dear brethren and sisters, if we ever make sacrifice, it must be now. Every thing portends that the Judge is at the door. I thank kind friends for help thus far afforded me, but I have not received one half of what I need. Who will help me? who? My address is S. S. BREWER, South Glastenbury, Conn.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference in Corinna, to commence Jan. 1st, and continue over the following Sabbath. Brn. York and Read are expected to be present to preach the word. Other brethren are invited to come, and we hope Bro. J. Hemenway will come with his northern army. Come, brethren, one and all, to this feast. We intend it to be a free meeting, and wholly for the worship of God. It is a good time with us now. I have baptized thirteen, and expect to plant as many more soon. The war of God is going on in this vicinity, and it will prosper under the preaching of present truth. I expect to meet Bro. York in Bradley, Dec. 26th.

JOHN BILLINGS.

Notice.

There will be a meeting in Cornville, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 25th, '62, to continue over the Sabbath. Brethren and sisters, we feel very anxious that this meeting may prove a blessing to the people in this place, and we cordially invite both preachers and private brethren, who have the cause of God at heart, to come in and labor with us. Please call on me for entertainment.

CHAS. STRATTON.

Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held at Rome, commencing Thursday, January 1st. Brethren can call upon Brn. Martin, Watson, and Howard. It is to be hoped that there will be a good delegation of brethren from abroad, who will work for God.

H. B. SEVEY, Chairman,
H. G. SMILEY, Secretary.

No. Sidney, Me.

Praise for Affliction.

For what shall I praise thee, my God and my King?
For what blessings the tribute of gratitude bring?
Shall I praise thee for pleasure, for health and for ease?
For the spring of delight, and the sunshine of peace?

Shall I praise thee for flowers that bloomed in my breast?
For joys in perspective and pleasures possessed?
For the spirits that heightened my days of delight,
And the slumbers that sat on my pillow by night?

For this would I praise thee; but if only for this,
I should leave half untold the donation of bliss.
I thank thee for sickness, for sorrow, for care,
For the thorns I have gathered, the anguish I bear;

For nights of anxieties, watchings, and tears;
A present of pain, a perspective of fears.
I praise thee, I bless thee, my King and my God,
For the good and the evil thy hand hath bestowed.

The flowers were sweet, but their fragrance is flown,
They yielded no fruits, they are withered and gone;
The thorn it was poignant, but precious to me,—
'Twas the message of mercy, it led me to Thee.

Spiritualism.—No. 3.

We hear much said by the opponents of Christianity about the blind adherence of christians to their creeds, the proscriptive spirit they manifest toward outsiders, and their lack of candid, thoughtful investigation on questions which seem to conflict with their preconceived notions. It is also said that christians are no better than any one else; and so it is inferred that christianity is no better than any other system of religion. These charges are all too true in individual cases, but the inferences drawn therefrom are not legitimate, and are far from being correct. These failings of christians may have a mighty influence to darken the minds of sinners, and even cause the destruction of precious souls, thereby giving occasion for the truth of God to be evil spoken of; but amid it all, the Rock on which the church is built stands unharmed, untouched. Men attack the abuses of christianity, and imagine that they are overturning the whole thing; when lo! there it stands, grand and godlike as ever; only a little rubbish swept off.

Throw sand into a watch, and it stops. Who is to be blamed; the watch, the watchmaker, or yourself? Give the watch a fair chance, then you may decide upon its merits. Certain conditions are requisite to its successful operation: if they are not given, whose fault is it? So christianity demands certain conditions, and then promises certain results. It requires that men shall obey its precepts; otherwise, there is no promise of good results. If men profess to obey and do not, who is to blame?

"But if the Bible were from God, we would obey it." How do you know? Does the knowledge of a father's wishes, however good and wise that father may be, always secure obedience on the part of the child? Is the same true of subjects and rulers? Is it true of those laws which men discover in nature? Does the terrible penalty that hangs over the offender always produce the effect desired? Does it deter from sin? Do not men constantly sin and suffer with their eyes open? or do they generally profit as much as they should by experience? All know this is so, but who knows WHY? Man is a strange being, and we may well be careful how we impugn the truth of the Bible because all the intricacies of human nature are not unravelled therein. The Bible admits the facts, and proposes a remedy: no more. If the remedy is not applied, and men perish, whose fault is it? If they pretend to apply it, and do not, and consequently become dwarfed and deformed instead of beautified and ennobled, whose fault is that? So, if pretended christians are bigots, fanatics, sinners,—how does that affect the intrinsic worth of christianity? We appeal to the Bible, however faulty may be our life, and while we know that many times our own conduct will be condemned by the Standard, we have no fear that our ROCK will be shaken.

Spiritualism, on the contrary, has no fixed standard. Indeed, it is the boast of the mediums and lecturers that they have grown away from the Bible,—have no further necessity for creeds and confessions. Questions of right and wrong (among those who admit there are any moral distinctions) are usually decided by an appeal to "Nature's laws." The great difficulty, however, is to find out with certainty what those laws are. The spirits, mediums, and public teachers, differ widely at times as to the nature and bearing of those "laws." "Who shall decide when doctors disagree?"

Notwithstanding this difference of opinion, if we take the mass of spirit utterances, we shall find that on most points of theory and practice, there is a general agreement. During the early developments of the system there was less of this. There were then Methodist spirits, Baptist spirits, Swedenborgian spirits, Universalist spirits, Deistical spirits, and Atheistical spirits. This is true now in some parts of the world where the prejudice of the people and the secular power are on the side of the prevailing religion. But now, as men generally have "progressed" so far that they can receive "higher truths," so spirit teachings are more harmonious. As far as can be told from the teachings of the spirits, and the movements of the leaders, there seems to be a process of solidification going on. Heretofore, when any doctrine or practice of individuals in their ranks has been denounced, some one holding a contrary view would rush to the rescue with —"Spiritualism does not teach that." It has been a very difficult thing to touch. That game is about up. It will not be long before we shall know where to find them. It will all be plain enough when the people have "progressed" a little further.

With Christianity it is far different. The Standard has been fixed for ages; and all that Biblical criticism amounts to now is to discover the true meaning of our chart, and not to increase or diminish aught contained therein. Some may think that its obscurity destroys its value. Admitted that many places are difficult to understand; yet in all those things which are essential,—those things which distinguish the Bible from all other books,—those things which make it precious above all other earthly possessions;—on these points there is shed such a flood of light that no one who examines them candidly can be in the dark as to what is meant. And all the "various readings" and "errors" of which so much is said, are of no importance when thoroughly understood. The pathway to ETERNAL LIFE is made as bright as day; and all the blunders of ignorant and interested transcribers and translators have not and will not dim the glory. Of course if Spiritualism is founded upon error, the superstructure must be faulty. The doctrine of the soul's immortality is the foundation (whatever may be said to the contrary); and if that be a lie, what may we expect the deductions made therefrom will be? And is there any way by which we may determine what those deductions are? The only way it can be done (if the above remarks are correct) is by the weight of evidence. Take the whole thing, theory and practice, mass it, and the general tendencies of the system will be readily discovered.

In my next I shall endeavor to present the Creed of Spiritualism, as determined by this method; and which I presume few will deny to be a correct statement of the doctrines taught, believed, and reduced to practice. E. P. WOODWARD.

The Better Land.

Among all nations, from the remotest times, man has looked forward with eager longing to a better land—a land of perfect bliss. The Indians of North America had a vague notion of a sunset land—a beautiful Paradise far in the west; mountains and forests filled with deer, rivers and lakes swarming with fishes—the happy hunting ground. We naturally enough transfer to our ideas of heaven whatever we love and reverence on earth. Thither the Catholic carries in his fancy the imposing rights and time-honored solemnities of his worship. There the Methodist sees his love feasts and camp meetings in the groves and by the still waters and green pastures of the blessed abode. The Quaker in the stillness of his self-communion remembers there was "silence in heaven." The Churchman, listening to the solemn chant of vocal music or the deep tones of the organ, thinks of the songs of the Elders and the golden harps of the New Jerusalem. The heaven of the northern nations of Europe has a gross and sensual reflection of the earthly life of a barbarous and brutal people.

That godly man, Dr. Nelson, of Missouri, was one who while on earth seemed to live a higher life in the contemplation of Infinite purity and happiness. A friend relates an incident concerning him which illustrates his high and holy thoughts. They had been travelling through a summer's forenoon on the wide prairie, and had lain down to rest beneath a solitary tree. The Doctor lay for a long time silently looking upward through the openings of the boughs into the still arching heavens, when he repeated the following lines in a low voice, as if communing with himself:—

"O! the joys that are there, mortal eye hath not seen;
O! the song they sing there, with hosannas between;
O! the thrice blessed song of the Lamb and of Moses;
O! brightness on brightness, the pearl gate uncloses.
O! white wings of angels, O fields white with roses;
O! white tents of peace, where the rapt soul reposes;
O! the waters so still, and the pastures so green."

The brief hints afforded us by the sacred writings of the better land are both inspiring and beautiful. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." Heaven is described as a quiet place,—a "rest" remaining for the people of God. Tears shall be wiped away from all eyes. "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." To how many death-beds have these words spoken peace! How many failing hearts have gathered new strength, and quietly fallen asleep, in prospect of a glorious awakening amid the joys of a better land. J. L. HENLEY.

The Cause in Central Iowa.

The visit and lectures of Elder J. V. Himes in Pike, Muscatine and Wilton Junction, Iowa, now just closed, having created a new interest in the Advent faith among the people of this region, both as regards the times and the nature of the events that are soon to transpire, has produced a desire among those who believe in the near coming of Christ to have more done to wake up the people of this point of the State to the momentous events now right upon us. A meeting, therefore, was called in Muscatine, of friends from Pike, Wilton, Sweetland, Muscatine, Davenport and Burlington, when L. H. Washburn, Esq., was called to the chair, and Aaron Stein chosen Secretary.

On motion, it was Resolved, That, in view of the destitution in this entire region of Advent preaching, we unite our strength and means, the coming year, to hold an Advent campmeeting in the vicinity of Muscatine city, with a view to strengthen the isolated and scattered believers, and enlighten and bring our friends and fellow citizens into the Advent faith, and a preparation for the coming kingdom.

Resolved, That Samuel Overturf, of Pike, J. Covell, of Sweetland, Wm. E. Graham, of Muscatine, J. S. Brandeburg, of Burlington, and Joseph Parry, of Davenport, be a committee to arrange for the time and place of meeting.

Resolved, That we extend a special invitation to Elder J. V. Himes to be with us in the proposed meeting, and give lectures on the evidence of the personal and speedy coming of Christ, to reign over the redeemed earth. We invite, also, all Advent preachers, brethren and friends of the cause in this region, and from abroad, to unite with us in the meeting, and help in this good work.

L. H. WASHBURN, Pres't.
A. STEIN, Sec'y.

In connection with the above, I may add that the labors of Bro. Himes in this city were peculiarly acceptable, and have undoubtedly been attended with good results; both immediate and prospective. He preached four sermons in the Baptist church of this city, which was kindly opened to him by the brethren of that persuasion, to large audiences, composed of some of the most intelligent of our citizens. Bro. Himes spoke the truth fearlessly—testifying in unequivocal terms as to the time of our Lord's second coming, and the end of the age, according to the sure word of prophecy; yet in such a spirit of gentleness and humility as to commend itself to the sincere and honest hearer, however conflicting with previous beliefs and teachings. The few isolated believers, residing in this town and vicinity, were much rejoiced, encouraged and edified by his timely visit and instructive discourses. Others, also, who are not identified with the Advent faith, but who attended these meetings, have expressed great interest in the, to them, new and startling truths presented.

Bro. Himes was in excellent health and spirits while here, and left us to fill his appointments in Wisconsin and elsewhere. May God bless and prosper him in his good work, and in due time restore him well and safely to his family.

In behalf of the Advent brethren of this section, AARON STEIN.

What is Truth?—No. 2.

GOD'S LAW AGAINST SINNERS.

Then there is a law, which is good, if a man use it lawfully; as appears from 1 Tim. 1: 5–11, which was quoted at the close of the preceding article. The law referred to here, cannot be the ceremonial law, but the moral law, as it relates to "murderers," "men-stealers," "liars," etc.; and to say any thing else "that is contrary to sound doctrine."

RIGHT TO PUNISH EVIL DOERS.

Is it right to punish evil doers? O yes. Let Bro. Peter speak:—"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: as free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God." 1 Pet. 2: 13–16.

But, says the objector, what has a christian to do with law! Why, the christian is not called upon to enforce or to execute the law against sinners; but God has appointed "ministers" of such law to execute it, as we learn from the following Scripture:—"For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same: for he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake." Rom. 13: 3–5.

Therefore, if any one, even a christian, shall resist such rulers as ministers, he will "resist the ordinance of God"; and if he should persist in such resistance, he would receive to himself damnation! as we learn from the 2d verse of Rom. 13:—"Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." Says the objector, "We ought to obey God rather than men!" True.

Acrostic.

There is a gift to mortals given,
Holy, divine, sent down from heaven;
Early may we this gift obtain.

Heaven's rich blessing waits for thee—
Only believe—"Come unto me"!
Lord, most gladly do I come,
Yearning for yon peaceful home.

Surely on him we may rely,
Plead not our worth, our strength not try.
I feel that he will freely give
Rivers of peace if we believe.
I'll let thy Spirit lead, O Lord,
Till I shall gain the saint's reward.

Facts and Fancies.

DIALOGUE.—No. 1.

Bro. A. What do you think of female preaching?

Bro. Z. I believe it to be a good thing. You do not object to it, do you?

Bro. A. Yes. I do not think it is right. It seems to me to be out of place—a woman assuming the work of man and pretending to teach the way of life. Besides, it is unscriptural.

Bro. Z. You present several propositions, and I must reply to them in course, if you have no objections.

Bro. A. Certainly not. I am prepared to listen to your defense.

Bro. Z. First, you say it is not right! and you say in another place that it is unscriptural. I must understand you to mean that it it is not right in another sense.

Bro. A. I mean it is not proper, or reasonable.

Bro. Z. It is as proper for woman to employ whatever talent God has given her in his service, as for man. It is reasonable that she should use her tongue in proclaiming the truth, as for any other purpose. It is as proper and reasonable for woman to preach, as to teach in public schools, or to stand at the head of various public institutions; or to write books, etc.

Bro. A. True; but can she be as useful, and do the same amount of good as man?

Bro. Z. Yes, and more so. There are places where a male preacher would not be received, indeed where he would be insulted if he attempted to preach. I know of such a place, where one of our talented sisters held a meeting not long since. She did not know the character of the community when she was invited; indeed, the wickedness of the people was purposely kept from her, in order that she would not fear to go. She went to the place, was received kindly, and treated with the greatest respect, and best of all the truth was received with gladness, and seed was sown which will doubtless spring up and bear much fruit.

Bro. A. Well, that was good. But I suppose they listened so attentively, because it was somewhat novel to them to hear a woman preach.

Bro. Z. It might have been the novelty of the thing that occasioned the quietness and good order at first; but she has preached there a number of times, and has always been kindly received, and even more so in her last visits than the first.

Bro. A. Well, in cases like this, it may be right and proper for women of talent and piety to present the truth. But do not the Scriptures forbid women preaching the gospel?

Bro. Z. I intended to reply to that objection in its place, but as you have offered it again, I will reply now.

Bro. A. Well, what will you say to the declaration of Paul in 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35?

Bro. Z. The question here is, whether Paul refers to female preaching, or to women taking part in the deliberations, or speaking for or against some business project, in the church. And in that age of the church it might not have been necessary for women to occupy the position of a public speaker. Women had not the opportunity of study and self-improvement to enable them to combat the various errors of the day, and to publicly refute the teachings of the sects; besides, there was so much persecution to be encountered, and the task so laborious, that it was rather more than woman could undertake. The state of things is vastly different now. The laws of the land protect all in the exercise of religious privileges, and women can prepare themselves for the work, equally with men. But again; can it be proven that Paul spoke by inspiration? You know Paul often gave his opinion of some matters of church policy. And if he spoke by inspiration, he certainly comes into opposition to the prophet Joel, where he says by inspiration, "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your DAUGHTERS shall prophesy" (or preach), etc.; and this is evidently to take place just previous to the Lord's coming.

Bro. A. I never thought of that before. And is that prophecy to be fulfilled in these days?

Bro. Z. Yes, it is to have its fulfilment at the same time with the signs the prophet is speaking about, which you know are to precede the second coming of Christ.

Bro. A. Well, I will give up the controversy. I think it clear enough now. And for one, I will encourage women to sound the gospel trumpet. I would like to talk with you a little on another subject which is not quite clear to my mind,—namely, the second coming of Christ.

Bro. Z. I shall be happy to speak on such an interesting subject. Come in tomorrow evening.

Bro. A. I will be sure to do so, if nothing interferes. T. W. S.

Want of Time.

How many plead the want of time for not being better acquainted with God's revealed will to man; while at the same time many such pleaders spend hours and days, weeks, months and years on mere trifles and vanities. Any who spend precious time so, when their journey comes to be ended, what comfort can they take in looking at these vanities, that have been the idol of their hearts, in place of having clothing ready, all prepared with the sparkling diamonds of God's word, and ready to enter that blood-bought kingdom when the great restorer comes? Any who come to have their eyes opened, and consider this misspent time, oh! what would they not give could they recall it, to be spent for God's glory? O that all who profess to be lovers of the Lord, spending time so, could have their eyes opened to see that the christian is only allowed such things as are necessary, and nothing for vanity!

We are to deny self, abstaining from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul (Luke 14: 33, 1 Pet. 2: 11); to "live righteously, soberly and godly in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ," by whose blood we are redeemed from all iniquity. In this way we are purified unto Him a "peculiar people, zealous of good works" (Titus 2: 12, 14). We are the epistles of Christ, written with the Spirit of the living God (2 Cor. 3: 3). We are not citizens of this world; neither are we conformed thereto; but are chosen out of it, being transformed by the renewing of our minds (John 15: 19, Rom. 12: 2). We are the temples of the Holy Ghost,—an habitation of God through the Spirit (Eph. 2: 22, 1 Cor. 6: 19). We have passed from death unto life,—become new creatures, old things having passed away. The Spirit of God testifies with our spirit that we are the children of God (Rom. 8: 16). We have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts (Gal. 5: 24).

But, reader, if thy case is one of the said pleaders for want of time, we would entreat of thee to

Now tear each idol from thy heart,
That Christ may enter in;
And prove the mercies of thy God
By hating every sin.

Then you may prove eternal rest,
Where no temptations come,
But bask in everlasting bliss,
In that bright world to come.

The Coming Future.

We clipped the following from one of our exchanges, published in San Francisco, Cal.

"The present condition of the world is admittedly unnatural and anomalous. We are living in times when the christian and the infidel, the statesman and the divine, seem to agree in the expectation that some great crisis is at hand.

The public mind, both at home and abroad, is held in the calm of a feverish suspense. New and strange blasphemies are coming to the birth; the foundations of the State are loosing, and the church of God is beset and assailed on every side.

Amid these thick clouds, all eyes are fixed with an eager gaze upon the dark and coming future. But who shall unravel its mysteries? Who can decipher its solemn roll of fate? Who can pierce with steady eye into the depths of past history, and read there, as in a mirror, the judgment or mercy in store for after generations? Who can expound the strange dream of this fleeting, shadowy world; or unlock to the faith of the church the royal treasure-house of the good things to come? It is here that the wisdom of the world stands rebuked, and its idols are all mute and silent. The research of its historians here proves futile and ineffectual; the policy of its statesmen is baffled and confounded. The future continues veiled from every worldly eye in deepest mystery; and every effort of human pride to decipher the solemn hand-writing proves utterly in vain.

Divine prophecy is the only light that can remove this impenetrable darkness. There God himself reveals to his own servants the great outlines of his providence, and enables them, by patient search, to trace through the past and future, the grandeur and the majesty of his high councils of love."

Light Wanted.

In the Crisis of Dec. 2nd is an article headed "Seventh and Eighth kings," in which Dr. Decker takes the position that the Greek Empire is the first, France the second, Spain the sixth, Austria the seventh, and France the eighth head of the beast of Rev. 17th. Will Dr. Decker explain what the fourth and fifth heads are?

Russian Proverbs.

Proverbs are often replete with sound practical wisdom, and might be profitably treasured up in the memory, and are worth practicing.

They who hunt the bear do not sleep over the sport.

To steal is not to trade; the risk is too great for the profit.

Trust a skittish horse before a hasty tongue.

Sin requires no teaching.

Quarrel with none, and men will be at peace with thee.

Good words dry up a man's tongue.

Praise not thyself nor dispraise.

A fool can cast a stone where seven wise men cannot find it.

The good are silent, where the evil murmur.

Go to law for a small matter and lose a greater.

Economy surpasses gain.

Give of thine own and not out of another's store.

The blind cannot see; the proud will not.

Not every man sits with saints hereafter.

A small key opens a large lock.

When God protects none can harm.

Our eyes are our enemies.

Stint not thy prayer: God will not withhold grace.

Without God, go not so far as the threshhold.

The devil said he had the rule of all the kingdoms of the world, but God refused him the rule of the swine.

The good teach good; the evil, evil.

Why, man, the idol was made of the same wood with thy salt-shovel.

Better be too humble than proud.

Pray, but strive also.

We sin like David; but we do not like him repent.

TRUE COURAGE.—The world calls that man courageous who dares face any of his fellows in open fight. Let no one decide his valor until it has been proved that he is brave enough to face that strongest enemy—self. That is test! how few could stand it; how many would be stripped of their blood-earned laurels, and tracked with the reproach of cowardice. Whoso gaineth a victory over self is a conqueror indeed! It matters not what road we take; self is always lying in ambush ready to attack us with some besetting sin.

ONE OF LIFE'S LESSONS.—If you have a sore place in your heart, keep it covered over, if you would escape the bitterness of having one whose hand you have trustingly grasped in love or friendship, wantonly turn a poisoned arrow in the wound, in some chance mood of ill-humor. To those who have seen only the sunny side of life, these words may seem ungracious; but who that has suffered much, has not learned this sadlesson?

A RECIPE.—To be a woman of fashion is one of the easiest things in the world. A late writer thus describes it: "Buy everything you don't want, and pay for nothing you do—smile on all mankind but your husband—be happy everywhere but at home—hate the country, but adore the city—read novels and neglect your children—nurse lap dogs, and go to church every time you get a new shawl."

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Talks about Health.

A WORD ABOUT DRESS.

One of the gravest mistakes in our dress is the very thin covering of our arms and legs. No physiologist can doubt that the extremities require as much covering as the body. A fruitful source of disease; of congestion in the head, chest, and abdomen, is found in the nakedness of the arms and legs, which prevents a fair distribution of the blood.

A young lady has just asked me what she can do for her very thin arms. She says she is ashamed of them. I felt of them through the thin lace covering, and found them freezing cold. I asked her what she supposed would make muscles grow? Exercise, she replied. Certainly, but exercise makes them grow only by giving them more blood. Six months of vigorous exercise would do less to give those naked, cold arms circulation, than would a single month were they warmly clad.

The value of exercise depends upon the temperature of the muscles. A cold gymnasium may be considered unprofitable. Its temperature should be between sixty and seventy, or the limbs should be warmly clothed. I know that our servant girls and blacksmiths, by constant and vigorous exercise, acquire large, fine arms, in spite of their nakedness. And if young ladies will labor as hard from morning till night as do these useful classes, these may have as fine arms, but even then it is doubtful if they would get rid of their congestions in the head, lungs, and stomach, without more dress upon the arms and legs.

Perfect health depends upon perfect circulation. Every living thing that has the latter, has the former. Put your hand under your dress upon your body. Now put your hand upon your arm. If you find the body warmer than the arm, you have lost the equilibrium of circulation. The head has too much blood, producing headache or sense of fullness; or the chest has too much blood, producing coughs, rapid breathing, pain in the side, or palpitation of the heart; or the stomach has too much blood, producing indigestion; or the liver has too much blood, producing some disturbance; or the bowels have too much blood, producing constipation or diarrhea. Any or all of these difficulties are temporarily relieved by immersion of the feet or hands in hot water, and they are permanently relieved by such dress and exercise of the extremities as will make the derivation permanent.

Again I say, the extremities require as much clothing as the body. Women should dress their arms and legs with one or two thicknesses of knit woolen garments which fit them. The absurdity of loose, flowing sleeves and wide-spread skirts, I will not discuss.

"Do you ask why the arms and legs may not become accustomed to exposure like the face? I answer, God has provided the face with an immense circulation, because it must be exposed."

A distinguished physician of Paris declared, just before his death, "I believe that during the twenty-six years I have practiced my profession in this city, twenty thousand children have been borne to the cemeteries a sacrifice to the absurd custom of naked arms." When in Harvard, many years ago, I heard the distinguished Dr. J. C. Warren say, "Boston sacrifices five hundred babies every year by not clothing their arms." Those little arms should have thick, knit, woolen, warm sleeves, extending from the shoulder to the hand.—D. Lewis, M. D.

Use of Sweet Apples.

A sweet apple, sound and fair, has a deal of sugar or saccharine in its composition. It is therefore nutritious; for sweet apples raw, will fat cattle, horses, pigs, sheep and poultry. Cooked sweet apples will "fat" children, and make grown people fleshy—"fat" not being polite as applied to grown persons. Children being more of the animal than "grown folks," we are not so fastidious in their general classification. But to the matter in question. In every good farmer's house who has an orchard, baked sweet apples should be an "institution" in their season. Everybody, from the toddling babe holding up by its father's knee—children are a decidedly a household commodity—away back to "our reverend grandmother" in her rocking chair, loves them. No sweetmeat smothered in sugar is half so good; no aroma of dissolved confectionary is half so simple as the soft, pulpy flesh of a well baked apple of the right kind. It is good in milk, with bread. It is good on your plate at breakfast, dinner or supper—we don't "take tea" at our house. It is good every way—"vehemently good"—as an enthusiastic friend of ours once said of tomatoes.—N. Y. World.

A NEW REMEDY FOR THE SMALL POX.—The Saracenia purpurea, or Indian cup, a native plant of Nova Scotia, which we mentioned some time ago as being the specific used by the Indians against the small pox, bids fair to realize the expectations entertained by medical men of its efficacy. In a letter addressed to the American Medical Times, Dr. F. W. Morris, President-Physician of the Halifax Visiting Dispensary, states that this Sarcenia, a paveraceous plant, will cure small pox in all its forms within twelve hours after the patient has taken the decoction. "However alarming and numerous the eruptions," he says, "or confluent and frightful they may be, the peculiar action of the medicine is such that very seldom is a scar left to tell the story of the disease. If either vaccine or variolous matter is washed with the infusion of the Saracenia, they are deprived of their contagious properties. So mild is the medicine to the taste, that it may be largely mixed with tea and coffee, and given to connoisseurs in these beverages to drink, without being aware of the admixture. The medicine has been successfully tried in the hospitals of Nova Scotia, and its use will be continued."—Galignani.

WATER-PROOF BOOT SOLES.—If hot tar is applied to boot soles it will make them water-proof. Let it be as hot as the leather will bear without injury, applying it with a swab and drying it in by fire. The operation may be repeated two or three times during the winter, if necessary. It makes the surface of the leather quite hard, so that it wears longer, as well as keeps out the water. Oil or grease softens the sole, and does not do much in keeping the water out. It is a good plan to provide boots for winter during summer, and prepare the soles by tarring, as they will then become, before they are wanted to wear, almost as firm as horn, and will wear twice as long as those unprepared.

☞ Mr. Kemyer, of Ohio, says in the Amer. Agriculturalist, that bleeding from a wound on man or beast may be stopped by a mixture of wheat flour and common salt, in equal parts, bound on with a cloth. If the bleeding be profuse, use a large quantity, from one to three pints. It may be left for hours, or even days, if necessary. In this manner he saved the life of a horse which was bleeding from a wounded artery; the flow ceased in five minutes after the application. It was left on three days, when it worked loose, was easily removed, and the wound soon healed.

ON THE DEATH OF EMMA AUGUSTA WHEELER.

Dear Emma, thou art sleeping now,
Far from the reach of pain;
Death's seal is now upon thy brow,
But soon will come again

The mighty Conqueror o'er the tomb,
He comes with power to save,
And bring again his ransomed ones,
Victorious o'er the grave.

O! then with all the ransomed throng,
Dear Emma, thou wilt sing,—
Where is thy boasted victory, grave,
And where, oh death, thy sting?

Thanks be to God, who giveth us
The victory o'er the grave;
And soon he'll come to vindicate
His right and power to save.

Looking for Jesus.

"And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9: 28.

Reader, we have introduced seventeen witnesses, who testify that our Lord Jesus Christ will COME TO THIS EARTH AGAIN!! Therefore we have reason to expect him; consequently those who believe this testimony will not be disappointed. But you ask, how are we to look for him? I answer the question by asking another. How did the church look for his first coming? You answer, through the fulfillment of prophecy. Consequently we are to look in the same way for his second coming; that is, through the fulfillment of prophecy.

To illustrate this great and sublime truth, we will suppose a company of ladies and gentlemen journeying to the city of Quebec, and being ignorant of the way, they inquire of one who has a knowledge of it, to give them the information which they need. With pleasure he complies with their request. He directs them to journey in a north-easterly direction, and the first way-mark they come to will be a pillar, and upon the top of it they will find a LION, with wings. A few miles beyond this, they will come to a second pillar, and upon the top of it a BEAR seated, with three ribs in its mouth. Journey on a few miles further, and behold, there is a third pillar, with a LEOPARD seated upon it, having four heads and four wings of a fowl upon its back. In pursuing their journey, they come to a fourth pillar, with a dreadful and terrible beast seated upon it, having great iron teeth, and ten horns. Still further in the distance, they will reach a fifth pillar, with a LITTLE HORN upon it, which has plucked up by the roots three of the ten which they saw upon the terrible beast; and then it has eyes like a man, and a mouth, etc. Onward they journey, and the next way-mark which they will come to will be a broad plain, and when they shall have reached it, their ears will be saluted with the clangor of arms, the cry of war, the wails and groans of the wounded and dying, and the reeling and falling of thrones. They commence their journey, but do they look for the city first? Nay, verily; the first way-mark! And in due time they reach it, and pass on, expecting to behold the second, and at length they reach it and pass on—then comes the third—then the fourth—and in due time they reach the fifth; and although the distance is great, and the roads rough and uneven, yet with alacrity do they pursue their journey until they reach the plain; and suddenly as a clap of thunder their ears are saluted with the wails and groans of the wounded and dying, and the crash and falling of thrones. All eyes are open!! and at once they begin to look for the city. Although they are weary and foot-sore, yet they quicken their steps for the long looked-for city. And do you suppose that any one could make them think that they were all deluded, and that it would be best for them to turn about and go back to the place from whence they started? Nay, verily; they would cry out in thunder tones, We know that we are not deluded; for we have found every thing just as A. described it unto us at the commencement of our journey. We shall therefore pursue it until we reach the city, for soon we shall behold it.

Reader, methinks I hear you say, If you will make the coming of the Lord as plain as this, I will be heart and hand with you in the proclamation of this great and glorious truth. Well, I will do it, if you will just go with me to the 7th chapter of Daniel. Here we have a vision which our heavenly Father presented to the prophet Daniel 2400 years ago, and in it He rolled up before him this world's history, commencing with the kingdom of Babylon, and leading down through the vista of time to the "sitting of the Ancient of days,"—the second coming of Christ; and the "dominion," and "glory," and a "kingdom" are given to him, "that all people, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." As Daniel has written out the vision, I will take the liberty to give it to you:—"Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea. And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another. The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings. I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, and it was lifted up from the earth, and was made to stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it. And behold another beast, a second, like to a bear, and it raised up itself on one side, and it had three ribs in the mouth of it between the teeth of it; they said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh. After this I beheld and lo, another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads, and dominion was given to it. After this I saw in the night visions, and behold, a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth; it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it; and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns. I considered the horns, and behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots; and behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things. I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool; his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the judgment was set, and the books were opened. . . . I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

Daniel is shown that the lion symbolized the kingdom of Babylon; the bear, Medo-Persia; the leopard, Grecia; the four heads, the divided state of the Grecian kingdom; the terrible beast, the Roman kingdom in its imperial and various forms; the ten horns, ten kingdoms; the little horn, Papacy—and that it was to make war with the saints, and prevail against them, until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came when the saints possessed the kingdom. And this is the view taken of this portion of Holy Writ by the most ancient divines.

Now I ask, would it have been in keeping with an enlightened and intelligent mind, for Daniel to have looked for the coming of Christ, and the setting up of the kingdom of God, prior to the church having traveled the whole field of prophetic vision which lay this side of the time fixed upon by the Father for his Son to come, and the saints to possess the kingdom? You answer, Nay. Neither do I think it is in keeping with a mind well enlightened in the prophetic scriptures to look for the coming of Christ until Daniel's king of the North, or Ezekiel's Gog of the latter days, which is the Autocrat of all the Russians, shall have planted "the tabernacles of his palace between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain [Palestine]. Then Michael [Jesus] will stand up to reign. Consequently he will vacate his Fathers throne, which he now occupies as the antitype of the Aaronic priesthood; and in the combined glory of all heaven he will come; "And there" will be "given him (by the Father) dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages (who shall survive the great and terrible battle which is to be fought at, or subsequent to, his coming), should serve him." Thus we learn the manner in which the ancient christians looked for the coming and kingdom of Christ.

Now the question naturally arises in the mind of the honest inquirer after truth,—Where are we in this prophetic path which leads to the coming of Jesus, and the setting up of the kingdom of God? I answer, amid the rocking of the Roman earth, and the tottering of thrones. From the fact that the kingdom of Babylon, symbolized by the lion, was overthrown by Cyrus, commander of the Medo-Persian army, B. C. 538. The Medo-Persian kingdom was overthrown by Alexander the Great, B. C. 331. Fifteen years subsequent to his death not one of his posterity existed as conscious beings. B. C. 300, the Grecian Empire was "divided towards the four winds of heaven," and assigned to four of Alexander's generals, namely: Ptolemy Soter, Seleucus Nicator, Cassander, Lysimachus. Ptolemy had Egypt, Lybia, Arabia, Cœlo-Syria, and Palestine. Cassander had Macedonia and Greece. Lysimachus had Thrace, Bithynia, and some other provinces, with the Bosphorus. Seleucus had all the rest of Asia to the other side of the Euphrates, as far as the river Indus. This division was symbolized by the four heads of the leopard beast. Egypt, the last division of the Grecian kingdom, was overthrown by the Romans at the battle of Actium, B. C. 31; and the Roman kingdom became the universal empire of earth.

The Western Roman empire was divided into ten Vandal and Gothic kingdoms, by the Goths, Huns and Vandals, A. D. 476. Then the terrible beast had ten horns, which symbolized these ten kingdoms. And as Daniel was considering the horns, behold another little horn came up, and he was to subdue three horns or kingdoms by proxy. A. D. 552-4. Three of the ten kingdoms symbolized by the horns were subdued by the army of Justinian, emperor of the Eastern Roman empire; and subsequent to his subduing three of these kingdoms, he saw him with eyes and a mouth, speaking great words against the Most High, wearing out the saints of the Most High, thinking to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hands, until a time and times, and the dividing of time, 1260 years, according to the testimony of the most eminent and learned divines. But we have higher authority than mortal man to call a day a year. Ezek. 4: 6,—"And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year." Num. 14: 33, 34,—"And our children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, and bear your whoredoms until your carcases be wasted in the wilderness. After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, EACH DAY FOR A YEAR, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know my breach of promise." And inasmuch as this horn symbolizes Rome-Papal, the time must be symbolical. "Time," one year. "Times," plural, two years. "Dividing of time," half a year; making a period of three and a half years. Following the Jewish mode of reckoning time—360 days to a year—it gives us a period of 1260 years for the Papacy to continue. And this mode of reckoning is pursued by the leading spirits in the Protestant church.

It is quite clear to my own mind that the "time, times, and dividing of time," or 1260 years, commenced A. D. 606-7; and that they will end A. D. 1866-7. For by the celebrated decree of Phocas, who was emperor of the Eastern Roman empire, Boniface the third, Bishop of Rome, was constituted universal BISHOP AND SUPREME HEAD OF THE CHURCH! And by this decree, the saints, and the times and laws were given into his hands, and he had the power of prosecuting an absolute ecclesiastical dominion! whether he immediately exercised it or not. I think, also, that the 1260 years are to be dated from his being thus invested with absolute ecclesiastical dominion, and not from his becoming a temporal potentate, which did not occur until a later period. See Faber, vol. 1, pp. 139-170.

Dr. Fuller and Dr. Scott also fix on A. D. 606 as the time to commence the 1260 years; and they end them in 1866. It is true they disagree with us as to the nature of the millennium.

Names.

BRO. GRANT:—I am often asked the name of individuals whose initials stand at the end of their articles in the Crisis. Last week, I was asked what H. F. C. stood for? They generally look for the name before they read, and, if the name is not there, the article is not read. I am surprised that the brethren do not comply with your kind wishes, and give their names, and their articles will be read with interest.

Rev. 17.—"Seven Kings."—No. 4.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space."—Rev. 17: 10.

In my last article I presented historical testimony concerning the condition of Italy during the period designated by historians, the Grand Interregum, that commenced with the extinction of the imperial house of Swabia, the fifth in the succession of the seven heads of the leopard beast. I shall now present the testimony which I believe goes to prove that

SPAIN IS THE SIXTH HEAD of the imperial power that supported Papacy. On the death of Maximilian of Germany, which took place A. D. 1516, Spain became the leading power in Europe. Taylor in his Manual of History says, page 512:—"The death of his grandfather Maximilian transmitted to him (Charles of Spain) the Austrian territories, and the other domains of the house of Hapsburgh; and the electors chose him to fill the vacant throne of the empire. Thus Charles the First of Spain, and fifth of the Empire, possessed greater power than any sovereign that had flourished in Europe since the days of Charlemagne. From the Emperor Charles descended the Austrian family of Spanish kings, which terminated by the death of Charles II. A. D. 1700."

It was during the existence of this head or king that John gives his revelation concerning the five that had fallen, namely, the Greek, Frank, Saxon, Franconian, and Swabian; and the sixth, Spain, was then in existence. It was also at this time the judgments of God were declared to commence on the harlot power. It was this power that fitted out the Invincible Armada, so designated by the Pope, to crush out of existence England, at that time the bulwark of Protestantism. This unparalleled expedition was destroyed. God blew the ocean into a tempest of fury, and between the elements and the courage of the British Admiral, this engine of the Pope's fury, that he had blest and invoked God's protection to defend, was defeated. As the result of this just judgment on Spain, Taylor says, page 535:—"This glorious success was deservedly regarded not so much as the triumph of England, as of the Protestant cause throughout Europe. It virtually established the independence of the Dutch, and it raised the courage of the Huguenots in France. It completely destroyed the decisive influence that Spain had acquired in the affairs of Europe. Ever since the shipwreck of the Armada, the Spanish state and people seem to have lost all energy and SUNK INTO ALMOST HOPELESS DECAY."

There never existed a more rigid, bigoted, intolerant class of Romanists than the Spanish. Her Torquemadas, Philips, Isabellas and Charles. For the most interesting and elaborate account of the destruction of the Armada, see a work—"Great Events by Great Historians." In conclusion on this point, there cannot remain a doubt, it seems to me, as it regards Spain being the sixth head; which brings us to consider in the next place the House of Hapsburgh of AUSTRIA, THE SEVENTH HEAD "After the death of Henry (Jan. 9, 1743), the cause of Austria triumphed throughout Europe. . . . After the conclusion of this unfortunate war, Maria Theresa's son, the Arch Duke Joseph, was chosen Roman King, March 27, 1764, by which means the imperial queen confirmed her family, in the possession of the GERMAN IMPERIAL DIGNITY."—Encyclopedia Americana, Vol. 8, pp. 282, 285. Thus we see by positive testimony Austria was the Seventh Head, and by no reasoning whatever can France be the seventh head, as it is sometimes taught.

I will now invite your attention to the 11th verse. "And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." In "No. Two" I endeavored to show the analogy between Paganism and France during the reign of terror. A more striking similarity cannot be expected, nor is it necessary to fulfill the prophetic mould. Pagan Rome was a persecutor and detester of christianity, God, and his word. France did precisely the same when it shook off the trammels of Papacy. "And the beast which was, but is not, is himself both an eighth, and one of the seven."—Wakefield's Trans. This is true of France in both respects; for France is an eighth head of the dragon, and under the Carlovingian dynasty it was one of the heads of the leopard beast—the second head. "And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is distinct from the seven." The last rendering is from an English translation, dedicated to "The universal church of Christ, being a critical revision of the text and translation of the English version of the New Testament, with the aid of most ancient manuscripts unknown to the age in which that version was last put forth by authority."

The above is very clear, for France was distinct as could possibly be in principles pertaining to both politics and religion. The seven heads which constituted the leopard beast, from the testimony of John were to continue but forty-two months, as the 5th verse of chapter 13 most clearly shows:—"And there was given to him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given to him to continue forty and two months." On the margin it reads make war forty-two months; hence it was said during the above period, who is like unto the beast who is able to make war with the beast." Now what is the fact? During the time above specified, the Pope was mouth for those seven imperial heads, and they were united to the church of Rome; but God had numbered their days, and when that number expired, France in the Robespierrean Reign of Terror became a distinct head from the seven Protectorates of Romanism and a revived eighth head of the dragon.

After Napoleon the First became Emperor of France, and found the Emperor of Austria was acting in complicity with the Pope, he made war on him, and the "short space" that the seventh king was to continue, ended in a twofold sense; first, Joseph was crowned King of Rome, May 27, 1764; the beast rose from the abyss, 1791, only twenty-seven years—a short space; second, France made war on Austria. "Napoleon fell with the impetuosity of a tempest upon the Austrian army, which was progressing auspiciously. In a five days battle—called with greater truth a five days campaign—Napoleon, that thunderbolt of war, shivered the Austrian power, and on the 15th day of May, 1809, Napoleon made his entry into Vienna, the capitol of the Austrian empire."—Van Rotteck's History, p. 209.

Thus the prediction was most astonishingly fulfilled; and the spirit of the dragon evoked from the bottomless pit in A. D. 1791, has continued to spread throughout the Roman States, leavening them with a spirit of hatred against Papacy. In the year 1848, a year memorable in the history of Europe, the States of Italy revolted from their once reverenced, and in their estimation sacred Lord and Master, the Pope, and became Republicans. Mark this fact. France, in the great revolution of 1791, professed Republicanism. In the great revolution of 1848, the States of Italy became Republicans under Garabaldi and others.

Before I make the application to the ten kings associated with the beast from the abyss, I wish to direct your attention to both the extent of that movement and its influence among the nations.

NUMBER TEN.

13.—RESTORATION OF THE KINGDOM TO ISRAEL.

Under David God set up a kingdom among the children of Israel, preparatory to the inauguration of an immortal kingdom under a deathless King;—this kingdom under David being the kingdom of God among men in its first stage, or incipient state. God promised David under solemn oath that he would ultimately raise unto him a great "seed," or heir, that should occupy his throne "to all generations" (Ps. 89: 3, 4); and also promised him that if his children would be obedient, they might successively occupy his throne till this great "seed" should rise to take possession of it (Ps. 132: 12), and thus the throne "forever" be occupied; but informed him likewise that in case his children became disobedient and corrupt, he would "visit their transgressions with the rod" (Ps. 89: 32), or break up that line of kings, and destroy that kingdom, leaving the throne destitute of an occupant till this great "seed" should come and assume the reins of government.

For awhile David's children, or descendants, sat upon his throne; but in process of time they became so corrupt that God was under obligation to execute his threat against them, and his stern mandate is heard,—"Remove the diadem, and take off the crown. . . . I will overturn, overturn, overturn it: and it shall be no more UNTIL He come whose right it is; and I will give it him."—Ezek. 21: 26, 27. Thus this kingdom was overthrown with the assurance of a future restoration under the great "seed" or heir of David, "whose right it is"; and Gabriel affirms, "The Lord God shall give unto him (Christ) the throne of his father David" (Luke 1: 32). Hence, prior to the ascension of Christ, the disciples inquire, "Lord, wilt thou at this time RESTORE again the kingdom to Israel?"—Acts 1: 6. The kingdom must be restored by him "whose right it is." But is it to be restored merely to its former imperfect state? or to its state of intended perfection?

This great "seed" of David—Christ—who is to be the eternal King of this restored kingdom, has obtained "the power of an endless life"; hence, as there is an advance in the state of the King, there must be a corresponding advance in the state of the subjects of that kingdom; as there must be an adaptation of things in God's economy. In the imperfect state, or incipient stage of this kingdom (which was a mere shadow of its future glorious perfection), we see a mortal king reigning over mortal subjects; but in its restoration we see an immortal King reigning over immortal subjects.—the immortal "King of Israel" reigning over the immortal "children of Israel"; together with the engrafted Gentiles.

Christ was born to be "King of the Jews,"—not in his mortal state, but in his immortal state; nor in their mortal state, but in their immortal state. Under the great "seed" of David, the restored kingdom of Israel will be a kingdom of perfection and immortality, having a perfect and an immortal King. "The kingdoms of this world" are all included in his claim, minus of their unholy subjects who must perish. "The saints of the Most High" will possess the territory "under the whole heaven," while Christ shall reign "King of saints." Long live the "King of the Jews," whose kingdom shall have "no end"!

Investigation vs. Speculation.

"Search the Scriptures" is an injunction given by our blessed Savior, and is, of course, the duty and privilege of all. We may dig as for hidden treasures, and the deeper the search the more abundant the reward—even riches of wisdom and knowledge. Yet let us ever remember that we are finite beings, and with such intellects can never grasp that which is infinite. It is true that the Bible is a revelation of God's purposes concerning man, and the globe which he inhabits; yet none can deny that it declares some truths beyond the power of the human understanding, and which demand simply an unwavering and submissive faith. But the principle of curiosity being an element of man's nature, he is not content with the simple acquiescence of faith. Mysteries must be solved, and the attempt made to explore regions of thought impenetrable to all save the Unlimited and Eternal. And whenever this is indulged in, unbelief is the sure result.

A speculative spirit is opposed to the child-like faith of the gospel, and is dangerous in its tendency. "But foolish and unlearned questions avoid," said the apostle in his exhortation to Timothy, "knowing that they do gender strifes." "He that cometh unto God, must believe that he is." But this spirit prompts the question—In what way does he exist? endeavoring to solve the problem of his infinity. So of Christ. And in the attempt to understand the mystery concerning his existence, both in the divine and human natures, direct assertions are explained away, until the Messiah, the mighty Savior of the world, is represented as a mere man, distinct only by his miraculous conception. Thus many Bible truths are misinterpreted, to suit the ideas of this class, and numberless theories invented, utterly inconsistent with the word of God. In justification of their course, the oft-repeated text is quoted, "Things that are revealed belong to us, and to our children"—seeming to forget that they are laying claim to that which is unrevealed.

The self-existence of the divine Being cannot be comprehended by the human intellect, and yet such an existence is affirmed throughout Scripture, to which Faith bows submissively, and adores. A few days since, my child of four years came to me with earnest gaze, saying, "Mother, I do not know how God looks, or who could have made him"—expecting to be taught by me what his spirit of inquiry craved. And the thought came powerfully to mind—adults are no better skilled in mysteries than the veriest child:—all stand upon the same level, and in vain propound the questions, Why? and How?

Within the past few years, a spirit of inquiry has been awakened relative to certain truths that had long lain dormant, or, at least, in regard to which the church had been sleeping; and light has been elicited that has cheered and blessed many a christian heart. At the same time the speculative spirit has been at work, distracting, dividing, and retarding the progress of truth. Much of the odium cast upon the lovers of God's word, has doubtless arisen in a great measure from this cause, while many have been turned away from candid and reasonable investigation.

Yet, in avoiding Scylla, let us be careful not to run into Charybdis. If the signs of the present time are given in Scripture, and the landmarks are revealed relative to our position, let us search for them diligently, that we may "walk as children of the light" in the midst of the darkness that surrounds us. And if there are revelations concerning the coming age, as distinct from the eternal future, let none, particularly the watchmen, refuse to examine, or repel those who have done so; but let all come as humble disciples to the fountain of divine truth, and partake largely of its refreshing and sanctifying fulness. And if permitted to share in the joys of the future world, we shall no doubt comprehend many things that in this state are only mysteries.

A Correction.

It has often been said that Noah was an hundred and twenty years in building the ark.

In Gen. 5: 32, we read:—"And Noah was five hundred years old; and Noah begat Shem, Ham and Japheth." After these children were born (how long after we are not told), the Lord directed Noah to build the ark. Noah was six hundred years old at the time of the flood, as we see in Gen. 7: 6. Now as Noah was five hundred years old before he was told to build the ark, and the flood came when he was six hundred, it is certain from these facts that he could not have been more than one hundred years in building the ark, admitting that he commenced at the time of the birth of Shem. Chap. 11: 10. "Shem was an hundred years old and begat Arphaxad two years after the flood." So we see that Shem was ninety-eight years old when the flood came. Now as Shem was born before the Lord told Noah to build the ark, he could not have been more than ninety-eight years in building it.

It would appear from chap. 5: 32, that Noah begat his three sons before God told him about building the ark. There might have been several years between the birth of these children; and if so, then the time that Noah was building the ark was so much short of ninety-eight years. It might have been several years after the three sons were born, before Noah commenced the ark; and if so, this would bring the time still so much short. All the time, therefore that passed between the birth of Shem, and the work commenced on the ark, must be taken out of the ninety-eight years in which the ark was building.

As we are not told how long Noah was building the ark, we may use our reason, so far as it may be of any importance to know. The ark was three hundred cubits long, thirty cubits high, and fifty cubits wide. If we call a cubit one foot and a half, we have the dimensions in feet, four hundred and fifty, seventy-five, and forty-five. These are about the proportions of some of the best made ships of our time. The ark had three stories, or the same as three decks to a ship. It was wider, but not so long as the Great Eastern. It is not to be supposed that Noah worked alone on that vessel. His three sons might have been men before the work began; but if so, as we have shown, this would shorten the time he was at work. It is reasonable to suppose that Noah employed as many men on the work as could be there comfortably. Then we may say that five years would have been ample time for the whole work to be done.

Why are we told that Noah was one hundred and twenty years building the ark? Because we read in Gen. 6: 3,—"And the Lord said, My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he is also flesh; yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years." From this it has been inferred that Noah was so long in building the ark. We see that this is inference, without any evidence. We have shown that Noah was not so long in his work. It follows that this time was misapplied. In this passage the Lord would say to Noah, though he would destroy man from off the earth, yet he would not exterminate him. He would leave a seed to replenish the earth, though he would cut down the age of man. Before the flood, man lived on an average about seven hundred and fifty years. After the flood, one hundred and twenty years was about the average age of man, until after the Hebrews went into the promised land. This is the application that should be made of this passage, so we think.

THE TALENT OF SUCCESS.—Every man must patiently abide his time. He must wait. Not in listless idleness, not in useless pastime, not in querulous dejection, but in constant, steady, cheerful endeavor. The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, without a thought of fame. If it comes at all, it will come because it is deserved, not because it is sought after.

Covetousness.

One of the worst sins mentioned in the Bible is covetousness among professors. Loyalty to any cause is measured by the liberality the professors of such a cause show in furnishing the means suitable to carry it out. This is seen in all its forms in this great rebellion. Men walk up and pledge and pay bountifully to sustain the Union. Their pockets are open. Some pay for fear of being drafted, more than anything else. Such loyalty amounts to nothing. But there are many who pay liberally, having the cause at heart. Others hug the dollar closer than ever. These seem to be destitute of love or fear, which are the motive power to action.

The cause of God and his truth has been attacked by the enemy, and but few to defend it, many having gone over to the enemy. What shall be done? Shall we give up, or shall we still fight with what little means we have? is the question. There are means enough, but are locked up in the hearts of a class of pretended loyalists, looking for the Lord, they say, but their actions, for the dollars more.

For the last few weeks I have realized the Savior's words more than ever before; that a rich man will have as hard work to get into the kingdom as a camel to go through a needle's eye. It is not the man who has the most dollars who stands the narrowest chance; but that stingy professor, who can make himself believe anything easier than the duty to give. He can buy land, and then make the excuse he is in debt, quoting, "Owe no man anything."

We as a people have some of the most inconsistent and covetous among us that ever cursed any people; and we know it. They have floated in a flood tide when they were scared about the Lord's coming, and were liberal for a time, then held up, yet stay among us because it is cheaper, and they like "a free gospel." O yes! no doubt of that!

"But, Bro. Munger, you are hard." I know it. You cannot cut a flint with a lead plummet; nor make these elastic India rubber consciences feel with soft words. It is time for some one to speak out plainly and let this class know their hypocrisy and idolatry are not as secret as they supposed. Let me give you a few cases that have come under my observation:

I know a man who hired a team and went twenty-five miles and preached three times, by request, and got seventy-five cents, and two good large peaches; the money came out of the poor, and the peaches out of a man that was worth from three to four thousand dollars. He had no change, and gave the peaches to appease his conscience, calling him Bro., and wanted him to come again soon. Do you think that preacher felt a brotherly love for that hypocrite the three days he had to mow in July to pay for his team, besides spending Saturday in going and Monday in coming, making six days' time for the privilege of preaching to a church worth twenty-five thousand dollars? Can such deceive us? No; much less God. Once where I was preaching, news came to one of our sisters that her husband was dead. The scene was affecting. The father died in the hospital. His pay stopped coming home, and this poor widow in her affliction was visited by one called a man, who comforted her by saying he must have his month's rent, or she must get another tenement. Another, where there were four children, all destitute, and the sister went out washing to get bread for the little fatherless ones. She spoke in meeting, told her trials, and some that were present, who believed in the Lord's soon coming, and worth from ten to twenty thousand dollars, have not given her a dollar, and yet love this blessed truth.

Are such your brethren? They are not related to me. When you want to raise funds for the cause, you get little or nothing from them.. They grunt over a dollar more than a poor generous christian will over five. They will borrow books to read. I know of many that borrow all the tracts they read, and have money in the Bank, or own a good farm. They pay nothing for preaching, if they can help it.

Said a sinner to me, "I should think your people could raise money easy (in a certain place), for you have some heavy men among you." "Yes," said I, "heavy as sin." When he ascertained what some of them paid to support the truth they professed to love, he was astonished; he thought the nature of the Advent doctrine would open the pockets and hearts of men. He did not profess religion, but felt it duty to pay fifty dollars a year to support the cause of religion. I think we must, as the people of God, look upon such cases as we know of among us as wickedness, and withdraw all fellowship from them; for they are nothing but dead weights to us, and are deceiving themselves, and causing sinners to think lightly of our hope. I will not cover up iniquity.

I verily believe the sin of covetousness has got a stronger hold of many than they are aware of. I know of more than fifty who ought to pay one thousand dollars apiece into the treasury, to be spent in home missions; and more than five hundred who are abundantly able to pay one hundred each; they never would feel it, but the good would see what good could be done sending good preachers West; and one half of the ground among us has not been broken up yet. Many places are calling for help, and there is an ear to hear where they are poor and cannot pay a preacher's traveling expenses. Many of you have your thousands that you must throw away when Jesus comes. You do not believe he is soon coming, for your work does not show it. Are you not hypocritical? You are; and if I die without a further duty, I can meet you and this article at the judgment. I hope other brethren, who are grieved and burdened on this very account, will do their duty before the Lord comes. HIRAM MUNGER.

The Boston Discussion.

"QUESTION.—Do the Scriptures teach that man has a spirit that will be eternally conscious?"

16. The spirit is, or is not the accountable being or entity. If not, it does not go to the new Jerusalem, or sheol, to receive reward or punishment; for that which was never conscious is not a moral agent.

If the spirit is the accountable part, as it must be, if rewarded or punished, then it is the part to which all the commandments are addressed, and all threatened punishments or rewards. Let us notice a few examples. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Gen. 3: 19.

In this passage, it is certain the Lord was addressing the conscious, accountable being, represented by the pronouns "thy" and "thou," which stand for the name Adam. But the being represented by "thy" and "thou" was made of "the DUST of the ground," (Gen. 2: 7), was to "eat bread" "in the sweat" of his "face," for a certain time, and then "return" to "DUST," because he disobeyed his Creator. We can see no possible way to avoid the conclusion that the accountable being returned to dust, unless we dispute the record in the Bible.

On further examination, we find all the commandments, rewards and punishments are addressed to MAN; therefore the spirit is the man, or else it is not the accountable being. But MAN was made "of the dust of the ground"; therefore, if the spirit is the accountable, conscious being, it was made "of the dust of the ground," and consequently is a material entity, because, as we have before shown, it is impossible to form an immaterial being out of material elements."

Let us notice a few other examples showing that MAN, the one made "of the dust of the ground," is the accountable being; and further, as there are not two accountable beings in the same individual, it follows that the spirit is not the man, or accountable being: "And the Lord God took the man, (not his spirit) and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it. And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat."—Gen. 2: 15–16. "And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become one of us, to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man," (not his spirit.)—Gen. 3: 22–24. "And unto Adam, (not his spirit), he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." Gen. 3: 17. The foregoing shows very clearly that the man, who was made "of the dust of the ground," is the accountable being, and mortal; then the spirit is a part of man, and consequently mortal; or it is neither accountable nor conscious.

"Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 28, 29. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell (hades) delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every MAN (not every spirit) according to their works."—Rev. 20: 13.

Nothing could be plainer than these Scriptures showing that the man—the accountable being—the one that has "done good," or "evil," is dead and in the grave; and after he comes out, he is to be "judged," and rewarded or punished. Therefore, as the conscious being is the accountable one, and the accountable one is mortal and in the grave; it follows that man has no conscious spirit that remains alive when he is dead; consequently, the affirmative of this question cannot be sustained by the harmonious teaching of the Scriptures.

In conclusion, we would say that no effort was made to meet the arguments contained in the sixteen foregoing propositions. The Scriptural argument, on both sides, was similar to the published debate we had with Dr. Litch, in 1858.

Concord.

We presume the saints would like to hear of the welfare of the church in Concord, N. H. We spent Lord's day, Dec. 14th, in that city and had a feast of joy and peace. Those who have watched for the halting of the young converts are astonished at their firmness and persevering faithfulness. We have never seen a more consistent company of youthful christians than those in C. In the evening, two more started in the service of the Lord, and for the first time stood up as witnesses for Jesus and confessed him with the mouth.

At the close of the meeting, seventy-eight gathered around the table of the Lord, and we had a very heavenly season. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon us, causing very sweet peace. We felt assured that worldly men and women were strangers to the joy that filled our minds. We could say of a truth, it was good to be there.

War News.

The lovers of freedom have been greatly saddened, and the friends of slavery gladdened by the terrible battle at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13th. The loss in the Union army is said to be thirteen thousand and five hundred, while only a comparatively small number of the rebels were killed. On Monday night, the Union forces recrossed the Rappahannock. This was the best that could be done. When General Burnside was about crossing to Fredericksburg, it was boastingly said, that the Union army would take their Christmas dinner in Richmond. Truly "Man proposes, but God disposes." Things have again come to a dead halt, and a heavy gloom hangs over our country. Still the nation shows no signs of humbling itself for its great wickedness. It still persists in its arrogant boasting, thus filling to the brim its cup of iniquity. Our government seems almost to have forgotten that there is a God in heaven. Church and State are being involved in the same bloody whirlpool of destruction. The state of things is becoming terrible. The Scriptures inform us that, "Righteousness exalteth a nation." This being true, we see no evidence that our nation will ever be exalted again. Its motto should be, "Ichabod." Its glory is departed. Sin has been its ruin, and it is now reaping some of the consequences.

War Worship.

In these days of blood and corruption, men are more inclined to worship the god of war, than the Prince of peace. Christianity is rapidly departing from our nation, being expelled as an intruder that hinders men from keeping up "with the spirit of the times." People cannot find time now to attend to the Bible and religious matters. The papers must be read, and the latest novel; and Satan is sure to have another ready, more interesting, as soon as the last is finished. Thus he leads his silly dupes to perdition. O how few are wise in these days, inquiring for "the old paths," taking the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice. They run after popular, semi-infidel lecturers, who tickle their itching ears; but God's holy men, who come to tell them the simple truths of the Bible, are considered scarcely worthy of a passing notice. They speak of them as "old fogies," and "croakers," because they will not cry "peace" when God has not spoken it. They want to hear men who "are up to the times—"progressive men." They look with contempt upon the anxious seat and a religious revival. They have outgrown "such childish things." Truly this is "a fast age," but its race is for destruction.

A Washington correspondent of the Boston Journal, writes Dec. 4th, '62:—

"Another anxious Sunday at the Capitol! The bells of those few churches not occupied as hospitals have pealed forth invitations to worship, yet but few have obeyed the summons, while the vestibules of the hotels and the vicinities of the telegraph offices are crowded with earnest inquirers after battle-news. Several bodies of troops have marched along the avenue, on their way over into Virginia, and the medical officers seem determined that they will not again be deservedly censured for not having made proper preparation for the reception of the wounded."

The Battle of Fredericksburg.

The battle of Fredericksburg, Dec. 13th, was the most disastrous to the northern army of any one since the beginning of the war. Just after its commencement, the Boston Journal remarked, "We have arrived at the most critical stage of this great war, and every passing moment may be telling with irreversible power upon the destinies of the Republic." This was expected to be a decisive battle one way or the other. If the enemy was defeated in this engagement, it was thought the scale would balance in favor of the North; but the Lord has ordered otherwise. Would that the eyes of the people might be opened to see that the great day of the Lord is just upon them; but, alas! they rejected the light when it came, and now it is hid from their eyes.

The following from a correspondent of the Journal, will serve to give the reader a faint idea of the battle scene. The Union army was a level portion of land, surrounded on three sides by rebel batteries, situated on elevated land, so that they could pour their terrible fire of cannon and musketry like rain upon our troops. The writer says:—

"The orders were to move rapidly, charge up the hill and take the batteries with the bayonet. Easily ordered. Hall's brigade, in this division, which so distinguished itself day before yesterday in clearing the streets of the town, with the same bravery which they showed then, moved over the plain. How splendidly! It was a thrilling sight. But now the hills were ablaze; right, left, centre, from near and far away there came a converging fire upon the plain; shells burst all round them, in front, in rear, above and among their ranks, but they heeded not. Men staggered, dropped, were torn to pieces, there were great gaps in the ranks, but right onward they moved, designing to take breath under a fence at the base of the hill. They had all but reached it when up rose a rebel brigade; a second came up to the crest of the hill where the batteries were flaming, and stood in a dark line, pouring a fatal fire upon the doomed division. It was not in human nature to stand the fire. They fought awhile—twenty minutes—perhaps longer, wavered and fell back—French broken and in disorder, Hancock retired more leisurely. A wild yell of delight went up from the rebels. The division retired to its original position on the outskirts of the town."

To the Try Company.

DEAR TRY COMPANY:—You are doing nobly for the Tract Fund. How much better you will enjoy your money to spend it for tracts to give to the poor, than to pay it out for candy; and besides you will feel better in body as well as mind; because much of the candy made, especially the colored, is unhealthy. The tracts that your money will buy may be the means of saving many from the second death; and the salvation of one is of more value than all the candy ever made since the world began. Your editor thinks you cannot make a better use of your spare cents than to give them to the Children's Tract Fund. You will see by this week's Crisis that the Sabbath School in Boston has taken hold of the matter in earnest. Let others take hold with the same zeal, and we think the Try Company may be able to raise fifty dollars, as their part of the one thousand dollars which we are trying to raise. What do you say? Shall it be done? We think we hear a response from a thousand voices—"Yes."

"Illustrated Scientific American."

As many of our readers are mechanics, we take pleasure in saying to those who wish the best mechanical paper, that they need not seek beyond the Scientific American. It commences a new volume on the first of January. The publishers, Messrs. Munn & Co., have acted as Patent Solicitors for more than seventeen years, in connection with the publication of the Scientific American, and they refer to twenty thousand patentees for whom they have done business. No charge is made for examining sketches and models of new inventions, and for advising inventors as to their patentability.

It is published WEEKLY, and every number contains sixteen pages of useful information, and from five to ten original engravings of new inventions and discoveries, all of which are prepared expressly for its columns.

All the new discoveries in the science of chemistry are given in its columns, and the interests of the architect and carpenter are not overlooked; all the new inventions and discoveries appertaining to these pursuits being published from week to week. Useful and practical information pertaining to the interests of millwrights and mill-owners will be found in the Scientific American, which information they cannot possibly obtain from any other source. Subjects in which farmers are interested will be found discussed in the Scientific American; most of the improvements in agricultural implements being illustrated in its columns.

The following are its terms: To mail subscribers, three dollars a year, or one dollar for four months. The volumes commence on the first of January and July. Specimen copies will be sent gratis to any part of the country. Western and Canadian money or post-office stamps taken at par for subscriptions. Canadian subscribers will please to remit twenty-five cents extra on each subscription to prepay postage. MUNN & Co., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

Our Tract Column.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names towards raising ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS, as a TRACT FUND, to aid the Christian Publication Society in the issue and gratuitous distribution of such Tracts and other publications as the times in which we live demand; and our subscriptions shall be paid at the call of the Treasurer of the Society as soon as the whole amount is subscribed.

From Oct. 15th to Dec. 8th the pledges amount to $602.92. Of this $251.40 have been paid.

"The Signs of the Times."

This work I have read nearly through, and I esteem it the best work that has yet been published in this country, or probably in Europe. If any one will fail to see the "signs of the times," after reading this work, then we fear their case is no better than those our Lord called "hypocrites," who could readily discern the face of the sky that indicated fair or foul weather. Bro. H. has commenced in the right place, and continues on the right track all through. He treats the subject nationally, showing the crimes and sins of christian nations; and proof abundant is given from various works and authors; and we know the panoramic view is only on outline of the real, if the curtain could be raised so as to let the real view be seen. Heathen nations are placed on no better ground than when Paul wrote; and if the preaching of the gospel for 1800 years has failed to convert one nation or one city, one county or one town, or even one school district, how long would it have to be preached before the world would be converted to Christ,—let those who have only the wisdom of this world calculate.

I well know I shall fail in any feeble attempt I can make to speak of this work as it demands. It would seem that the facts brought out in this work, from various publications and authors, would take a lifetime to gather, which makes it a valuable text book for those who are lecturing, showing the condition this world is in, which is only a fulfillment of what prophets, apostles and Jesus Christ have spoken.

Let all who wish to read a graphic and truthful description of Paul's letter to Timothy (2 Tim. 3: 1–5), get the "Signs of the Times"; and if you will not say that your money was well spent, then we think you may not love to understand the signs of the times as well as you ought. Besides the facts that are gathered, few know but little about where to get them. These are worth more than double the price of the book. It is truly a well named book, and I wish it was in the hands of at least all who love sound, wholesome reading.

With all the light and knowledge we as a people have, and understanding the "signs of the times" as we do, we are well satisfied that our christian practice does not compare as favorably as it should to be the LIGHT OF THE WORLD. As Bro. Taylor has said, "The best of us are not more than half awake." Brethren and sisters, keep your garments pure, lest the Master come and find you naked.

☞ At the Great Exhibition, as a specimen of fine type and printing, there is a copy of the entire New Testament printed upon a single sheet of paper. It was printed by Collins, of Glasgow, the celebrated publisher of rare books and beautiful editions of the classics. Although so small, the type is stated to be very clear.

The Faith of the Church.

NUMBER FOUR.

Through faith we understand, "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men in whom all have sinned."—Rom. 5: 12. According to "the faith once delivered to the saints" in reference to the fall of man and the origin of sin, we are to receive and "contend" that the record of Moses (Gen. 2d chap.) is a faithful, authentic, and divinely inspired account, and is sustained by the whole of the Scriptures of truth, and the facts in the history of our race. This is to be believed and maintained against the German Neologistic rules of interpretation, or the system of "accommodation," or "improved Biblical science" by men, whatever may be their aims or intellectual sophistry.

According to the vague theories of some writers, these records of Moses are to be considered forged and traditional writings, written in the "allegorical style."

"Eve's temptation was only a laudable stride after useful knowledge; and her eating of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, was her fortunate discovery of the cereal grains and luxuriant fruits by which man becomes perfect. God selected the serpent to instruct Eve about the new food. The serpent is also a son of God, and may yet be redeemed. How the serpent performed this part we are not told, and are therefore authorized to conclude that he did it in the natural way in which all animals teach such lessons, by eating the food himself. Serpents are sufficiently intelligent to be tamed and domesticated, and to wait on a mistress like a dog, and take food from her hands. Eve perhaps had a pet of this kind, on which she may have purposely tried the new food. The serpent satisfied her that the new food is harmless and beneficial; perhaps he grew fat upon it, and Eve added it to her stores, set it on her table, and ate it, and gave it to her husband, and the serpent's augury was fully accomplished. The soul as well as the body thrives on it."

In this manner some authors strive to mystify and do away with the force of the simple and faithful records of the divinely inspired word of God. And by this method the whole record of the temptation, the fall, and the original sin of man, from which has resulted such dire calamities to our race, is fritted away and made of no importance or value. The proof, however, of the authenticity and divinely inspired record of Moses is indubitable, and beyond any effort of man to controvert, so that our faith does not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the unchanged word of God, which endureth and abideth forever.

This record of Moses is confirmed by all subsequent revelation; by Christ himself, who sets his seal to the books of Moses when he alludes to the recorded events in these books, and declares too, "If they have not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." It is confirmed by the whole depraved history of our race, and of every individual that has ever lived and been born into our world; by the present state and condition of the world in sin, sorrow, suffering and death; for how can this condition of things be reconciled with the fact of the existence of a Being of omnipotent goodness, unless man be thus fallen in sin? It is confirmed by the coming of a Savior into our world to save and redeem us; for what need of this if we be not sinners and lost?

I will not argue the doctrine of "total depravity," for the word "total" may not be well chosen, inasmuch as there are degrees of sin, and one man may be more depraved than another. But we are all by nature (since we are conceived and born in sin) depraved enough to damn us forever, unless a Savior had been provided through whom we could be pardoned of sin, and made new creatures in Christ Jesus. So we are to maintain that "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." O. R. FASSETT.

Report of Debate.

BRO. GRANT:—The parties met according to agreement, and debated the three remaining questions, two nights to each question, and five speeches each night, which made ten to a question, and thirty in all, each speech half an hour long. The discussion was held in a large school-house, which was generally crowded, it being fine weather for the occasion. The parties had the privilege of getting who they pleased to assist them in the debate. Bro. Deyo chose Bro. Conser, and Rev. L. D. Tracy chose Rev. M. Bowman; doubtless he could not have made a better choice west of the Mississippi. But with all his talents and learning, the outsiders, who belonged to neither party, yes, and some of the Methodists say, he was badly pushed. When in his closing speech, he gave for argument the history of his family, what warriors they had been, from his grandfather who fought under Gen. Washington at Bunker Hill, and his father who fought with the gallant Perry; and he himself had faced the cannon's mouth in the present war. They are like the prophets that Ezekiel speaks of (13: 4–8),—"O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deserts. Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge (or breach) for the house of Israel to stand in the battle in the day of the Lord. They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, the Lord saith; and the Lord hath not sent them: and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word."

But the last night, before the debate, a Methodist man said, unless they produced more and better arguments than they had done, he should become an Adventist; for they had the Bible to support their doctrines. They challenged our brethren on the first evening, saying they would debate the question to their hearts' content. So they accepted the challenge, and wanted to debate another evening here, and then go to Strawberry Point, Clayton county, and debate the whole question over again; but they would do neither. Bro. Conser then challenged them to meet him at Cedar Falls and debate there, but they would not do that. And

Whereas there may be a diversity of opinion upon the merits of the recent discussion; therefore the church appointed a committee of three to draft a resolution and forward it to the World's Crisis for publication.

"Resolved, That we, the Advent church of this place, are well pleased with the ability and christian courtesy in which our brethren conducted the discussion: also believing that many of the important truths of the Bible were brought before the people, which could not have been done in any other way, so that in this the cause of God was served: hence we trust that a spirit of inquiry was elicited on the part of many inquiring minds. Therefore Resolved, That we tender our sincere thanks to them for their services on that occasion. And also to the Crisis for the publication of the Minutes of the former debate."

From T. W. Smith.

BRO. GRANT:—I am still trying to do some good. The field here is comparatively new. I believe our views have not been presented here by any except Bro. Bunnell, who has endeavored to let his light shine a little. He says he is not preaching; but why should he not be? There are some of the brethren scattered around, who have good native talents, and have the "root of the matter in them," but who imagine that because they are not educated in the wisdom and learning of this world, and cannot talk as fluently and as grammatically as others, they have no work to do, and no efforts to make toward spreading the truth. There are fields in abundance where such brethren, rough and unpolished though they may be, are especially adapted. Here in the West the earnest, spiritually-minded worker is needed. He may not understand Greek, or Latin, or Hebrew, and indeed in most cases it would be unnecessary, for the majority of the people would have to take the preacher's word for it when he says, "the word in the Greek, or Hebrew, is so and so, and might be and should be translated thus"; for they are unable to prove otherwise.

Indeed there are but few places out here where our classically educated brethren can labor with success. Each has his peculiar sphere of operation. The preacher of learning, who has wandered far back into the remote ages, and has held learned converse with the Fathers, and now for our profit and instruction unfolds their deepest thoughts, has his field and his work; and the preacher who has not "heerd" of these things, and who knows "nothin" of dead languages (and not much of any living ones), but who can tell something of the signs of the times, and understands the truth, and can tell the common people in common language of the coming of the Messiah, has his work. It is as difficult for some men to express their thoughts in words that the common people can comprehend, as it is for others to speak acceptably before the polite, educated and refined. How often has the answer been, when the question was asked, "How did you like Bro. A.'s sermon?"—"It was no doubt very good, but I could not comprehend his meaning. I could not understand his language; he was too deep for me. I liked Bro. B. much better, although he is not so talented, because we can understand all he says."

Many are the places here in the West, where the opportunities of obtaining knowledge were, and are now, few, and often neglected when afforded, that the roughest and most fearless men can meet with success; and where a man of good education and correct speech will be looked upon as merely "showing off," even if he tries to speak plainly. Then surely the want of better education, etc., ought not to prevent the common-place laborer from doing his duty.

I have found brethren in different places where I have been who are doing but little toward sounding the alarm of a speedy coming of judgment, yet who are fully capable of doing great service in the cause. They indeed contribute generously to aid others to come and do their work, but at the same time they themselves might do the work, and aid the preacher to go to the "regions beyond," even to where there is no one to sound out the word of the Lord. Those of us who have given ourselves entirely to the work, out here, are few indeed, and we cannot possibly answer all the demands for our services; therefore isolated brethren must do all they can themselves, until the Master sends more laborers, or until those in the field can find time to come to their assistance.

I am now at Havana, or at least near there. I left Carlinville, where I had preached several times, and started for Havana Nov. 22d. The cars failing to make connection, I was compelled to remain in Jacksonville over Sunday. Preached in a Hall Sunday evening. Arrived at Havana Monday night, commenced work on Wednesday night, and have spoken each succeeding night since; and appointments every night until Sunday next, and enough calls to keep me busy for some time. My tracts are nearly all gone, and more wanted. The people are quite anxious to get them, and often ask for them. A thousand tracts wont last long, when they are given away from fifty to one hundred at a time at each place I visit. Sometimes I give three or four to one person where I think there is a prospect of doing good with them. I can distribute thousands with success.

I am preaching now at a Baptist meeting house to large and attentive audiences, and opportunities are afforded of circulating any quantity. I do not want to be selfish, or to prevent others from having them; but after other demands are attended to, and if there are any left, send them along; I do not care if there are twenty thousand, I will set them all at work.

Bro. Grant, cannot we have a tract fund established upon the same principle that Muller's Orphan houses are founded? Cannot the thousand dollar tract fund be kept going by asking for money, or any other necessity from the Lord? Is there no Muller among us? How would it do to ask more of the Lord, and not so much of man?

I wish to say to the brethren in Iowa that I will come as soon as I can; the Lord wants me here a little while yet. Your Bro. in the faith, ELD. T. W. SMITH.

Havana, Ill., Dec. 2nd, '62.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—I have traveled the whole length of Cape Cod; have scattered tracts and children's papers every where. I got rid of about all I received at the Crisis office, and think I have used them very economically. I first make many inquiries of the person, to see whether they will be likely to read the tract or not, then if I find an inquiring or a candid mind, I give them one of the Advent tracts; and with about every tract I add words of exhortation and instruction. Now if you can send me some more, I should be very glad. I give my own time, and pay my own traveling expenses, and seldom get anything given me except my living. Is there not a fund from which I could be supplied with a few thousand pages? If so, send them on; direct to Benjamin Spaulding, Hyannis, Mass., by Express, by Cape Cod R. R. I shall probably be there in a week or two. I am on my way back; intend to walk all the way, visiting about all the families on the road. I shall be out of tracts before I get to Hyannis.

I have had an interesting tour,—been well received generally,—have not been rejected but in one instance, that was by a professed Advent family, who were exceeding zealous for the traditions of their fathers, and thought they were doing God service in expelling me from their house. But I praised God with all my heart that I was counted worthy to suffer shame for the love I bear the truths of God's word; and I went on my way rejoicing. All this came upon me for having in my bundle of tracts several on the Life and Death question, and they were missing; what became of them I am not able to say—but they were missing.

Here on the Cape the Life and Death question has not been held forth. It makes it a rather hard place for me, but I am willing to "stem the storm". I know the truth of God must and will prevail among those who love him; and there are a goodly number on the Cape whose minds are candid, open to conviction. I have been heard with great respect and attention; have had a lecture almost every evening, until I came to Provincetown. There I could not get a hearing; yet I visited many families, scattered many tracts, and left. I expect to give four or five lectures here at Truro. The Bible doctrines (so called) are taking root and springing up all around Truro and Wellfleet. God is in his truth, and with those who hold it forth, and I feel encouraged. My health is good, praise God. B. SPAULDING.

Truro, Mass., Dec. 15th.

From C. C. Bragg.

BRO. GRANT:—How I prize the weekly visits of the Crisis cannot better be expressed than to say, that every article is as attentively perused as epistles from my best and nearest friends. I pray that every article, whether doctrinal or practical, where truth is developed, may have due weight upon the mind and conduct of every reader, and every contributor may have the mind and spirit of Christ to direct them for the edification, encouragement and instruction of its readers, and that you, Bro. Grant, may have wisdom from above and strength of body and mind for your arduous duties. I am aware that every energy of the christian should be in active service to be useful to the church and the world, and all the armor on to stand the trial of their faith.

But, alas! there is not only too much idleness among the watchmen, but very many are at "ease in Zion." They are only idle in the vineyard of the Lord. Probably there never was a time when people were more busy in matters of pleasure or profit, hurrying to and fro, than at the present time. Ministers and people can hurry to the war meeting, the lyceum, the fair, donation parties, pic nics, &c., go early and remain late if they wish; but the fatigue and loss of time for religious meetings is too much. So the dear sisters can toil early and late to gratify the "lust of the eyes," and foster the love for the fashions of the world in themselves and children. O the tyrant, fashion! the destroyer of so much good and no doubt the destroyer of many souls with everlasting destruction. Time spent worse than useless, if properly used, might render mothers and their children ornaments in the church and useful members of society; whereas if they are church members, they are only a clog and a blight on the influence of the church, and as members of society are like toys for children to amuse for the time being, but of no lasting benefit. Where there is the most light, or might be if received, and where there are or might be the most and best privileges if improved, is seemingly the greatest apathy. The last trumpet will soon arouse our slumber. O! let us buy oil, and have our lamps trimmed.

That there are noble-minded and self-sacrificing men and women in this glorious cause, I am truly thankful for. Dear sisters, readers of and writers for the Crisis, that feel the importance of not being conformed to this world, and are willing to wage war (not with carnal weapons) against the sins of the present age, let us hear from you through the Crisis. How encouraging to the pilgrim to know that others are striving and overcoming in like precious faith. May all that love the Lord in sincerity and truth be kept by his power from the evils of the world, having not only the "form of godliness," but the "power" also. Your sister, hoping for eternal life only through Christ when he comes. C. C. BRAGG.

Waltham, Vt., Dec. 7, '62.

From Bro. G. Moyer.

BRO. GRANT:—The conference at Rensellear, Ind., came off as previously appointed in the Crisis, beginning Dec. 31, and continuing until the 9th. It was truly a good meeting to the church at Rensellear. Preachers present, D. R. and M. S. Mansfield, A. F. Servis, and Geo. Moyer. The preaching during the meeting was well adapted to the times. After the Sunday morning meeting, we repaired to the water, and three willing souls were baptized into Christ; and another on Monday, made in all four that were baptized during the meeting. Sunday afternoon was devoted to ordination and the Lord's Supper. Bro. David Halstead, a man highly esteemed by the church, and what is more, truly devoted to God, was duly set apart to the work of the ministry; and bids fair to do honor to the cause of Christ. Immediately after the ordination, we attended to the Lord's Supper, which we think was truly refreshing to one and all; so that on the whole, as was remarked by one, we think the meeting has left an impression on the minds of community, that will not soon be forgotten. GEO. MOYER.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Lake Village, N. H., Nov. 22d, 1862, of diphtheria, ORRIN F., son of Bro. E. H. Wheeler, aged nineteen years.

Orrin enlisted in the fifteenth Regiment N. H. V., and remained in camp at Concord about five weeks, when he was overtaken by disease, and returned home to die in the arms of his affectionate parents. Soon after his return home, he manifested much seriousness of mind, and expressed great sorrow for his past sinfulness in profaning God's name, and in neglecting his great salvation. He sent for christians to visit and pray with him, and manifested deep penitence of heart and earnest solicitation for reconciliation to God, until deliverance came, and he seemed to rest confidently in the Savior, expecting to share in the glorious "first Resurrection." J. COUCH.

Died at Wolcottville, Conn., Dec. 9th, 1862, of consumption, HELLEN J., daughter of Edward M. and Sarah A. Mix, aged six years.

Hellen was a very good and very thoughtful girl. She was not afraid to die. She wanted her father to read the last few verses of the 15th of 1 Cor., and was delighted with the idea that death would be swallowed up in victory, when this mortal shall put on immortality; and anticipated meeting her father and mother in the kingdom of God. It is hard to lose these little ones, but they are taken from the evil to come; and I hope and pray this heavy stroke will prove a great blessing to Bro. and Sr. Mix, in causing them to live near the Lord, that they may meet Hellen on the morning of the resurrection, and forever join with her in praising Him who hath brought life and immortality to light, and provided such a blessed home for all that love him. We had a profitable waiting before the Lord at the funeral. May God bless them all is my prayer. J. K. BELLOWS.

☞ There are in London 2,800 streets, which if placed in a single line would measure a distance of 3000 miles, or twice the distance between Calais and Constantinople. A person walking ten miles a day all the year round, Sundays excepted, would be occupied the whole year in walking through every street, and at the end of the year would find that a new London had risen up in the meantime.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the Scotia we have news from Liverpool Dec. 6th, Queenstown the 7th.

The French Government has concluded contracts for the supply of the army in Mexico for two years. A prolonged occupation is inferred from this.

The cotton famine and distress in France were increasing in severity.

The English Government has ordered to be delivered as soon as possible 1200 miles of cable to complete the telegraphic connection with India.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Headquarters Army of the Potomac, Dec. 16.—During last night the army evacuated their position on the opposite side of the river. The movement was a perilous one, but was conducted in safety.

Our artillery was the first to cross. The last of the infantry brought up the rear shortly after daylight. The enemy never discovered the movement until too late to do us any harm.

As soon as the last man was over the pontoon bridges were removed, cutting off all communication. Our wounded are all safe on this side of the river.

There was a heavy wind all last night, with considerable rain, which assisted us in preventing the rebels from learning our intentions.

New York, Dec. 17. The Times gives the following account of the withdrawal of our troops from Fredericksburg. It says the movement commenced at dark Monday night. All the sick and wounded were removed during the day to hospital tents this side.

The withdrawal of our forces had been determined on at a council of all the corps commanders. The undertaking was regarded as perilous, but if successful would rescue the army from another battle, which would accomplish little except the destruction of valuable troops.

The troops had received no intimation of a retreat and had laid down on their arms for the night. When the order was given to fall in, the troops supposed it was for a night assault on the enemy's works, and were not undeceived until they found themselves on the pontoons crossing the stream. The bridges were covered with earth to deaden the sound of artillery; the high wind and darkness prevented the rebels hearing or seeing the movement.

Philadelphia, Dec. 17. The Press publishes dispatch from Gen. Burnside to Gen. Halleck, announcing the withdrawal of the army from Fredericksburg. Gen. Burnside says:

"Feeling fully convinced that the position in front could not be carried, and as it was a military necessity either to attack or retire, and as a repulse would have been disastrous to us under existing circumstances, the army was withdrawn without loss either of property or men."

New York, Dec. 16. The Herald states that the whole number of killed, wounded and missing in Franklin's grand division is 5932.

Gen. French went into the action with 7000 men; to-night, two days after the battle, but 1200 men have reported to him.

The entire loss in the corps of Gen. Couch, consisting of the divisions of Gens. Howard, French and Hancock, and which on the morning of the battle contained 40 regiments, amounting at least to 20,000 men, is about 10,000.

The loss in Gen. Reynold's corps, of Franklin's grand division is thought to be nearly 4000.

The following are the estimated losses in the three grand divisions:

The total in the right grand division, 7505; centre grand division, 2050; left grand division, 3050. Total, 13,505. It is believed that these figures will fall under rather than exceed the official reports.

It is not using too strong an expression to say that in this battle we were butchered. The loss of the enemy in comparison with ours must be insignificant.

The Times editorially says: The public of course feel very much discouraged. The scene opened so finely on Thursday that they expected it would continue to be illuminated with glory, until the arrival of the expected hour when our fluttering banners would be borne into Richmond with the sweep of 150,000 gallant soldiers of the Union; but, instead of this, the brightness of Thursday darkened into the carnage and gore of Saturday, and to-day we behold our great army, its banners drooping and dripping with blood, encamped on the spot from which less than a brief week ago it started out on its work of conquest. It is discouraging, and none but a fool would attempt to conceal it. What next? We know not, we know nothing of Halleck's plans, or of the plans of Gen. Burnside, or of the President. We have still, however, our army, which, with proper leadership, is ample for the work.

The correspondent of the New York Post remarks: "The President and Gen. Halleck confidently expected Burnside to succeed in routing the enemy from his position at once. The military situation has a decided effect upon Congress. There is anxiety upon almost every countenance, and some are almost discouraged. Nearly all, however, are hopeful and firm in view of the prospect before us."

New York, Dec. 17. A sudden and gloomy spirit broods over this city. Men are disheartened. The movement on Thursday was hailed with delight by the "on to Richmond" men. "Something was to be done now." "The great blow to the rebellion was to be given." Then came the cruel hoax about the landing of Banks—cruel because it revived hopes that were doomed to sudden disappointment. Then the reverses beyond the Rappahannock seemed to fill up the measure. The people seem to be indifferent to the war, save in this—"we have enough blood uselessly shed—we don't wish to see any more men slaughtered."

We are amid startling rumors. It is said that all the State military are to be sent on at once to Washington. The New York 7th, 71st and 37th are said to be ordered off on Friday; and all the remaining troops for Banks' expedition will be detained and sent on to Washington.

Washington, Dec. 18. It is useless to speculate on the probable action of Congress during the coming week, as everything depends upon the war news. If we have victory, all is well, and the backbone of the rebellion is broken. Other columns are converging toward Richmond, and our troops will eat their Christmas dinner in the rebel capital.

Apprehensions are entertained in the Northern States for the safety of California, in view of the evident designs of Louis Napoleon on the Pacific coast.

It appears that the Paymaster's Department is able to procure only about $800,000 per day for the soldiers' wages, while the demand is $3,000,000. This fact is owing to the inability of the manufacturers to supply the notes.

Cairo, Ill., Dec. 18. The train from Jackson to Columbus was fired into to-day by guerrillas. No damage was done.

An arrival from Vicksburg reports that the rebels are vigorously fortifying that place. Report says they have extended their works back from the river side eight miles. Seventy guns are mounted on the river side, and two hundred in all. The citizens have been some time busy packing up preparatory to evacuating the place upon the opening of the anticipated Federal attack.

Fortress Monroe. Dec. 19. Gen. Foster's forces have taken Kinston, N. Y., capturing 500 prisoners and eleven pieces of artillery.

The details of the victory show that the march was a continued series of fighting, in which all distinguished themselves. Several bayonet charges took place.

The rebels are reported having 15,000 men, and their loss in killed and wounded is heavy; 500 were taken prisoners.

A Lieutenant Colonel of the 96th N. Y. Regiment was killed.

Cairo, Ill., Dec. 20—midnight. A body of rebel cavalry, estimated at from 2000 to 8000, made a raid on the railroad three miles this side of Jackson, Tenn., yesterday morning. After firing on a train, they tore up the track for a considerable distance, and burned a long trestle work.

Gen. Banks has gone to New Orleans. His fleet will rendezvous at Ship Island for capture of Mobile. His orders are to supercede Gen. Butler unless countermanded by the President; consequently there is no doubt entertained by those usually well informed, of the removal of Gen. Halleck and Meigs for incompetency.

New York, Dec. 20. The Tribune has the following editorial paragraph: We are informed by a letter from Washington that Mr. Seward has tendered his resignation as Secretary of State. The resignation was suddenly determined upon, and will probably be accepted.

Washington, Dec. 22. The President has acknowledged the reception of the resignation of the Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, and the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Chase, and has informed them that after due deliberation he has come to the conclusion that the acceptance of their resignations would be incompatible with the public welfare. The President has, therefore, requested both Mr. Seward and Mr. Chase to resume their respective functions as Secretary of State and Treasury. The two Secretaries have accordingly resumed their places as heads of their respective departments.

Gen. Burnside has not resigned, but throws the blame of his recent disaster upon Gen. Halleck, who alleges that it was "I that did it."

Notices, &c.

Notice.

I would inform my friends that the work on the KINGDOM OF GOD and THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES is now in the printer's hands, and will be ready for distribution, probably, by the 1st of Jan. I am desirous of issuing a Tract on the Four GREAT MONARCHIES, that I have written by request. It is ready for the press. It will contain considerable historical information, an exposition of Dan. 11 : 44, the Ten-Toe Kingdoms, and the Ten Kings of Rev 17. This little work will be illustrated with wood cuts. I cannot tell exactly what the price of either will be, but will give due notice.

I wish to say to my friends, I desire your assistance. Send in your orders, with the money, and where, and how the books must be sent. Come, dear brethren and sisters, if we ever make sacrifice, it must be now. Every thing portends that the Judge is at the door. I thank kind friends for help thus far afforded me, but I have not received one half of what I need. Who will help me? who? My address is S. S. BREWER, South Glastenbury, Conn.

Notice for Iowa.

The Quarterly Conference for the East part will be held at Strawberry Point, Clayton Co., to commence Jan. 2d, 1863, in the evening, and continue over Lord's day.

Also, a Quarterly Conference for the West part will be held at Boylin Grove, Butler Co., to commence Jan. 16th, 1863, and continue over Lord's day. The President, Eld. Castle Churchill, will preside over this last meeting.

P. S. Please send applications for quarterly meetings at an early time.

PETER S W. DEYO, Clerk.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference in Corinna, to commence Jan. 1st, and continue over the following Sabbath. Brn. York and Read are expected to be present to preach the word. Other brethren are invited to come, and we hope Bro. J Hemenway will come with his northern army. Come, brethren, one and all, to this feast. We intend it to be a free meeting, and wholly for the worship of God. It is a good time with us now. I have baptized thirteen, and expect to plant as many more soon. The war of God is going on in this vicinity, and it will prosper under the preaching of present truth. I expect to meet Bro. York in Bradley, Dec. 25th. JOHN BILLINGS.

Notice.

It is true, only a few come to hear, though Second Advent meetings are held on Sunday afternoon and evening each week, for the present, in "Marshall's Hall," (over Marshall & Swan's store), Maine Street, Belfast, Me. ### A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Battle of the Nations.

TUNE.—"Marching Along."

Come, let us prepare, for the kingdom is near,
When Christ with his army in glory will appear;
Then gird on your armor, all ye saints of the Lord,
Contending for the faith that's revealed in his word.

CHORUS.

Marching along! we'll keep marching along,
Contending for the faith as we're marching along:
With Christ for our leader we cannot go wrong;
Then gird on your armor, and keep marching along.

The signs of his coming we've seen in the sky;
The anger of nations on earth tell it nigh;
The heathen are gathering from near and from far,
With swords and with spears, for the Armageddon war.

The people are scoffing at Christ and his word;
They're joined with the heathen—have taken up their sword;
They fight for the kingdoms at war with the Lord,
Have doff'd the christian armor for carnal spear and sword.

Then let the heathen rage—both the weak and the strong,
And gather round about, for their raging can't be long,
For soon the trump will sound, and the King of kings will come,—
The earth will then be changed, and the will of God be done.

Then let us watch and pray, till the loud trumpet's voice
Shall hail the bright morn, when the saints shall all rejoice,—
Lo! this is our God—we have waited for him long,
As we shouted on our journey in our marching along.

CHORUS.

Marching along! we'll keep marching along,
Contending for the faith as we're marching along.
With Christ for our leader we cannot go wrong;
Then glory—hallelujah! we'll keep marching along.

Sketches by the Wayside.—No. 7.

"God is love." As the sun is light, and from its inexhaustible fullness is constantly pouring forth that light to bless the heart of man, and all the works of creation, so God pours forth the infinite plenitude of his love to us, through Jesus Christ. It is not Christ alone who is compassionate and loving to sinful man, but all the manifestations of mercy, love and forbearance we see in the life and words of Jesus, first moved the great heart of Jehovah; and he so loved the world in its depth of wretchedness, in its high-handed rebellion against heaven, that he sent forth his only begotten Son on a mission of salvation to the perishing, and poured forth upon him without measure those same principles, those same sweet emotions; and thus when we mark their developments in the history of our Savior's life, we do but see the outpouring of the inexhaustible fount of his Father's love. Let us not then forget as we cling to Christ as one who has borne our grief and carried our sorrow; as one who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; as one who has suffered being tempted;—let us not forget, I say, that "our Father" in heaven is possessed of the same loving, tender, pitiful heart, and that as an earthly father pities his children, so the Lord pitieth them that are his, and fear him, for he knoweth their frame, and remembereth that they are dust, and that he is more willing to give his Holy Spirit to them that ask him, than earthly parents are to give good gifts unto their children.

Christ and the Father were one. The works of Christ were the works of the Father. The words of Christ were the words of the Father. He says, "If I do not the works of my Father," believe me not. I have not spoken of myself, but the Father which sent me; he gave a commandment what I should say, and what I should speak."

But there is another link to the golden chain fastened to the throne of the Eternal. It is thus expressed by the apostle John. "He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." This is the union prayed for by Jesus. That they all might be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also might be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." How clearly this expresses the kind of oneness which existed between the Father and Son. The very same unity is asked for all the disciples of Jesus, "that they may be one as we are one." As by the indwelling of the Father they were one, even so by the indwelling of Christ believers are one; one with Christ, one with God!

But what we designed particularly to notice, was the result of this oneness; the effect produced upon the individual heart, and upon the world. On this we might enlarge, but will be brief. In the first place we will say, that the same result will follow this union with God by the indwelling of Christ, that resulted from his oneness with the Father, viz.: Obedience to the divine will flowing from love to God. "If any man love me, he will keep my words." "He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings." There can be no union with God without love, for "he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God;" nor obedience to the words of Jesus without love.

The possessor of this love will bear fruit corresponding with the source from whence it emanates; therefore as that which permeated the heart of Jesus, and that which is shed forth in the hearts of the real disciples of Christ is from God, the fruit will be identical. There will be exhibited the same warm sympathy for the poor, the ignorant, the erring, and the sinful. Love will be the motive power, putting in action the renewed machinery of the mind for the benefit of others. Love will be the atmosphere in which the new-born soul breathes the element in which it lives.

When we see one whose zeal is great for some particular doctrine—for the building up of our sect, even to the compassing of sea and land to make one proselyte, who thank God that they are not as other men, who boast of their tithes and offerings, who wear the robes of sanctity, talk loud, and boast of their interest in the cause, offer up long prayers in public, and put their names with a large sum affixed on a subscription paper, and yet are surrounded with an atmosphere as chilling as a mid-winter's day when the storm-clouds obscure the light of the sun, and cast a gloom on all around; we may know assuredly that love of self, and not of God, is the motive power in that heart. How beautifully this pure love is described in 1 Cor. 13.

There is a sunny, cheerful, warming influence emanating from the heart aglow with love to God. It is catholic in its spirit. It demolishes sectarian walls, and greets every one who is seeking to live for Christ and labor for Christ, as a brother indeed. It seeks to convert men's hearts more than their heads, i. e., to have first of all pure principles in the heart, rather than correct theories in the head. It leads often to the closet for secret devotion and converse with Deity. It will more readily give to the destitute in the lowly cot, and visit the sick who are almost friendless, than to the popular object where public document announces the benefactor's offering. It seeks the lowly place, vaunting not itself, but while cheerfully offering all to God in faithful service, love counts herself an unprofitable servant, unworthy of a place of honor.

By these fruits the genuine disciple is known and read of all men. How fragrant is the odor of the ointment with which they are anointed. How pleasant the companionship of such loving hearts. How kind to the erring—how forgiving to those who trespass against them—how prone to excuse and palliate their faults. If such disciples abounded among those who bear the christian name, how many would be saved from skepticism and infidelity, and won to Christ. On whom rests the responsibility?

God's Peace.

"When the Lord gives peace, none can make trouble." So said a believer the other day, and I treasured up the saying in my heart. Does the Lord give this peace? Then I am content. No weapon formed against me can prosper. No trial or temptation can dismay. No grief can overwhelm, no tempests can destroy. Deep in the inner chambers of the heart the Lord gives peace—great peace—perfect peace,—peace that passeth knowledge. The surface may be rough, but the depths are quiet. The waves may toss, but they reach not those silent deeps where the peace of God abides—the inner calm, where earth's turmoil is unheard.

Sinner, the troubled sea that cannot rest, but casteth up mire and dirt, is your emblem. You have no peace. Will you not come and find the great peace of God? Let it sink down into your soul. The wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable. Let God first purge your heart, and then he will fill it with peace. And "when the Lord gives peace, none can make trouble."

Smiting the Image.

Has it commenced? I think it will be conceded that the image of Dan. 2: 34, has been fully perfected in all its material parts, and that we are living in the days of the kings or kingdoms in which the God of heaven was to set up a kingdom never to be destroyed; and if so, are we not justified in believing that the image is smitten on its feet? Does not that image embrace all the nations of note from the days of Babylon the Great until the end of time? "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel." Ps. 2: 8, 9.

How has this nation been broken? If it is made whole again, it has not been broken as a potter's vessel. But have we not often heard it said, "Our nation is all broken to pieces?" Is the smiting and breaking to pieces of such a great image the work of an instant? or must it, like all other prophecies, require time for its fulfillment?

The stone cut out of the mountain without hands smote the image on its feet; then we see the feet were broken first, and did not disappear, or were not driven away by the wind in a moment, but remained broken kingdoms and nations until the whole mighty structure was one mass of fragments, and then the wind carried them away, and no place was found for them.

From L. H. Covell.

BRO. GRANT:—We have enjoyed a good visit from Bro. J. V. Himes. His appointment was given out to be in Pike Township, Muscatine Co., from the 14th to the 30th of Nov. But when he learned more perfectly the situation of the scattered ones in this region, he saw fit to divide his time and speak to the people of Muscatine and Wilton. So in accordance with those arrangements he came to Wilton on Tuesday, the 25th, and spent three days with us much to our edification. We obtained of our Methodist brethren in this place the use of their new and commodious church for him to speak in. He had a good congregation of attentive listeners. Some of the most prominent of our sister church were in attendance, together with their pastor; and the whole passed off very pleasantly and we trust with profit to all. We feel very grateful to God that he should thus put it into the heart of this good apostle of the pilgrim church to come among us, though his stay was necessarily short; yet we hope it will be as the droppings before a most plenteous shower. We very much need some one here in this region who can speak to us the words of life, and instruct us more fully in a knowledge of the coming kingdom. We need one that can build up more than he pulls down; and had we been able to sustain such an one, we should ere this had one in this field; but we have not the heart to ask one whom God has endowed with wisdom sufficient for these last days to come among us and labor, when we have not the means to reward him for the same. Yet these good servants of our heavenly King will do well to bear in mind that they are commanded to go into "all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," relying upon the Author of all existence for that support which they need; who has promised them that they shall not want if they put their trust in him.

Friday, the 28th, Bro. Himes left here for Muscatine, and staid over the Sabbath. He occupied the Baptist church in that place, and spoke to a full house. May the good Lord go with him in all his journeyings, and bless him in his labors.

Wilton Junction, Muscatine Co., Iowa.

From P. S. W. Deyo.

BRO. GRANT:—There is one thing that has weighed on my mind. I see that some brethren write from Iowa stating that they want to have preaching; and this is the first we know of them. I am traveling the best part of my time, and there are many we would be glad to call and talk with, but we don't know where they are. Many of them do not take the paper; they do not know of us. Who will give us the necessary information? We may pass and repass your door. We would like to say, How do you do? Will not trouble you with a sermon, unless you want us to do so. If we did, we should like to stay long enough to get soldiers enlisted for Jesus. Letters directed personally to men wanted will save much trouble. Public request opens the way to be imposed upon. A word to the wise is sufficient. I am well pleased with Bro. Munger's "Notes by the Way." Hope all will read them, and lend to those that are not subscribers. I owe much of my present light, position and influence, to books and tracts sent me, about 1855, by Bro. Hastings. I wished many times that I had got them sooner, but thank the Lord, I am what I am. How those precious truths animate me to face the storm! The work will soon be done.

From Bro. A. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—We have a few in this place who are looking for the return of the Master. I think if some faithful brother should come here, that a goodly number might be found in this city that would come in and form a church. If you know of any such, send him here. He will find a field of usefulness in the cause of the Master. Our city numbers about 8000; is forty-five miles west of Chicago, on the Fox river. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R. passes through the place. I think the west is the place for labor. There have been but few preachers in this vicinity. A great many have never heard our views set forth in order. Brethren, think of it. New England has been flooded with light, while this part of the vineyard is neglected. Yours in hope of the gospel.

Aurora, Kane Co., Ill.

From Eld. Geo. Alkire.

BRO. GRANT:—I am now eighty years old. Sixty-two a church member, sixty years speaking to the public. In my observations during all this time, I have not seen such apostasy in all the churches, both among preachers and members. Surely the Gentile rule is near at a close. I commenced in the reformation of 1802, in the old Christian church; followed that until about 1822, was then blended with the reformation of Alexander Campbell, until the commencement of the present year 1862; and then advanced with the light I had with the present reformation of the near coming of Christ; organized a church of God with its Elders and Deacons in the town of Barry, Ill., surrounded by six of the popular sects, with their meeting-houses and wealth, which have all borne their part in persecuting us under the influence of prejudice. We number thirty members, which have united during this year, more additions than all the rest put together. We meet on every Lord's day, and commemorate the death of Christ,—and take weekly contribution. We are destitute of any efficient preacher. If any zealous minister should be traveling in the western states, we think there is a good field for their labors in Pike, Adams, Hancock and Brown counties, Illinois.

Barry, Ill., Dec. 1st.

From Bro. P. H. Lawrence.

To all the dear saints, scattered abroad, greeting:—Beloved, a short time since the small cloud was discovered by one or two of the servants, a little in the distance, which was hailed with unspeakable joy by the few lone members of the household in this place, and seized by faith and held. It continued to rise, until, like the star of Bethlehem, it came and stood over our little village. Then the mercy-drops commenced to fall, and have continued to fall until drops are exchanged for streams, and streams for a mighty river, which is still rising. Even now, all the old boundaries of denominational sectarianism are not found; but Methodists, Baptists, Adventists, hitherto astonishingly divided, are all making a mighty rush for the qualification now seen to be necessary for the soon coming inheritance of the saints. Still the work goes on; backsliders are reclaimed, and sinners are coming to Christ. Amen, Hallelujah.

Fragments.

To struggle against adversity, or murmur at one's lot, whatever it may be, is like the condition of a bird that is fluttering and beating itself against the wires of its cage. The more it struggles, the harder its fate, while quiet submission is the only course to ensure peace or comfort.

Whenever there is an intense longing for more grace, or a greater conformity to the will of God, and the heart is bent on attaining it, then we may be sure that the great adversary will be more vigilant in his attacks, and a two-fold watchfulness is necessary in order to resist him.

The most easily besetting sin of every human being is that of unbelief. To doubt the word of God, and, in fact, his very existence, is the prevailing tendency of all; and therefore the Scripture is so emphatic in its injunctions relative to faith.

A. C. J.

For the Crisis.

Good Citizens.

"The Advents don't make good citizens." So said an influential member of one of the sister churches to one of the despised little ones. He did not mean to convey the idea they were less kind and faithful in their families, or less kind and obliging as neighbors; but not so good citizens; that is, they did not take interest enough in the things of this world to keep well posted on all topics of conversation that interest the citizens generally. Well, thought I, that is as it should be, according to the word of God. Let your conversation be in heaven, from whence ye "look for the Savior." If our citizenship is in heaven, if we have laid up our inheritance there, and are only pilgrims and strangers here, just traveling hastily through this country, it is impossible to become much interested in the affairs of others.

But the question arose in my mind, can the same be said of all who call themselves Adventists? are there not some who seemingly take just as much interest in the things of this world? are wholly absorbed in things seen and temporal, of whom the world have occasion to say, "what do ye more than others?" O! the reckoning day is soon coming. If we do not bestir ourselves speedily, we shall be weighed in the balance and be found wanting.

Homestead.

The homestead law is passed, giving one hundred and sixty acres to each settler. There is in this region any amount of good upland prairie unappropriated, generally counted good wheat land. Some few chances yet for bottom land, timber and water. Other chances within a few miles, we are informed, for good locations. We would like to have a few settlers of the right stripe. Write me, and I will endeavor to keep some of the best locations for you. If it is unsafe to come through Mo., come through Iowa to Council Bluffs, then to Kansas River, and toward Fort Riley, or on Salina road to the head of Lyon's Creek, twenty miles south of Kansas or Kaw River.

Cause in Stoneham, Me., and Vicinity.

As it is a subject of comparative interest to the brethren scattered abroad to hear, at intervals, from parts of the Master's vineyard more or less remote, it is thought that a word in reference to this place and vicinity might not be altogether a useless item in the aggregate of like precious faith. During the past summer, we have had but little preaching. Brn. Wellcome and Haggett were here on two occasions, and preached the word to the edification of all who had "ears to hear."

On Sunday, 25th of May, we organized a Sabbath school and Bible class, and though numerically small, it was not without interest and benefit to those who attended. During the inclemency of the winter months, it is not deemed advisable to continue the Sunday school in this place. Recently, through the agency of Bro. Wellcome, we have for a part of the time engaged the labors of Eld. O. H. Leverton, who preaches "Christ, the power of God and the wisdom of God." Since the commencement of a short series of meetings here, there have been manifest signs of awakening interest—all seem pleased to hear. Not only here, but at West Stoneham and West Lovell, there are tokens of a deepening work, which is truly desirable. At the latter place, under the fostering care of Bro. Elisha Johnson, the little flock baptized last 4th of July, by Eld. Haggett, have been struggling to maintain their identity amid surrounding unhallowed influences, assured of the fulfillment of a hundred fold with persecution in this world, and life everlasting in that to come.

A Letter for the Children.

DEC. 1ST, 1862.

Dear Children of the Try Company:—I am not a little girl, nor like sister Maria, twenty-two; but am more than twice twenty-two; yet I dearly love all little children, and especially all who are trying to be good, and to gain a home in God's blessed kingdom. When reading sister Maria's letters, I almost wished myself a little girl again, so I could join the Try Company too. Then I thought, I drink neither tea or coffee, I love to read the children's letters, answer the Bible questions, and study out the enigmas too, and perhaps you would let me join your subscription list, and help make up the dollars to buy tracts to do somebody good.

I have often wished, dear children, to write you, but when a little girl I did not enjoy the privileges to learn you now have, and felt that others could write very much better. But I want to say a few words to you. The dear Savior says, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself." I know you all love candy dearly, but can you not deny yourselves a momentary gratification for His sake who took little children "up in his arms and blessed them," and is ready now, even waiting, to bless each one of you, if you only go to him? He was rich, yet for your sakes became poor; and he kindly notices every labor of love done to his children, as though it were done to himself. It is good to begin early to practice self-denial.

Now cannot each one ask some friend, elder brother or sister, uncle or aunty, to join your subscription list, and begin this first day of December to lay aside one cent a month to put with your money? Just try now, and see how much you can get, by self-denial and a little effort. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." Let us love and serve the blessed Savior with all our heart, then he will give us a home in those glorious mansions which he hath gone to prepare for those that love him.

FROM AUNTY.

I should like to ask a few questions about trees. 1. What is the first tree mentioned in the Bible? 2. What is the last tree mentioned, and what is its use? 3. To what tree are the righteous compared? 4. What five kings were hung on five trees? 5. Whose bones were buried under a tree in Jabesh? 6. What kind of trees did Solomon send for to Hiram, king of Tyre, with which to build the temple?

Answers and Questions.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I wish to answer a few questions found in the Crisis of Dec. 2d. 1. Jonah had a gourd grow over his head in one night.—Jonah 4: 3. 2. Moses' rod became a serpent. Ex. 4: 3. 3. Moses was in Mount Sinai forty days and forty nights.—Ex. 24: 18. 4. Moses smote the rock, and it brought forth water in the desert of Zin. Num. 20: 11. Zelophehad's daughters were married to their father's brother's sons.—Num. 36: 11. 6. Joshua commanded the sun and moon to stand still.—Josh. 10: 12. 8. I would like to ask a few questions. 1. At what place did Christ commence his public ministry? 2. Where did the Israelites halt and sing praises after finding water. 3. What people were utterly destroyed by David and his army? 4. Who was the father of Obadiah? 5. Where did Cain flee after killing his brother Abel? 6. Where were Ananias and Sapphira struck dead?

For the Try Company.

DEAR FRIENDS:—As I am a member of the Try Company, I would like to propose a few questions for you to answer through the children's department. In the first place I will thank Bro. Grant for being so kind to the children as to let them have a corner in his valuable paper.

1. What did Christ once do to little children? 2. Who was thrown among lions for praying to God? 3. What woman prayed day and night? 4. Who prayed from the stomach of a whale? 5. What came to pass when Jesus prayed on the mount of transfiguration? 6. What people made long prayers?

EMMA J. A. LAKE.

Mechanicsville, Iowa.

FROM A. J. SCAMMON.

Eld. Grant:—I would like to join the Try Company, and also sign the pledge. I will drink neither tea nor coffee, nor any thing the pledge prohibits. Please insert my name, and I will try to be a faithful member. I wish to answer some questions asked in the Crisis of Nov. 25th. "Jael drove a nail through the head of Sisera."—Judges 4: 21. "Sampson slew one thousand Philistines with a jawbone."—Judges 15: 16. "About the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice and gave up the ghost."—Mark 15: 34, 37.

ANNIE J. SCAMMON, 12 years.

Portland, Me.

FROM M. E. THAYER.

Eld. Grant:—I saw in the Crisis, a few weeks since, something about a Tract Society for the children. I was very much pleased with it, and think it will do much good. A Crisis came this morning that had been mislaid, with the Canadian puzzle in it. I will send an answer:—

Do you love Jesus,
And to him pray?
Are you kind and good?
Say, children, say?

Plainfield, Mass. MOSES E. THAYER.

FROM M. A. FOSTER.

Bro. Grant:—I am six years old. I do not drink tea or coffee, and want to join your Try Company. I have learned twelve pieces of poetry in the Crisis, which I speak in Sabbath school.

Yours with respect, MARY A. FOSTER.

Acrostical Enigma.

I am composed of 66 letters.

My 1, 40, 18, 26, 50, 45, is an attribute of God.

My 2, 61, 8, 26, 50, 13, 33, 17, 38, is a nation of great antiquity, whose history may be traced back to the time of Moses.

My 3, 29, 40, 6, 48, were ancient inhabitants of the land of Canaan, a warlike people, and of gigantic stature.

My 4, 16, 27, one borrowed letter, 41, 34, 54, 11, 8, was the name given by Hezekiah, king of Judah, to the brazen serpent that Moses had set up in the wilderness, and which had been preserved by the Israelites to that time. The superstitious people having made an idol of this serpent, Hezekiah caused it to be burnt, and in derision gave it this name.

My 5, 20, 33, 53, 58, 2, 66, 47, 38, 62, is a virtue that should be found in every household.

My 6, 30, 15, 46, 58, 44, is something hateful in the sight of God, strictly forbidden in his holy word, disgraceful to rational creatures, and every way inimical to the spirit of christianity.

My 7, 51, 41, 30, 23, 50, 45, was distinguished for his graceful stature and superior beauty, as well as his vices and unnatural rebellion.

My 8, 5, 35, 21, 53, 38, 7, 59, 23, was a disciple of Christ, remarkable for his transparent sincerity of character.

My 9, 20, 50, 25, 31, is a bird that has long been remarkable for its love to its parents, whom it never forsakes, but tenderly feeds and cherishes when they have become old and unable to provide for themselves. It is a bird of passage, and is spoken of as such in Scripture.

My 10, 35, 57, 15, 20, 63, many are in quest of.

My 11, 26, 45, 5, 34, was one of the cities of the plain which was destroyed by fire from heaven, and buried under the waters of the Dead Sea.

My 12, 65, 47, 23, 26, 40, 8, and one borrowed letter, "pacifieth great offences."

My 13, 5, 15, 33, is something that God appointed should be used in all the sacrifices that were offered to him. It is esteemed the symbol of wisdom and grace; also of perpetuity and incorruption.

My 14, 50, 23, 46, 20, 3, 38, 59, 13, 41, is a trait which every one admires, but few possess.

My 15, 61, 23, 12, is a well known sweet and beautiful flower, to which the Savior referred his hearers on a certain occasion, to reprove them for their want of confidence in the paternal providence of God. It was a flower held in the highest estimation by Solomon; for he had it wrought upon the molten sea and carved upon the two noted pillars of the Temple porch, and was the favorite in the flower imagery of his Song. I consider the feeling with which the Savior expressed himself when he referred to this incomparable flower, to use the language of another, "as the highest honor ever done to the study of plants." Wherever we meet with it, we behold "a never-failing witness to God's condescending care and mysterious providence—a picture of a sublime truth enfolded in its petals, that God's eternal power may be felt and known in a leaf as in a world, and that the footprints of God's loving presence may be very near us, while to find them we are wandering far away."

My 16, 55, 65, 20, 24, 6, 32, 18, are helpful to the memory.

My 17, 36, 11, 25, 40, 58, 32, sheds a blasting influence over the finest affections and sweetest comforts of mankind.

My 18, 12, 58, 17, 45, 50, 25, 44, is a large tree, resembling, it is said, the mulberry-tree in leaf, and the fig in its fruit. It grows to a great height, and, though its grain is coarse, is much used in building. Our Lord alludes to it as the most difficult to be rooted up and transferred to another situation, probably for the reason that it strikes its large diverging roots deep into the soil.

My 19, 36, 61, 22, 9, 55, 3, 52, 31, 30, 4, and one borrowed letter, is an evil which greatly abounds, and which is not sufficiently watched against. It is entirely opposite to the whole tenor of the christian religion, and is expressly condemned and prohibited as evil. No practice hath more severe punishments denounced against it. It is an evidence of a weak and distempered mind, and is even indicative of ill-breeding and bad manners. It is the abhorrence of all wise and good men. It is exceedingly injurious to society, and inconsistent with the relation we bear to each other as christians. It is branded with the epithet of folly. It is perverting the design of speech, and is opposite to the example of Christ, whom we profess to follow.

My 20, 5, 51, 30, 58, 24, is a province of Yucatan in Spanish America, where tobacco was first found by the Spaniards.

My 21, 37, 11, 49, 63, is a shrub bearing beautiful flowers; of which mention is made by the prophet Jeremiah, and to which the Lord likens certain individuals.

My 22, 20, 2, 5, 43, was one of the wisest men of his time except Solomon. He was called likewise by another name, and appears under that name in the titles to several Psalms. He was a principal master of the Temple music.

My 23, 50, 36, 16, is the greatest of all graces; it answers the end of the law, resembles the inhabitants of a better world, and without it every other attainment is of no avail.

My 24, 61, 15, is what Moses said God made his people to "suck out of the rock."

My 25, 3, 36, 42, 25, 59, 4, 26, is a word that occurs but once in the Bible, and is applied to God; and to him only can it be applied with propriety.

My 26, 16, 58, 35, 46, 54, is one of the prime elements of an evil heart, and is classed with the greatest of sins.

My 27, 12, 9, 18, 50, 55, is an herb generally known, and often mentioned in Scripture. It is mentioned as one of the smallest of herbs.

My 28, 23, 31, 50, 33, 63, was the birthplace of the prophet Nahum.

My 29, 65, 15, 58, 24, 45, was the deity of the Ammonites, to whom human sacrifices were offered in the valley of Tophet. It was called likewise by another name.

My 30, 20, 49, 40, 25, 3, is what the Scriptures say "a bride can never forget."

My 31, 46, 15, 33, is a short garment worn by men in the Highlands, and by children in the Lowlands of Scotland.

My 32, 62, 22, 25, 4, 53, 23, is an appellation of God.

My 33, 59, 45, 55, 16, 25, 30, 8, 58, 42, is a virtue that we should all possess.

My 34, 24, 13, 56, 17, was a prophet who predicted the ruin of Israel when it was in great prosperity.

My 35, 62, 27, 53, 29, was the third station of the Israelites when coming out of Egypt.

My 36, 65, 58, 47, is what all should shun.

My 37, 15, 57, 63, was begotten by Caleb, the son of Jephunneh.

My 38, 11, 54, 2, 30, 43, was a prophet illustrious for his union of prudence and faithfulness.

My 39, 11, is an exclamation denoting surprise, joy, or grief.

My 40, 48, 53, 65, 30, 27, was a great prophetical writer.

My 41, 65, 26, 50, 8, was a city formerly distinguished for its grandeur and opulence, but is now almost entirely decayed.

My 42, 26, was the name given to the altar erected by the two tribes and a half who were settled beyond Jordan.

My 43, 30, 46, 38, was a city of Palestine, where Jesus restored a widow's son to life as they were carrying him out to be buried.

My 44, 6, 16, 25, 12, is an ore.

My 45, 17, 62, 33, 22, is a small plant used in South America as a substitute for tea.

My 46, 26, 15, 44, 38, 19, 9, 48, is censured in the Scriptures. It was one of the sins for which God destroyed Sodom.

My 47, 4, is the plural termination of certain nouns and of verbs.

My 48, 63, 28, 58, 39, 47, 66, was one of the cities of refuge or asylums which Moses appointed for the children of Israel and for the stranger that sojourned among them, that whosoever should kill a person unawares, or undesignedly, might retire thither, and have time to prepare his defence before the judges; and that the kinsmen of the deceased might not pursue and kill him.

My 49, 25, 11, 26, 59, is what every one should have.

My 50, 10, 15, is a nocturnal bird to which David likens himself.

My 51, 5, 15, 7, 38, is a fish of a beautiful yellow, variegated with orange, caught on the shores of England.

My 52, 40, 9, 15, 35, 51, 22, 43, was the birthplace of Luther, the great apostle of the Reformation.

My 53, 41, 9, is an animal to which the Lord refers us, to reprove us for our ingratitude.

My 54, 30, 54, 61, 33, 39, 30, was a christian widow who lived at Joppa, and who, having fallen sick and died, was restored to life through the intercession of the apostle Peter. She was celebrated for her charity to the poor.

My 55, 25, 46, 26, 28, of all others the most dangerous fault, proceeds from want of sense or want of thought. It is a great enemy to the divine life, and has often provoked the Spirit to withdraw its presence from those who possessed it. It was this that provoked God to leave Peter. And the apostle Paul was like to be carried away with it, even under those high enjoyments he was favored with; therefore he had a messenger of Satan sent to buffet him.

My 56, 4, 36, 12, is universally admitted to be one of the blackest passions in the human heart. Christians should carefully guard against it; for it produces much unhappiness to those who possess it.

My 57, 23, 58, 24, is a quadruped of America, nearly resembling a dog, but mute and melancholy.

My 58, 11, 4, 26, 50, 25, is one of the noblest traits of a great mind.

My 59, 15, 40, 9, 18, 5, was the daughter of Belus, king of Tyre.

My 60, 53, 20, 16, 25, signifies, metaphorically, in the Scriptures, trouble and afflictions.

My 61, 26, 50, 23, 7, 33, 3, 25, 48, God abhors, and has declared shall not inherit his kingdom, but shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death.

My 62, 11, 25, is a valuable commodity.

My 63, 24, 15, 40, 4, 52, 48, 9, God has made a prerequisite to happiness. It is one of his essential attributes; and wherever it exists it is invariably productive of felicity.

My 64, one borrowed letter, 45, 61, 15, 46, 20, 12, is a virtue all preach, but few practice.

My 65, 23, 15, is what thousands complain of.

My 66, 57, 12, 1, 19, 35, 26, is a low herb, growing by roadsides.

My whole is a quotation from Scripture, and a test by which we may know whether we are living in conformity to the will of God or not.

"Occupy till I Come."

We from our Master have received
Our talents, great or small,
To occupy till He shall come,
And take account of all.

Lord, grant us grace to use aright
Whate'er thou hast bestowed;
Not slothful, hide thy gifts away—
To reap as we have sowed.

"The time is short." When Christ returns,
Shall we be faithful found?
Health, wealth, our all, belong to Him;
Have we increased our pound?

Looking for Jesus.

"And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—HEB. 9: 28.

(Concluded.)

Dr. John Thomas, of New York, the greatest writer on the prophecies that the world has ever produced since the days of the apostles, takes the position that the Papacy, in connection with all anti-christian powers, is to be overthrown by the coming of Christ in 1866. Nicholas Branch, a celebrated minister in the Baptist denomination, ends the 1260 years with the overthrow of the Papacy and the coming of Christ in 1866. Dr. Tyng, of Philadelphia, has his eye on 1866. J. A. Seiss, A. M., author of Lectures on the Epistle to the Hebrews, Baptist System Examined, etc., and Pastor of the Lombard St. Lutheran church, Baltimore, Md., in his Lectures on the Prophecies, published some six years ago, after surveying the whole field of prophetic vision, comes to the conclusion that we are within the circle of twenty years of the coming of Jesus! Mr. Shimeal, of the Presbyterian church of the city of New York, in a work which he has published on chronology, as the result of thirty years' hard study, has fixed on 1868 as the time for this age to close and Christ to come. Dr. J. Cumming, of the Church of Scotland, in his work called "The Great Tribulation," has fixed on 1867 for the overthrow of the Papacy and the coming of Jesus. John Stephenson, of the city of Toronto, C. W., in his chronological chart, which surpasses anything ever presented to the world on this subject, has fixed on 1866 for Jesus to make his second appearance on earth. Edward Irving, Drs. Elliott, T. Hamilton, N. L. Rice, J. Dowling, Duffield, and a score of other prophetical students, living and dead, had their minds fixed on 1866 as the time for the Papacy to fall, and the millennium to commence.

I think it must be clear to every unbiassed mind, that this period of time ends with the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven, and that he will then sit in judgment on the BEAST, and the LITTLE HORN, "and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it unto the end." Consequently we are near the end of Gentile rule. Already are we standing amid the rocking of the Roman earth, and the tottering of thrones. This grand and awful work commenced in February, 1848.

Louis Phillippe was strongly seated upon his throne, as it was supposed by earth's inhabitants, but in an hour unlooked for by the nations, he fled, and his throne was taken and carried through the streets, demolished and burned; and France was declared to be a Republic. A provisional committee was appointed in June following. Human blood ran freely in some of the streets of Paris. Rome feels the shock. The Pope is compelled to flee for his life. Off he goes in disguise, clad in the garb of a livery-stable tender, and takes shelter in Gaeta, in the kingdom of Naples, I think. The so-called Republican Government of France came to his rescue, and being joined by Austria, he was by their arms conveyed back to Rome, where he has ever since been protected by Austrian and French soldiers. In a few months a revolution took place in nearly all of the European kingdoms. Hungary fell, and its fall is fatal (notwithstanding L. Kossuth's prediction).

But a calm follows, and the cry of universal peace is made by a church-going people and the world, whilst the hearts of the lovers of the soon-coming King are made sad. To cheer them in their pilgrimage to the highlands of glory, a war breaks out between Russia and Turkey. Protestant England and infidel France come to the aid of Turkey. Onward they move in bloody conflict, until the power of Turkey is "dried up," so as to open the way for "the kings of the East" (the Jews) to return to the land of their fathers, and erect the "unwalled villages" of Ezekiel, which will constitute the power of attraction to bring Daniel's king of the North, or Ezekiel's "Gog" of the latter days, upon the "mountains of Israel," where he is to be overthrown by the coming of Jesus—Israel's King. But this terrible and bloody war closes, and Gog is turned back [the Autocrat of Russia] by a "hook of six teeth being put into his jaws." These teeth were the six nations represented at the Paris Conference—England, France, Sardinia, Turkey, Austria and Prussia. These six nations compelled him to sign those articles of peace, drawn up at that meeting, though he has broken almost every one of them in giving heed to the commands of God, Ezek. 38: 7,—"Be thou prepared; and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them."

Upon the closing up of this war, the Sultan, through the influence of the British Minister, who was at Constantinople, was persuaded to grant to the Jews, as well as the Protestants, the privilege of taking up their abode in Palestine, and enjoying their own religious views—a privilege which Jews have not enjoyed for ages. A calm succeeds this war, which robbed England of the flower of her army, won a few laurels for France, placed Russia in her true position before the world, and opened up a way for a remnant of the Jews to return to the land of their fathers. But sudden as a clap of thunder in a clear day, a war breaks out between Sardinia and Austria. Infidel France comes to the aid of Sardinia. Two powerful armies, numbering many hundred thousand of human beings, are on the battle-field. Such a slaughter of human beings in so short a time, has not been since the days of Napoleon I.

All this has served to weaken the power of the Pope, and to bring "the sick man" to his end, which is "destruction". Unexpected to the nations of the earth, Louis Napoleon proposes terms of peace to Austria, which terms are accepted by Austria, and Louis withdraws his army. With this act of Napoleon's the king of Sardinia was not well pleased. A calm follows this mighty slaughter of human beings.

Next, our ears are saluted with tidings from the East, that troubles have broken out in Syria. The Druses and Moslems are engaged in killing the so-called Christians. About one hundred and fifty villages are destroyed by fire, and thousands are made homeless and poor. All this is a sure omen that the day of Turkey's downfall is at hand. To-day the Government is completely bankrupt, living on borrowed capital, for which she has to pay 30 per cent per annum. The following is from the New York World:—"Commercial distress now pervades the whole empire, but more especially Constantinople and vicinity. The scarcity of money is unprecedented. There is money in the country, but it is hoarded up. No one seems to have confidence enough in the future to make any investments. Turkish funds have fallen some 20 per cent within a few months, and the government is completely bankrupt. Thousands of Turks, who have depended upon small salaries for their daily bread, have not been paid for a year. In Constantinople this financial pressure is shown in the reduced price of rents, goods, etc. Next winter (1860–61) we may expect a great amount of physical suffering from hunger and cold. But in the country around its effects are now still more manifest. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, are in prison for the non-payment of taxes. No one pretends to pay his debts. The mountains are full of brigands, who plunder all passers-by, and in some instances the regular fairs are unattended on account of the insecurity of the roads."

As sudden as a flash of lightning in a clear day, the tidings come from the East that Garibaldi, a man of destiny, is in Sicily, at the head of some eight hundred soldiers. He conquers and passes over into Italy, where his success astonishes the world. The civil power of the Pope wanes before his army, and Italy is being set free from the power of Popery. Not many months since, he gave utterance to the following words, in addressing the students of the University of Pava as to the cause of his country's ruin:—"In the midst of Italy, at its very heart, there is a cancer called Popery; an imposture called Popery. Yes, young men, we still have a formidable enemy; the more formidable because it exists among the ignorant classes, where it rules by falsehood, because it is sacreligiously covered with the cloak of religion. Its smiles are the smiles of Satan. This enemy, young men, is the priests, with few exceptions."

At last he places the crown upon the head of Victor Emanuel, so that instead of reigning over five millions, he now reigns over twenty-two millions of human beings. Then, like Cincinnatus, he resigns his commission, and retires from the field of blood and carnage, giving his soldiers to understand that he might be at their head when Spring should open, with an additional recruit of soldiers, if the cause of freedom demanded it.

The government of the United States has felt the electric shock. It found them totally unprepared for the bloody struggle which is before them. More than a million human beings have of their own free will entered into the field of blood. The like is not to be found upon the page of history. A civil war—brother's sword already bathed in brother's blood, and their Union about to be forever annihilated! God only knows what the present year will bring to pass! That which has taken ages to accomplish, has been overthrown in a year. Well might the poet exclaim—

We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime.
Hark! the waking up of nations,
Gog and Magog to the fray,
Hark! what soundeth? is creation
Groaning for its latter day?

Will you play, then, will you dally
With your music and your wine?
Up! it is Jehovah's rally!
God's own arm hath need of thine.
Hark! the onset! will ye fold your Faith-clad arms in lazy lock?
Up! O, up! thou drowsy soldier,
Worlds are charging to the shock.

Worlds are charging—heaven beholding,
Thou hast but an hour to fight;
Now the blazoned cross unfolding,
On, right onward, for the right.
On! let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake go abroad!
Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages—tell for God!"

Reader, are you a professed minister of the gospel of God, or a class leader, or an elder, or a private member of the professed church of God? What are you doing to arouse your fellow mortals to a preparation to meet this tremendous day of God Almighty, which is right upon you? Are you a lukewarm professor? Think of your sad state, and flee to the outstretched arms of bleeding mercy, before the heavens gather blackness and roll together as a scroll. Jesus vacates his Father's throne, clothed in robes of royalty steps into the car of glory, whose wheels shall in fire roll down the burning pathway of the heavens. Are you one who has never believed the things concerning the Christ and the kingdom of God, and repented of all your sins, and been baptized into the Christ for the remission of sins by a burial in water? How can you meet the fiery war-horse and his rider without his special grace?

O! my Father, grant in the name of Jesus to impress upon the heart of the writer and reader the importance of learning the lesson of obedience, that we may be found looking, through the fulfillment of the prophecy, for the coming and kingdom of Christ, that we may be prepared to put on immortality when its author shall be revealed in flaming fire.

Rev. 17.—"Seven Kings."—No. 5.

REVOLUTIONS OF 1791 AND 1848.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space."—REV. 17: 10.

In "No. 4" I promised to notice the extent and influence of the revolution of 1848 in Europe. In so doing, I will present the testimony of both British and American writers on the subject. The first is from the London British Banner:—"From the 7th to the 12th of February, 1848, the subject of reform was fiercely debated in the French chambers. On the 22d the people rose up against the constituted authorities; on the 24th the monarchy fell, and a REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT was set up in its place. On the 8th the freedom of the press was proclaimed in Saxony, and the censorship abolished. On the 13th the spirit of revolution broke out in Vienna; the chains of the empire in a moment were snapped asunder. Metternich, the patriarchal high priest of despotism in Austria, fled, and the imperial deity did homage to the throne of constitutional freedom. In five days after, the rhyming king of Bavaria cast away the crown he had so unworthily won, and made way for another. On the same day the flame of revolution burst forth in Berlin. It were long to recount the series of small changes; suffice it to say, all the minor powers of the continent have more or less been revolutionized. From the Atlantic to the Vistula every throne has been shaken. The shores of the Baltic and the mountains of Sicily have alike been swept by the mighty whirlwind. The laws, governments, and armies of fifteen centuries departed like a scroll. They are gone. At eventide they existed in full power, and, in man's esteem, in more than pristine glory; and on the morrow they are not! The regal master of a million of soldiers in the morning, in the afternoon found himself abandoned, helpless, alone, and, on the brink of destruction, fled for his life."

Truly that was a great political earthquake. The Alliance and Visitor has said: "The events of Europe have followed each other in quick and startling succession; the events of centuries are crowded into a year; the awaking rapidity has astonished the human race. The hand of God should be recognized in these remarkable events."

The Boston Traveler, edited by a minister, in an article headed, "The Shaking of the Nations," said:—"These events are a fulfillment of prophecy uttered many years ago, distinct enough to be understood by all who have lived to see them. They are so astounding, as to seem more like the visions of the night than the sober realities of the day. There is not a throne that has not been shaken by the uprisings of the past few months. That the work of overturning and overturning in the earth, of which ancient prophets sang, has been commenced, it seems impossible to doubt."

The Reflector said:—"We can hardly begin to measure the results of these great events in Europe. There never lived in the imagination of the most visionary, that these nations would be shaken to their centre by Republicanism; and all that, too, within the very short space of three months, and that without any premonition of what was coming. Indeed, it is startling to pause and consider it. The Almighty appears to be driving asunder the nations, is causing the everlasting hills to be scattered, and the perpetual hills to bow. They seem to be on the verge of crumbling."

Lord Morpeth, speaking at the Anniversary of the "British and Foreign Bible Society" on the movements of the nations at that time, said:—"But whatever may be the final issue of these momentous events which we are called on to contemplate—and we can hardly keep our breath while we run as it were along with them—yet I think it will be felt by all whom I address, that at a time like this, when the constitutions, the politics, the powers, the dominations of this world which we have been accustomed to, are heaving with unwonted throes, when the old foundations seem to be all broken up; when historic thrones are tottering and imperial sceptres are shaking, we do receive the most solemn and the most thrilling warnings, as far as relates to individual capacities, to strengthen our foundation upon the Rock of Ages."

The Rev. Dr. Kirk has said on the same subject:—"We are living at an unusual period. The voice of God is speaking through his providence in solemn, awful, and encouraging tones. We have heard all the while the rolling of his awful chariot wheels. It is his hand that sways the nations. He has caused the great ground swell which men cannot resist. Men cannot meet under such circumstances without peculiar feelings. All whom we have heard have evinced the same deep undercurrent. His own heart had been full of it."

The "great earthquake" predicted in chapter 11: 13, and fulfilled in France in the Great Revolution of 1791, destroyed forever the prestige of the Pope in France. "And the SAME HOUR was there a great earthquake; and the tenth part of the city fell; and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand." (Margin, names of men.)

The revelator predicts a far greater one in 16: 18; thereby causing the division of the great city into three parts. This doubtless was fulfilled in the great shaking of the nations, A. D. 1848. That in A. D. 1791 affected only France, that being only one tenth part of the city,—I suppose one of the ten prominent kingdoms that had supported Papacy. "The woman which thou sawest is that great city that reigneth over the kings of the earth," France having been one. The kingdom of France having become the eighth head of the dragon, and thrown off the papal yoke, and also become its persecutor, an agent in the hand of God to execute judgment, it swept away the titles and names of the different orders of Catholic Rome; and a spirit of hatred having gone forth out of the mouth of the dragon, in the language of the 16th chapter, 13th to 14th verses, "unto the kings of the earth and the whole world,"—I understand that this spirit in 1848 caused the destruction of the prestige of the Pope and harlot power in the Italian States, in that, the greatest revolution of which we have referred you to in the above historical extracts; and in the language of the twelfth verse, that pre-signifies a transfer of the power of the ten kings from the scarlet-colored beast and his rider to the beast that ascended out of the bottomless pit, was accomplished, and the ten horns received power; or, as one renders it, "authority as kings, one hour, or at one time, with that beast." "And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast." I consider the expression one hour in this verse to signify, as it is rendered by some translators, a short time. The expression in the 11th chapter, 13th verse, "the same hour," is to be understood a short time, not precisely sixty literal minutes. "These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast."

The great earthquake in the sixteenth chapter predicted the sub-division of the great city into three parts. This doubtless was to be effected by the agency of the three great parties seen in vision by John, and described in chapter 16: 13. This has doubtless been accomplished. "His Holiness lately remarked to an ecclesiastical dignitary, 'The hand of Providence has already written for me the "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." My days are numbered; my acts are weighed in the balance of divine justice, and I hope they will not be found too far wanting. My empire is falling into secular hands. Will it be for long? who knows?" No, dear reader, it cannot be long. What a prodigious change in the condition of this once haughty tyrant and umpire in the affairs of Europe! Now an enfeebled relic of former greatness, bigotry, error and superstition; his tiara and pontificals by inheritance reeking and gory with the blood of millions of helpless victims. Ah! Belshazzar is no longer king.

1st. If the dragon is the symbol of Republicanism; 2d. The beast the symbol of Monarchism; and 3d. The false prophet the Papacy; then it would seem clear, for these two parties seem now to hold an undecided influence over the Papacy.

There is yet another view may be taken of this part of the subject. It is this. Let the dragon beast and false prophet stand as synecdoche—a part for the whole; and then put the dragon for the representative of all Republicanism throughout the world; the beast for all Monarchialism to the same extent, and the false prophet for all the treachery throughout the world. Then it appears plain. For the Protestant ministry and membership throughout the length and breadth of christendom are as fierce for military fame and glory as their illustrious predecessors.

But it may be said, what has Protestantism to do with the present condition of Rome? I answer much, every way. We shall speak upon this in the next article.

Fear of Man.

Cannot this bane of spirituality be extirpated from our midst? How it mars and in many instances destroys our spirituality. But in no place perhaps does it have a more pernicious influence than in the social conference and prayer meeting; where the saints come together to witness for Christ by exhorting one another, and praying for each other, as they see the day of God approaching. "Beloved," just think what a blessing and soul-refreshing would characterize these meetings, so especially calculated to facilitate a spirit of devotion and growth in grace, could all be divested of the fear of man! Who, think you, among the saints would be silent? And even if a sinner were present, would not this "fear of God only" be calculated to elicit the inquiry of something to be done by them?

How many of our Master's commands would be obeyed which are now disobeyed! Brethren would, in obedience to the command in James 5: 16, confess their faults one to another, and the first impulse of true christian benevolence would be heeded, in fervently imploring that healing power might be bestowed, and two united would bring the promised blessing.—Matt. 18: 19. The tempted and afflicted would unburden their hearts of their sad contents, and Christ's body would be able to obey the command—"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." The young convert would lisp the little light he or she had received, instead of putting it under a bushel; and some father or mother in Israel would give a sweet word of encouragement, affectionately lending their aid to expand the tiny light that it might increase to a mighty flame!

Indeed, who can calculate the many blessings attendant upon pursuing such a course? The Lord expressly tells us that "the fear of man bringeth a snare." I understand a snare means something to hold or confine the creature until the snare-layer can secure the same for himself. "The old SEE of antiquity," as Kitto calls him, understands snare-laying; he has prosecuted the business for thousands of years, and if you listen to his devices you will be snared and taken. When you feel the promptings of the Spirit to witness for Jesus, he will make you tremble in view of your inability, by instancing the number present who can speak so much better than yourself; he makes you afraid to expose your one talent—you falter—meeting closes, finding you held in this snare fabricated out of the fear of man.

And now the question is, will you thus passively remain in this snare until you shall be taken? In God's name arise and cut these strands of the devil! Do it at the very next prayer meeting. The trouble is with some, they occasionally cut one strand of this snare-cord of the devil, then give him time to mend it ere they cut another, and are thus kept captives by his satanic power. In plain English, they say a few words for Christ, and then wait so long ere they do it again, that the same temptations have quite as much power over them, as ever, to deter them from duty.

If we desire Christ's yoke to sit easy, we must wear it—get used to it, until naturalized to it. I think I shall never forget the remark of a young man more than twenty years since to his comrade's in prayer meeting. Turning himself to them he said, "Let us live so that we can have something to say for God." Father Hastings was present, and made some very appropriate remarks upon the same. Blessings on his memory!

Yes, this is the secret. If our thoughts are on God and heavenly things most of the time, I do think we can pour a little of the abundance of the heart through the mouth. We can speak the most easily of those things we contemplate the most. If we desire to be filled with the Spirit, we must turn the channel of our thoughts in that direction—THINK of God.

How very inconsistent this man-fearing spirit makes people appear. I know men sent to the state legislature to talk and make laws for the people of the state, who plead inability when called upon to witness for Jesus in a prayer meeting, who no doubt would have felt themselves greatly misrepresented had one insinuated they were incapable to fill their stately office. Can any one truthfully aver incapacity to speak a few words upon a subject dearest to them of all subjects? Let us bind the jewel of consistency close to our hearts, and shake off this ruse of the devil, and let the fear of God stand paramount.

Let us remember the one talented individual is to be condemned at the judgment because he buried his talent. And what made him bury it? Because he was AFRAID! Of what was he afraid? Not of God surely, but he was afraid of man! He could not get down humble enough to use one talent, lest he should not be honored by man. Jesus Christ calls such unprofitable servants at the judgment, and casts them into outer darkness, where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Miscellaneous Items of Theology.

NUMBER ELEVEN.

XIV.—FUTURE GATHERING OF ISRAEL.

Numerous prophecies which speak of the gathering of Israel in a mortal state to offer sacrifices, have already been fulfilled, and cannot be located in the deathless age. At the introduction of that age, all converted Jews, as well as Gentiles, will be immortalized, and all the carnal ones be left. Are there carnal ones to be gathered? Is not Christ to come "taking vengeance on them that know not God"? Since the holy "children of Israel" are to put on immortality at the Advent, none are left to be gathered in a mortal state but the unholy ones, and they belong to the class who are to be destroyed. Is it said that there are some among them who have never committed sin, and are no more deserving of destruction than the sinless infant. Then they are just as really entitled to salvation and immortality, at the Advent, as the infant is. As the holy ones, and the sinless ones, are to be immortalized, and the sinning ones to be "cut off" at the Advent, none are left to be gathered in a mortal state after Christ appears.

However, the Scriptures do bring to view a future gathering of the children of Israel in their immortal state, after their resurrection. The Redeemer says:—"O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thy help. I will be thy KING. . . . I gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away in my wrath. . . . I will ransom them [the holy children of Israel] from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death." Hosea 9–14.

Again; "Behold, O my people, [Israel] I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. . . . Behold, I will take the children of Israel [who are buried in heathen lands] from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one King shall be King to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all: neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but I will save them out of all their dwelling places, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them [or 'change their vile bodies']: so shall they be my [immortal] people, and I will be their God. And David [the great 'seed' of David,—the second David,—Christ], my servant shall be KING over them; and they all shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they [who died thousands of years ago] and their children [who died a little later] and their children's children [who have also died] forever: and my servant David shall be their prince forever. Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them [in the kingdom], and will multiply them [above their former numbers, when they were a mortal nation,—by gathering them from their numerous beds of death,—not by causing them to propagate their species], and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore. My tabernacle also shall be in the midst of them; yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the heathen [who shall live long enough to witness the resurrection and the ascension of the saints] shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore." Ezek. 37: 12–28.

As a people they are now "blinded" and in "unbelief," and they can be "grafted in again" only upon condition of getting rid of unbelief; and if found rid of it at the advent, being "grafted in," they will be made immortal. "If the casting away of them [nationally] be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be [nationally] but LIFE FROM THE DEAD." Rom. 11: 15. When the holy children of Israel receive "life from the dead," they will become "one nation" under "one King," —being the kingdom restored to its perfect and immortal state.

May this gathering of Israel by the great "King of Israel" soon take place, that the "grafted" Gentiles may share in the glories of his kingdom."

Compliments.

One of the poorest uses to which a religious newspaper is ever put, is to make it a medium of personal compliments or personal abuse. I knew one young preacher, who when holding meetings used to say quite often to the man whom he accompanied, and who wrote reports of the meeting for the paper: "Tell him that I am a good fellow." So, in a few days, out would come the paper with a fine report of the meeting, and with the statement after this fashion: "Bro. A. B. C. was present, and rendered efficient aid. He is a good fellow." In this sort of a way the young chap inflated his balloon and sailed away so far that I haven't seen him for some years past. Instances have indeed occurred, where some would-be-great man has kept a whole company of pop-gun preachers drawing in his traces, whistling through his quill, and sustaining his "cause," by simply bestowing on them now and then a small newspaper puff; and they became "worthy brothers," "judicious laborers," "promising young men," etc., etc., until, if perchance they kicked out of the paper harness, then the same paper was used to prick the very bubbles it had blown up; and they found themselves flat on their backs under the ladder which they supposed themselves to be climbing.

A religious newspaper that is or ever means to be anything, must let alone this sort of business. A newspaper should not be in the interest of any man, or set of men, either to praise or curse indiscriminately. If men are faithful, their works will show it. If not, no newspaper whitewash will do the business for them. Gold needs no gilding, and gilding does not make wood gold. Great "newspaper revivals," which dwindle into very moderate dimensions when personally examined,—flaming reports of meetings, which help serve to misinform the absent ones, and create a demand for the author's labors,—accounts of the peace and harmony of churches who are too dead to move,—stories of vast piles of "wood, hay and stubble," which are put into the "building" with as much shouting, as if they were all "gold, silver and precious stones";—all these things minister not to spiritual profit or godly edifying.

Every page of the World's Crisis costs a good many dollars; and I trust it may always be filled with something that will do the people good. For one, I am quite willing to be silent, or to write as I have time. I pray God that when we do write, we may have something to say of God, and Christ, and not waste our space upon men, and their titles and dignities and doings. If we are found faithful at last, God will give us all the honor we need, if we never get any here. If he at last pour upon us the blackness of eternal contempt, what will it avail us to remember that we had compliments in the newspapers in this world? "For I know not how to give flattering titles, for in so doing, my Maker would soon take me away." H. L. H.

Sketches by the Wayside.—No. 8.

April, 1861. To-day has been an interesting and profitable Sabbath. Heard Bro. C. preach a good sermon on Prayer in the forenoon, and in the afternoon listened to a discourse from the text, "The word that I have spoken unto you, the same shall judge you at the last day." His subject was the importance of studying, believing and obeying the word of God, for by that we must be finally judged. "If that word condemn us now, will it acquit us then? And if it acquit us here, it will condemn us hereafter?" Important question. It was only the previous evening I was writing upon the same subject, and quoted the same text. Alas! how much the Bible is neglected, and how little believed! I see those even here, who cannot turn readily to a stated book, but quite as often open the New Testament to find a book belonging to the Old, as anywhere else, and persons professing godliness too!

Last evening, in the prayer-meeting, felt impressed to utter some plain truths, and my heart sensitively shrank from the cross. Toward the close of the services, however, we arose and remarked:—If simply desiring a revival, and praying for a revival, were sufficient for its accomplishment, we should ere this have been rejoicing therein. But there is more than this required. "The Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear; but your iniquities have separated between you and your God," etc. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." Alas! how many have robbed God's altar of the sacrifices once laid thereon;—how many have broken the vows solemnly uttered before him! The terms on which a blessing shall be poured out, are plainly stated. "Bring ye all the tithes into the store-house, . . . and prove me herewith, . . . if I will not . . pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." This is our duty; this is what God requires of us, and when performed the promise shall be verified—the offerer shall receive in return for his gifts an hundred-fold. Who of us will comply? Who will "prove" God, and "see" if the abundant blessing is not poured out from Heaven's opened windows, until there shall be no room for its bestowment. We must not merely desire and pray for a revival, but first give ourselves to the Lord, and then consecrate of our substance, time and talents, as the Lord hath required, for the work of soul-saving. We must feel upon our own hearts the Pentecostal baptism; we must be saved all through our own souls, and our stereotyped prayers must give place to the earnest, fervent supplications of the spirit's outbreathings; our dry, formal exhortations must give place to deep, heartfelt outgushings of love and interest for the perishing. Then sinners will be converted. It never yet has failed to follow such a position and such experience on the part of the church. * * *

Retired for secret prayer at the twilight hour last night. Was very wandering in my thoughts. Had been very nervous and excitable all day, and felt poorly in body. Could not fix my thoughts on prayer. Thought of leaving the room, as it seemed useless to utter words in which the heart was not. On reflection, I changed my purpose. Resolved to enter the sanctuary, and bow before the mercy-seat, there to present my petitions to God, and not depart without an answer. Implored the Spirit's aid. Pleaded the love of the Father, and of the Son, as affording even me a reason for coming and claiming the promises. Faith increased. I neared the throne. I talked with God. The golden sceptre was held out. I opened my mouth wide before God, and asked largely. The blessing came. The darkness fled. All was calm within.

At the family altar, I asked Sister A. to lead. She prayed in faith. Thought I would just add a few words of thanksgiving for the blessings of the day, and the victory gained. The Spirit came upon me anew. O, how I pleaded for the complete armor, and a keenly burnished sword, that I might enter the front ranks, and fight for King Jesus! How the Spirit interceded! I entered the holy place, and was overshadowed by the cherubim. A teeming shower of grace descended upon our hearts, and the joyous shout of Glory and Hallelujah were uttered!

This morning we prayed for a feast in the sanctuary. Bro. C. preached from the text, "O that mine head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears," etc. He enforced the duty of being in that state of mind where we too could feel as did the prophet of old; mourning over the desolations around us, and laboring for the salvation of the perishing. It was a brief but timely discourse. The rain was falling fast, and he suggested a season of prayer and remarks. We bowed in prayer. Father H. led the way, his son followed, then Sister A., next poor I. O the cross of such public praying to me! It has almost invariably been a heavy cross for me to pray in the meeting-house, in the public assembly, after sermon,—O how great! Sermon in the afternoon was all about the Holy Ghost—the duty of praying for it, and being continually exercised thereby;—that it was the essential qualifying agency, and the church must receive it more largely in order to labor for and, rejoice in a revival. First there must be heart-searchings; the Spirit must be sought as an illuminator, to enlighten us in regard to our true condition. There must be confessions, humiliations and consecrations, before the Comforter would abide with us. The discourse, coming from a Congregationalist, was certainly to be commended for its clearness and truthfulness.

Close of the Year.

Another year has run its rounds, and been replete with stirring events. What changes have taken place in one short year. How many homes are now desolate, which, one year ago, were joyous in the prospect of continual prosperity. Sickness and death have done their work, and the marble slab points to the spot where the loved one lies sleeping in the embrace of death. The lonely widow gathers her little ones around her, while sorrow's tears fill her eyes, and the deep sigh heaves her bosom, as she thinks that last new year's day the voice of him, who so cheerfully wished me a "happy new year," is now silent in the grave. He little thought what a cup of sorrow awaited me.

I look into another family;—where is that lovely child, that came running down in early morning to say, "I wish you a happy new year"? The mother's tears answer—gone to the grave. She has often looked over his playthings, and his little garments; but his prattling voice is not heard. Truly, we are in a world of sorrow.

When we turn our eye to the battle-field, for the last twelve months, what a sight presents itself. There they lie wounded and dead, heaps upon heaps, while the foe treads proudly over them. There's the fond husband, father, brother, lover, who left their peaceful homes but a few days since, to return no more. O the horrors of war! Tell us christians should fight! Sooner far let them be drunk in the groggery. Christians killing their neighbors, and making widows and orphans! preposterous. We feel no union with such christianity. But the war is not closed. Other homes are yet to be desolated. Darker scenes are rising before us. In this gloomy hour how valuable is the "blessed hope" of the saints of God.

Let us now review the past year, and see wherein we have neglected our duty; or done or said things we ought not; ask the Lord to forgive us, and firmly resolve, by his help, to do all to his glory the remainder of our days, that at last we may meet where sorrow is forever unknown; and sickness, pain and death are felt and feared no more.

SO. READING, Mass.—We spent Friday evening, Dec. 26th, in this place, which is about ten miles out of Boston, on the Boston and Maine R. R. Bro. H. K. Flagg has been preaching there for the last two weeks, and his labors have been much blessed. Three have been converted, and several reclaimed from a backslidden state. There is a good prospect that others will seek the Lord, and prepare for his coming. We were much comforted in finding Bro. Lathe's family rejoicing in the Lord, as two of his children have just been converted. Let none get weary in well-doing, for soon our Redeemer will appear in glory.

New Subscribers.

This is a good time to obtain new subscribers for our family paper. Let every reader try to send us one new subscriber in January. Come, let us make a grand effort, worthy of the truth and the noble cause we love so well. Let no pains be spared that will tend to benefit our fellow men, with whom we must soon stand in the judgment.

Sermons.

In the New York Independent of Dec. 18th, '62, by H. W. Beecher, we find some excellent editorial remarks on sermons, that are worthy of careful consideration. He says:—

"Sermons are a modern invention. They were unknown in the apostolic days. The primitive preaching was expository and didactic. It would be well if the church should return to that custom."

It is a well-known fact that what is called "popular preaching," gives but very little light on Scripture truth. Most of the sermons are only prettily written moral essays. One might hear such preaching forty years and still be a mere child in the knowledge of the Scriptures. It does not appear to be the object of the preacher to cause people to understand the Bible; but to entertain them with pleasant and smooth things. The result is, the mass, even of church members, are so ignorant of the great truths of the Bible, that but few can give "a reason of the hope that is in them." The best they can say is "It is in our article of faith, to which we have subscribed." It is astonishing to witness the ignorance of the Scriptures among those who listen to the most distinguished ministers, so called, of these last days. They can give ten reasons for fables, where they can one for the truth.

Mr. Beecher goes on to say:—

"For ordinary christian instruction, nothing is more certain than that a sermon may be utterly spoiled by excessive preparation. Its life is worked out of it. It leaves nothing for the hearer's imagination. Its flow lulls the ear. Its very completeness and roundness cloy. Many ministers write their sermons as if for printing. But that which is written for the eye is seldom good when delivered to the ear. That is a good sermon that masters the audience. It may have grave faults of construction, and be open to severe criticism; yet, if it does its work, it is a good sermon. . . .

We must protest against the absurdity of two written sermons on each Sunday! It is every man's duty to preach once at least (if he deliver two formal discourses) without manuscript, or with only brief notes. The same effort that is bestowed upon a written sermon would, after some probation, enable a minister to acquit himself well in extemporaneous discourse. The matter should be prepared, the language and much of the application should be left to the delivery. It is an intolerable bondage, a waste of life itself, to be obliged to write everything one utters.

Besides, the peculiar characteristic of preaching is lost. The object of preaching evidently is, to give to truths the advantage of human feeling and living sympathy. An audience might as well read a printed sermon at home, as listen to a printed or written sermon in the pulpit, except so far as the preacher can make it the vehicle of his own emotions, living thoughts, and very personality. Preaching is the power of a man on men. It is the manhood of a christian thoroughly aroused, and brought to bear directly upon the minds of men. It is the man-element (in its higher and christian elements) that preaching was designed to secure. It is just this that written sermons—the very best, and with every right preparation and painstaking—inevitably lose in some degree. They are suffered, however, to compensate this loss by their instructiveness, their propriety, and method. But when no pains are taken, and no fears exist, and sermons are written and delivered after the manner of well-read essays, the peculiarity of preaching is wholly lost. The very thing aimed at in calling living men to speak to living men, is missed. We deem no pains too great, and no conscientious and determined practice too much, that is required to secure freedom in preaching unwritten sermons!"

"How to be Miserable."

Happiness is the great object of pursuit in this world, and yet most are continually taking the wrong course to obtain the prize. Most seek wealth first, so that they may obtain the luxuries of life, and thus be happy; but those who seek it this way always find their cup filled with care and sorrow, instead of happiness. Others struggle for some honorable position in society, expecting the boon, when men applaud them; but like one who has ascended the snowy peaks of the Alps in a summer day, they find it not half so pleasant as when on the plain below. Theirs are frozen joys. Others seek for happiness in the gratification of their appetites and passions; but find when the work is done, that the whole is summed up in one word,—remorse. All these are "lovers of their own selves," which is to be a characteristic of the people "in the last days," as foretold by the apostle Paul. All who act on the selfish principle, must, of necessity be unhappy. The Lord has thus arranged. If we would be happy, we must not live for SELF, but for the good of others; then we imitate our blessed Savior. If we have his Spirit, we shall be led to act in harmony with his example, and thus be happy.

The following is an excellent recipe for those who wish to be miserable:—

"Think about yourself; about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay you, what people think of you; and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch; you will make sin and misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose on earth, or in heaven either."—Kingsley's Sermons.

Growing Worse.

The following from the London Weekly Register shows that wickedness is increasing there as well as in our own country. Crimes, especially those of the blackest dye, are said to be advancing more rapidly than ever. To what are we coming? If Jesus does not return soon, our planet will be in a horrid condition. The Register says:—

"It is not too much to say that London has never been so unsafe as it is at this moment. Not a night passes but some quiet man is the subject of a murderous attack in the street. His head is violently pulled back by one man, another at the same moment strikes a violent blow in his eyes; he is brutally kicked. When thus reduced to insensibility, he is robbed at leisure. At least one victim has died within the last few days. Several others have received injuries which will surely last as long as they live, and which can hardly fail to shorten their lives. The victims selected are all well-to-do men. The neighborhood of the clubs is closely watched. Some of them are as much blockaded as the port of Charleston, and any man with a well-filled purse is imprudent if he attempts to run the blockade. That such a state of things should be allowed to go on unchecked is out of the question. The police are no doubt on the alert, and we hope that many of the malefactors will be convicted. But there is no wonder that people are even more anxious to prevent the evil than to cure it. Respectable men in London are waxing as wroth against the ticket-of-leave men as the Chamber of Commerce at New York against the Alabama."

What Waste!

Great Britain, France, Russia, and the United States—expend $1,000,000,000 annually for alcohol, tobacco and opium. That is the direct expense; the indirect is much more.

So much money wasted, thrown away. Worse than that, it is paid out to injure the physical and moral powers of those who use it. It would be great gain to the human family, if the money spent for alcohol, tobacco and opium, was burnt up or eternally buried, so far as those are concerned who consume the poisonous articles. Many, many, fill premature graves because of the use of these unhealthy stimulants. They are Satan's ministers, which he employs to lead men to choose the way to destruction. It seems strange that any who believe Jesus is soon coming, and wish to be ready, should indulge in such bad habits. Is it not time to reform? Come, begin the first of next January, if not before. Leave all the bad habits this side of the line, and allow none of them to control you in 1863.

Children's Tract Fund.

In last week's Crisis, we spoke of having the children raise fifty dollars towards the one thousand dollar tract fund. We think it will be better to let the children have theirs by themselves; and we older ones will make up the $1000, making in all $1050.

NEW TRACT.—We have just received a tract containing an argument showing that the prophetical periods will close up Jan. 15th, 1863. It can be had free of Bro Abram Flavel, Newark, N. J.

Movements of Napoleon III.

The man of wonder is playing his part with great skill in earth's closing drama. He succeeds in keeping head and shoulders above all others. His tread makes the world tremble. He has become the lion among the great men, and none dare to molest him. We see he has some new project in his head now, as the following will show:—

"The Emperor, it is said, wishes to bring both the Romish and Protestant churches more thoroughly under the power of the State. To the latter he proposed increased incomes, a revival of synodical power within prescribed limits, a return purely and simply to their old orthodox standards, so that Rationalism is to be quenched by imperial edict. In return, no aggressions are to be made on Romanism, and no new congregations formed by way of converts. Dissenters are not to be tolerated unless they are Frenchmen, and have besides degrees from a college of the National Church. They will thus be placed at the mercy of that church. By this edict, if carried out, Methodism, and other forms of dissent, will almost be extinguished. With a view to preparing the way for the action of the new law, the power of authorizing new congregations has already been removed from the Prefects to the Imperial Council."

New Publications.

I am glad to lay before the friends a few new publications, to be issued, if the Lord will, early in January.

1. "SIGNS OF THE TIMES," by H. L. Hastings. New edition, greatly enlarged; 416 pages, in elegant cloth binding. $1.00 postpaid; $9 per dozen. Paper covers, 75 cts; $6 per dozen. Cash with the order, and when the book is read through, I will buy it back, in good condition, at the same price, if it is not worth the money.

2. "LOOKING FORWARD; OR, THE ANTICIPATIONS OF THE CHURCH," by H. L. Hastings, being the closing chapter of "Signs of the Times." 64 pages, paper, 15 cents. A few copies printed for those who have the first edition of "Signs of the Times." It contains all the addition to the second edition. "Looking Forward" will pay for reading and circulating, I think.

3. "REPLY TO THE CHARGE OF HERESY," by H. A. Chittenden. Addressed to a Congregational Church in Hartford, in 1845. To this are added Justin Martyr's testimony (A. D. 145) as to the destruction of the wicked; also, his statement that those who denied the resurrection and taught that souls went to heaven at death, were not christians; also, the Decrees of the Papal Councils of Vienna, Florence and Lateran, under Popes Clement V., Eugenius IV., and Leo X., where they decreed that the soul was immortal, was of the form of the human body, that all souls went either to heaven, hell, or purgatory at death, translated from the original Latin of Caranza, with Martin Luther and Bishop Jeremy Taylor's contradictions of the same. The whole in 32 pages, for 5 cents single, postpaid, or $3 per hundred.

4. "GUINNESS' LETTER ON WAR," lately issued in the Crisis; to which are added Testimonies of Early Christians, who were men of peace and not of blood; and Testimonies of Historians regarding the early church on this point. 32 pages; 5 cents single; $3 per one hundred.

5. "IMMORTALITY THROUGH CHRIST ALONE; The Doctrine Safe and Salutary." By C. F. Hudson. A new and valuable tract, just ready. Price, 5 cents single; $3.00 per one hundred.

I hope these tracts will be widely scattered. They have cost much labor and money, and are worth reading. The poor can have them free. Address orders to H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass., or to the Crisis office.

Westward Again!

If the Lord will, I propose to leave Boston, Tuesday, Dec. 30th, for Erie, Pa., via. New York and Dunkirk. I hope to reach Erie Jan. 1st, 1863, and make my way as fast as convenient to Blooming Valley, there to spend the following Sunday and remain a week or more. Then perhaps visit Meadville, Edinboro, and other localities in the region, remaining through most of January. Persons in the region desiring to know of arrangements for meetings, can probably be informed by addressing J. T. Ongley, Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Pa.

Brethren, pray that the word of God may run and be glorified. Correspondents will still address me at Boston, as usual, and their business will be attended to with despatch. H. L. HASTINGS.

The Faith of the Church.

NUMBER FIVE.

Through faith we understand that "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. 15: 3. According to "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints" in respect to the atonement and propitiation for sin, we are ever to maintain that "the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth from all sin." The world-wide truth and doctrine taught from the beginning, and among all nations and peoples, is, that something is needful to make God propitious to our sinful race. And God has written in his word, "Without shedding of blood there is no remission." This has been written too in letters of blood in all the sacrifices and bloody offerings innumerable of the past. The blood of beasts and of men have been shed in all ages, and by nearly all nations, to atone for sin. Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome,—Jew and Gentile, the world over, have offered these sacrifices by the thousands. To-day, in Africa, Asia, and in the Isles of the seas, among unenlightened heathen nations and tribes, the same bloody offerings are being made. The Hindoo mother tears her infant from her breast and throws it into the Ganges, or mouth of the crocodile, to appease the wrath of her God, and quiet a guilty conscience. The Hindoo devotee casts himself under the rolling and ponderous car of Juggernaut, to be crushed to death, in hopes that his suicidal act and sacrifice of life will atone for his sin and open the gates of paradise to his soul. And another will submit to have thrust through his flesh sharp hooks, and swing in mid-air till death ends the torture and suffering, to appease his imaginary deity, and bring peace to his conscience. But all these bloody rites are in vain, wherever they may be practised, or by whom. The Scriptures assure us, "In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin" God has "no pleasure"; but that there is atonement and reconciliation "through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." "Christ died for our sins." And so they point us to the cross, saying, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!" By the death of the Son of God alone, and through the virtue of his blood, there is forgiveness and pardon of sins.

"Not all the blood of beasts,
On Jewish altars slain,
Could give the guilty conscience peace,
Or wipe away the stain.
But Christ, the heavenly Lamb,
Takes all our sins away;
A sacrifice of nobler name,
And richer blood than they."

We are to maintain that Jesus Christ came in "the flesh" for the purpose of making an atonement; 1 John 4: 1–3;—that a body was prepared him through the offering of which we are sanctified. Heb. 10: 5–10. There have been those who have claimed that Christ was not a real man, but "taught that he was man only putative, and came into the world only in phantasmate, and consequently that he died only putative pati," and that Christ did all things only in appearance, not reality. This is antichrist. "Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God.: and this is that spirit of antichrist whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world." Accordingly, too, we are to contend that Jesus Christ was more than a mere man, dying as a simple martyr, teaching us how to live and die a virtuous and useful life and death. We are to receive and maintain that "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Christ was divine and human. His flesh and humanity was made. The Word was never made. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the word was God. . . . He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." John 1st chap. The being of Christ before the incarnation, as he was conceived by the Virgin Mary, was not a created being, but was the Divine Essence from God the Father. And he was the only begotten Son of God, as the Father communicated the Divine Essence to the Word. "Great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." See 2 Cor. 8: 9, Phil. 2: 5–11, Col. 1: 14–19.

Jesus Christ suffered and died for our sins; therefore in the flesh. Not in that nature in which he was begotten by the Father before the world was. "Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh"—"put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit." That Spirit which preached to the disobedient antediluvian world in the days of Noah, 1 Pet. 2d chap., Gen. 6: 3, which was in the prophets, 1 Pet. 1: 11, did not die. Immortality cannot die. "Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me. . . . By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." Although the human nature, soul and body, was conjoined to the Divine in Christ Jesus, yet it suffered as much and as effectually died as though it were alone. And he suffered and died not in his Deity, but in that humanity which he assumed that he might be our substitute and sacrificial offering for sin. These things then are we to maintain most earnestly respecting Christ and his atonement against those "men crept in unawares," who turn "the grace of our God into lasciviousness," and deny "the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ." O. R. FASSETT.

Bookselling.

Book-writing is one trade, book-publishing is another, bookselling is yet another. I have learned all three, and worked pretty hard at them. Now I question what to do. I cannot do every thing. I can write and publish books, if others will sell them. But, if I spend time to sell them, I must stop writing them; or, if I keep writing and printing, who will foot the bills? I think I shall write and publish some more, and see whether the brethren care enough for them to scatter them.

The second greatly enlarged edition of "Signs of the Times" is at hand. Who will help scatter them? I can make money, only give me time, but if I write I cannot work. If you will scatter the books, I will try and publish them. Prices must advance, but truth must go as long as any thing does. H. L. HASTINGS.

Report of the First Annual Wisconsin Christian Conference.

Met in a separate capacity, according to arrangements made at the last Annual Iowa, Minn. and Wis. Christian Conference, at Sumpter, Sauk Co., Wis., Wednesday evening, Dec. 3d, 1862. Preaching by Eld. Barnes. We were not present to hear this discourse, but was glad to hear that Eld. B. was on hand with his old battle axe, ready to work.

Thursday, A. M., friends met and enjoyed a refreshing season in a social meeting. Met again at 2 P. M., to listen to Eld. J. V. Himes, who preached a stirring and decidedly practical discourse, which had a deep effect through the rest of the meetings; and may God grant that it may go with us all through another year and until the Master comes. Our hearts were truly cheered to again hear from this old veteran in the cause of the Master. Met again at 6 o'clock, A. M., for social worship. Preaching at 7, by Eld. J. V. Himes.

Met Friday morning, at 9 o'clock, for business. Eld. Wm. Sheldon read the Constitution of the Iowa, Minn. and Wisconsin Christian Conference. First business in order, the election of President and Secretary of conference. Officers chosen: Eld. Wm. Sheldon, President; Eld. Geo. W. Turner, Secretary.

Moved that ministers belonging to the conference, report as to the state of the cause in their respective localities. Carried. Heard reports from Elds. Sheldon, Barnes, Shears and Turner, which were generally encouraging, considering the exciting times in which we live, and the distracted condition of our country. They seemed to think that, in view of the times, the battle must be pressed harder and harder, even to the very gates.

Moved that a business committee be chosen, of Elds. Sheldon, Barnes and Turner, to arrange business for the action of the conference. Carried.

Moved to adjourn till Saturday, at 9 P. M. Carried.

At half-past 10 again listened to a timely discourse from our beloved Bro. H. Commenced social meeting at one o'clock, which was truly refreshing to the many wayworn pilgrims. They seemed like one family at home. We are all going to meet soon in the great family circle, never to part. Praise the Lord! Preaching at two, and also in the evening, by Eld. H.

Saturday, at 9 A. M., met for business.

1. Receiving delegates from churches. Brn. Matthews and Scafe, Ironton church; Bro. C. Stone, West Point; Bro. Knapp, Sumpter; Bro. Wilkinson, Fairfield. No report from Springville.

2. Moved to receive Eld. Himes, and other lay brethren, as participators in the doings of the conference. Carried.

3. Moved to add the word Advent to the name of the conference, making it the Christian Advent Conference of Wisconsin. After some discussion it was carried.

4. Moved to receive ministers as members of the conference. Carried.

Accordingly, Eld. Jed. Raymond of Stockbridge, Wis., Eld. N. A. Hitchcox of Montecello, Wis., and Eld. A. Bridges of Montecello, Wis., ordained preachers; and Brn. Bronson, Graves, and J. C. Wells, as licensed preachers, were received.

5. Moved to continue Eld. Wm. Sheldon as Evangelist for the coming year. Carried.

6. Resolution offered by Eld. Himes, that we continue as Adventists to hold in unshaken confidence Protestant principles of interpretation; viz., that the visions of Daniel reach to the everlasting kingdom; that the book of Revelation gives a history of the true church, and also of the papal power, and carries us to the end of all things; that a prophetic day denotes a natural year, and a prophetic time 360 natural years; that the times and seasons were to be understood and proclaimed in the time of the end; the church was not to be in darkness, that that day should overtake them as a thief; and believing with the most distinguished, pious and learned expositors of the word of God in this country, that the signs of this time and the fulfillment of the prophecies indicate the speedy termination of this dispensation; and that we should accordingly arrange our affairs to carry forward this great work to the best of our ability, both in our individual and associated capacity; and in connection with pastoral labors and that of evangelists, to build up and establish the churches;—we propose a general campmeeting within the bounds of this conference in the coming year, and that a committee be appointed to announce the time and place. Carried.

7. Moved that W. Sheldon appoint time and place for the campmeeting the coming year. Carried.

8. Moved that we invite Eld. J. V. Himes to meet with us at the campmeeting, to assist in preaching the word. Carried.

9. Moved that the name of Bro. John Wilcox be erased from the minutes of the conference. Carried. Adjourned to call of the chair. It being too late to have preaching in the A. M., the meeting was closed till 1 P. M. After our social meeting, there followed a stirring discourse by Eld. H. Met again at 6, at the call of the chair, for business.

Moved to hear reports from churches. Carried. Report of Fairfield church. Number of members thirty-seven; prayer meetings kept up regularly. At present in a prosperous condition. Preaching every four weeks by Eld. Turner. One death the past year. Report of West Point church. Number of members fifteen; none added the year past; peace in our midst, and still determined to hold on to the blessed and only hope. Have preaching occasionally by Elds. Sheldon, Barnes, and Turner. Report of Ironton church. Number of members thirty-five; three gone to war; three baptized the past year. Preaching every four weeks by Eld. Turner. Prayer meetings kept up regularly, and interesting. Report of Sumpter church. Number of members ten; although numbers small, yet they are strong in the blessed hope of the gospel, keeping up their social meetings, and letting their light shine in an effective way to the world around. Preaching by Eld. Sheldon and others.

Springville church. No report at present.

Moved to publish the doings of the conference in the "World's Crisis." Carried. Adjourned sine die.

At 7 o'clock we again listened to a heart-cheering discourse by Eld. H., who pointed God's waiting ones to yonder streaming light in the eastern horizon, which tells them of coming glory.

Sunday morning. Met at 9 o'clock for a love feast, and truly it was a feast of love. Some fifty testified that there is a reality in the saving grace of God. Preaching at half past ten and at one by Eld. H. Asembled again at 6 for social meeting, which was interesting, because all of the family seemed to have some good report to bring. Preaching again at 7 by Eld. H. on the ordinances, which was simple and impressive to the child who is panting for redemption. After which some fifty or sixty brethren and sisters surrounded the table and partook of the emblems of our dying but now glorified Redeemer. This was the most interesting sacramental season that we ever enjoyed.

The preaching of Bro. H. was of a nature to encourage, strengthen and confirm the church of God in these days of peril. O! what could be more encouraging to the weary mariner than to behold the light-house which assures him that he is in the vicinity of the harbor. So with the church here. We were shown that the last great landmarks on the stream of time had been passed, and already the light-house is in view, telling us that the harbor of eternal rest is near. Church of the living God! bride of the Master! are these things so? May the Lord help us to steer clear of the rocks and reefs, the bars and the shoals, and watch and be sober. May God give our brother wisdom and grace in proclaiming the last great message to a fallen world. We think this meeting will give a new impetus to the cause of our soon coming Master in this part of the vineyard.

Eld. Wm. Sheldon, Pres.
Eld. Geo. W. Turner, Sec.

Information.

A brother in an adjacent State makes the inquiry of me, in substance, as follows: "Whether I would attend a funeral at that distance, providing information could be sent me in due time and my expenses paid?" As others under similar affliction might be desirous to know whether I could arrange to attend on funeral occasions in the country, I would thus publicly reply, as I did to him in a private letter, Yes; and would most gladly endeavor to comfort bereaved friends in their sorrow, and as they mourn over their dead, with the words and hope the Scriptures afford. Telegrams, or letters, sent to me should be directed—O. R. Fassett, No. 1, Lincoln St., Boston.

Parting Words.

My Dear Friends and Readers of the Crisis:—As the autumn leaves are withering and fading away, so am I wasting at the hand of that fell destroyer—consumption; and ere you behold these words, I shall have fallen, like the faded leaf, to the land of silence. I did hope to live to be useful in the cause of my Master; but "He doeth all things well," and has suffered me now to fall by the power of disease; and soon I shall lie in my little room; life's curtains will be drawn, the blinds will be closed, and the clods of the valley will be over my wasted form. But my hope—firm as the hills—is in Jesus, my Redeemer. He passed through the valley of death and came up victorious; and I believe he will take me up from death's dominions in the resurrection; and with one of old I can say, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." But, oh! "when will the morning dawn?" I fear not to die; but it is hard to break the ties that bind me here, to leave my dear companion, who has so tenderly watched over me when the hectic fever burned my brow, while the dews of the grave are settling upon me, and whilst the icy chills of death draw nigh! 'Tis hard to leave my little one, bereft of a father's tender care. But I trust the promise that our Father will be a God to the widow and the fatherless, and believe his tender care will surround them.

I shall no more assemble with you here! My feeble voice will never again be heard amid the worshipers of our heavenly King! My trembling hand has written its last words to you; (to another's pen I have committed this charge.) It is hard to leave you, friends and kindred, to never more hear the kindly greeting, or the voice of welcome—to never again behold the friendly smile, or words penned by affection's hand. But I must go, for the sands of life are well nigh run. To you who have visited me in my long hours of illness, and in so many kind ways ministered to my wants, I pray heaven's blessings may ever attend you, far and near. And oh! shall I not in the better land greet you all, where no disease can prostrate, nor death separate?

The setting sun is gilding the distant hill-tops, and lighting up the forest's shades; but it will be a few, a very few times seen by my weary eyes! The silver moon will shine in the heavens amid the glittering stars, but in a few more days they will not shine for me any more! The woodland songsters, whose melody in summer days charmed my ear, I never again shall hear! The flowers that shed their fragrance, and bloomed in beauty around my pathway, will no more bloom for me! O! 'tis hard to leave all these scenes of beauty! But death is my captor, and I must go. Yet thank God! the enemy will be destroyed, and then I shall dwell upon the new earth, and undying flowers shall bloom there. The song of Moses and the Lamb will then be sweeter music than ever yet fell on mortal ears; and my voice will join the chorus with all the redeemed, who shall on that glorious morning awake to life eternal. And there I shall not say, "I am sick;" and there you will not weep for me.

I am weary—ah, how weary! But I soon shall fall asleep, and rest from my sorrows. The stormy winds may wail amid the trees around my silent grave. The winter's snows may cover the ground, but I shall heed it not. Loving hearts may ache in bitter sorrow, and many a silent tear may fall for my memory, but it will be unknown to me forever. Sorrow not too deeply for me, nor mourn too much when I am gone! As the Savior's last words to his friends were a blessing, so I, with his love in my heart, now give mine to you. Parents, brothers, sisters, friends, and kindred, accept my dying blessing. God bless you all! It is hard to leave you on the shore of time. Let me meet you on the shining shore of eternity. Farewell! yet not forever. Farewell.

For the Crisis.

Dear Bro. Grant:—We, the undersigned, would be thankful to have the following published in the Crisis, to correct impressions that may be formed by reading the late articles of Wm. Sheldon.

Misapprehension Corrected.

We, the undersigned, having read the late articles from the pen of Eld. Wm. Sheldon, headed "Miscellaneous Items of Theology," some of which, we understand, were intended as expositions and confutations of the doctrines called, "Age to Come," wish to correct the impression they may have made (if any) upon the minds of the brethren. We hold the views denominated "Age to Come," and are somewhat extensively acquainted with those who believe these truths; but in all our acquaintance, we know of not one whose belief accords with the representations of W. Sheldon.

We are willing to bear all the reproach that may be attached to the truth as we hold it; but beg leave to be excused from the ridicule that would very properly be attached to the "absurd" ideas he therein mentions and intimates was once the belief of himself.

Stray Thoughts.

I have been reading that lovely poem, the "Blind man's daughter." How touching! Shakspeare never wrote anything half so good, to my mind. Poor dear brother in his blindness and loneliness! She was his only little kid, named for my little Florence, who lies sleeping, away in that New England valley, waiting the trump's sweet sound. Then the "pattering of little feet" will once more be heard. Perhaps it needed just that trial to test your faith dear brother. How blessed it will be, if we are so fortunate as to gain an admittance to that "better inheritance," and gather our little ones and friends around us, to think that death will have no more dominion over us; for even while I write, there comes from my cradle that terrible hoarse, croupy cough, that sends the blood crowding back to my heart, while cold and faint I drop the pen to listen to the sweet breathings of my darling. O death, thou cruel monster, ever on the track of the children of Adam. O! when will come the moment when thou shalt meet thy doom—"destruction"? Let the time hasten, I pray.

"All over the land
There's sickness, sorrow, and death."

The wail of broken-hearted fathers and mothers, the cry of wives and fatherless children, goes up continually. Surely we must be in the "distress of nations. Already the people "walk like blind men"—perplexity, perplexity on every hand. Surely we may look up, knowing that our "redemption draweth nigh." The "day of vengeance" is in God's heart, and the year of his redeemed has about come. O! what light shines on the prophetic word, brighter and more glorious as we travel down the tide. Let us faint not, nor be weary.

Reading Bro. Himes' "Journal" is a treat to us. Husband and myself wish so much to hear on the present "Time" argument. You would not get the "cold shoulder" here from my family, but a warm greeting, as will any of God's children. How our heart goes out after the brethren and sisters East! Although so far from you, we do not forget to "sorrow with you" in your afflictions, and rejoice in your prosperity.

As for myself, the first Sunday in the New Year I begin again to preach. The people urge me incessantly. Indeed, I see no other way but to go. I will be with the friends at Staunton the first Sabbath. At Antioch the second, and so on, as the Lord directs. Give me your prayers, brethren and sisters, that my feeble efforts may be the means of bringing sheaves to the great harvest, and that at last it may be said of me, "She hath done what she could." Yours in the "blessed hope."

Bunker Hill, Ill. N. M. Henry.

Obituary Notices.

Died at the general hospital, camp Winfield Scott, Old Point Road, Virginia, May 17th, Isaac A. Kennedy, son of John A. Kennedy, formerly of Somerville, now of Chelsea.

This is the second son which Bro. Kennedy has been called to give up, by the unrelenting hand of death, in the present war. Joseph Kennedy, his other son, was accidentally drowned on his way to the seat of war, Sept. 12th, 1861. Both sons were very promising young men. The last hope and stay of their aged parents are cut off, and they must go alone in sorrow to their grave.

The writer was selected to present words of comfort to an attentive congregation, many friends, his aged parents, and one as chief mourner, whose heart was united to his. Thus have their earthly hopes and ties been severed. May the word of God cheer and sustain them, until we reach that land where sorrow and death can never come.

D. M. Hanscome.

Died in Gilford, Nov. 5th, of typhoid fever, Bro. Benjamin T. Libby, in the sixty-seventh year of his age.

Over half of his life he had been a professor of religion, and was a firm believer in the speedy coming of the Lord, which was his theme and comfort through life, and support in death. He was a kind husband, obliging neighbor, a good citizen, and an exemplary christian. He bore his sickness with patience and resignation, and conversed freely with his companion, giving all needful directions. Feeling that the time of his departure was at hand, he was all ready to be offered, and longed for the time to come. He has left a wife, one son and grand-children, with many other warm friends, who deeply mourn his loss. A discourse was delivered at the funeral by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13.

John Knowles.

Married.

FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

There are again rumors in Paris of unfavorable news from Mexico, and urgent calls for reinforcements are made, which, it is said, will be sent under the decree of establishing a reserve at Martinique.

The Archbishop of Paris has gone to Rome, it is said in the name of the Emperor, to explain to the Pope the Emperor's views, in order to obtain the concessions necessary on the part of the Pontifical government.

ITALY.

In a duel between Garibaldi's eldest son and Col. Pallavici i, who captured Garibaldi, the young man is said to have received a mortal wound in the side, and the Col. was seriously hurt.

It is rumored that St. Petersburg will shortly be declared a free port.

It is reported that Mr. Slidell has had another audience with Napoleon, and that Drouyn, De Huys and Persigny favor the South.

Ferdinand, late King Consort of Portugal, declines the Candidature for the Greek throne.

Continental politics are unimportant.

Within the last fifty-eight years, 72,000,000 copies of the Bible have been circulated. Of these, Great Britain absorbed 26,000,000, the rest of Europe 25,000,000, America, 16,000,000, leaving 5,000,000 copies as the whole number distributed among the heathen. At the commencement of the century there were forty translations of the Bible. It is now printed in 196 different languages, 146 of which are translations or versions of languages which never before had a written existence. Does the world owe no debt of gratitude to the labors of christian missonaries?

The "Janes" Herald of Nov. 22, says the revolution in Japan is complete. The Tycoon is stripped of nearly all his special privileges. There is considerable inquiry by the Japanese for steamships to establish a line between Onacara and Yokabowa.

Romanism is gaining a strong foothold in England. In the city of Manchester, there were, in 1834, but seven chapels and ten priests, while now there are twenty-seven chapels and fifty priests. A similar increase is apparent in London, Liverpool, and other large citi s.

The prevelant idea that the Jews are flocking to Palestine is not supported by facts. The whole Jewish population in that country is less than 11,000, and in the cities of Bethlehem, Jericho, and Nazareth, no Jews are to be found.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Dec. 23. The following is a special dispatch to the Times:

Washington, Dec. 23. It is not best for the public to cherish an illusory hope that the Cabinet imbroglio is ended. Mr. Seward today declared to one of his friends that his resumption of ministerial duties was made to be dependent upon two conditions, whose non-fulfillment would even yet compel his resignation; and though Mr. Chase to-day signified to the President his consent to return to his department, it seems apparent his action also will be made to depend, so far as any permanent occupancy goes, upon contingencies.

The Senate is like a strong army repulsed in a bold attack. It faces back in good order, and calls a council of war, possibly to plan a flank movement such was the caucus of to-day. That it will abandon the enterprise it has undertaken is not within the limit of possibility.

The war now declared will most likely involve the House in its struggle, and already Representatives are anxiously consulting on the subject. Unless the President yields it will soon be Congress against Executive, and the issue of such a struggle it is not difficult to foretell. Never in a free government has the executive successfully defied the legislature.

The Proclamation to be Enforced. The President is reported to have said to a committee of distinguished gentlemen, who waited upon him during the latter part of last week in regard to the emancipation proclamation and other matters, that he had carefully considered the matter before issuing his proclamation, and that, having since had no occasion to change his views on the subject, there would be no withdrawal, modification of postponement of it—still believing the interest of the country demanded its enforcement.

Washington, Dec. 23. The following has been received at Headquarters here:

Dept. North Carolina, Dec. 20. Gen. Foster's expedition was a perfect success. He burned the railroad Bridge at Goldsboro' and Mount Olive, and tore up several miles of the track of the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad. We fought four engagements, viz., at Southwest Creek, Kingston, Whitehall and Goldsboro', and whipped the enemy handsomely each time.

New York, Dec. 24. A Washington dispatch says Gen. Foster in a late dispatch states that he learns that the rebels are advancing in large force—estimated at 25,000—to drive him from his position. He believes himself strong enough to hold out until reinforcements arrive.

New York, Dec. 27. A special dispatch to the Times says official information has reached Washington that the condition of the French army of invasion of Mexico is considered critical. Its ranks are being thinned by sickness and the want of wholesome food.

It is said that agents have been sent to this country to obtain supplies, the furnishing of which has been protested against by the Mexican Minister; it is understood, however, that Secretary Seward declines to interfere.

Philadelphia, Dec. 27. The Press publishes a retaliatory proclamation of Jeff. Davis. Gen. Butler and all his officers are to be hung if taken, the soldiers to be paroled, and negroes taken in arms to be hung. Federal officers found with slaves are also to be hung.

Chicago, Dec. 29. A report has reached Memphis that a heavy Federal force has ascended the Mississippi from New Orleans, the naval portion of which is under command of Admiral Farragut; that Port Hudson has fall n into Federal hands, and that the fleet has reached a point twelve miles below Vicksburg.

New York, Dec. 28. The North Star, with Gen. Banks and staff, arrived at New Orleans on the evening of the 14th, and the news transpired on the following day that Gen. Butler had been superseded, which occasioned the utmost surprise among all classes. Even the registered enemies of the United States were sorry to part with an officer who has, at least, brought order and security to the city.

On the 16th Gen. Banks issued a General Order, in which he assumes command of the Department of the Gulf and of the State of Texas, and names his staff, who are already known at the North.

Selma, Ala., Dec. 23. It is reported this morning, that five thousand rebel cavalry, under Gen. Van Dorn, dashed into Corinth on Sunday, dispersed the Yankees, and took possession of the place.

The steamship Ariel, from New York for Aspinwall, was captured on the 7th inst. by the Alabama.

We intend it to be a free meeting, and wholly for the worship of God. It is a good time with us now. I have baptized thirteen, and expect to plant as many more soon. ### Notice.

Calkins will see that I get whatever letters, etc., are sent as above. I would also like to have brethren at Carlinville, Havana, Amboy, or elsewhere in Illinois, and at Strawberry Point, Iowa, where there may be any mail matter for me, have it remailed, and addressed as above.

Eld. T. W. Smith.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one, who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Miles Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

Notice.

As I am, in the providence of God, stationed at East Stoneham for the present, to labor in spreading gospel truth, and thereby build up the church on the most holy faith, and lead men from the error of their ways to Christ, who is the "Way" to eternal life; I would say to the brethren in this region, that if they wish for my labors, they can communicate with me at this place. Address Charles H. Leverton, East Stoneham, Me.

sembled again at 6 for social meeting, which was interesting, because all of the family seemed to have some good report to bring. Preaching again at 7 by Eld. H. on the ordinances, which was simple and impressive to the child who is panting for redemption. After which some fifty or sixty brethren and sisters surrounded the table and partook of the emblems of our dying but now glorified Redeemer. This was the most interesting sacramental season that we ever enjoyed.

The preaching of Bro. H. was of a nature to encourage, strengthen and confirm the church of God in these days of peril. O! what could be more encouraging to the weary mariner than to behold the light-house which assures him that he is in the vicinity of the harbor. So with the church here. We were shown that the last great landmarks on the stream of time had been passed, and already the light-house is in view, telling us that the harbor of eternal rest is near. Church of the living God! bride of the Master! are these things so? May the Lord help us to steer clear of the rocks and reefs, the bars and the shoals, and watch and be sober. May God give our brother wisdom and grace in proclaiming the last great message to a fallen world. We think this meeting will give a new impetus to the cause of our soon coming Master in this part of the vineyard.

Information.

A brother in an adjacent State makes the inquiry of me, in substance, as follows: "Whether I would attend a funeral at that distance, providing information could be sent me in due time and my expenses paid?" As others under similar affliction might be desirous to know whether I could arrange to attend on funeral occasions in the country, I would thus publicly reply, as I did to him in a private letter, Yes; and would most gladly endeavor to comfort bereaved friends in their sorrow, and as they mourn over their dead, with the words and hope the Scriptures afford. Telegrams, or letters, sent to me should be directed—O. R. Fassett, No. 1, Lincoln St., Boston.

For the Crisis.

Parting Words.

My Dear Friends and Readers of the Crisis:—As the autumn leaves are withering and fading away, so am I wasting at the hand of that fell destroyer—consumption; and ere you behold these words, I shall have fallen, like the faded leaf, to the land of silence. I did hope to live to be useful in the cause of my Master; but "He doeth all things well," and has suffered me now to fall by the power of disease; and soon I shall lie in my little room; life's curtains will be drawn, the blinds will be closed, and the clods of the valley will be over my wasted form. But my hope—firm as the hills—is in JESUS, my REDEEMER. He passed through the valley of death and came up victorious; and I believe he will take me up from death's dominions in the resurrection; and with one of old I can say, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." But, oh! "when will the morning dawn?" I fear not to die; but it is hard to break the ties that bind me here, to leave my dear companion, who has so tenderly watched over me when the hectic fever burned my brow, while the dews of the grave are settling upon me, and whilst the icy chills of death draw nigh! 'Tis hard to leave my little one, bereft of a father's tender care. But I trust the promise that our Father will be a God to the widow and the fatherless, and believe his tender care will surround them.

I shall no more assemble with you here! My feeble voice will never again be heard amid the worshipers of our heavenly King! My trembling hand has written its last words to you; (to another's pen I have committed this charge.) It is hard to leave you, friends and kindred, to never more hear the kindly greeting, or the voice of welcome—to never again behold the friendly smile, or words penned by affection's hand. But I must go, for the sands of life are well nigh run. To you who have visited me in my long hours of illness, and in so many kind ways ministered to my wants, I pray heaven's blessings may ever attend you, far and near. And oh! shall I not in the better land greet you all, where no disease can prostrate, nor death separate?

The setting sun is gilding the distant hill-tops, and lighting up the forest's shades; but it will be a few, a very few times seen by my weary eyes! The silver moon will shine in the heavens amid the glittering stars, but in a few more days they will not shine for me any more! The woodland songsters, whose melody in summer days charmed my ear, I never again shall hear! The flowers that shed their fragrance, and bloomed in beauty around my pathway, will no more bloom for me! O! 'tis hard to leave all these scenes of beauty! But death is my captor, and I must go. Yet thank God! the enemy will be destroyed, and then I shall dwell upon the new earth, and undying flowers shall bloom there. The song of Moses and the Lamb will then be sweeter music than ever yet fell on mortal ears; and my voice will join the chorus with all the redeemed, who shall on that glorious morning awake to life eternal. And there I shall not say, "I am sick;" and there you will not weep for me.

I am weary—ah, how weary! But I soon shall fall asleep, and rest from my sorrows. The stormy winds may wail amid the trees around my silent grave. The winter's snows may cover the ground, but I shall heed it not. Loving hearts may ache in bitter sorrow, and many a silent tear may fall for my memory, but it will be unknown to me forever. Sorrow not too deeply for me, nor mourn too much when I am gone! As the Savior's last words to his friends were a blessing, so I, with his love in my heart, now give mine to you. Parents, brothers, sisters, friends, and kindred, accept my dying blessing. GOD BLESS YOU ALL! It is hard to leave you on the shore of time. Let me meet you on the shining shore of eternity. Farewell! yet not forever. Farewell.

For the Crisis.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—We, the undersigned, would be thankful to have the following published in the Crisis, to correct impressions that may be formed by reading the late articles of Wm. Sheldon.

Misapprehension Corrected.

We, the undersigned, having read the late articles from the pen of Eld. Wm. Sheldon, headed "Miscellaneous Items of Theology," some of which, we understand, were intended as expositions and confutations of the doctrines called, "Age to Come," wish to correct the impression they may have made (if any) upon the minds of the brethren. We hold the views denominated "Age to Come," and are somewhat extensively acquainted with those who believe these truths; but in all our acquaintance, we know of not one whose belief accords with the representations of W. Sheldon.

We are willing to bear all the reproach that may be attached to the truth as we hold it; but beg leave to be excused from the ridicule that would very properly be attached to the "absurd" ideas he therein mentions and intimates was once the belief of himself.

Stray Thoughts.

I have been reading that lovely poem, the "Blind man's daughter." How touching! Shakspeare never wrote anything half so good, to my mind. Poor dear brother in his blindness and loneliness! She was his only little kid, named for my little Florence, who lies sleeping, away in that New England valley, waiting the trump's sweet sound. Then the "pattering of little feet" will once more be heard. Perhaps it needed just that trial to test your faith dear brother. How blessed it will be, if we are so fortunate as to gain an admittance to that "better inheritance," and gather our little ones and friends around us, to think that death will have no more dominion over us; for even while I write, there comes from my cradle that terrible hoarse, croupy cough, that sends the blood crowding back to my heart, while cold and faint I drop the pen to listen to the sweet breathings of my darling. O death, thou cruel monster, ever on the track of the children of Adam. O! when will come the moment when thou shalt meet thy doom—"destruction"? Let the time hasten, I pray.

"All over the land
There's sickness, sorrow, and death."

The wail of broken-hearted fathers and mothers, the cry of wives and fatherless children, goes up continually. Surely we must be in the "distress of nations. Already the people "walk like blind men"—perplexity, perplexity on every hand. Surely we may look up, knowing that our "redemption draweth nigh." The "day of vengeance" is in God's heart, and the year of his redeemed has about come. O! what light shines on the prophetic word, brighter and more glorious as we travel down the tide. Let us faint not, nor be weary.

Reading Bro. Himes' "Journal" is a treat to us. Husband and myself wish so much to hear on the present "Time" argument. You would not get the "cold shoulder" here from my family, but a warm greeting, as will any of God's children. How our heart goes out after the brethren and sisters East! Although so far from you, we do not forget to "sorrow with you" in your afflictions, and rejoice in your prosperity.

As for myself, the first Sunday in the New Year I begin again to preach. The people urge me incessantly. Indeed, I see no other way but to go. I will be with the friends at Staunton the first Sabbath. At Antioch the second, and so on, as the Lord directs. Give me your prayers, brethren and sisters, that my feeble efforts may be the means of bringing sheaves to the great harvest, and that at last it may be said of me, "She hath done what she could." Yours in the "blessed hope."

Obituary Notices.

Died at the general hospital, camp Winfield Scott, Old Point Road, Virginia, May 17th, ISAAC A. KENNEDY, son of John A. Kennedy, formerly of Somerville, now of Chelsea.

This is the second son which Bro. Kennedy has been called to give up, by the unrelenting hand of death, in the present war. Joseph Kennedy, his other son, was accidentally drowned on his way to the seat of war, Sept. 12th, 1861. Both sons were very promising young men. The last hope and stay of their aged parents are cut off, and they must go alone in sorrow to their grave.

The writer was selected to present words of comfort to an attentive congregation, many friends, his aged parents, and one as chief mourner, whose heart was united to his. Thus have their earthly hopes and ties been severed. May the word of God cheer and sustain them, until we reach that land where sorrow and death can never come.

D. M. HANSCOMB.

Died in Gilford, Nov. 5th, of typhoid fever, Bro. BENJAMIN T. LIBBY, in the sixty-seventh year of his age.

Over half of his life he had been a professor of religion, and was a firm believer in the speedy coming of the Lord, which was his theme and comfort through life, and support in death. He was a kind husband, obliging neighbor, a good citizen, and an exemplary christian. He bore his sickness with patience and resignation, and conversed freely with his companion, giving all needful directions. Feeling that the time of his departure was at hand, he was all ready to be offered, and longed for the time to come. He has left a wife, one son and grand-children, with many other warm friends, who deeply mourn his loss. A discourse was delivered at the funeral by the writer, from Rev. 14 : 13.

FRANCE.

There are again rumors in Paris of unfavorable news from Mexico, and urgent calls for reinforcements are made, which, it is said, will be sent under the decree of establishing a reserve at Martinique.

The Archbishop of Paris has gone to Rome, it is said in the name of the Emperor, to explain to the Pope the Emperor's views, in order to obtain the concessions necessary on the part of the Pontifical government.

ITALY.

In a duel between Garibaldi's eldest son and Col. Pallavicini, who captured Garibaldi, the young man is said to have received a mortal wound in the side, and the Col. was seriously hurt.

It is rumored that St. Petersburg will shortly be declared a free port.

It is reported that Mr. Slidell has had another audience with Napoleon, and that Drouyn, De Huys and Persigny favor the South.

England offers, with the consent of the Great Powers, to cede the Ionian Islands to Greece.

Ferdinand, late King Consort of Portugal, declines the Candidature for the Greek throne.

Continental politics are unimportant.

Within the last fifty-eight years, 72,000,000 copies of the Bible have been circulated. Of these, Great Britain absorbed 26,000,000, the rest of Europe 25,000,000, America, 16,000,000, leaving 5,000,000 copies as the whole number distributed among the heathen. At the commencement of the century there were forty translations of the Bible. It is now printed in 196 different languages, 146 of which are translations or versions of languages which never before had a written existence. Does the world owe no debt of gratitude to the labors of christian missionaries?

The "Japan" Herald of Nov. 22, says the revolution in Japan is complete. The Tycoon is stripped of nearly all his special privileges. There is considerable inquiry by the Japanese for steamships to establish a line between Onacara and Yokabowa.

Romanism is gaining a strong foothold in England. In the city of Manchester, there were, in 1834, but seven chapels and ten priests, while now there are twenty-seven chapels and fifty priests. A similar increase is apparent in London, Liverpool, and other large cities.

The prevalent idea that the Jews are flocking to Palestine is not supported by facts. The whole Jewish population in that country is less than 11,000, and in the cities of Bethlehem, Jericho, and Nazareth, no Jews are to be found.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Dec. 23. The following is a special dispatch to the Times

Washington, Dec. 23. It is not best for the public to cherish an illusory hope that the Cabinet imbroglio is ended. Mr. Seward today declared to one of his friends that his resumption of ministerial duties was made to be dependent upon two conditions, whose non-fulfillment would even yet compel his resignation; and though Mr. Chase to-day signified to the President his consent to return to his department, it seems apparent his action also will be made to depend, so far as any permanent occupancy goes, upon contingencies.

The Senate is like a strong army repulsed in a bold attack. It faces back in good order, and calls a council of war, possibly to plan a flank movement such was the caucus of to-day. That it will abandon the enterprise it has undertaken is not within the limit of possibility.

The war now declared will most likely involve the House in its struggle, and already Representatives are anxiously consulting on the subject. Unless the President yields it will soon be Congress against Executive, and the issue of such a struggle it is not difficult to foretell. Never in a free government has the executive successfully defied the legislature.

THE PROCLAMATION TO BE ENFORCED. The President is reported to have said to a committee of distinguished gentlemen, who waited upon him during the latter part of last week in regard to the emancipation proclamation and other matters, that he had carefully considered the matter before issuing his proclamation, and that, having since had no occasion to change his views on the subject, there would be no withdrawal, modification of postponement of it—still believing the interest of the country demanded its enforcement.

Washington, Dec. 23. The following has been received at Headquarters here:

Dept. North Carolina, Dec. 20. Gen. Foster's expedition was a perfect success. He burned the railroad Bridge at Goldsboro' and Mount Olive, and tore up several miles of the track of the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad. We fought four engagements, viz., at Southwest Creek, Kingston, Whitehall and Goldsboro', and whipped the enemy handsomely each time.

New York, Dec. 24. A Washington dispatch says Gen. Foster in a late dispatch states that he learns that the rebels are advancing in large force—estimated at 25,000—to drive him from his position. He believes himself strong enough to hold out until reinforcements arrive.

New York, Dec. 27. A special dispatch to the Times says official information has reached Washington that the condition of the French army of invasion of Mexico is considered critical. Its ranks are being thinned by sickness and the want of wholesome food.

It is said that agents have been sent to this country to obtain supplies, the furnishing of which has been protested against by the Mexican Minister; it is understood, however, that Secretary Seward declines to interfere.

Philadelphia, Dec. 27. The Press publishes a retaliatory proclamation of Jeff. Davis. Gen. Butler and all his officers are to be hung if taken, the soldiers to be paroled, and negroes taken in arms to be hung. Federal officers found with slaves are also to be hung.

Chicago, Dec. 29, A report has reached Memphis that a heavy Federal force has ascended the Mississippi from New Orleans, the naval portion of which is under command of Admiral Farragut; that Port Hudson has fallen into Federal hands, and that the fleet has reached a point twelve miles below Vicksburg.

New York, Dec. 28. The North Star, with Gen. Banks and staff, arrived at New Orleans on the evening of the 14th, and the news transpired on the following day that Gen. Butler had been superseded, which occasioned the utmost surprise among all classes. Even the registered enemies of the United States were sorry to part with an officer who has, at least, brought order and security to the city.

On the 16th Gen. Banks issued a General Order, in which he assumes command of the Department of the Gulf and of the State of Texas, and names his staff, who are already known at the North.

Selma, Ala., Dec. 23. It is reported this morning, that five thousand rebel cavalry, under Gen. Van Dorn, dashed into Corinth on Sunday, dispersed the Yankees, and took possession of the place.

The steamship Ariel, from New York for Aspinwall, was captured on the 7th inst. by the Alabama.

Notice.

Correspondents will please address me at Deer Park P. O., Lasalle Co., Ill., care of Elder A S Calkins. I cannot at present give directions that would not subject me to inconvenience and expense, but this seems to be the best until I can get more settled. Bro. Calkins will see that I get whatever letters, etc., are sent as above. I would also like to have brethren at Carlinville, Havana, Amboy, or elsewhere in Illinois, and at Strawberry Point, Iowa, where there may be any mail matter for me, have it remailed, and addressed as above.

ELD T. W. SMITH.

Notice.

The yearly meeting of the church of God at Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Pa., will be held, according to adjournment, the first Sunday in Jan., 1863. Meetings will commence Friday evening, Jan. 2d. We hope to see a general rally of the brethren and sisters in the name of the Lord.

JOHN T ONGLEY, Clerk.

P. S. Cannot Bro. Hastings make arrangements to be with us at that time? If so, please notice in Crisis and Harbinger, and write to me. J. T. O.

Notice.

It is true, only a few come to hear, though Second Advent meetings are held on Sunday afternoon and evening each week, for the present, in "Marshall's Hall," (over Marshall & Swan's store), Maine Street, Belfast, Me. ### A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one, who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

MILES GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

Notice.

As I am, in the providence of God, stationed at East Stoneham for the present, to labor in spreading gospel truth, and thereby build up the church on the most holy faith, and lead men from the error of their ways to Christ, who is the "Way" to eternal life; I would say to the brethren in this region, that if they wish for my labors, they can communicate with me at this place. Address Charles H. Leverton, East Stoneham, Me.

For the Crisis.

Our Vesta Sleeps.

She sleeps! our sister's gone to sleep!
She heedeth not the tears we weep;
She knoweth not how large a place
Was filled by her sweet, child-like grace.
She's gone, so young and beautiful,
So good, and kind, and dutiful;
'Tis hard to bow and kiss the rod,
And say 'tis well, our Father, God.

She faded at the touch of death,
And withered at the monster's breath,
As flowers fade in heat of noon,
Or crisp before the dread simoon;
She lingered little in the way
Of the destroyer's tyrant sway,
Then sweetly sought her last repose,
Free from all coming cares and woes.

We miss her laugh and child-like glee,
We miss her bird-like songs so free,
And all those sweet and artless ways
A pleasing child each day displays.
She never, never greets us more
At father's pleasant cottage door;
She's breathed last notes of welcome there,
Our little sister, young and fair.

Upon her grave we've planted flowers,
While passed the sunny summer hours,
And bathed them with affection's tears,
For her who still our love endears;
And prayed that in the world to come
We all may meet in that sweet home,
Where never grave shall claim the young,
Or mournful anthem e'er be sung.

Jesus and the Resurrection versus Spiritualism.—No. 1.

Spiritualism now claims to be the doctrine of Jesus and his apostles, and to receive communications directly from Jesus himself, relative to his coming and kingdom. I purpose to show in these articles that there is a complete contrast between the teaching of Jesus and the teaching of the "spirits" touching the resurrection of the dead.

The "spirits" teach that within every animal body is a "spiritual body," which is immortal; that the resurrection is the separation of the spiritual body from the animal body, and the rising of the spiritual body into a higher state of life. Death, then, is not extinction of life. True it appears to be to us; but our spiritual vision is undeveloped, because of our connection with the flesh, so that we do not see things as they are. But those who rejoice in the higher "sphere" of life, do see and know that what we call death is not death, but the separation of the inner living man from the outward "forms," and his introduction into the "spirit world." There is, therefore, according to Spiritualism, "no resurrection of dead persons," for the simple reason that there are no dead persons.

But Jesus taught the resurrection of dead persons. This proposition proved, the claim that Spiritualists are the only genuine disciples of Christ, because they work the same wonders wrought by the original disciples, is set aside forever. We will now present the testimony of original disciples concerning the doctrine of their Master. Matt. 10: 39,—"He that findeth his life (Greek, psuchee) shall lose it; and he that loseth his life (psuchee) for my sake shall find it." 28th v.,—"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul (psuchee): but rather fear Him who is able to destroy both soul (psuchee) and body in hell" (Gehenna).

What life is this that can be found and lost in Gehenna? Is it the life of the body? Can the life of the body be lost for the sake of Christ and found again? If so, the body will be raised, and that is not according to Spiritualism. That which the spirits call the soul or spirit-body cannot lose its life, because it is immortal. John 5: 28,—"The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth: they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." A strange way to teach immortal-soulism! Ah! John, why did not thy Master tell those Jews there were none in the graves to come forth, and that in the "world to come" there is no difference between the doers of good and the doers of evil, except that the former progress more rapidly than the latter, while both classes have the life of the "aion," that is, of the "higher sphere"? Undoubtedly because he was not a Spiritualist. Behold then the contrast between the resurrection taught by Jesus and that taught by the "spirits."

CONTRAST.

Jesus. The resurrection shall be at a future "hour."

Spirits. It is taking place constantly.

Jesus. It is a coming out of graves.

Spirits. It is a going out of bodies.

Jesus. Two classes will come forth, to opposite destinies; the doers of good to the resurrection of life; the doers of evil to the resurrection of damnation.

Spirits. One destiny for all—eternal progression.

Such is the contrast between the teaching of Jesus and the teaching of the spirits. Perhaps a little "turning and twisting," such as spirits are capable of, might harmonize the two doctrines and blend them into one; but turning and twisting is not interpretation; therefore we will go on with the contrast. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16. "I will raise him up at the last day."—John 6: 40.

CONTRAST.

Jesus. They who believe not in me shall perish.

Spirits. None shall perish; for all are immortal.

Jesus. They who believe in me shall have eternal life.

Spirits. All have eternal life whether they believe in thee or not.

Jesus. I will raise those who believe in me.

Spirits. All will be raised whether they believe in thee or not; for the resurrection depends not upon thy will, but happens according to Nature's unalterable laws.

Thus far the contrast is complete. In our next we will take up the case of Lazarus. J. W. NILES.

Faith in God.

"And he said unto them, Why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?"—Mark 4: 40.

These questions were asked the disciples by Jesus; and ever since man was placed in Eden, unbelief has been his besetting sin. While I follow down the path through which the people of God have come, I am astonished at their want of faith in God; but does the church of God to-day manifest any more confidence in him as their "strong tower" than in by-gone days? There are exceptions now, as there have ever been; but do the majority have that strong faith in God so that they could be counted as Abraham's seed? O! what infidelity basks in the bosom of professing christians respecting the "exceeding precious" promises of our God. And the less faith we possess in him, in the same proportion shall we be insensible to his love for us, till we come to look upon him as an "austere man," instead of "our Father." Many there are, who call such unbelief humility; and in their petitions offer a form of words, or the cry of nature, rather than wait upon him in affectionate confidence, trusting his wisdom and grace. O that christians had that strong faith like Abraham, that rests in God and not in circumstances; then they could oftener say with David, "Verily God hath heard me," instead of, "Carest thou not that we perish?"

I have sometimes thought christians, and ministers even, when directing inquiring minds to the Savior, taught them to utter these words of the disciples, and plead for salvation, forgetting that he was waiting to receive them, and inquiring, "Why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?" A poor, helpless, dependent colored woman preached a good sermon on faith, when she said, "He loves and I trust."

Let us a moment turn to the children of Israel, when they reached the borders of Canaan, and the spies had returned with an evil report, and contrast the results of their unbelief in the promises God had made them, with the faith of those "children of Judah" that were afterward captives in Babylon. When evil was threatened them through designing men, they said, "If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning furnace, and he will deliver us out of thy hand, O king." O! how beautiful does their faith appear; and the secret was, "the form of the fourth" was with them, "in the midst of the fire," and they had "no hurt." When Daniel was to be cast into the den of lions, even the heathen king was constrained to believe his God whom he served constantly would deliver him; "and no manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God."

Ah! my brethren and sisters, this glorious God is ours; will you not believe and trust him? But in the whole camp of Israel only two seemed to believe God was stronger than the giants; and hear what the Lord says to them: "How long will this people provoke me? and how long will it be ere they believe me, for all the signs which I have shewed among them?" "Your carcases shall fall in this wilderness." Many times have I read and wondered at their want of faith in God; and yet when I saw giant troubles before me, I have trembled with fear, instead of realizing that "the eternal God" was my "refuge." If an earthly father had been omnipotent, and told me his eye was upon me, and his ear open unto my cry, should I have felt those throbbings? I read, "Whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil," and my heart was stilled. I found that 'The Lord . . . knoweth them that trust in him." "BLESSED is the man that trusteth in" him.

"Hold on, my heart, in thy believing,
The steadfast only win the crown;
He who, when stormy waves are heaving,
Parts with his anchor, shall go down.
But he whom Jesus holds, through all
Shall stand, though heaven and earth should fall."

"The Age of Disorder."

[From the New York Mercury.]

"The world is in an uproar. There is no prospect, either here or abroad, of much peace. Invention has turned the whole genius of the age into the production of iron-clad ships, turreted batteries, ocean rams, rifled cannon, and all the other means and missiles of war. Nations are either quarreling or on the eve of a conflict. Thrones tremble. People are agitated. The very atmosphere of art is redolent of gunpowder. Greece is once more indulging in a revolution. Russia is gathering up another army for Turkish invasion. Young Poland is stirring to reassert a nationality. Hungary is looking for that uprising in Venice, which shall give her an opportunity to strike again for freedom. Prussia is at variance with her King, who insists that the "divine right" of the sceptre is superior to constitutional authority. Young Italy still looks on Rome as the national capital.

France seems to be preparing for a war with Great Britain, and Britain, in turn, is characteristically helping the Chinese Government to put down the Rebels, while she is secretly assisting the rebels in the United States to sustain themselves against the Government forces. Mexico is distracted, as usual, with domestic dissensions, and has a foreign war on hand, besides, to add to her other afflictions. One of the South American States is also wasting money and life on the battle-field; and, in short, look which way we will, we see little but the red signs of combat, hear little but the booming of cannon, read of little but accounts of sieges and victories, and the number of men placed 'hors du combat,' and the preparations made, or making, to overthrow or maintain intact political organizations.

Verily, in view of all these things, this may be called the age of disorder. Millerism ought to be delighted. Here are all the indices it wants as a prelude to its idea of the millennium. As for ourselves, when, oh! when shall 'an honorable peace' restore our country to its original prosperity?" [Com. by L. REIMER.

Needless Suffering in Churches.

About one half of the places where I have preached since cold weather commenced, the meeting room was cold and unfit for worship. At the commencement cold, and so hot before the meeting closed, that people suffered from cold and heat both. This is all for the want of a little judgment or energy. A man is not competent for a sexton until he has been a traveling preacher a number of years, seen the effects of a cold and hot house, had his soul vexed time and again, and learned by experience how to manage a meeting room. Let me tell you. Kindle your fire one or two hours before meeting, and get the air warm in the house before any one comes. It takes no more fuel, as the fire is not needed when the people get in. Don't be afraid of getting the room too warm. One minute will cool it, when it will take sixty to warm it.

I went to preach the other day. The sexton had just started a fire. The people gathered around the stoves, and would not leave. At eleven o'clock I went some three rods back from the fire to commence the meeting in the cold,—named the hymn,—it was a dead set,—no one started the tune,—I did, and some two or three faint voices back by the stoves commenced, but, were so far off the echo broke the time. I tried to pray,—went hard. Began to preach,—went harder still. The people two or three rods off, and I with my overcoat on, dragged out forty minutes, and went to the stoves and began scolding, recommending moving the pulpit or the stoves, that we might be in gun shot of each other, etc., which resulted in getting the stoves two rods nearer the pulpit, and ought to have been done when they were first set. Next time we found the room hot. My overcoat came off,—sung, prayed, ordered the doors opened one minute, while singing. The cold air rushed up to the stoves, near the pulpit, and the warm air back toward the doors, thus equalizing the air in the house in one minute, which remained so until the meeting closed. Stoves always ought to be near the pulpit, especially when the pulpit is at the opposite end from the doors, then every time the doors open, there is an interchanging of hot and cold air, so frequent on opening the doors, that the air is equalized necessarily and the house warm.

This is philosophical. Experiment proves it true. The most inconvenient and foolish way of arrangement is to put a stove near the door, behind all the slips, which is sure to let out the warm air every time the door is open, as it has so little way to move. You warm the entry instead of the back end of the house, where the pulpit is, or ought to be. There is always a circulation of good air near a hot stove, let it be where it will in the house, when the doors open. So a stove near the pulpit gives the speaker a better circulation of good air than any other arrangement, and he ought to know it if he knows enough to preach. The opposite is false philosophy, and you will find it so after trying the experiment.

The above arrangement will prevent taking cold, by being cold during preaching, when you sometimes have to sit and shiver two hours. Do have a warm house, if the people and preaching are cold. This is for your health and comfort, and the preacher's good. I know it from forty years' experience. Will you live on and still persist in your old traditions, and shake with cold every Sunday?

Correspondence.

From Eld. M. Batchelor.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel that I ought to say a few words for the Crisis. I will start with Paul, Heb. 10: 35,—"Cast not away your confidence," etc. For the accomplishment of an object, we need confidence. It is needed in every enterprise, but especially in the christian conflict.

1. Confidence in God as the Being that controls and governs all.

2. The all-sufficiency of Jesus to save, and complete the work he has undertaken.

3. That every jot and tittle of his word will be fulfilled.

4. If we believe and obey, then we are safe for time and eternity.

5. At this time we need faith in the word of prophecy, wherein we find the history of this world down to our day. Thus believing the prophecy is the history of the world in advance, and seeing it has proved itself true as we read the history of the past, it becomes to us the sure chart in view of the future, and a guide in this dark day of trial and despondency.

II. Cast not away your confidence in any of these great truths named, for you will need it soon if not now.

1. The political and moral heavens are growing black, and bespeak fury. Right and wrong are struggling, and it looks as though wrong would triumph. But about then God will speak. Ps. 46: 6.

2. The world commercially will be more affected as political strife increases; and as treachery increases and moral principle declines, so man will lose confidence in his fellow man. Then we shall need confidence in God and his word and the coming kingdom.

3. There may be such a breaking up in the church, and such awful division in sentiment and feeling, produced by the visits of these frog spirits. Rev. 16: 13, 14. We shall know more of this as we advance. Pharaoh had them get even into his bedchamber. Ex. 8: 3, 4. This will make trouble as they increase and advance. Those in whom we have had the most confidence may become our bitterest foes. The advice of Micah will be good (7: 5–7),—"I will look unto the Lord, I will wait for the God of my salvation; my God will hear me."

To conclude, I would say, stick close to the word. Whatever it says, believe. Whatever it commands, obey. Live up to your light. See that you are not found in sympathy with those who are at war with God and right. Then we can have peace with God through Jesus. This is the prayer of your brother in hope.

Rutland, Vt. M. BATCHELOR.

P. S.—As I do not put but a few appointments into the paper, I see that some think that I am not laboring much. I would just say that for twenty-nine years I have not been without an appointment for a Sunday ahead. I never have been sick that I could not fill my appointment but two Sundays, I believe. I never disappointed but one congregation on Sunday by not being there, that was when I had not observed that there were five Sundays in the month: thus I mistook the Sunday, disappointed the people, and was very sorry. ### From Bro. G. L. Teeple.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.—I have been running down for some time. Recently I took a severe cold, and my head and lungs pain me much, and I have a severe cough. I kept around the house until the 21st inst. I am now braced up in bed to write these few lines, which will explain why I was not at my appointments. It would be comforting to receive a letter from some of the dear saints of God. Dear Brn., remember me in your prayers. I pray that this may not end in consumption. Your Bro. in Christ. GEO. L. TEEPLE.

The Meetings at Brewster's Station, New York.

Lord's day morning, Nov. 30th, we spent in prayer and exhortation. We felt that it was good to be there. Very few out—but did not feel at all disheartened. At half past six P. M., Bro. S. S. Brewer preached from Luke 21: 31, 32. He showed very clearly that the things that were to precede and be signs of the coming of the Lord were accomplished, and that the generation spoken of was this generation now living, and consequently could not pass away until Christ comes in all his glory. There seemed to be an interest in this subject manifested among the congregation. Monday evening, Bro. Brewer presented the 2nd chap. of Daniel. Showed us that we were living in the days of "these kings," and consequently the kingdom of God might be expected right here. Tuesday evening, Bro. B. presented the seventh of Daniel. Brought us right down to the end,—showed us that we were in the exhausted state of prophecy. Wednesday evening, Bro. B. presented the 11th of Daniel, showing clearly that the time had arrived when we might expect the standing up of Michael. Thursday evening, Bro. B. presented the "seals," showing that we were living between the falling of the stars and the rolling together of the heavens as a scroll. Friday evening, Bro. B. presented the 25th of Matthew in connection with the 24th. He showed what called out the virgins, and the position we now occupy in the parable.

Saturday evening, Bro. B. spoke of scattering the power of the "holy people." Showed that the power was the Gospel, and the facilities for scattering it, and to what extent it had been accomplished. At 6 P. M., Bro. B. showed the fulfillment of the sixth and seventh vials, and summed up the whole.

How clear it is that we are living in the very last moments of time! The amount of good accomplished we leave for the judgment to reveal. The congregation was very attentive throughout, and seemed impressed with the truth that we are living in a "grand and awful time." May God grant that the seed sown be like bread cast upon the waters, and like seed sown on good ground. Yours in hope of seeing Jesus soon. GEO. L. TEEPLE.

P. S.—I would take this opportunity of recommending Bro. Brewer's Tracts to the careful perusal of the brethren and others. Buy and scatter. He needs the money, and the people need the truth. I do believe without a doubt that the two-horned beast is in the past; and it being a numeral beast, to my mind must be identified in the popedom. G. L. T.

Nothing but Leaves.

Nothing but leaves; the spirit grieves
Over a wasted life;
Sin committed while conscience slept,
Promises made but never kept,
Hatred, battle and strife;
Nothing but leaves.

Nothing but leaves, no garnered sheaves
Of life's fair, ripened grain;
Words, idle words, for earnest deeds;
We sow our seeds—lo! tares and weeds!
We reap with toil and pain
Nothing but leaves.

Nothing but leaves, memory weaves
No veil to screen the past,
As we trace our weary way,
Counting each lost and mis-spent day,
We find sadly at last,
Nothing but leaves.

And shall we meet the Master so,
Bearing our withered leaves?
The Savior looks for perfect fruit—
We stand before him humble, mute;
Waiting the word he breathes—
Nothing but leaves.

Reply to Wm. H. Chapman.

I understand that the fourth and fifth Kings are: 1st, the house of Franconia, and 2d, the house of Swabia. As Bro. Brewer has just given the facts in the case, I therefore refer you to his article on the "Seven Kings," in the Crisis of Dec. 16th. I hope that the readers of the Crisis generally will give Bro. Brewer's articles on the "Seven Kings" especial attention, as they evidently contain the truth on this important subject. DR. A. DECKER.

A New "Dispensary."

To "poor white folks," and folks of every color, cast, and condition; to strangers who may be in New York on any Sunday, who have no acquaintances, no friends, no money, nor any thing; to those who are kept here, expecting a remittance, which comes never; to all such who would like to "go to meeting," without the chance of having to stand half an hour, waiting for some slow or impertinent sexton to show him a seat up in the gallery, or under the gallery, on hard boards and without books; or that other chance, if placed in an eligible pew, of being invited out two or three times in the course of the service; or the still other chance of walking a mile or two up-town, on a scorching day, in search of an open church, without finding one, as if there were no religion in "dog days," and the "old boy" had ceased hostilities for a spell, or was "out of town;" to all such it may be comforting to know that an elegant house of religious worship has been erected opposite the Fourteenth street front of the Academy of Music, where the gospel is preached "without money and without price;" absolutely free to all; every pew door is hewn away; and any unoccupied seat is as much yours as any millionaire's in the land; nobody has a right to bow you out of it. Services are held at half-past ten o'clock on Sunday morning, and at half-past seven, Sunday and Wednesday nights, the year round; also on Sunday afternoons, at about four in summer and three in winter. Every pew is plentifully supplied with books, in large print and small, with cushioned seats, and stools, and carpeted floor; it is the coolest, best ventilated church we have seen in this city, for its size and object. The minister neither whispers nor lisps, nor mumbles his words as if his mouth were filled with hot mush; nor are his tones so sleepy or so terribly solemn as to keep you in mind of a dungeon or a graveyard; nor is he a half-fledged divinity-student, practicing on the poor; nor is he an infirm or "weak brother," just put in to fill up the place; nor is he so painfully meek as to be unable to charge your sins upon you, or to stumble at such words as "hell" and "damnation;" but he is an educated, earnest, fearless, practical preacher; a man who does his work with a will; he speaks as by "authority," and not "by your leave, sir."

Blessing and honor be to the hearts which devised, and to the purses that caused to be executed, the enterprise on Fourteenth street, near Irving Place. Now let some of our rich city subscribers complete the work, by founding a sextonship and a pastorship; and let their names be graven on the portals of the church, to be lisped with grateful memories by the poor, the friendless, and the stranger, for all time to come. And thus will the great and liberal city of New York, while she has a number of medical "Dispensaries," where the penniless can have all the medicines they need for themselves and families, merely for the asking, may have at least one spiritual dispensary, where remedies for a mind diseased are administered absolutely free; where the struggling children of poverty may be fed with "the bread which cometh down from heaven," and drink from that fountain opened in the side of Him who bled on Calvary; where there will be found "a balm for every wound, a cordial for every fear;" and where the forsaken and despondent, the weary and the struggling, may find and feel that there is one to be heard of who "sticketh closer than a brother," and that on application to Him for relief, adapted to their various situations, they "shall in no wise be cast out."—Hall's Journal of Health.

Considerations.

We should judge of men by their treatment of others, not by the treatment they receive from others.

Extravagance is inconsistent with generosity, since in most cases it proceeds from selfishness. But economy is the legitimate offspring of charity—saving, that it may have to give.

It is said, youth makes its wishes hopes, and its hopes certainties." Only when centered in truth and virtue are they insured against disappointment.

The human spirit is like volatile essences. It loses strength if left open. "Gird up the loins of your mind—be sober, be vigilant."

A habit of criticising the peculiarities of those we live with, tends to obliterate the delicate lines, which, like the lines of latitude, exist between vulgar familiary and respect.

Oftener than we notice, our sins are the result of impatience.

'Tis not ours to separate the sheep from the goats, proceeding to send the latter in o "everlasting Coventry," and awarding smiles of recognition and pleasure only to the former.

Greatly blinded to their true interest are men when an envious curiosity leads them to sacrifice self-respect. "Know thyself."

We tire of well-doing and we relax; taking advantage of our loosely-buckled armor, the enemy wounds us. Then we are reminded that our moral ammunition should not all be expended in offensive operations, lest the soul be left undefended in the face of a foe who seems always prepared for an assault.

If we have not a sincere humility, most likely we shall unduly wish to see others humbled.

In thine own temptations, often ask counsel of those who have been tried, and have overcome; and in the temptations of thy brother, treat him not with severity, but tenderly administer the comfort which you now desire to receive.

The truly great are always accessible; we need not fear to offend them by respectfully speaking the truth, which is the best compliment we can pay to real dignity.

We may perhaps escape the censure of others when we do wrong privately, but we cannot avoid the reproaches of our own mind.

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Where to Study.

The air of a cellar is close, damp, musty, and vitiated; that of the house-top is clear, pure, and bracing. On the surface of the earth the atmosphere is cold, raw, and impure; on the mountains it is dry, rarefied, and health-giving. The purer the air is, the more life does it impart to the blood, the more perfectly is the brain nourished, and the more vigorously does the mind work and the body move. Hence the "study" of the clergyman, the "office" of the physician and the lawyer, the "library" of the family, the "sitting room" of the household, and the "chamber" of every sleeper, should always be in the upper stories, not merely for the greater purity of the air, but for a reason seldom thought of, and yet of very great sanitary value. The higher we ascend, the more rarified is the air, the greater bulk is required to impart a given amount of nourishment to the system; this greater rarity excites the instinct of our nature to deeper, fuller breathing, as the reflecting must know, is antagonistic of consumption, that fell scourge of civilized society, which destroys full one sixth of the adult population. Hence the very suggestive remark of the distinguished naturalist Buffon: "All animals inhabiting high altitudes have larger lungs and more capacious chests than those which live in the valleys." In the same direction is the suggestive statement that in the city of Mexico, situated nine thousand feet above the level of the sea, only three persons out of a hundred die annually of consumption; while in our larger cities, but a few feet above the level of the sea, eighteen out of every hundred perish from that disease. It should therefore, be the aim of every student, of every sedentary person, of every invalid, to have the room in which a very large portion of the inactive part of life is spent, as far above the ground-floor as practicable, and in such a situation as will allow the sun to shine into it for the largest portion of each day, for this rarifies the air still more, and still more aids in developing and expanding the lungs by the greater depth and fullness of breathing which the increased atmospheric rarity induces.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Bread without Yeast and Drugs.

Bread can be made light, wholesome, and palatable to the unperverted taste, without rotting by fermentation, or poisoning with saleratus, cream of tartar, etc., in the following manner: Take cold water, the colder the better—ice water is the best—stir in unsifted wheat-meal, enough to make a batter not very stiff; stir quickly while adding the meal, so as to introduce all the air possible. Put it in small patty-pans (cake-tins)—these are better than large dishes—and bake in a hot oven, hotter than for any other bread. Bake it half an hour or more. A little experience in making and baking will convince any one that bread can be made light without yeast or "lightening" of any kind, except air and water; and those who regard good bread as the staff of life will ask no better. If any should not succeed the first time, try again, for it can be done. The baking is the most important part of the operation. The oven must be hot.

The following directions for making bread were given by the ladies to whom premiums were awarded for the best samples shown at the Presque Isle (Me.) Agricultural Exhibition. Mrs. C. P. Bean says: "I take one and a half cupfuls of new milk, and the same amount of boiling water, and add flour to this to make yeast, and let it set till it rises; then add flour until the dough is thick enough for baking. Then let it rise one half hour; then bake it."

Mrs. Sarah A. Emerson's method: "Take one pint of boiling water, one half tea spoonful of salt; when it is lukewarm stir in flour until it becomes thick batter; set the dish in warm water, in a warm place, until the batter rises; add flour until it is hard enough to knead; then let it set until it rises again, and bake it by a gradual fire until done."—Hall's Journal of Health.

Restlessness at Night.

Sleeplessness in many cases is caused by nervous affections. Intense activity of the brain, over-exertion, grief, and other mental distractions, also exerting an influence over the body which prevents the nerves and muscles from relaxing sufficiently to produce that perfect quiescence of all its members necessary to healthful slumber. Various remedies have been proposed for it. The late Washington Irving was in the habit of getting up, when afflicted with this malady, and either shaving himself or else slowly pacing up and down his room until nature was overtasked and demanded rest. Artificial remedies, such as drugs, generally react upon the system, and much injury results from their employment. We have found a most efficacious cure in our own case to be the application of cold water to the body; beginning at the small of the back, and continuing to bathe it and the legs until a healthful glow and reaction is produced. In winter or summer this plan is decidedly agreeable, and has the merit of simplicity at least. The blood which was sluggish in its circulation is stimulated naturally, and no relaxation is perceptible, as is the case with stimulants and narcotics of any kind.

People of nervous temperaments know what intense suffering results from the want of sleep; and physicians and philosophers are cognizant of the losses the world has sustained through bodily weakness and debility in great men, no matter what their profession may be. Any remedy, therefore, that promises immunity from this disease will be truly an acquisition to the world at large.—Scientific American.

DIPTHERIA.—The diptheria is raging in Western Illinois at a fearful rate, and baffles the skill of the most celebrated physicians. It is confined almost exclusively to children. In the town of Moline, some one hundred children have died from effects of this terrible disease. The parents become terrified, and call their children in and keep them housed up, hardly daring to let them breathe the fresh air, for fear the fell destroyer will take them; but this practice has been proved to be the very worst one,—for the little ones, being deprived of the necessary exercise and fresh air, are almost sure to be the next victims. It is noticeable that those whose children are allowed to rough it, in doors and out doors, just as they may desire, are the ones who escape.—Register.

See to your Lead Pipes.—Professor N. Dunne, while recently lecturing in Milford, having occasion to analyze a sample of water taken from a lead pipe, found lead poison enough in it to render the water decidedly dangerous. The only way to ascertain whether any particular water will corrode lead, is to have it tested by a competent chemist. The poison is insidious, It will produce ill health, and even death, in time; and perhaps give no warning till too late.

To Clear the Eye of Dust.—When the eye is irritated by dust or intrusive particles of any kind, the proper practice is to keep it open as if staring. A sort of rotary movement of the ball takes place, the surface becomes covered with water, the particle is gradually impelled to the corner of the eye, and is there floated out, or can be easily removed, without any of the disagreeable consequences that attend shutting and rubbing.

ANIMAL HEAT.—What is it that makes your body warm? Clothes and fires, you will perhaps say. No; they help to keep you warm, but they do not make you so. The heat that makes you warm is productive in your own body, and clothes and fires only serve to keep the warmth in after it is made. The heat in you is made by a real combustion. There is a fire going on everywhere in your body. It is a real fire, though there is no flame nor light.

A Hint to Oyster-Eaters.—When too many oysters have been incautiously eaten, and are felt lying cold and heavy in the stomach, we have an infallible remedy in hot milk, of which half a pint may be drank, and it will quickly dissolve the oysters into a bland, cream jelly.—Ex.

Our Vesta Sleeps.

She sleeps! our sister's gone to sleep!
She heedeth not the tears we weep;
She knoweth not how large a place
Was filled by her sweet, child-like grace.
She's gone, so young and beautiful,
So good, and kind, and dutiful;
'Tis hard to bow and kiss the rod,
And say 'tis well, our Father, God.

She faded at the touch of death,
And withered at the monster's breath,
As flowers fade in heat of noon,
Or crisp before the dread simoon;
She lingered little in the way
Of the destroyer's tyrant sway,
Then sweetly sought her last repose,
Free from all coming cares and woes.

We miss her laugh and child-like glee,
We miss her bird-like songs so free,
And all those sweet and artless ways
A pleasing child each day displays.
She never, never greets us more
At father's pleasant cottage door;
She's breathed last notes of welcome there,
Our little sister, young and fair.

Upon her grave we've planted flowers,
While passed the sunny summer hours,
And bathed them with affection's tears,
For her who still our love endears;
And prayed that in the world to come
We all may meet in that sweet home,
Where never grave shall claim the young,
Or mournful anthem e'er be sung.

Jesus and the Resurrection versus Spiritualism.—No. 1.

Spiritualism now claims to be the doctrine of Jesus and his apostles, and to receive communications directly from Jesus himself, relative to his coming and kingdom. I purpose to show in these articles that there is a complete contrast between the teaching of Jesus and the teaching of the "spirits" touching the resurrection of the dead.

The "spirits" teach that within every animal body is a "spiritual body," which is immortal; that the resurrection is the separation of the spiritual body from the animal body, and the rising of the spiritual body into a higher state of life. Death, then, is not extinction of life. True it appears to be to us; but our spiritual vision is undeveloped, because of our connection with the flesh, so that we do not see things as they are. But those who rejoice in the higher "sphere" of life, do see and know that what we call death is not death, but the separation of the inner living man from the outward "forms," and his introduction into the "spirit world." There is, therefore, according to Spiritualism, "no resurrection of dead persons," for the simple reason that there are no dead persons.

But Jesus taught the resurrection of dead persons. This proposition proved, the claim that Spiritualists are the only genuine disciples of Christ, because they work the same wonders wrought by the original disciples, is set aside forever. We will now present the testimony of original disciples concerning the doctrine of their Master. Matt. 10: 39,—"He that findeth his life (Greek, psuchee) shall lose it; and he that loseth his life (psuchee) for my sake shall find it." 28th v.,—"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul (psuchee): but rather fear Him who is able to destroy both soul (psuchee) and body in hell" (Gehenna).

What life is this that can be found and lost in Gehenna? Is it the life of the body? Can the life of the body be lost for the sake of Christ and found again? If so, the body will be raised, and that is not according to Spiritualism. That which the spirits call the soul or spirit-body cannot lose its life, because it is immortal. John 5: 28,—"The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth: they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." A strange way to teach immortal-soulism! Ah! John, why did not thy Master tell those Jews there were none in the graves to come forth, and that in the "world to come" there is no difference between the doers of good and the doers of evil, except that the former progress more rapidly than the latter, while both classes have the life of the "aion," that is, of the "higher sphere"? Undoubtedly because he was not a Spiritualist. Behold then the contrast between the resurrection taught by Jesus and that taught by the "spirits."

CONTRAST.

Jesus. The resurrection shall be at a future "hour."

Spirits. It is taking place constantly.

Jesus. It is a coming out of graves.

Spirits. It is a going out of bodies.

Jesus. Two classes will come forth, to opposite destinies; the doers of good to the resurrection of life; the doers of evil to the resurrection of damnation.

Spirits. One destiny for all—eternal progression.

Such is the contrast between the teaching of Jesus and the teaching of the spirits. Perhaps a little "turning and twisting," such as spirits are capable of, might harmonize the two doctrines and blend them into one; but turning and twisting is not interpretation; therefore we will go on with the contrast. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16. "I will raise him up at the last day."—John 6: 40.

CONTRAST.

Jesus. They who believe not in me shall perish.

Spirits. None shall perish; for all are immortal.

Jesus. They who believe in me shall have eternal life.

Spirits. All have eternal life whether they believe in thee or not.

Jesus. I will raise those who believe in me.

Spirits. All will be raised whether they believe in thee or not; for the resurrection depends not upon thy will, but happens according to Nature's unalterable laws.

Thus far the contrast is complete. In our next we will take up the case of Lazarus. J. W. NILES.

Faith in God.

"And he said unto them, Why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?"—Mark 4: 40.

These questions were asked the disciples by Jesus; and ever since man was placed in Eden, unbelief has been his besetting sin. While I follow down the path through which the people of God have come, I am astonished at their want of faith in God; but does the church of God to-day manifest any more confidence in him as their "strong tower" than in by-gone days? There are exceptions now, as there have ever been; but do the majority have that strong faith in God so that they could be counted as Abraham's seed? O! what infidelity basks in the bosom of professing christians respecting the "exceeding precious" promises of our God. And the less faith we possess in him, in the same proportion shall we be insensible to his love for us, till we come to look upon him as an "austere man," instead of "our Father." Many there are, who call such unbelief humility; and in their petitions offer a form of words, or the cry of nature, rather than wait upon him in affectionate confidence, trusting his wisdom and grace. O that christians had that strong faith like Abraham, that rests in God and not in circumstances; then they could oftener say with David, "Verily God hath heard me," instead of, "Carest thou not that we perish?"

I have sometimes thought christians, and ministers even, when directing inquiring minds to the Savior, taught them to utter these words of the disciples, and plead for salvation, forgetting that he was waiting to receive them, and inquiring, "Why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?" A poor, helpless, dependent colored woman preached a good sermon on faith, when she said, "He loves and I trust."

Let us a moment turn to the children of Israel, when they reached the borders of Canaan, and the spies had returned with an evil report, and contrast the results of their unbelief in the promises God had made them, with the faith of those "children of Judah" that were afterward captives in Babylon. When evil was threatened them through designing men, they said, "If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning furnace, and he will deliver us out of thy hand, O king." O! how beautiful does their faith appear; and the secret was, "the form of the fourth" was with them, "in the midst of the fire," and they had "no hurt." When Daniel was to be cast into the den of lions, even the heathen king was constrained to believe his God whom he served constantly would deliver him; "and no manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God."

Ah! my brethren and sisters, this glorious God is ours; will you not believe and trust him? But in the whole camp of Israel only two seemed to believe God was stronger than the giants; and hear what the Lord says to them: "How long will this people provoke me? and how long will it be ere they believe me, for all the signs which I have shewed among them?" "Your carcases shall fall in this wilderness." Many times have I read and wondered at their want of faith in God; and yet when I saw giant troubles before me, I have trembled with fear, instead of realizing that "the eternal God" was my "refuge." If an earthly father had been omnipotent, and told me his eye was upon me, and his ear open unto my cry, should I have felt those throbbings? I read, "Whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil," and my heart was stilled. I found that "The Lord . . . knoweth them that trust in him." "BLESSED is the man that trusteth in" him.

"Hold on, my heart, in thy believing,
The steadfast only win the crown;
He who, when stormy waves are heaving,
Parts with his anchor, shall go down.
But he whom Jesus holds, through all,
Shall stand, though heaven and earth should fall."

"The Age of Disorder."

[From the New York Mercury.]

"The world is in an uproar. There is no prospect, either here or abroad, of much peace. Invention has turned the whole genius of the age into the production of iron-clad ships, turreted batteries, ocean rams, rifled cannon, and all the other means and missiles of war. Nations are either quarreling or on the eve of a conflict. Thrones tremble. People are agitated. The very atmosphere of art is redolent of gunpowder. Greece is once more indulging in a revolution. Russia is gathering up another army for Turkish invasion. Young Poland is stirring to reassert a nationality. Hungary is looking for that uprising in Venice, which shall give her an opportunity to strike again for freedom. Prussia is at variance with her King, who insists that the "divine right" of the sceptre is superior to constitutional authority. Young Italy still looks on Rome as the national capital.

France seems to be preparing for a war with Great Britain, and Britain, in turn, is characteristically helping the Chinese Government to put down the Rebels, while she is secretly assisting the rebels in the United States to sustain themselves against the Government forces. Mexico is distracted, as usual, with domestic dissensions, and has a foreign war on hand, besides, to add to her other afflictions. One of the South American States is also wasting money and life on the battle-field; and, in short, look which way we will, we see little but the red signs of combat, hear little but the booming of cannon, read of little but accounts of sieges and victories, and the number of men placed 'hors du combat,' and the preparations made, or making, to overthrow or maintain intact political organizations.

Verily, in view of all these things, this may be called the age of disorder. Millerism ought to be delighted. Here are all the indices it wants as a prelude to its idea of the millennium. As for ourselves, when, oh! when shall 'an honorable peace' restore our country to its original prosperity?" [Com. by L. REIMER.

Needless Suffering in Churches.

About one half of the places where I have preached since cold weather commenced, the meeting room was cold and unfit for worship. At the commencement cold, and so hot before the meeting closed, that people suffered from cold and heat both. This is all for the want of a little judgment or energy. A man is not competent for a sexton until he has been a traveling preacher a number of years, seen the effects of a cold and hot house, had his soul vexed time and again, and learned by experience how to manage a meeting room. Let me tell you. Kindle your fire one or two hours before meeting, and get the air warm in the house before any one comes. It takes no more fuel, as the fire is not needed when the people get in. Don't be afraid of getting the room too warm. One minute will cool it, when it will take sixty to warm it.

I went to preach the other day. The sexton had just started a fire. The people gathered around the stoves, and would not leave. At eleven o'clock I went some three rods back from the fire to commence the meeting in the cold,—named the hymn, —it was a dead set,—no one started the tune,—I did, and some two or three faint voices back by the stoves commenced, but, were so far off the echo broke the time. I tried to pray,—went hard. Began to preach,—went harder still. The people two or three rods off, and I with my overcoat on, dragged out forty minutes, and went to the stoves and began scolding, recommending moving the pulpit or the stoves, that we might be in gun shot of each other, etc., which resulted in getting the stoves two rods nearer the pulpit, and ought to have been done when they were first set. Next time we found the room hot. My overcoat came off,—sung, prayed, ordered the doors opened one minute, while singing. The cold air rushed up to the stoves, near the pulpit, and the warm air back toward the doors, thus equalizing the air in the house in one minute, which remained so until the meeting closed. Stoves always ought to be near the pulpit, especially when the pulpit is at the opposite end from the doors; then every time the doors open, there is an interchanging of hot and cold air, so frequent on opening the doors, that the air is equalized necessarily and the house warm.

This is philosophical. Experiment proves it true. The most inconvenient and foolish way of arrangement is to put a stove near the door, behind all the slips, which is sure to let out the warm air every time the door is open, as it has so little way to move. You warm the entry instead of the back end of the house, where the pulpit is, or ought to be. There is always a circulation of good air near a hot stove, let it be where it will in the house, when the doors open. So a stove near the pulpit gives the speaker a better circulation of good air than any other arrangement, and he ought to know it if he knows enough to preach. The opposite is false philosophy, and you will find it so after trying the experiment.

The above arrangement will prevent taking cold, by being cold during preaching, when you sometimes have to sit and shiver two hours. Do have a warm house, if the people and preaching are cold. This is for your health and comfort, and the preacher's good. I know it from forty years' experience. Will you live on and still persist in your old traditions, and shake with cold every Sunday?

Correspondence.

From Eld. M. Batchelor.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel that I ought to say a few words for the Crisis. I will start with Paul, Heb. 10: 35,—"Cast not away your confidence," etc. For the accomplishment of an object, we need confidence. It is needed in every enterprise, but especially in the christian conflict.

1. Confidence in God as the Being that controls and governs all.

2. The all-sufficiency of Jesus to save, and complete the work he has undertaken.

3. That every jot and tittle of his word will be fulfilled.

4. If we believe and obey, then we are safe for time and eternity.

5. At this time we need faith in the word of prophecy, wherein we find the history of this world down to our day. Thus believing the prophecy is the history of the world in advance, and seeing it has proved itself true as we read the history of the past, it becomes to us the sure chart in view of the future, and a guide in this dark day of trial and despondency.

II. Cast not away your confidence in any of these great truths named, for you will need it soon if not now.

1. The political and moral heavens are growing black, and bespeak fury. Right and wrong are struggling, and it looks as though wrong would triumph. But about then God will speak. Ps. 46: 6.

2. The world commercially will be more affected as political strife increases; and as treachery increases and moral principle declines, so man will lose confidence in his fellow man. Then we shall need confidence in God and his word and the coming kingdom.

3. There may be such a breaking up in the church, and such awful division in sentiment and feeling, produced by the visits of these frog spirits. Rev. 16: 13, 14. We shall know more of this as we advance. Pharaoh had them get even into his bedchamber. Ex. 8: 3, 4. This will make trouble as they increase and advance. Those in whom we have had the most confidence may become our bitterest foes. The advice of Micah will be good (7: 5–7);—"I will look unto the Lord, I will wait for the God of my salvation; my God will hear me."

To conclude, I would say, stick close to the word. Whatever it says, believe. Whatever it commands, obey. Live up to your light. See that you are not found in sympathy with those who are at war with God and right. Then we can have peace with God through Jesus. This is the prayer of your brother in hope.

Rutland, Vt. M. BATCHELOR.

P. S.—As I do not put but a few appointments into the paper, I see that some think that I am not laboring much. I would just say that for twenty-nine years I have not been without an appointment for a Sunday ahead. I never have been sick that I could not fill my appointment but two Sundays, I believe. I never disappointed but one congregation on Sunday by not being there; that was when I had not observed that there were five Sundays in the month: thus I mistook the Sunday, disappointed the people, and was very sorry. ### From Bro. G. L. Teeple.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—I have been running down for some time. Recently I took a severe cold, and my head and lungs pain me much, and I have a severe cough. I kept around the house until the 21st inst. I am now braced up in bed to write these few lines, which will explain why I was not at my appointments. It would be comforting to receive a letter from some of the dear saints of God. Dear Bro., remember me in your prayers. I pray that this may not end in consumption. Your Bro. in Christ. GEO. L. TEEPLE.

The Meetings at Brewster's Station, New York.

Lord's day morning, Nov. 30th, we spent in prayer and exhortation. We felt that it was good to be there. Very few out—but did not feel at all disheartened. At half past six P. M., Bro. S. S. Brewer preached from Luke 21: 31, 32. He showed very clearly that the things that were to precede and be signs of the coming of the Lord were accomplished, and that the generation spoken of was this generation now living, and consequently could not pass away until Christ comes in all his glory. There seemed to be an interest in this subject manifested among the congregation. Monday evening, Bro. Brewer presented the 2nd chap. of Daniel. Showed us that we were living in the days of "these kings," and consequently the kingdom of God might be expected right here. Tuesday evening, Bro. B. presented the seventh of Daniel. Brought us right down to the end,—showed us that we were in the exhausted state of prophecy. Wednesday evening, Bro. B. presented the 11th of Daniel, showing clearly that the time had arrived when we might expect the standing up of Michael. Thursday evening, Bro. B. presented the "seals," showing that we were living between the falling of the stars and the rolling together of the heavens as a scroll. Friday evening, Bro. B. presented the 25th of Matthew in connection with the 24th. He showed what called out the virgins, and the position we now occupy in the parable. Saturday evening, Bro. B. spoke of scattering the power of the "holy people." Showed that the power was the Gospel, and the facilities for scattering it, and to what extent it had been accomplished. At 6 P. M., Bro. B. showed the fulfillment of the sixth and seventh vials, and summed up the whole.

How clear it is that we are living in the very last moments of time! The amount of good accomplished we leave for the judgment to reveal. The congregation was very attentive throughout, and seemed impressed with the truth that we are living in a "grand and awful time." May God grant that the seed sown be like bread cast upon the waters, and like seed sown on good ground. Yours in hope of seeing Jesus soon. GEO. L. TEEPLE.

P. S.—I would take this opportunity of recommending Bro. Brewer's Tracts to the careful perusal of the brethren and others. Buy and scatter. He needs the money, and the people need the truth. I do believe without a doubt that the two-horned beast is in the past; and it being a numeral beast, to my mind must be identified in the popedom. G. L. T.

Nothing but Leaves.

Nothing but leaves; the spirit grieves
Over a wasted life;
Sin committed while conscience slept,
Promises made but never kept,
Hatred, battle and strife;
Nothing but leaves.

Nothing but leaves; no garnered sheaves
Of life's fair, ripened grain;
Words, idle words, for earnest deeds;
We sow our seeds—lo! tares and weeds!
We reap with toil and pain
Nothing but leaves.

Nothing but leaves; memory weaves
No veil to screen the past;
As we trace our weary way,
Counting each lost and mis-spent day,
We find sadly at last,
Nothing but leaves.

And shall we meet the Master so,
Bearing our withered leaves?
The Savior looks for perfect fruit—
We stand before him humble, mute;
Waiting the word he breathes—
Nothing but leaves.

Reply to Wm. H. Chapman.

I understand that the fourth and fifth Kings are: 1st, the house of Franconia, and 2d, the house of Swabia. As Bro. Brewer has just given the facts in the case, I therefore refer you to his article on the "Seven Kings," in the Crisis of Dec. 16th. I hope that the readers of the Crisis generally will give Bro. Brewer's articles on the "Seven Kings" especial attention, as they evidently contain the truth on this important subject. DR. A. DECKER.

A New "Dispensary."

To "poor white folks," and folks of every color, cast, and condition; to strangers who may be in New York on any Sunday, who have no acquaintances, no friends, no money, nor any thing; to those who are kept here, expecting a remittance, which comes never; to all such who would like to "go to meeting," without the chance of having to stand half an hour, waiting for some slow or impertinent sexton to show him a seat up in the gallery, or under the gallery, on hard boards and without books; or that other chance, if placed in an eligible pew, of being invited out two or three times in the course of the service; or the still other chance of walking a mile or two up-town, on a scorching day, in search of an open church, without finding one, as if there were no religion in "dog days," and the "old boy" had ceased hostilities for a spell, or was "out of town;" to all such it may be comforting to know that an elegant house of religious worship has been erected opposite the Fourteenth street front of the Academy of Music, where the gospel is preached "without money and without price;" absolutely free to all; every pew door is hewn away; and any unoccupied seat is as much yours as any millionaire's in the land; nobody has a right to bow you out of it. Services are held at half-past ten o'clock on Sunday morning, and at half-past seven, Sunday and Wednesday nights, the year round; also on Sunday afternoons, at about four in summer and three in winter. Every pew is plentifully supplied with books, in large print and small, with cushioned seats, and stools, and carpeted floor; it is the coolest, best ventilated church we have seen in this city, for its size and object. The minister neither whispers nor lisps, nor mumbles his words as if his mouth were filled with hot mush; nor are his tones so sleepy or so terribly solemn as to keep you in mind of a dungeon or a graveyard; nor is he a half-fledged divinity-student, practicing on the poor; nor is he an infirm or "weak brother," just put in to fill up the place; nor is he so painfully meek as to be unable to charge your sins upon you, or to stumble at such words as "hell" and "damnation;" but he is an educated, earnest, fearless, practical preacher; a man who does his work with a will; he speaks as by "authority," and not "by your leave, sir."

Blessing and honor be to the hearts which devised, and to the purses that caused to be executed, the enterprise on Fourteenth street, near Irving Place. Now let some of our rich city subscribers complete the work, by founding a sextonship and a pastorship; and let their names be graven on the portals of the church, to be lisped with grateful memories by the poor, the friendless, and the stranger, for all time to come. And thus will the great and liberal city of New York, while she has a number of medical "Dispensaries," where the penniless can have all the medicines they need for themselves and families, merely for the asking, may have at least one spiritual dispensary, where remedies for a mind diseased are administered absolutely free; where the struggling children of poverty may be fed with "the bread which cometh down from heaven," and drink from that fountain opened in the side of Him who bled on Calvary; where there will be found a balm for every wound, a cordial for every fear;" and where the forsaken and despondent, the weary and the struggling, may find and feel that there is one to be heard of who "sticketh closer than a brother," and that on application to Him for relief, adapted to their various situations, they "shall in no wise be cast out."—Hall's Journal of Health.

Considerations.

We should judge of men by their treatment of others, not by the treatment they receive from others.

Extravagance is inconsistent with generosity, since in most cases it proceeds from selfishness. But economy is the legitimate offspring of charity—saving, that it may have to give.

It is said, youth makes its wishes hopes, and its hopes certainties." Only when centered in truth and virtue are they insured against disappointment.

The human spirit is like volatile essences. It loses strength if left open. "Gird up the loins of your mind—be sober, be vigilant."

A habit of criticising the peculiarities of those we live with, tends to obliterate the delicate lines, which, like the lines of latitude, exist between vulgar familiary and respect.

Oftener than we notice, our sins are the result of impatience.

'Tis not ours to separate the sheep from the goats, proceeding to send the latter into "everlasting Coventry," and awarding smiles of recognition and pleasure only to the former.

Greatly blinded to their true interest are men when an envious curiosity leads them to sacrifice self-respect. "Know thyself."

We tire of well-doing and we relax; taking advantage of our loosely-buckled armor, the enemy wounds us. Then we are reminded that our moral ammunition should not all be expended in offensive operations, lest the soul be left undefended in the face of a foe who seems always prepared for an assault.

If we have not a sincere humility, most likely we shall unduly wish to see others humbled.

In thine own temptations, often ask counsel of those who have been tried, and have overcome; and in the temptations of thy brother, treat him not with severity, but tenderly administer the comfort which you now desire to receive.

The truly great are always accessible; we need not fear to offend them by respectfully speaking the truth, which is the best compliment we can pay to real dignity.

We may perhaps escape the censure of others when we do wrong privately, but we cannot avoid the reproaches of our own mind.

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Where to Study.

The air of a cellar is close, damp, musty, and vitiated; that of the house-top is clear, pure, and bracing. On the surface of the earth the atmosphere is cold, raw, and impure; on the mountains it is dry, rarefied, and health-giving. The purer the air is, the more life does it impart to the blood, the more perfectly is the brain nourished, and the more vigorously does the mind work and the body move. Hence the "study" of the clergyman, the "office" of the physician and the lawyer, the "library" of the family, the "sitting room" of the household, and the "chamber" of every sleeper, should always be in the upper stories, not merely for the greater purity of the air, but for a reason seldom thought of, and yet of very great sanitary value. The higher we ascend, the more rarified is the air, the greater bulk is required to impart a given amount of nourishment to the system; this greater rarity excites the instinct of our nature to deeper, fuller breathing, as the reflecting must know, is antagonistic of consumption, that fell scourge of civilized society, which destroys full one sixth of the adult population. Hence the very suggestive remark of the distinguished naturalist Buffon: "All animals inhabiting high altitudes have larger lungs and more capacious chests than those which live in the valleys." In the same direction is the suggestive statement that in the city of Mexico, situated nine thousand feet above the level of the sea, only three persons out of a hundred die annually of consumption; while in our larger cities, but a few feet above the level of the sea, eighteen out of every hundred perish from that disease. It should therefore, be the aim of every student, of every sedentary person, of every invalid, to have the room in which a very large portion of the inactive part of life is spent, as far above the ground-floor as practicable, and in such a situation as will allow the sun to shine into it for the largest portion of each day, for this rarifies the air still more, and still more aids in developing and expanding the lungs by the greater depth and fullness of breathing which the increased atmospheric rarity induces.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Bread without Yeast and Drugs.

Bread can be made light, wholesome, and palatable to the unperverted taste, without rotting by fermentation, or poisoning with saleratus, cream of tartar, etc., in the following manner: Take cold water, the colder the better—ice water is the best—stir in unsifted wheat-meal, enough to make a batter not very stiff; stir quickly while adding the meal, so as to introduce all the air possible. Put it in small patty-pans (cake-tins)—these are better than large dishes—and bake in a hot oven, hotter than for any other bread. Bake it half an hour or more. A little experience in making and baking will convince any one that bread can be made light without yeast or "lightening" of any kind, except air and water; and those who regard good bread as the staff of life will ask no better. If any should not succeed the first time, try again, for it can be done. The baking is the most important part of the operation. The oven must be hot.

The following directions for making bread were given by the ladies to whom premiums were awarded for the best samples shown at the Presque Isle (Me.) Agricultural Exhibition. Mrs. C. P. Bean says: "I take one and a half cupfuls of new milk, and the same amount of boiling water, and add flour to this to make yeast, and let it set till it rises; then add flour until the dough is thick enough for baking. Then let it rise one half hour; then bake it."

Mrs. Sarah A. Emerson's method: "Take one pint of boiling water, one half tea spoonful of salt; when it is lukewarm stir in flour until it becomes thick batter; set the dish in warm water, in a warm place, until the batter rises; add flour until it is hard enough to knead; then let it set until it rises again, and bake it by a gradual fire until done."—Hall's Journal of Health.

Restlessness at Night.

Sleeplessness in many cases is caused by nervous affections. Intense activity of the brain, over-exertion, grief, and other mental distractions, also exerting an influence over the body which prevents the nerves and muscles from relaxing sufficiently to produce that perfect quiescence of all its members necessary to healthful slumber. Various remedies have been proposed for it. The late Washington Irving was in the habit of getting up, when afflicted with this malady, and either shaving himself or else slowly pacing up and down his room until nature was overtasked and demanded rest. Artificial remedies, such as drugs, generally react upon the system, and much injury results from their employment. We have found a most efficacious cure in our own case to be the application of cold water to the body; beginning at the small of the back, and continuing to bathe it and the legs until a healthful glow and reaction is produced. In winter or summer this plan is decidedly agreeable, and has the merit of simplicity at least. The blood which was sluggish in its circulation is stimulated naturally, and no relaxation is perceptible, as is the case with stimulants and narcotics of any kind.

People of nervous temperaments know what intense suffering results from the want of sleep; and physicians and philosophers are cognizant of the losses the world has sustained through bodily weakness and debility in great men no matter what their profession may be. Any remedy, therefore, that promises immunity from this disease will be truly an acquisition to the world at large.—Scientific American.

DIPTHERIA.—The diptheria is raging in Western Illinois at a fearful rate, and baffles the skill of the most celebrated physicians. It is confined almost exclusively to children. In the town of Moline, some one hundred children have died from effects of this terrible disease. The parents become terrified, and call their children in and keep them housed up, hardly daring to let them breathe the fresh air, for fear the fell destroyer will take them; but this practice has been proved to be the very worst one,—for the little ones, being deprived of the necessary exercise and fresh air, are almost sure to be the next victims. It is noticeable that those whose children are allowed to rough it, in doors and out doors, just as they may desire, are the ones who escape.—Register.

See to your Lead Pipes.—Professor N. Dunne, while recently lecturing in Milford, having occasion to analyze a sample of water taken from a lead pipe, found lead poison enough in it to render the water decidedly dangerous. The only way to ascertain whether any particular water will corrode lead, is to have it tested by a competent chemist. The poison is insidious, It will produce ill health, and even death, in time; and perhaps give no warning till too late.

To Clear the Eye of Dust.—When the eye is irritated by dust or intrusive particles of any kind, the proper practice is to keep it open as if staring. A sort of rotary movement of the ball takes place, the surface becomes covered with water, the particle is gradually impelled to the corner of the eye, and is there floated out, or can be easily removed, without any of the disagreeable consequences that attend shutting and rubbing.

ANIMAL HEAT.—What is it that makes your body warm? Clothes and fires, you will perhaps say. No; they help to keep you warm, but they do not make you so. The heat that makes you warm is productive in your own body, and clothes and fires only serve to keep the warmth in after it is made. The heat in you is made by a real combustion. There is a fire going on everywhere in your body. It is a real fire, though there is no flame nor light.

A Hint to Oyster-Eaters.—When too many oysters have been incautiously eaten, and are felt lying cold and heavy in the stomach, we have an infallible remedy in hot milk, of which half a pint may be drank, and it will quickly dissolve the oysters into a bland, cream jelly.—Ex.
